

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

STANFORD UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

A NEW VARIORUM EDITION

OF

SHAKESPEARE

EDITED BY HORACE HOWARD FURNESS

OTHELLO

ELEVENTH EDITION

PHILADELPHIA
J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY
LONDON : 5 HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN

92

822.33
JF98
V. 6
Ed. 11

Copyright, 1886, by J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY.

118536

YRABU RORUL. GORHATZ CHA. B.
YTISIVBU

WESTCOTT & THOMSON,
Electrotypers and Stereotypers, Phila.

PRESS OF J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Phila.

IN MEMORIAM

— NEITHER PRESENT TIME, NOR YEARS UNBORN
CAN TO MY SIGHT THAT HEAVENLY FACE RESTORE.

PREFACE

THE SHAKESPEARE Club,—‘many millions strong’ as CHRISTOPHER NORTH says,—is made up of readers of Shakespeare and students of Shakespeare. All are readers, and some at times students. When reading Shakespeare, we resign ourselves to the mighty current, and let it bear us along whithersoever it will; we see no shoals, heed no rocks, need no pilot. Whether spoken from rude boards or printed in homely form, the words are Shakespeare’s, the hour is his, and a thought of texts is an impertinence.

But when we study Shakespeare, then our mood changes; no longer are we ‘sitting at a play,’ the passive recipients of impressions through the eye and ear, but we weigh every word, analyse every expression, sift every phrase, that no grain of art or beauty which we can assimilate shall escape. To do this to our best advantage we must have Shakespeare’s own words before us. No other words will avail, even though they be those of the wisest and most inspired of our day and generation. We must have Shakespeare’s own text; or, failing this, the nearest possible approach to it. We shall be duly grateful to the wise and learned, who, where phrases are obscure, give us the words which they believe to have been Shakespeare’s; but, as students, we must have under our eyes the original text, which, however stubborn it may seem at times, may yet open its treasures to our importunity, and reveal charms before undreamed of.

This original text is to be found in the First edition of his Works, published in 1623, and usually known as the FIRST FOLIO, which was presumably printed from the words written by Shakespeare’s own hand, or from Stage copies adapted from his manuscripts. Be it that the pages of this First Folio are little better than proof-sheets, lacking supervision of the author or of any other, yet 'those who had Shakespeare's manuscript before them were more likely to read it right than we who read it only in imagination,' as Dr JOHNSON said. Even grant that the First Folio is, as has been asserted, one of the most carelessly printed books ever issued from the press, it is, nevertheless, the only text that we have for at least sixteen of the plays, and condemn it as we may, 'still is its name in great account, it still hath power to charm' for all of them. Can any good reason be urged why, in this present play at least, we should not, in the hours devoted to study, be it remembered, have the text of the First Folio as our guide? Is there not every reason why we should? If misspellings occur here and there, surely our common-school education is not so uncommon that we cannot silently correct them. If the punctuation be deficient, surely it can be supplied without an exorbitant demand upon our intelligence. And in lines incurably maimed by the printers, of what avail is the voice of a solitary editor amid the Babel that vociferates around, each voice proclaiming the virtues of its own specific? Who am I that I should thrust myself in between the student and the text, as though in me resided the power to restore Shakespeare's own words? Even if a remedy be proposed which is by all acknowledged to be efficacious, it is not enough for the student that he should know the remedy; he must see the ailment. Let the ailment, therefore, appear in all its severity in the text, and let the remedies be exhibited in the notes; by this means we may make a text for ourselves, and thus made, it will become a part of ourselves, and speak to us with more power than were it made for us by the wisest editor of them all—it may be 'an ill-favoured thing, sir,' but—it will be 'our own.'

v

Impressed with this belief, I have in this volume abandoned the plan, heretofore followed in this edition, and instead of giving a modernised text, have reproduced the First Folio, reprinting it from my own copy with all the exactitude in my power, scanning it letter by letter, and have recorded in the Notes the various readings of all other critical editions. For a fuller exposition of what I have done, or left undone, in this regard, and in regard to the text in general, I must refer to p. 460 of the Appendix.

I have long been of the opinion that in the interpretation of Shakespeare's plays, our first appeal, and perhaps our last, should be made to the dramatic instinct, as it has been termed, with which eminent Actors are especially endowed. To see KEAN, it has been said, was to read Shakespeare by 'flashes of lightning.' Yet how seldom do we find in Shakespearian Commentaries any reference to the dramatic rendering of a character, or of a passage, by an eminent Actor. This is, however, not altogether the fault of the Commentators. All who have read much of the Biographies of Actors will, I think, agree with me in the regret that explicit, specific descriptions of their acting are so meagre. Of vague generalisations, conveying no definite ideas, we have a superfluity; but of the tones, or looks, or emphasis on particular words or lines there is a plentiful lack. What help is given to us by the information that nothing could surpass the fervour of GARRICK's wooing as Romeo, or that MRS SIDDONS was wonderfully tragic as Lady Macbeth? What we require is the report like that of an eye-witness whose record is taken on the spot; then we shall know Romeo's every tone and look when rich music's tongue unfolds imagined happiness. There are, however, scattered here and there, explicit definite descriptions of the treatment by eminent Actors of various passages; those which I deemed worthy of preservation I have recorded in the Commentary. At my solicitation my friend, MR EDWIN BOOTH, wrote out for me, in an interleaved copy of this play, much of his 'business;' I cannot but think that to others his notes will be as interesting and as valuable as I have found them. It is to be borne in mind for his sake that the notes were made with no view to their being printed.

It cannot be but that, in the selection of notes for an edition like the present, an editor, working single-handed, must be influenced by his own tastes and predilections. I can honestly say, however, that if I have been single-handed I have been also single-eyed,—single-eyed to the one object of elucidating the text. We do not go to Shakespeare to study grammar or scanning, but we study his grammar that we may understand him, and arrange the scansion, that every charm which rhythm can yield may be his, as of right.

Hence the prominence which I have given to all grammatical and verbal criticism; which is to be regarded solely as a means to an end. Without a complete understanding of the words the meaning of the whole sentence will be lost,—and is not the meaning of Shakespeare the very butt and sea-mark of our utmost sail? It is as contributors towards this object that I regard Actors, and have, therefore, recorded their interpretations. Herein the selection of notes for this volume has been influenced by my own preference. ‘It is impossible,’ says DR JOHNSON, ‘for an expositor not to write too little for some, and too much for others. He can judge what is necessary only by his own experience; and how long soever he may deliberate, will at last explain many lines which the learned will think impossible to be mistaken, and omit many for which the ignorant will want his help. These are censures merely relative, and must be quietly endured.’

Since these words were written, a hundred and twenty years ago, what numberless busy ‘expositors,’ high and low, wise and simple, learned and ignorant, clerk and lay, at home and abroad, have been, down to this hour, poring over every Act, and Scene, over every line, and syllable! Is there anything left for us to explore or to discover? ‘Gentlemen,’ said DR BARCLAY in one of his Edinburgh Lectures, ‘Anatomy may be likened to a harvest-field. First come the reapers, who, entering upon untrodden ground, cut down great store of corn from all sides of them. These are the early anatomists of modern Europe. Then come the gleaners, who gather up ears enough from the bare ridges to make a few loaves of bread. Such were the anatomists of the last century. Last of all come the geese, who still continue to pick up a few grains scattered here and there among the stubble, and waddle home in the evening, poor things, cackling with joy because of their success. Gentlemen, we are the geese’

The next play in this edition, if there ever be one, will be, probably, The Merchant of Venice.

To my Father, the REV. DR FURNESS, be my thanks pressed down and running over for all that he has done for me, especially for his translation of my selections from the German in the Appendix.

H. H. F.

MARCH, 1886

OTHELLO

THE TRAGEDIE OF

Othello, the Moore of Venice.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

[310 a]

Enter Roderigo, and Iago.

Roderigo.

Euer tell me, I take it much vnkindly
That thou (Iago) who haft had my purse,

5

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1. Actus...Prima.] Om. Qq. Act. I, | iii, Rlfe, Huds. |
| Scene I. Rowe. | 4. me,] me. Johns. Steev.'73. me ; Jen. |
| 2. [Scene Venice. Rowe. Scene, a | Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Ktly, Rlfe, Huds |
| Street in Venice. Theob. | Wh. ii. |
| Enter...] Enter Iago and Roderigo . | much] very Ff, Rowe. |
| Qq. Enter... Iago . Q'81, Rowe, Pope (so | 5. thou] you Q ₁ . |
| spelled throughout). | Iago] Om. Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 4. Neuer] Tvsh , neuer Qq. Warb. Jen. | haft] has Q ₁ . |
| Steev. Var. Coll. Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Dyce | had] held Cap. conj (p. 26 a). |

1. SCENE.] FECHTER: A street in Venice—on the right a house with practicable door and window. Night. BOOTH: Venice. A dark street. Full stage.

2. The bracketed numbers and letters [310 a, etc.] indicate the page and column in F₁.

4. Neuer] COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., p. 247): Admirable is the preparation, so truly and peculiarly Shakespearian, in the introduction of Roderigo, as the dupe on whom Iago shall first exercise his art, and in so doing display his own character. Roderigo, without any fixed principle, but not without the moral notions and sympathies with honour, which his rank and connections had hung upon him, is already well fitted and predisposed for the purpose; for very want of character and strength of passion, like wind loudest in an empty house, constitute his character. The first three lines happily state the nature and foundation of the friendship between him and Iago,—the purse,—as also the contrast of Roderigo's intemperance of mind with Iago's coolness,—the coolness of a preconceiving experimenter. The mere language of protestation,—'If ever I did dream of such a matter, abhor me,'—which, falling in with the associative link, determines Roderigo's continuation of complaint,—'Thou told'st me, thou didst hold him in thy hate,'—elicits at length a true feeling of Iago's mind, the dread of contempt habitual to those who encourage in themselves, and have their keenest pleasure in, the expression of contempt for others. Observe Iago's high self-opinion, and the moral, that a wicked man will employ real feelings, as well as assume those most alien from his own, as instruments of his purposes:—'And, by the faith of man, I know my

As if $\frac{y}{f}$ strings were thine, should'ft know of this.

6

Ia. But you'l not heare me. If euer I did dream

- | | |
|--|--|
| 6. Two lines, F, Rowe.
this.] this— Han. Warb. Dyce, Sta.
this; Cap. | Wh. Glo. Rife, Huds. But...euer One line, Mal. |
| 7. But] S'blood, but Q, 'Sblood, but
Jen. Steev. Var. Coll. Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo.
Cam. Ktly, Clarke, Rife, Huds. 'Sdeath,
but Fechter. | 7. you'l] you will Q, Jen. Steev. Var.
Coll. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Cam. Rife, Huds.
you'll Q, you'll F, F, et cet. |
| But...me.] One line, QqF, Rowe +,
Cap. Jen. Steev. Var. Coll. Dyce, Sta. | 7, 8. If...me.] One line, Qq, Rowe +, Jen. Var. Coll. Wh. i. If...matter , One line, Han. Cap. Steev. Dyce, Sta. Wh. ii, Glo. Cam. Rife, Huds. |

price, I am worth no less a place.' [I am afraid that Collier 'frolicked in conjecture' when he suggests (ed. iii) that 'the interjection Tush may have been formed from hush; while Tut (often used) was probably an abbreviation of Tell you what.' SKEAT cites Prompt. Parv., where WAY (in a note s. v. Ptra) says that 'Palsgrave observes, in his enumeration of interjections, "Some be interiections of indignacion, trut, as trut auant, trut l'" "Trut, an interjection importing indignation, tush, tut, fy man. Trut auant, a fig's end, no such matter, you are much deceived; also, on afore for shame." Cotgrave.'—ED.]

4. me] KNIGHT believes that by the emphasis falling on 'me,' as here in the F, the expression is somewhat more in Roderigo's vein, and that the omission of Tush was not accidental.

6. this] HUDSON: The intended elopement. Roderigo has been suing for Desdemona's hand, employing Iago to aid him in his suit, and paying his service in advance. The play opens pat upon her elopement with the Moor, and Roderigo presumes Iago to have been in the secret of their intention.

7. But] KNIGHT, the first editor to proclaim an absolute trust in the First Folio, and to give a reason for the faith that was in him, here at the very outset offers battle. STEEVENS, following the Qq, had said that, 'the Folio suppresses the oath ''sblood.' The use of the word suppresses seems to cast a slur; and KNIGHT is instantly on hand, 'but Steevens does not tell us,' he says, 'what the Folio does besides. It accommodates the rhythmical arrangement of the sentence to the suppression of the oath. This is certainly not the work of some botcher coming after the author. Such instances of right feeling and good taste, in the omission of offensive expressions, constantly occur throughout this play in F₁. In the Qto such offensive expressions are as constantly found. The modern editions cling to the Qto in this particular, upon the supposition that in the Folio the passages were struck out by the Master of the Revels. The Master of the Revels must have been an exceedingly capricious person if he thus exercised his office in 1623, and thus neglected it in 1622. We have not a doubt, seeing that the structure of the verse is always accommodated to the alteration, that every such change was made by the author of the play. It was not that the Master of the Revels was scrupulous in the use of his authority with F₁, and negligent with Q, but that both Qto and Folio were printed at a period when the Statute of 1604 [Qw. 1605?] for restraining the profane use of the sacred name in stage-plays, had fallen into neglect. But the Qto was printed from an early copy of the play which existed before the Statute came into operation. The Folio contains the author's additions and corrections. This would be a sufficient reason, if there were no other, for preferring the text of the Folio in this as well as in other matters.' COLLIER (ed. i)

ACT I, SC. I.]	THE MOORE OF VENICE	3
Of such a matter, abhorre me.		8
Rodo. Thou told'st me,
Thou did'st hold him in thy hate.		10
Iago. Despise me
If I do not. Three Great-ones of the Cittie,
(In personall fuite to make me his Lieutenant)
Off-capt to him : and by the faith of man		14

8. matter, abhorre me.] matter ,—Cap. me.] me then. Han.	11–18. Lines end not...suit...him... price...loving...with...stuff...conclusion (following Q ₁) Han.
9, 10. Thou...hate.] One line, Qq, Rowe +, Cap. Jen. Steev. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Ktly, Rlfe, Huds. Thou...hold One line, Han.	12. Great-ones] great ones Qq et cetera.
11, 12. Despise...Cittie] One line, Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Ktly, Rlfe, Huds.	13. Lieutenant] Leutenant Q ₁ . Lieve- tenant F ₁ .
	14. Off-capt] Of capt Qq. Of capp'd (subs.) Rowe, Pope, Han. Steev. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Dyce iii, Huds.

is thoroughly conservative, observing that if the Master of the Revels expunged 'Sblood,' he certainly did not erase 'Tush,' and since both were probably written by Shakespeare, both had better be retained.

14. Off-capt] That is, says THEOBALD, stood cap in hand, soliciting him. So in Ant. & Cleo. II, vii, 64: 'I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes,' and in Tim. IV, iii, 212: 'And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe, Blow off thy cap.' JENNENS suggests that we are not to suppose that the Great ones often begged Othello, cap in hand, to promote Iago, and adds, 'tis very likely the original reading was Off'd cap. The reading of the Qq, says RITSON (p. 225) is 'nonsense;' whereas an 'intimate knowledge of the Qq' convinces MALONE that 'they ought not without very strong reason to be departed from.' No such strong reason appears to him here, probably because to him as well as to all who adopt oft capped, MASON's explanation seems conclusive, namely that 'to cap is to salute by taking off the cap. It is still an academic phrase.' KNIGHT comes to the defence of F₁, and, admitting that to cap in ancient academical phrase meant to take the cap off, and that it is so used by other early English authors, as in Drant's Horace, 1567, yet, asks Knight, 'is oft capp'd supported by the context? As we read the whole passage, three great ones of the city wait upon Othello; they "off-capp'd,"—they took cap-in-hand,—in personal suit that he should make Iago his lieutenant; but he evades them, &c. He has already chosen his officer. Here is a scene painted in a manner well befitting both the dignity of the great ones of the city and of Othello himself. The audience was given, the solicitation was humbly made, the reasons for refusing it courteously assigned. But take the other reading, oft capp'd; and then we have Othello perpetually haunted by the three great ones of the city, capping to him and repeating to him the same prayer, and he perpetually denying them with the same bombast circumstance. Surely this is not what Shakespeare meant to represent.' WHITE (ed. i) suggests that 'capped' seems 'to have meant to keep the cap on, not to take it off. For example: "And this of Paull, that a man should neither pray nor preach capped, or with his head covered, is also cleane abolished."—Cranmer's Confutation of Unwritten Verities, 1582, p. 62.' But DYCE (ed. iii) is not convinced, and after quoting Malone, opposes White with a definition from Coles's Latin Dict.: 'To cap a person, coram aliquo caput aperire, nudare.' [I

I know my price, I am worth no worffe a place. 15
 But he (as louing his owne pride, and purposes)
 Euades them, with a bumbast Circumstance,
 Horribly stufft with Epithites of warre,
 Non-suites my Mediators. For certes, saies he, 19

15. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds. worffe] wofe F.
 16. his owne] His Han. purposes] purpose Theob. Warb. Johns.
 17. bumbast] QqFf, Rowe, Pope, Han. bombast Theob.
 18. Epithites] Epithets F.F.
 18, 19. warre, Non-suits] Ff, Knt, Sing li. warre: Non-suits Q₂Q₉ Rowe. warre: And in conclusion, Non-suits Q₂ et cet.
 18-21. Ending lines, warre...conclu- lion...sayes he...was he? ...Arithmetition Q₂, Jen. Coll. war...conclusion...says he... officer...was he? ...arithmetician Pope +, Cap. Rann, Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Rife. war...mediators...already...was he? ...arithmetician Mal. war...nonsuits... says he...officer...was he? ...arithmetician Steev. Var. war...mediators...officer. arithmetician Ktly. war...mediators... chose...was he? ...arithmetician (reading I've) Huds.
 19. For certes] Certes Pope +.

prefer F, which presents no difficulty. To Theobald's citations add Tim. II, i, 18, where the posture of importunity is represented as when 'the cap plays in the right hand.'—ED.]

17. bumbast] NARES: Originally cotton. Hence, because cotton was commonly used to stuff out quilting, &c., bombast also meant the stuffing of clothes, &c. Hence applied to tumid and inflated language. [Cotgrave gives: Cottoner. To bumbast, or stuffe with cotton.—ED.]

17. Circumstance] REED: That is, circumlocution. See Greene's Tu Quoque [p. 93, Dodsley] 'a needless labour, sir, To run and wind about for circumstance; When the plain word, "I thank you," would have serv'd.' Also in Massinger's Picture [I, i.] 'therefore, without circumstance, to the point.' [The editor of Greene's Tu Quoque calls attention to the great similarity between the line there cited and 'To wind about my love with circumstance' in Mer. of Ven. I, i, 154; conf. Ham. I, v, 127.—ED.] KNIGHT: Iago does not mean to say that Othello made a long rigmarole speech to the three great ones, and then in conclusion nonsuited the mediators by telling them that he had already chosen his officer. But, in the spirit of calumny, he imputes to Othello that, having chosen his officer before the personal suit was made to him for Iago, he suppressed the fact; evaded the mediators; and nonsuited them with a bombast circumstance. F, distinctly separates, for, certes, saies he, from nonsuits my mediators. Othello, according to Iago's calumnious assertion, says the truth only to himself.

19. Non-suites] LORD CAMPBELL (p. 112): Here is a striking instance of Shakespeare's proneness to legal phraseology. Nonsuiting is known to the learned to be the most disreputable and mortifying mode of being beaten; it indicates that the action is wholly unfounded on the plaintiff's own showing, or that there is a fatal defect in the manner in which his case has been got up; insomuch that Mr. Chitty, the great special pleader, used to give this advice to young barristers practising at nisi prius:—'Always avoid your attorney when nonsuited, for till he has a little time for reflection, however much you may abuse the Judge, he will think that the nonsuit was all your fault.'

19. DYCE (ed. iii): 'F, and Q, wrongly omit "And, in conclusion;" but probably something has been lost before them.'—W. N. LETTSOM.

I haue already chose my Officer. And what was he? 20
 For-footh, a great Arithmatician,
 One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
 (A Fellow almost damn'd in a faire Wife) 23

20. chose] chosen Q., Jen. Steev.'78,'85, Arithmetician Ff.
 Mal. Rann. 22, 23. a... Wife] (a Florentine's... wife) Officer. And] officer, and Qq. Warb.
 21. For-footh] For-footh QqFf, Rowe 23. damn'd] dambd Qq.
 et cet. Wife] wife QqF₄F₄, face Cap. life
 21. Arithmatician] Arithmetition Q₁. Ktly.

19, 20. For . . . officer] THEOBALD, following POPE in the omission of For, was the first to mark Certes . . . officer as a quotation. Of the edd. who follow the QqFf, Steev.'73, Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Cowden-Clarke, Hal. Rolfe, Huds. Wh. ii, mark the quotation as beginning (properly, I think) with certes. For can be no part of Othello's speech. All other edd. follow Cap. in including For in the quotation.—ED.

19. certes] STEEVENS: That is, certainly, in truth. SCHMIDT (Lex. s. v.) says that here, and in Hen. VIII: I, i, 48, 'certes' is a monosyllable, an assertion which I am afraid must be marked as one of the very few errors which that admirable lexicographer has made. An English ear will readily guide the present line with certes as a dissyllable, and the line in Hen. VIII, 'One, certes, that promises no element,' is scanned by reading 'promises' as a dissyllable, a contraction of which WALKER (Vers. p. 62) gives numerous examples. The very many instances of 'certes' as a dissyllable in Spenser alone would teach us to contract, in Shakespeare, almost any other word in the line rather than that. [I am now half inclined to agree with Schmidt. 1887.]—ED.

21. Arithmatician] STEEVENS: So, in Rom. & Jul. Mercutio says: 'one that fights by the book of arithmetic.' MALONE: Iago means to represent Cassio not as a person whose arithmetic was 'one, two, and the third in your bosom,' but as a man merely conversant with civil matters, and who knew no more of a squadron than the number of men it contained. SINGER thinks that Iago refers to Cassio as a man whose knowledge of military evolutions was drawn entirely from books on tactics, wherein 'the movements requisite to change from line to column, &c. are worked out numerically on the base of a tactical unit.' C. A. BROWN (Sh.'s Autobiog. Poems, p. 110), in his essay to prove that Shakespeare had visited Italy, says that there was good reason why Cassio, the Florentine, should be derisively termed by Iago 'a great arithmetician,' 'a counter-caster' with his 'debtor and creditor.' 'A soldier from Florence, famous for its bankers throughout Europe, and for its invention of bills of exchange, book-keeping, and everything connected with a counting-house, might well be ridiculed for his promotion, by an Iago, in this manner.'

22. Cassio] BODENSTEDT (p. ix) says that Othello chose Cassio because he preferred him personally as a go-between in his wooing of Desdemona, and moreover it ministered to Othello's pride to refuse the personal suit of the great ones of the city.

22, 23. Florentine, . . . Wife] THEOBALD maintains that Iago, not Cassio, was the Florentine; and that 'wife' could not apply to Cassio, who was unmarried, but that it does apply to Iago, whose 'fair wife' attends on Desdemona, and whose marriage and possible subjection to his wife was one reason, probably, why Othello himself, an unmarried man, rejected him as an officer. Iago is therefore the 'fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife,' whereby Shakespeare 'means Iago had so beautiful a Wife that she was his Heaven on Earth, that he idoliz'd her, and that he forgot to think of Happiness in an After-state, as placing all his Views of Bliss in the single Enjoyment of her. In this sense, Beauty, when it can so seduce and engross a Man's Thoughts, may be said "almost to damn him." A somewhat similar thought is in Mer. of Ven. III, v, 80-83. Theobald therefore puts these words in parenthesis, reading: (the Florentine's A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife,). HANMER was the first to point out that 'from many passages of this play (rightly understood) Cassio was a Florentine, and Iago a Venetian,' and that as Cassio was unmarried, there must be some mistake in giving him a wife; but Cassio's beauty is often hinted at—an attribute which rough soldiers, naturally enough, would treat with scorn and ridicule. Wherefore Hanmer reads 'a fellow almost damn'd in a fair phys.' JOHNSON resigns the lines to 'corruption and obscurity,' adding, 'I cannot think it very plain from III, i, 44, that Cassio was or was not a Florentine.' TYRWHITT (p. 2): The great difficulty is to understand in what sense any man can be said to be 'almost damn'd in a fair wife' or 'a fair phys.' I cannot find any ground for supposing that either the one or the other has ever been reputed to be damnable sins in any religion. There is the same expression in Mer. of Ven. I, i, 98: 'If they should speak, would almost damn those ears, Which, hearing them, would call their brothers fools.' And there the allusion is evident to the Gospel-judgment against those who call their brothers fools. I am inclined, therefore, to believe that the true reading here is: 'A fellow almost damn'd in a fair life,' and that Shakespeare alludes to the judgment denounced in the Gospel against those of whom all men speak well. The character of Cassio is such as would be very likely to draw upon him all the peril of this denunciation, literally understood. Well-bred, easy, sociable, good-natured, with abilities enough to make him agreeable and useful, but not sufficient to excite the envy of his equals or to alarm the jealousy of his superiors. In several other passages Iago bears his testimony to the amiable qualities of his rival. Conf. 'the daily beauty of his life,' V, i, 22. I will only add that however hard or far-fetch'd this allusion (whether Shakespeare's or only mine) may seem to be, Archbishop Sheldon had exactly the same conceit when he made that singular compliment to a nephew of Sir William Temple, that 'he had the curse of the Gospel, because all men spoke well of him.' HEATH (p. 551) adopts Theobald's 'Florentine's,' and 'apprehends the meaning to be that, notwithstanding Iago had a fair wife, he had little chance for going to heaven, as by the watchfulness of his jealousy he made it extremely difficult for her to do her part toward sending him thither.' JENNENS in his text marks the line as an Aside, and, retaining the parenthesis, reads 'A fellow's almost damn'd in a fair wife!' In his note, after condemning Theobald's emendation, and asserting that Hanmer's is simply equivalent to saying that 'Cassio's a damn'd handsome fellow,' he upholds his own text by pleading that he has 'only supplied an s after "fellow;"' and by supposing that 'Shakespeare meant the line to be spoke apart, expressing a sudden motion of jealousy in Iago on naming Othello and Cassio, of both of which that he was jealous appears from II, iii. And Iago's meaning is, "To be married to a handsome woman (as I am) is almost as bad as being damn'd; as the number of her admirers will doom the husband to a state of perpetual jealousy."' TOLLET (Var. 78): Some might have no objection to read 'a false wife;' as the jealous Ford says, 'see the hell of having a false woman.'—Merry Wives, II, ii; but the original text may mean a fellow almost as unhappy as the damned, with jealousy of a fair wife. STEVENS: That Cassio was married is not sufficiently implied in the words 'a fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife,' since they mean, according to Iago's licentious manner of expressing himself, no more than a man 'very near being married.' This seems to have been the case with Cassio; see IV, i, 142. Had Shakespeare, consistently with Iago's character, meant to make him say that Cassio was 'actually damn'd in being married to a handsome woman,' he would have made him say it outright, and not have interposed the palliative almost. Whereas, what he says at present amounts to no more than that (however near his marriage) he is not yet completely damned, because he is not absolutely married. The succeeding parts of Iago's conversation sufficiently evince that Shakespeare thought no mode of conception or expression too brutal for that character. This note of Steevens, MALONE thinks, clearly explains the line, and has therefore 'no doubt that the text is right.' M. MASON denies the correctness of Tyrwhitt's emendation, because Iago would never have given to Cassio the highest commendation while wishing to depreciate him to Roderigo; though afterward in speaking to himself in V, i, he gives him his just character. HENLEY: Iago is enumerating Cassio's disqualifications; surely his being well spoken of by all men could not be one of them. It was in regard to the reported marriage of Cassio to the 'customer,' the 'most fair Bianca,' that Iago called the new lieutenant a fellow almost damn'd. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 248) prefers life 'as fitting to Iago's contempt for whatever did not display power, and that intellectual power.' MARTINUS SCRIBLERUS (p. 16) proposes to include 'almost damn'd in a fair wife' in parenthesis, as thus uttered by Iago in the rapidity of his thoughts, and thus paraphrases: 'That is, "a fellow that never set a squadron in the field (a circumstance, which, in the estimation of a soldier, almost throws contempt even upon a beautiful woman, is almost damn'd in a fair wife)". He then carries on the same idea, and adds, "nor the division of a battle knows more than a spinster.'" BECKET (i, 179): For 'wife' read wise, i. e. manner. The construction is: A fellow, in a fair wise, almost damn'd, i. e. a fellow of whom it may be fairly said, or to use a fair manner of speaking, that he is almost damned (a worthless fellow). JACKSON (p. 402): Why should Cassio be almost damned by marrying a fair woman? Beauty, in the softer sex, detracts not from virtue. We should certainly read: 'almost damn'd in a frail wife;' which at once announces the licentious character of Bianca, and that odium designed by the speaker is thus cast on the spirit of Cassio. I make no doubt the compositor mistook the word, and am inclined to think that for 'damn'd' we should read bann'd; meaning, that they were as near being married as though the bans were published. TIECK (viii, 357) assumes, and it is mere assumption, that Florence in Shakespeare's time was noted for its immorality—as noted, indeed, as Bulgaria was from earlier times; and that Iago calls the Veronese Cassio 'a Florentine,' in order to cast on him the imputation of extreme immodesty. KNIGHT finds no such mystical meaning in these words as Tieck imputes to them, but that Iago distinctly refers to Bianca. As to whether Cassio was, or was not, a Florentine, Knight maintains that we can gather no trustworthy intimation from anything which Iago may say on this or on any other subject (wherein the present editor agrees with him). 'It is not to be forgotten that Iago, throughout the whole course of his extraordinary character, is represented as utterly regardless of the differences between truth and falsehood. The most absolute lie,—the half lie,—the truth in the way of telling it distorted into a lie, are the instruments with which Iago constantly works. This ought to be borne in mind with reference to his assertion that Cassio was a Florentine.' But whether Iago was lying or not in this instance, Knight thinks emphatically that Iago meant to speak 'disparagingly of Cassio when he called him a Florentine. He was an "arithmetician," a "counter-caster," a native of a state whose inhabitants, pursuing the peaceful and gainful occupations of commerce, had armies of mercenaries. Cassio, for this reason, upon the showing of Iago, was one that "never set a squadron in the field." COLLIER thinks that the unaltered text is most likely right, but records as a not very probable conjecture the substitution of guise for 'wife' by Mr Petrie of Edinburgh. DYCE (Remarks, p. 233): The text may be right, though I doubt it; but I cannot help wondering greatly that Mr Petrie, when he conjectured guise, should not have stumbled upon wise (way). [Wherein Dyce is anticipated by Becket.] MAGINN (p. 264): The word 'damn'd' is, I think, a corruption of some word which signified delicate, soft, dainty, or something of the kind; and that for 'in,' we should read as. 'A fellow almost as soft and delicate as a fair wife,' as dainty as a woman. I am not fortunate to supply it, but I have somewhat thought it was 'almost trimmed as a fair wife.' Such a fellow as the 'neat trimly-dressed' courtier, 'perfumed as a milliner,' who excited the impatience of Hotspur. I throw out my hint for the leading, or misleading, of future editors. WHITE (ed. i) reads 'almost damn'd in a fair wise,' that is, 'a fellow almost damned if the judgment had been given in a fair manner, a use of damn still common as applied to plays and operas.' The difference between 'wife' and wife, with the long s, is so slight that White wonders at any difficulty to be found in the passage. 'Besides, if Cassio had been betrothed to "a customer," "a fitchew," what had that to do with his soldierly qualifications?' In his (ed. ii) White abandons the passage as incomprehensible, if the difficulty have not arisen in this mistake of the long s for an f. CARTWRIGHT (p. 38): Read other wise. COWDEN-CLARKE says that 'wife' is here used in the sense of woman, and that of the several interpretations proposed the true one is: 'A fellow who would almost go to perdition for a handsome woman,' or 'a fellow who is almost lost in his fondness for a fine woman;' and to it Cassio's conduct with respect to Bianca adds probability. STAUNTON shrewdly asks: 'Are we quite assured that when Iago calls Cassio a Florentine, he means merely that Cassio was a native of that town? The system of book-keeping called Italian Book-keeping came, as is well known, originally from Florence; and he may not improbably use "Florentine," as he employs "arithmetician," "counter-caster," and "debtor-and-creditor," in a derogatory sense, to denote the mercantile origin and training which he chooses to attribute to his rival.' As to the belief that Iago in 'a fair wife' refers to the report that Cassio was about to marry Bianca, Staunton thinks that the 'objection is unanswerable that there is no reason for supposing that Cassio had ever seen Bianca until they met in Cyprus.' And in despair of eliciting a satisfactory meaning from the line, Staunton says that he has sometimes thought Shakespeare must have written 'almost damn'd in a fair-wife.' That is, 'a fellow by habit of reckoning debased almost into a market-woman. In of old was commonly used for into; we still say fall in love.' F. A. LEO (N. & Qu. 1865, 3d, vii, 453): Iago intends to say that Othello has made a bad choice in his lieutenant, a man who is a mere theorizer, never exposed to a shower of bullets, and knowing no more of the division of a battle than a spinster, in short, 'a fellow almost damn'd in a faint wife.' J. J. B. WORKARD (N. & Qu. 1865, 3d, viii, 80): Read 'almost damn'd in a fair strife.' Here the unity of the idea is preserved throughout. Str, in sixteenth-century writing, might easily be mistaken for w. Δ (Ibid, p. 126): No, do not alter Shakespeare, and make him more obscure when unnecessary. I have never had a doubt about his meaning in this passage, which really seems clear enough. Iago wishes to show that Cassio's weakness goes beyond even that of a woman—'A fellow' of so soft a character that a similar disposition would be 'almost damned in a fair wife.' In fine, Cassio is so weak a creature that had you a fair wife of that sort you would condemn her. BIBLIOTHECAR. CHETHAM (Ibid.): Your second correspondent [Workard] in this passage is undoubtedly right in his emendation, but not, I think, in insisting on unity of idea. The strife is not that of the battlefield, but of the election. 'A fellow [who would have been] almost damn'd In a fair strife.' ARROWSMITH (p. 38) [whose interpretation will be found, I think, to have been foreshadowed by Martinus Scriblerus, and by Δ.—ED.]: Hard above all has been the fate of 'in;' let but Iago say that for soldiership his comrade Cassio is 'a fellow almost damned in a fair wife'—that his qualifications for the post of lieutenant would be almost discreditable in a woman; let him add withal, as though on set purpose to preclude every chance of being misunderstood, that Cassio possesses no more strategic knowledge than a 'spinster,' when lo! a goodly troop of commentators, clerk and lay, bishop and bookseller, lawyer and antiquary, critic professional and critic amateur, home-born and outlandish, men who have read much and men who have read nothing, swarm forth to bury this simple remark under a pile of notes, that from first to last contain not an inkling of its purport. . . . The words are to be taken circumspectly, not sent gadding after Bianca, or no one knows who; their meaning must be sought and found within the compass of the line in which they stand. Had Shakespeare written 'a fellow almost damned in a raw lad,' the dullest brain could scarcely have missed the imputation that Cassio's military abilities would be almost disallowed, condemned as hardly up to the mark in an inexperienced boy; or had the words run, 'a fellow almost damned in an old maid,' then, though it might not be understood how an officer, after Iago's report, of Cassio's incapacity, should be almost damned in one of her sex and condition, she at any rate could not, like the 'fair wife,' have been discovered at Cyprus in a young courtesan. Or not altering a syllable, with only a slight change in their order, let us place the words thus: 'a fellow in a fair wife almost damned;' by this disposition of them the reader is pinned to their true construction; the alliance between Cassio and the fair wife is closer than the commentators suspected; they harp upon conjugal union, Iago speaks of virtual identity; they seek the coupling of two persons in wedlock, he contemplates an embodiment of the soldiership of the one in the condition of the other, and so incorporated he pronounces it to be 'in a fair wife' almost reproveable; adding, in the same vein, that it was no better than might be found in 'a spinster.' To dwell on this point longer would be to upbraid the reader's understanding. [Of Arrowsmith's explanation DYCE (ed. iii) says: 'Though it may appear to some to be rather forced and obscure, I am far from asserting it to be wrong.'] FORSYTH (Shakspeare, &c., p. 107): As contrasted with Staunton's and similar glosses, our proposal is simplicity itself. It consists in throwing out the word 'wife' as a misprint very easily made, and by a difference in pointing (to which, as all know, neither the early Qq nor the Ff paid much attention) to read thus: 'A fellow almost damned; in a fair strife That never,' &c. . . . The greatest deficiency of the expositors, in our humble view, has been their inability to compare the author with himself, and if this is intelligently done in the present case, there can be small doubt of the result. EARL OF SOUTHESK (Saskatchewan, p. 413): May it not mean simply—'A man almost degraded into a woman' (through feminine tastes and habits)? as when one says: 'A soldier wasted in a parson,' 'A farmer spoilt in a king.' This sense might seem clearer were the definite article employed—the fellow, the fair wife. DR SCHMIDT avails himself of a translator's privilege, and finding no emendation that at all meets the requirements of the case he strikes out the line altogether, 'confident that no reader will perceive the gap.' HERR thinks that 'fram'd

[22, 23. 'Florentine, (A Fellow almost damn'd in a faire Wife).']

[22, 23. 'Florentine, (A Fellow almost damn'd in a faire Wife).']

[22, 23. 'Florentine, (A Fellow almost damn'd in a faire Wife).']

[22, 23. 'Florentine, (A Fellow almost damn'd in a faire Wife).']

That neuer set a Squadron in the Field,
Nor the deuision of a Battaile knowes

25

25. Battaile] Battell QqF₃F₄.

or damn'd in a form o' wax' is harmonious with the context, and agrees with Iago's contemptuous references to Cassio. HUDSON (ed. iii) reads wight in his text instead of 'wife,' which, he thinks, 'cannot be explained to any fitting sense but by methods too subtle and recondite.' Of all the readings hitherto offered he prefers Capell's face. 'It suits the occasion and the speaker very well; for Iago dwells much on Cassio's handsomeness of person; recurs to it again and again; and builds his scheme partly on that circumstance, as if he longed to make it the ruin of Cassio, sure enough. On the other hand, however, Iago's thought may well have been that Cassio was badly damaged by the fascinations of a handsome mistress; thus referring to the amorous intrigue with Bianca, which comes out so strongly in the course of the play. So I am satisfied we ought to read wight. It seems to me a very natural and fitting word for the place; and, if spelled phonographically, wite, might easily be misprinted "wife;" and Iago seems rather fond of using it scoffingly in reference to women. It may not be amiss to note that Iago's talk about Cassio is full of contempt. Surely a reading that requires an explanation so forced as Arrowsmith's may well be distrusted. It has set me more than ever against the old text.' JOHN HUNTER: Cassio is here regarded as about to marry his mistress, Bianca, whose charms, it would seem, were such as to make this world a paradise for him, and thus put him in danger of forfeiting the happiness of the world to come. The notion is founded on the parable of Dives and Lazarus: 'Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivdest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.'—Luke xvi, 25. Cf. Mer. of Ven. III, v, 78–83. BULLOCH (Studies, p. 248): The line is a concentrated essence of Iago's opinion of Cassio's soldiership. It is, as it were, spoken by the bye, and amplified in the speech. I therefore propose 'almost damn'd in warfare life.' Warfare does not occur in Shakespeare, though it does in our English Bible. CROSBY (Robinson's Epit. of Lit., 15 Mar. 1879) justifies F₁ by interpreting 'in' as equivalent to on account of, and 'wife' as woman in general. Thus: 'a fellow who is willing to go to perdition—almost sell himself to the devil—for a beautiful woman.' R. M. SPENCE (N. & Qu. 1879, 5th, xi, 383): I offer: 'A fellow all must damn in affairs wise.' Iago says, that all who are wise in military affairs must condemn the appointment of a man who knows nothing of war, but 'bookish theorie.' F. A. LEO (Shakespeare-Notes, p. 116, 1885) finds, as far as the sound is concerned, that 'damn'd in' could have been 'very easily misunderstood for tempting,' and that the ductus literarum would readily explain 'almost' as at most; and therefore proposes, as suiting the requirements of sound, of sense, and of letters: 'A fellow, almost tempting a fair wife.' [In conclusion I merely re-echo Dr Johnson's words: 'This is one of the passages which must, for the present, be resigned to corruption and obscurity. I have nothing that I can, with any approach to confidence, propose.'—ED.]

22–27. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 248): Let the reader feel how by and through the glass of two passions,—disappointed vanity and envy,—the very vices of which he is complaining are made to act upon him as if they were so many excellences; and the more appropriately, because cunning is always admired and wished for by minds conscious of inward weakness; but they act only by half, like music on an inattentive auditor, swelling the thoughts which prevent him from listening to it.

25. Battaile] Cotgrave: Battaile: f. A batell, or fight, betweene two armies;

More then a Spinster. Vnlesse the Bookish Theoricke: 26
 Wherein the Tongued Confuls can propofe
 As Masterly as he. Meere prattle (without praetife)
 Is all his Souldierfhip. But he (Sir) had th'election; 29

26. Spinster. Vnlesse] Spinster, vnlesse
Qq, Rowe. Spinster; but Pope +. Spinster: Vnlesse Ff, Cap. et cet.

Bookish Theoricke] bookish Theor- ique Qq (blockish Q₃).

27. Tongued] Q₂Q₃Ff, Rowe, Pope,
Han. Knt, Sta. Wh. i. toged Dyce, Huds.
toged Q₂ et cet.

28. he. Meere] Johns. he, Meere F₂.

he, meer F₃F₄. he; meere Qq, Rowe et
cet.

29. Is all] In all F₃F₄.
Souldierfhip...had] soldiership-- he had Pope +.

th'election] Ff, Rowe +, Jen. Coll.
Wh. Huds. the election Qq, Han. Cap.
et cet.

also a battell, or maine battell; the middle battallion, or squadron of an army, wherein the Prince, or Generall, most commonly marcheth; also the whole army; and sometimes also, any squadron, battalion, or part thereof. NARES refers to Strutt (Manners and Customs, &c., iii, 2), where is an account from an old MS. of the method of regulating these divisions. See Macb. V, vi, 4, and notes on 'Lead our first battle,' where also is a reference to Holinshed: 'when his whole power was come together, he divided the same into three battels.'

26. Theoricke]: For the two other instances of the use of this word, see Mrs Cowden-Clarke's Concordance.

27. Tongued]: The First Qto gave THEOBALD the hint for his emendation, viz.: 'that the Senators assisted the Duke in Council in their proper gowns.' Where, farther on, Iago bids Brabantio 'put on his gown,' Theobald does not think that night-gown is meant, but gown of office, the Senatorial Gown; adding that there is not that contrast of terms betwixt 'tongued,' that there is betwixt toged and soldiership; and thereupon cites six or seven instances from Latin authors (among them, of course, Cicero's 'cedant arma togæ'), showing that 'the same opposition is for ever made' between toga and arma. BOSWELL says wisely, that 'tongued' agrees better with the words which follow: 'mere prattle without practice,' a remark which DYCE cites, but does not uphold, believing 'tongued' to be a misprint for toged, since the Folio has a similar error in Cor. II, iii, 122: 'Why in this Wooluish tongue should I stand heere,' &c.

27. Consuls]: THEOBALD reads couns'lors, because the Venetian nobility constituted the great Council of the Senate; and we know that Brabantio was summoned to the Council as a Senator, for 'Consul' he certainly was not; and lastly, because the offices of Consuls and Tribunes were abolished when the government was entrusted to Doges. But STREVEENS says, that 'consuls' seems to have been commonly used for counsellors, as in the second scene of this act. 'Geoffrey of Monmouth, and Matthew Paris after him, call both dukes and earls "consuls."' MALONE: The rulers of the state or civil governors. The word is used by Marlowe, in the same sense, in Tamburlaine, 1590 [First Part, I, ii]: 'Both we will raigne as consuls of the earth.' [But Marlowe's very next line: 'And mighty kings shall be our Senators,' may be with equal propriety cited as a proof that 'senators' also meant 'civil governors.'—ED.]

28. Masterly]: For other instances where -ly represents like, of which it is a corruption, see ABBOTT, § 447.

And I (of whom his eies had seene the prooffe 30
 At Rhodes, at Ciprus, and on others grounds
 Christen'd, and Heathen) must be be-leed, and calm'd
 By Debitor, and Creditor. This Counter-caster, 33

31. Ciprus,] Cipres, Qq. Cyprus,; Cap.
 Steev. Var. Sing. ii.

others] Ff. other Qq et cet.

32. Christen'd] F₂, Knt. Christn'd
 Q₂Q₃. Christian Q₁F₃F₄ et cet. be be-leed] be led Q₂, Pope. be let
 Warb.

33. Debitor] Debtor Han.

Debitor, and Creditor] debitor-and-creditor Sta.

Creditor. This Counter-caster,] Ff,

Rowe, Johns. Jen. Knt. Sta. Glo. Cam.
Creditor, this counter-caster: Qq, Pope
 et cet.

30. his] WHITE: That is, Othello's.

31. others] WALKER (Crit. i, 233) notices the remarkable frequency in F₁ of the interpolation of an s at the end of a word, and adds that 'those who are conversant with the MSS. of the Elizabethan Age, may, perhaps, be able to explain its origin. Were it not for the different degrees of frequency with which it occurs in different parts of the F,—being comparatively rare in the Comedies (except, perhaps, in Wint. Tale), appearing more frequently in the Histories, and becoming quite common in the Tragedies,—I should be inclined to think it originated in some peculiarity of Shakespeare's handwriting.' [See Lear, V, iii, 258. Walker gives the following nine instances, in this play, of this interpolation as he considers it, viz: the present passage, where 'others' appears as other in Qq; 'cares' in F₁ as care in QqFf, I, iii, 245; 'likings,' QqFf, III, i, 53; 'disproportions,' Ff as disproportion in Qq, III, iii, 274; 'Horrors,' QqFf, III, iii, 427; 'sorrows,' QqFf, III, iv, 136; 'workes' in Ff as worke in Qq, IV, i, 54; 'scuses' in Ff as scuse in Qq, IV, i, 93; 'behaviors,' Ff as behavior in Qq, IV, i, 119. To these nine instances a tenth may be added: 'Thicks-lips,' F₁, as thick lips in Qq, I, i, 72, and perhaps we might include an eleventh: 'warres' in III, iii, 77. Now if from this list we eliminate the three words wherein the Ff and the Qq agree, and wherein no critic but Walker has found the s superfluous, viz: likings, horrors, and sorrows, and add the fourth, warres, which only Capell changed to war, we shall have seven instances remaining where this s is found in the Ff, but not in the Qq. If then Walker's adumbration of the cause of this s be accepted, viz: that it originates in some peculiarity of the writing of that hand which left 'scarse a blot in his papers,' this manifest distinction between the two copies adds a vindication, by no means insignificant, of the superior authority of the First Folio.—ED.]

32. Christen'd] I can see no excellent reason why we should not retain this word.—ED.

32. be-leed] STEEVENS: One vessel is said to be in the lee of another, when it is so placed that the wind is intercepted from it. Iago's meaning, therefore, is, that Cassio had got the wind of him and be-calmed him from going on. HEATH and STAUNTON conjectured 'must be lee'd,' led to it by Q₁ and the imperfect measure of the line.

33. Debitor, and Creditor] JOHNSON (Cym. V, iv, 171): That is, an accounting-book. DYCE (Gloss.): Compare the title-page of a very early work on book-keeping: 'A Profitable Treatyce, called the Instrument or Boke to learne to knowe the good order of the keyping of the famouse reconyng, called in Latyn, Dare and Habere; and in Englyshe, Debitor and Creditor,' &c., 1543.

33. Counter-caster] WAY (Foot-note in Prompt. Parv. s. v. Awgrym. Algaris—

He (in good time) must his Lieutenant be,
And I (bleffe the marke) his Mooreships Auntient.

35

34. Lieutenant] Leutenant Qq.	Q ₁ et cet.
35. I (bleffe) Ff, Knt. I Sir (bleffe)	35. Mooreships Auntient] Worships
Q ₂ Q ₃ , Rowe, Johns. Jen. I, God bleffe	Ancient Q ₁ .

mus): 'Angrym, algorisme. To counte, reken by cyfers of agryme, enchifrer. To cast an accomptes with a penne, enchifrer. To cast an accomptes with counters after the algorisme maner, calculer. To cast an accomptes after the comen maner, with counters, compter par ict. I shall reken it syxe times by algorisme, or you can caste it ones by counters.'—PALSG. It would hence appear that towards the commencement of the XVIth century the use of the Arabic numerals had in some degree superseded the ancient mode of calculating by the abacus; and counters, which at the period when the Promptorium was compiled, were generally used. Hereafter we find the word 'Countinge Borde' as an evidence. They were not, indeed, wholly disused at a time long subsequent; an allusion to calculation by counters occurs in Shakespeare, and later authors prove that they had not been entirely discarded. Algorithm or algorism, a term universally used in the XIVth and XVth centuries to denote the science of calculation by 9 figures and zero, is of Arabic derivation. DYCE (Gloss.) says that pieces of false coin were used for counters. See Cym. V, iv, 173.

35. marke] STEEVENS: Kelly, in his comments on Scots proverbs, observes that the Scots, when they compare person to person, use this exclamation. DYCE (Gloss.) quotes this note of Steevens, adding, 'but the origin and the meaning of the exclamation are alike obscure.'

35. Auntient] J. D. (N. & Qu. 1879, 5th, xii, 4): The common interpretation of this word is that it means an ensign, in the double sense of standard and standard-bearer. So our older Dictionaries explain it; Cotgrave has: 'Enseigne, an ensigne, auncient, standard-bearer.' The explanation is correct as far as it goes, but is not sufficiently precise. The ancient was a banner bearing an heraldic device, the token of ancient or noble descent, borne by a gentleman or leader in war. 'Lord Westmorland his auncient rais'd, The dun bull he rais'd on hie.'—The Rising in the North. 'Master, master, see you yon faire auncient, Yonder is the serpent and the serpent's head.'—Percy's Rel. (ed. 1867) i, 303. The servant recognized by this device that the ship belonged to Duke John of Austria. The word was, however, used to denote one who was connected with some blazon of this kind, whether as an attendant to a standard or to some gentleman who had armorial bearings. In the English edition of the Janua Linguarum Trilinguis, by J. Comenius, 1662, it is said, that 'the standard-bearers carrie the standards in the midst of the troops, whom the ancients march before with hangers;' the Latin is, 'quos præcedunt antesignani cum romphæis' (p. 245). The word antesignanus is explained by Ducange as one 'qui præibat vexillo ad illius custodiam.' In Anchoran's Gate of Tongues Unlocked (ed. 1639), which is based on the work of Comenius, the passage runs thus: 'whom the lieutenants precede or go before with long two-handed swords' (p. 143). From these instances it is easy to see how the word came to mean a personal attendant or body-squire, who, says Fosbrooke (Ant. ii, 752), 'had the care of the things relating to the person of the knight, carried his master's standard, and gave the catchword in battle,' an office often borne by men of honourable descent. This is the meaning of the word in Othello. Iago was the personal attendant of the Moor in a military capacity, in modern language, his aide-de-

Rod. By heauen, I rather would haue bin his hangman. 36
Iago. Why, there's no remedie.
 'Tis the curffe of Seruice;
 Preferment goes by Letter, and affection,
 And not by old gradation, where each fecond 40
 Stood Heire to'th'first. Now Sir, be iudge your selfe, Whether I in any iust terme am Affin'd
 To loue the Moore?
Rod. I would not follow him then.
Iago. O Sir content you. 45
 I follow him, to serue my turne vpon him.
 We cannot all be Mafters, nor all Masters Cannot be truely follow'd. You fhall marke [310 b]

- | | |
|--|--|
| 37, 38. One line, Qq et cet. | Coll. to the Qq, Cap. et seq. |
| 37. Why] But Qq, Pope+, Cap. Jen. | 41. Two lines, Qq. |
| Steev. Var. Coll. Ktly. | 42. Whether] If Pope+. |
| 38. Seruice ;] seruice , Qq. | Affin'd] affign'd Qq, Pope, Theob. |
| 39. Letter] favour Coll. (MS). | Han. Warb. Affirm'd F. |
| 40. And...old] Not by the olde Qq, Jen. | 45. you.] you , Qq, Qs. you ; Rowe. |
| Steev. Var. Coll. Not (as of old) Warb. | 46. him, to] him to Qq et cet. |
| 41. to'th'] to th' F ₃ F ₄ Huds. t'the | 48. follow'd. You] followed, you Qq. |

camp, receiving orders from his superior, especially, but not exclusively, about military movements. It was in accordance with his duties that he received, through Cassio, Othello's lieutenant, directions about the watch that guarded the camp, in II, iii. WHITE: 'Ancient': a mere phonetic corruption of "ensign," consequent upon the pronunciation of e as short a, and of s before a vowel as sh; ancient was pronounced not ane-shent, but an-shent until a late period.

39. Letter] JOHNSON: By recommendation from powerful friends. COWDEN-CLARKE: May it not mean 'according to the letter of his promise,' or 'in accordance with theoretical knowledge and pretensions'? in reference either to Othello's answer, 'I have chose my officer,' or to Cassio's 'bookish theoric.'

40. old gradation] JOHNSON: That is, gradation established by ancient practice.

41. Stood] ABBOTT (§ 361): The subjunctive (a consequence of the old inflection) was frequently used, not as now with would, should, &c., but in a form identical with the indicative, where nothing but the context (in the case of past tenses) shows that it is the subjunctive. In the present instance, if it be asked, what is the difference between 'stood' here and 'would have stood' I should say that the simple form of the subjunctive, coinciding in sound with the indicative, implied to an Elizabethan more of instability (subject, of course, to a condition which is not fulfilled). 'Stood' means 'would certainly have stood.' The possibility is regarded as an unfulfilled fact, to speak paradoxically. Compare the Greek idiom of iva with the indicative.

42. Affin'd] JOHNSON: Do I stand within any such terms of propinquity, or relation to the Moor, as that it is my duty to love him? STAUNTON: By any moral obligation am bound, &c. [See II, ii, 243.]

48. shall] ABBOTT (§ 315): 'You shall' is especially common in the meaning of

Many a dutious and knee-crooking knaue;
 That (doting on his owne obsequious bondage) 50
 Weares out his time, much like his Masters Affe,
 For naught but Prouender, & when he's old Casheer'd.
 Whip me fuch honest knaues. Others there are
 Who trym'd in Formes, and visages of Dutie,
 Keepe yet their hearts attending on themselues, 55
 And throwing but showes of Seruice on their Lords
 Doe well thriue by them.
 And when they haue lin'd their Coates
 Doe themselues Homage.
 These Fellowes haue some soule, 60
 And fuch a one do I professe my felfe. For (Sir)

49. dutious] duteous Rowe ii.
 52. naught] noughe Q₄. nought Qq
 et cet.

& when he's old] and when old,'s
 Han. when old, Steev.

when] Om. Q₃.

Casheer'd] cashierd Qq.

Two lines, Q₄Q₅.

53-56. Whip...Lords] Five lines, ending knaues: ...formes, ...hearts, ...throwing...Lords Q₄. Ending, knaues: ...are, ...duty, ...themselues...Lords Q₂Q₃.

54. trym'd] trimd Q₄. trimm'd Rowe.

56. but] out Quincy (MS.).

57-60. Doe...soule] Two lines, Rowe et cet.

57. Doe well] Well Pope+, Huds. them.] 'em, Qq, Jen.

58. they haue] they've Pope+, Dyce.

59. themselues] themselves F₄.

60. Thefe] Those Qq.

Fellowes] folks Pope+.

61. For (Sir)] Om. Pope+. Separate line, Cap. Steev. Var. Sing. Coll. Wh. i, Dyce, Hal. Glo.

you may, you will, applied to that which is of common occurrence, or so evident that it cannot but be seen.

49. knaue] STAUNTON thinks that it carries no opprobrious meaning here, but is simply servitor. In line 53, JOHNSON says that it is used for servant, but with a sly mixture of contempt.

50. obsequious] STAUNTON: That is, obedient, submissive thraldom.

53. me] The ethical dative, adding emphasis or vivacity to the expression. For instances see ABBOTT, § 220.

54. trym'd] COLLIER (ed. ii) notes that his (MS.) amends this line to trim'd in forms and usages of duty,' and adds: 'If alteration were necessary we might read, "train'd in forms and usages," but change is inexpedient, since the meaning is clear, and "visages" may be intended as an antithesis to "hearts" in the next line.' STAUNTON paraphrases the line: 'dress'd in shapes and masks of duty.' WHITE pronounces Collier's emendation not improbable.

56. throwing] WALKER (Vers. p. 120) cites this among many other instances as the contraction frequent in participles, where a short vowel is preceded by a long one or a diphthong. Conf. Ham. V, ii, 'That on the view and knowing of these contents.'

57. Doe] HUDSON thinks this was probably caught by the transcriber's or printer's eye from 'Doe' in line 59.

It is as sure as you are Rodorigo, 62
 Were I the Moore, I would not be Iago:
 In following him, I follow but my selfe.
 Heauen is my Iudge, not I for loue and dutie, 65
 But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
 For when my outward Action doth demonstrate
 The natieue act, and figure of my heart
 In Complement externe, 'tis not long after
 But I will weare my heart vpon my sleeue 70
 For Dawes to pecke at; I am not what I am.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 65. Heauen] Heav'n Rowe+. | 67. doth] does Q ₁ . |
| Heauen...I] One line, Q ₁ . | 69. Complement] QqFf, Han. Knt, |
| is my] be my Jen. | Sing. ii, Ktly, Del. Huds. comptiment |
| not I] not I , QqFf, Rowe, Pope, | Rowe ii, et cet. |
| Theob. Warb. Johns. Jen. | 71. Two lines, Qq. |
| 65, 66. for...so] One line, Q ₁ . | Dawes] Doues Q ₂ , Mal. |
| for...end] One line, Q ₂ Q ₃ . | I am...am] I'm...seem Pope+. |
| 66. peculiar] peculiar Q ₃ . | I'm...am Johns. |

61. For (Sir): For instances of placing ejaculations, appellations, &c. (as in Greek perĩ, &c.) out of the regular verse, as Capell placed these words, see ABBOTT, § 512.

63. I would] HUDSON: Perhaps for should; and if so the meaning may be, 'Were I in the Moor's place, I should be quite another man than I am.' Or, 'if I had the Moor's nature, if I were such an honest dunce as he is, I should be just a fit subject for men that "have some soul" to practise upon.' Perhaps, Iago is purposely mixing some obscurity in his talk in order to mystify the gull.

69. Complement externe] JOHNSON: 'In that which I do only for an outward show of civility.' 'Surely,' says KNIGHT, 'this interpretation [of Johnson], by adopting the secondary meaning of "Complement" (compliment), destroys Iago's bold avowal, which is, that when his actions exhibit the real intention and motives of his heart in outward completeness, he might as well wear it on his sleeve.' WALKER (Crit. iii, 285) cites Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy, III, i (Dodsley, vol. iv, p. 329): 'The old duke, Thinking my outward shape and inward heart Are cut out of one piece (for he that prates his secrets, His heart stands o'th'outside), hires me by price To greet,' &c.

71. Dawes] MALONE (1790) adopts doves of Q₁, and justifies it in a note which I should have thought scarcely worth the quoting, were it not that HALLIWELL, in his Folio edition, has reprinted it. Malone suspects that Shakespeare had in his thoughts the following passage from Lyly's Euphues and his England, 1580, [p. 322, Arber's Reprint]: 'For as al coynes are not good yat haue the Image of Cæsar, nor al golde that are coyned with the kinges stampe, so all is not trueth that beareth the shew of godlines, nor all friends that beare a faire face, if thou pretende such loue to Euphues, carrie thy heart on the backe of thy hand, and thy tongue in the palme, that I may see what is in thy minde, and thou with thy fingers claspe thy mouth. . . . I can better take a blister of a Nettle, then a prick of a Rose; more willing that a Rauē should pecke out mine eyes, then a Turtle pecke at them.' STEEVENS thought it worth while to defend F., saying that Iago means that he would expose his heart as a prey to the most

Rod. What a fall Fortune do's the Thicks-lips owe
If he can carry't thus? 72

Iago. Call vp her Father:
Rowfe him, make after him, poyfon his delight, 75

72. fall] Ff, Knt. full Qq et cet. 74, 75. Father: Rowfe him,] Ff, Tneob.
do's] does Qq. Ktly. father, Rowfe him, Qq, Rowe ii, Thicks-lips] thicklips Qq. thicke- Pope, Han. Warb. Jen. Father. Rouse lips F₃. thick-lips F₃, F₄ et cet. him, Rowe i. father, Rouse him. Johns.
73. carry't] carry't Q₂. carry her et cet. (subs.).
Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. Jen.

worthless of birds,—daws, which are treated with universal contempt. 'Shakespeare would scarcely have degraded the amiable tribe of doves to such an office, nor is the mention of them at all suitable to the harsh turn of Iago's speech.' MALONE rejoins that Iago meant to say, that 'not only birds of prey, but gentle and timid doves might peck at him with safety.' ['Daws' are the only carnivorous birds, I think, that could be here referred to with contempt, or without dignifying the allusion.—ED.] HARTING (p. 119): The Jackdaw (Corvus monedula) has not been so frequently noticed by Shakespeare as many other birds, and in the half-dozen instances where it is mentioned it is termed 'daw.'

71. am] JENNENS: This signifies I am not that inwardly which I am outwardly, or, I am not what I seem to appear to be. Pope has here turned poetry into prose. HUDSON: Iago probably means 'I am not what I seem,' but to speak thus would not smack so much of the peculiar dialect with which he loves to practise on the dupe. MAGINN (p. 268): Can these last words be intended as a somewhat profane allusion to the title by which the Almighty reveals himself to Moses? Exod. iii, 14. I AM THAT I AM is the name of the God of truth. I am not what I am is, therefore, a fitting description of a premeditated liar.

72. fall] I can recall no instance in this play where KNIGHT ('Good Knight,' as Douglas Jerrold said his epitaph should be) displays more ingenuity in extracting a meaning from a misprint in F₁, than in this word, and not only a meaning, but a hidden beauty thoroughly Shakespearian. 'Full fortune,' says Knight, 'means simply how fortunate he is. But the F₁ conveys a much more Shakespearian idea. If the Moor can carry it thus,—appoint his own officer, in spite of the great ones of the city who capp'd to him, and, moreover, can secure Desdemona as his prize,—he is so puff'd up with his own pride and purposes, and is so successful, that fortune owes him a heavy fall. To owe is used by Shakespeare not only in the ancient sense of to own, but in the modern sense of to be indebted to, to hold or possess for another. Fortune here owes the thick-lips a fall, in the same way that we say, "He owes him a good or an evil turn." This reading is very much in Shakespeare's manner of throwing out a hint of coming calamities.' STEEVENS cites 'full fortune' as used in Cymb. V, iv, 110, and MALONE adds another instance in Ant. & Cleo. IV, xv, 24.

72. Thicks-lips] For the spelling, see note on 'others,' line 31.

72. owe] 'To owe in ancient language is to own,' says STEEVENS; 'very true,' says PYE, 'but do not explain it so often.'

73. carry't] JENNENS interprets the Qto as a 'mistake of the printer, who put t for r, and it might originally be written carry'er, a contraction for carry her.'

75. him . . . him] ROLFE says, that 'the first "him" refers to Brabantio, the Proclaime him in the Streets. Incense her kinsmen, 76

 And though he in a fertile Clymate dwell,
 Plague him with Flies: though that his Ioy be Ioy,
 Yet throw such chances of vexation on't,
 As it may loofe some colour. 80

Rodo. Heere is her Fathers house, Ile call aloud.

Iago. Doe, with like timorous accent, and dire yell,
 As when (by Night and Negligence) the Fire
 Is spied in populous Citties. 84

76. Streets.] Streets, Q₁. Street, Q₂Q₃
Jen. Streets, F₁.

77, 78. though] tho Qq.

79. Yet throw] Yet: throw Fechter.

chances] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sta. Del.

changes Qq et cet.

on't] out Qq.

80. loofe] lose Q₃.

81. house, Ile] houfr, ile Q₃.

[going towards the door. Cap.

82. Doe,] QqFf, Rowe +, Wh. ii. Do;

Cap. et cet.

with like] with Jen.

timorous] Qq, timorous Ff.

83. the Fire] a fire Han.

second to Othello;' which is true if we follow Dr Johnson's punctuation. But I prefer to follow F₁, where clearly Othello alone is referred to in both cases. Of course we know that Brabantio is 'roused,' and we, therefore, suppose that reference is here made to that fact; but 'Call up her father' is uttered in the same hurried, parenthetical way that 'Incense her kinsmen' is immediately afterward; the main idea is to rouse, and disturb Othello, and poison his delight. But I am not countenanced by Booth, whose notes were made for me after the foregoing was written. Booth says, 'make this clear to the audience by pointing off toward the Sagittary at the second "him;" the first, of course, refers to Brabantio, but gesture must explain this to the "quantity of barren spectators."'—ED.

77. And though] WALKER (Crit. ii, 156): 'And' is clearly out of place; read, 'Incense her kinsmen: And though he,' &c.

78. though that] See ABBOTT, § 287; Macb. IV, iii, 106, Lear, IV, vi, 214.

78. be Ioy] KRIGHTLEY (Exp., p. 299): Perhaps this second 'joy' was suggested by the first, instead of high, bright, or some other adjective.

79. chances] KNIGHT defends the F₁, and rightly, I think. 'When Roderigo,' he says, 'suggests that fortune owes Othello a fall, Iago eagerly jumps at the chances of vexation, which the alarm of Desdemona's father may bring on him.' It seems hardly necessary to define 'chances,' as STAUNTON does, by crosses or casualties, a cross of vexation is almost tautological; I think 'chances' mean here simply possibilities of vexation, which might discolour Othello's joy. To read changes of vexation (with the Qq) renders the contingency of 'may lose' superfluous. A change of vexation could scarcely fail to make his joy lose colour.—ED.

80. As] There is but one instance given in ABBOTT, § 109, of as in the sense, as here, of that or as the result of which, after such; it is from the Sonn., but no number is given and I cannot verify it.

82-84. GOULD (p. 83): J. B. Booth uttered these words, without heat, with a devilish unconcern, as if pleased with the fancy of terror and dismay; and playing, meanwhile, with his sword-hilt or pulling at his gauntlets. He then strikes on the door

Rodo. What hoa : Brabantio, Signior Brabantio, hoa. 85

Iago. Awake : what hoa, Brabantio : Theeues, Theeues.

Looke to your house, your daughter, and your Bags,
Theeues, Theeues.

Bra. Aboue. What is the reason of this terrible Summons ? What is the matter there ? 90

Rodo. Signior is all your Familie within ?

Iago. Are your Doores lock'd ?

Bra. Why ? Wherefore ask you this ?

Iago. Sir, y'are rob'd, for shame put on your Gowne, 94

- | | |
|---|--|
| 85, 86. hoa] ho QqF ₄ . | 89, 90. What...Summons ?] Ff. One |
| 85. Signior] Seignior Qq. Signior Ff. | line, Qq et cet. |
| 86. Awake...Brabantio] One line, Qq. | 92. your Doores lock'd] all doore lockts |
| Theeues, Theeues] Ff, Knt, Sta. ho! | Q ₁ . all doors lock'd Pope+. |
| thieves, thieves ! Pope+. Theeues, theeues, | 94. Sir] Q ₂ Q ₃ Ff, Rowe, Johns. Cap. |
| theeues (sep. line) Qq. (in same line), Cap. | Knt. Zounds sir Q ₁ , Pope et cet. |
| et cet. | y'are] you are Qq, Johns. Cap. Jen. |
| 87. your daughter] you Daughter Q ₁ . | Steev. Var. Knt, Coll. Del. you're Rowe. |
| 89. Aboue.] at a window. Qq. within. | rob'd] rob'd Q ₃ Ff. robd Q ₁ Q ₂ . | of Brabantio's house, and speaking through the key-hole, sounds the resonant alarm, 'What ho, Brabantio!' Yet in saying this, we felt his mind was 'playing with some inward bait.' The duplicity, the double nature, the devil in him, was subtly manifest.
| Cap. Scene II. Pope+, Jen. | |

83, 84. WARBURTON: This is not sense, take it which way you will. If 'night and negligence' relate to 'spied,' it is absurd to say, 'the fire was spied by negligence.' If 'night' and 'negligence' refer only to the time and occasion, it should then be by night and thru' negligence. Otherwise the particle by would be made to signify time applied to one word, and cause applied to the other. We should read, therefore, 'Is spread,' by which all these faults are avoided. [STAUNTON queries if Warburton be not right.] EDWARDS (p. 144): The plain meaning is,—not the fire was spied by negligence, but—the fire, which came by night and negligence, was spied. And this double meaning to the same word is common to Shakespeare with all other writers, especially where the word is so familiar a one, as this in question. Ovid seems even to have thought it a beauty, instead of a defect. JOHNSON: The particle by is used equivocally; the same liberty is taken by writers more correct: 'The wonderful creature! a woman of reason! Never grave out of pride, never gay out of season.' M. MASON: This means 'during the time of night and negligence.' KNIGHT thinks that had the parenthesis of F₄ been adopted, all discussion might have been saved. DELIUS interprets it, 'according to Shakespeare's use of the copulas, as equivalent to nightly negligence or negligence by night, and qualifying 'fire.' [Surely night is the cause that a fire takes place without being observed; it is because of night that the fire is neglected. Could we not here use from quite as well as by?—ED.]

89. Bra. Aboue] BOOTH: Brabantio should be seen through the open window at his book or papers; this would account for his appearance, instead of his servants, at this 'terrible summons.' Iago should keep in shadow during this.

94. rob'd] GÉRARD here detects a pun, decidedly clearer in French than in Eng-

Your heart is burst, you haue lost halfe your soule [311 a]
 Euen now, now, very now, an old blacke Ram 96
 Is tuppung your white Ewe. Arise, arise,
 Awake the snorting Cittizens with the Bell,
 Or else the deuill will make a Grand-fire of you.

Arise I say. 100

Bra. What, haue you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reuerend Signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I : what are you?

Rod. My name is Rodorigo.

Bra. The worsser welcome : 105

I haue charg'd thee not to haunt about my doores:

In honeft plainenesse thou hast heard me say,

My Daughter is not for thee. And now in madnesse

(Being full of Supper, and distempring draughtes)

Vpon malitious knauerie, dost thou come 110

To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, Sir, Sir.

Bra. But thou must needs be fure, 113

- | | |
|---|---|
| 95. soule] soule ; Qq, Rowe et seq. | Sing. |
| 96. Euen now, now] Euen now Qq, F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe, Jen. Steev. Rann. Sing. Ev'n now, ev'n Pope +. | 105. worser] worse Qq, Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. Cap. Jen. Steev. Rann. Var. Coll. |
| 99, 100. One line, Qq. | 106. I haue] I've Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds. |
| 99. deuill] Diuell Q ₁ Q ₂ . Devill Q ₃ . Diuell F ₃ . Devil F ₃ F ₄ . you.] you , Qq. | 108. Daughter is] daughter's Pope +. |
| 100. say] sad Q ₁ . | 110. knauerie] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Del. brauery Qq et cet. |
| 101. [appearing above, at a Window. Cap. | 111. quiet.] quiet? Qq. quiet : Cap. |
| 104. is] is — Cap. Steev. Rann. Var. | 112. Sir.] sir, sir — Steev. Var. Sir — Rowe et cet. |

lish: Il y a peut-être un jeu de mots entre le mot rob'd et robed 'revêtu d'une robe Vous êtes un robin, par pudeur mettez votre robe.'

94. for shame] KNIGHT: This is not used as a reproach, but means—for decency put on your gown. [See note on 'tongued,' line 27, where Theobald thinks that this refers to his Senatorial gown.]

95. burst] For many instances where this means break, see SCHMIDT s. v.

105. worsser] For many instances of double comparatives and superlatives, see ABBOTT, § 11.

109. distempring] MALONE: To be distempered with liquor was, in Shakespeare's time, the phrase for intoxication. Conf. Ham. III, ii, 288.

110. Vpon] See ABBOTT, § 191, or Lear, V, iii, 166.

112. Sir] GOULD (p. 84): Why cannot some actor who represents the silly gentle man, make him interrupt the old man at intervals in order to get a hearing, instead of repeating 'Sir, sir, sir' all at once, as is invariably done upon the stage? and which

My spirits and my place haue in their power
To make this bitter to thee. 115

Rodo. Patience good Sir.

Bra. What tell'ft thou me of Robbing?

This is Venice : my house is not a Grange.

Rodo. Most graue Brabantio,

In simple and pure soule, I come to you. 120

Ia. Sir : you are one of those that will not serue God, if the deuill bid you. Because we come to do you seruice, and you thinke we are Ruffians, you'le haue your Daughter couer'd with a Barbary horfe, you'le haue your Ne- 124

114. spirits] Ff, Rowe. spirit Qq et cet. their] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt. them
Qq et cet.

117. What] What, Qq.

117, 118. What... Venice] Ff. One line,
Qq et cet.

118. Grange] grauge Qq.

121. Sir:] Sir, Q₂Q₃Ff, Rowe, Pope,
Han. Johns. Knt. Zouns Sir, Q₄ et cet.
you are] you are not Han. (misprint?)

122. deuill] Diuell F₂.

123. and you] you Qq, Pope+, Cap.
Jen. Steev. Rann. Var. Sing. Ktly.

indeed is in the text so set down? BOOTH: This should indeed be so spoken, impatiently, but without interrupting Brabantio.

114. In this line KNIGHT silently adopts spirit of Qq, and retains 'their' of the Ff. I think it would have been better had the change been reversed; 'spirits' in the plural, thus used, is quite Shakespearian.—ED.

118. Grange] WARTON: That is, you are in a populous city, not in a lone house, where a robbery might be easily committed. 'Grange' is properly the farm of a monastery, where corn (Lat. granum) is repositied. But in Lincolnshire, and in other Northern counties, every lone house, or farm which stands solitary, is called a grange. STEEVENS: Conf. Meas. for Meas. III, i, 278, 'at the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.' KNIGHT refers to the picture of neglected loneliness, which this 'moated grange' in Meas. for Meas. suggested to Tennyson, in those verses which are familiar to us all.

122. deuill] GOULD (p. 84): Actors usually commit the ludicrous mistake of bringing down the emphasis plump on 'devil,' as if the highest motive for serving God were the devil's bidding! J. B. Booth said: 'that will not serve God, if the devil bid you,' giving the plain meaning, that the devil's bidding was no argument against serving God.

123. Ruffians] STAUNTON: Here employed in its secondary sense of roisterer, swash-buckler, and the like, though its primary meaning was, undoubtedly, pander; Latin 'leno,' the Italian 'roffiano.'

124. Nephewes] STEEVENS: Here, like Lat. nepos, it signifies a grandson, or any lineal descendant, however remote. BOSWELL: The word grandson never occurs in Shakespeare. DYCE (Gloss.): 'Nephew,' like cousin, was formerly used with great laxity. See 1 Hen. VI. II, v, 64, where nephew ought to mean cousin. HALLIWELL appositely cites the fact that Shakespeare in his Will speaks of his grand-daughter, Elizabeth Hall, as his niece. [See Richardson's Dict. for manifold citations, from Robert of Gloucester down, where nephew is used for grandson or lineal descendant. Cooper's Thes. 'Nepos: the sonne or daughters sonne, a nephew.'—ED.]

phewes neigh to you, you'le haue Courfers for Cozens: 125 and Gennets for Germaines.

Bra. What prophane wretch art thou?

Ia. I am one Sir, that comes to tell you, your Daughter and the Moore, are making the Beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a Villaine. 130

Iago. You are a Senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answere. I know thee Rodorigo.

Rod. Sir, I will answere any thing. But I beseech you
If't be your pleasure, and most wise consent,
(As partly I find it is) that your faire Daughter, 135
At this odde Euen and dull watch o'th'night

125. neigh] ney Q₂.

Cozens] consens Qq. Consins F₂F₄.

126. Germaines] Iermans Q₁. Germans Q₂Q₃F₂F₄. Germans F₂.

128. that comes] that come Qq.

129. are] Ff, Rowe, Knt. are now
Qq et cet.

131. are a] QqFf, Rowe +, Knt. are —a Cap. et cet.

132. know] kow F₂.

Rodorigo] Roderigo Q₁Q₃.

134–150. Om. Q₁.

136. odde Euen] od euen Q₂Q₃. odd even Mal. et seq. odd season Rann. conj.
odd hour Cartwright.

126. Gennets] WEDGWOOD: Genet, a small-sized Spanish horse. Sp. gineto, a light horseman, named from the Berber tribe of Zeneta, who supplied the Moorish sultans of Grenada with a body of horse on which they placed great reliance. [While the alliteration is here evident of gennets and germans, it is not impossible that, in addition, in Shakespeare's time, the Berber or Moorish origin of the gennet was suggested to an auditor quite as much as the Spanish.—ED.]

126. Germaines] DYCE (Gloss.): Relations.

127. prophane] JOHNSON: That is, what wretch of gross and licentious language? In that sense Shakespeare often uses this word. STEEVENS: Howell, in a dialogue prefixed to his edition of Cotgrave, 1673, has the following: 'J' aimerois mieux estre trop ceremonieux, que trop prophane,' which he thus anglicizes: 'I had rather be too ceremonious, than too prophane.' [See II, i, 188.]

129. See Rabelais, liv. I, cap. iii.

131. You are] It was UPTON who suggested the dash after these words, which is found in all editions since Capell's time, except Knight's. 'A senator,' says Upton (p. 176), 'is added beyond expectation; any one would think Iago was going to call him as bad names as he himself was called by the senator Brabantio.'

132. thou] DELIUS: This is to be emphasized. Brabantio does not know Iago, and therefore Roderigo, whom he does know, must answer for Iago's insulting remarks.

136. odde Euen] JOHNSON: The even of night is midnight, the time when night is divided into even parts. HENLEY: This 'odd even' is simply the interval between twelve at night and one in the morning. STEEVENS, in his earlier editions, suggested 'odd steven,' a Chaucerian word signifying time; but he wisely withdrew the suggestion in his Var. '93, although not before M. MASON said that he 'should chuse to read dull season as an expression that would more naturally occur either to Shakespeare or to Roderigo.' MALONE thinks that 'this odd-even of the night' appears to mean that it

Transported with no worfe nor better guard, 137
 But with a knaue of common hire, a Gundelier,
 To the grosse claspes of a Lasciuious Moore :
 If this be knowne to you, and your Allowance, 140
 We then haue done you bold, and faucie wrongs.
 But if you know not this, my Manners tell me,
 We haue your wrong rebuke. Do not beleeeue
 That from the fence of all Ciuiltie,
 I thus would play and trifle with your Reuerence. 145
 Your Daughter (if you haue not giuen her leaue)
 I fay againe, hath made a grosse reuolt,
 Tying her Dutie, Beautie, Wit, and Fortunes
 In an extrauagant, and wheeling Stranger, 149

- | | |
|---|---|
| 137. nor] or F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe. | 141. wrongs .] wrongs ? Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 138. common] Om. Pope+. | 146, 147. (if...againe .] In parenthesis, |
| Gundelier] FfQ ₂ Q ₃ . Gundalier | Q ₃ . |
| Rowe+. Gondelier Johns. Jen. Gondolier | 148. Tying] Laying Coll. ii (MS). |
| Cap. | 149. In an] To an Pope+, Rann. On |
| 139. Moore :.] Moor .— Mal. | an Cap. Coll. ii (MS). |
| 140. and] and to Q ₃ . | |

was just approaching to, or just past, that it was doubtful whether at that moment it stood at the point of midnight, or at some other less equal division of the twenty-four hours; which a few minutes either before, or after, midnight would be. So in Macb. III, iv, 126: 'What is the night? Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.' ABBOTT, § 435: And is omitted. Cicero says, that the extreme test of a man's honesty is that you can play at odd and even with him in the dark. And perhaps 'odd-(and)-even' here means, a time when there is no distinguishing between odd and even.

137. Transported] To mend this incomplete sentence HANMER, followed by CAPPEL, added Be before line 136: 'Be at this odd-even,' &c. MASON added it before line 137. STAUNTON says, that 'transported' is equivalent to transported herself [which I doubt], and KNIGHT says that he must leave the sentence as he finds it.

138. But] See ABBOTT, § 127, for instances of but used in the sense of except, following negative comparatives, where we should use than.

138. Gundelier] WALKER (Vers. p. 218) shows that, just as pioneer, engineer, muleteer, &c. should be written pioner, enginer, muleter, &c., so here the verse requires gundeler. DYCE (ed. iii) yields to Walker's authority, and asserts that 'if the author did not write "gundeler" ("gondoler"), he certainly intended the word to be so pronounced.' ABBOTT does not include this word in the list which he gives (§ 492) of the class referred to by Walker, but places it under 'apparent Alexandrines' (§ 497), and contracts it gond(o)lier. Walker's treatment is, I think, the better.—ED.

141. saucie] That is, insolent, outrageous, used in a stronger sense than merely malapert. Conf. Macb. III, iv, 25: 'I am . . . bound in To saucy doubts and fears.'

144. from] For instances where 'from' means 'apart from,' 'awsy from,' see ABBOTT, § 158. Also Macb. III, i, 131, 'something from the palace.'

149. In] It is scarcely necessary, I think, to suppose that 'In' is here used for on or

Of here, and euey where : straight fatisfie your felfe. 150
 If ſhe be in her Chamber, or your houſe,
 Let looſe on me the Iuſtice of the State
 For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the Tinder, hoa :
 Giue me a Taper : call vp all my people, 155
 This Accident is not vnlike my dreame,
 Beleefe of it oppreſſes me alreadie.
 Light, I ſay, light. Exit.

Iag. Farewell: for I muſt leaue you.
 It ſeemes not meete, nor wholeſome to my place 160
 To be producted, (as if I ſtay, I ſhall,) [311 b]
 Againſt the Moore. For I do know the State,
 (How euer this may gall him with ſome checke) 163

151. her] your Ff, Rowe, Jen.	161. producted] Ff. produc'd Qq et cet.
153. thus deluding you] this deluſion	163. How euer] Now euer Q ₂ [thus
Q ₄ .	noted by Jen. and Camb. edd. How euer
158. Exit.] Om. Qq Ff. Exit Bra. from	in Ashbee.] above. Han.	may] my Q ₃ .
160. place] pate Q ₁ .

to. The idea of the entire ſurrender of Deſdemona to Othello is intended, which 'in' certainly conveys, even better than on. There are, assuredly, inſtances where in is uſed where we ſhould now uſe on, as in Gen. i, 22; Matt. vi, 10, alſo 1 Hen. VI. I, ii, 2 (all cited in Bible Word-Book), where, however, the phraſe 'in the earth,' is immediately connected with 'in the heavens,' and is not, therefore, exactly parallel with the preſent inſtance. See 'in your owne part,' I, iii, 91, poſt.—ED.

149. extrauagant] Uſed by Shakeſpeare three times and uniformly in its claffical ſenſe of wandering, vagrant.

149. wheeling] COLLIER (ed. ii) adopts wheeling from his (MS), as it is 'juſt the epithet that would be applied by Roderigo to Othello, who had cajoled and cheated Brabantio out of his daughter.' SINGER (Sâ. Vind. p. 279): Even could Collier adduce an inſtance of wheeling before the reign of Charles II., it would be difficult to perſuade us to diſplace 'wheeling;' for, connected, as it is, with 'extravagant,' it is no doubt uſed like the Italian 'girevole,' with its ſecondary meaning of inconstant, unſteady. That wheeling ſhould have been ſuggeſted, makes it certain that Collier's (MS) in this inſtance lived not earlier than the laſt century. STAUNTON ſays, that he would prefer whirling. SCHMIDT (Lex.) thinks that from meaning 'to fetch a compaſſ,' as in Cor. I, vi, 19, it came to mean 'to err about,' as here and in Tro. & Cress. V, vii, 2.

156. dream] COLERIDGE (Notes, &c. 249): The old careful ſenator, being caught careless, transfers his caution to his dreaming power at leaſt. BOOTH: This dream is to the ſuperſtitious Italian convincing proof of what he is told, and accounts for his ſudden belief in his friend's treachery.

163. checke] JOHNSON: Some rebuke.

Cannot with safetie caſt-him. For he's embark'd
 With ſuch loud reaſon to the Cyprus Warres, 165
 (Which euen now ſtands in Act)that for their ſoules
 Another of his Fadome, they haue none,
 To lead their Buſineſſe. In which regard,
 Though I do hate him as I do hell apines,
 Yet, for neceſſitie of preſent life, 170
 I muſt ſhow out a Flag, and ſigne of Loue,
 (Which is indeed but ſigne)that you ſhal ſurely find him
 Lead to the Sagitary the raiſed Search: 173

164. caſt-him] Hyphen, only in F₁. embark'd] imbark'd QqF₄.
 165. Cyprus] Cipres Qq. Cyprus
 Theob. Warb. Johns. Cap. Jen. Steev. Var.
 Knt, Sing. Sta. Ktly.
Warres] war Cap. Rann.
 166. ſtands] QqFf, Rowe, Cap. Rann.
 Del. ſtand Pope et cet.
 167. Fadome] fathome Qq. fadom F₄.
 Rowe+, Wh. fathom Cap. et cet.
none] not Q₂, Cap. Jen. Steev.
 Rann. Sing. Ktly.
 168. Buſineſſe] business on Cap.

169. Though] Tho Qq.
hell apines] hell Ff. hells paines
 Qq, Rowe+, Jen. Sing. hell pains Cap.
 Steev. Var. Knt, Coll. hell-pains Dyce et
 cet.
 172. ſigne] Ff. ſigne, Qq. ſign: Rowe
 i. ſign.) or ſign. Rowe ii et cet.
ſhall ſurely find] may ſurely find
 Pope+. may find Han.
 172, 173. find...Search] One line, Q₄.
 173. Sagitary] Sagittar Q₂, Cap. Mal.
Sagittary Q₂Q₃F₄.

164. caſt] JOHNSON: That is, diſmiſs him. [See II, ii, 31; II, ii, 302; V, ii, 400.]
 PURNELL: Cf. 'caſtaway,' and Anglo-Indian 'a caſter,' 'a horſe ſold out of a regiment as uſeleſs.'

165. Cyprus] See ABBOTT, § 22, for inſtances of the converſion of proper names into adjectives, for which license, Abbott ſays, the reaſon is to be found in an increaſing diſlike and diſuſe of the inflection in 's. Conf. 'Verona walls,' Rom. & Jul. III, iii, 17 [and 'hell pains,' line 169 below, where, by the way, in F₁, the a and p have ſimply changed places.—ED.]

167. Fadome] BOOTH: Touch your head to indicate judgement, not your breſt to imply courage.

168. Busineſſe] COLERIDGE (Notes, &c. 250): The forced praife of Othello, followed by the bitter hatred of him in this ſpeech! And obſerve how Brabantio's dream prepares for his recurrence (l. 188) to the notion of philtres, and how both prepare for carrying on the plot of the arraignment of Othello on this ground.

173. Sagitary] STEEVENS: This means the ſign of the fictitious creature ſo-called,
 i. e. an animal compounded of man and horſe, and armed with a bow and quiver.
 KNIGHT: This is generally taken to be an inn. It was the reſidence at the Arsenal of the commanding officers of the navy and army of the republic. The figure of an archer with his drawn bow, over the gates, ſtill indicates the place. Probably Shake-ſpeare had looked upon that ſculpture. SINGER: Yet Caſſio's inquiry, 'Ancient, what makes he here?' ſeems to imply that to Shakeſpeare the ſign, whencesoever he derived it, was that of a private houſe or inn; and that it was a representation of the centaur of the zodiac, or of the Tale of Troy, and not a mere bowman. TH. ELZE (Shake-

And there will I be with him. So farewell.

Exit.

Enter Brabantio, with Servants and Torches. 175

Bra. It is too true an euill. Gone she is,
And what's to come of my despised time, 177

175. Scene III. Pope+, Jen.

Enter...] Enter Brabantio (Brabantio Q₁) in his night gowne, and Ser-uants with Torches Q₉, Rowe, Pope,

Theob. Jen.

speare Jahrbuch, 1879, xiv, 174) gives a curious list of the Inns of Venice in Othello's day, of which history has preserved the names, as follows: 'al Selvadego, allo Sturione, al Cavaletto, al Capello, alle do (due) Spade, alla Campana, al S. Giorgio or al Flauto, al Lion bianco, al Gambaro, alla Luna, all' Aquila nera, alla Corona, all' Angelo, alla Torre,—but al Sagittario has not yet been discovered. The most probable supposition is,' continues Th. Elze, 'that it was an imaginary name devised by Shakespeare, which we should be as little likely to discover as The Pegasus in Genoa, where the Pedant lodged with Baptista in Tam. of Shr. IV, iv, 5. A certain appropriateness in the names and characters is not lacking: the soldier lives in the Sagittary, the Pedant in the Pegasus.' ROLFE disposes of Knight's assertion, that this was the Arsenal. 'It appears,' he says, in his Notes ad loc. 'from I, ii, 53, below, that Othello was not at his usual lodging, and the messengers of the Senate had not known where to find him. Cassio also asks "What makes he here?" which implies that he was in an unfamiliar place. Note also what Othello says, in I, iii, 143. If the Arsenal had been the "place," no guide to it would have been necessary.' In an Addendum on p. 210, Rolfe still more emphatically disproves Knight's remark: 'We cannot find any evidence that the Arsenal at Venice was ever called "the Sagittary;" probably this is a mere conjecture of Knight's. The figure mentioned by Knight is not "over the gates," but is one of four statues standing in front of the structure. It represents a man holding a bow (not "drawn") in his hand, but is in no respect more conspicuous than its three companions. If Shakespeare was ever in Venice he probably saw the statue (if it is as old as the gateway, which was built in 1460), but we cannot imagine why it should suggest to him to call the place the Sagittary. That word means not an ordinary archer, but a Centaur with a bow, as in the familiar representations of the zodiacal sign Sagittarius. This is its sense in the only other passage in which Shakespeare uses it, Tro. & Cress. V, v, 14: "the dreadful Sagittary Appals our numbers." That the Sagittary in the present passage cannot be the Arsenal is, however, sufficiently clear from I, iii, 143, 144. The Arsenal was by far the largest and most prominent public building, or collection of buildings, in all Venice, its outer walls being nearly two miles in circuit. To suppose that anybody in the employ of the government would need the help of Iago in finding the place is absurd.'

177. despised] WARBURTON: We should read despited, i. e. vexatious. HEATH: Brabantio very properly calls the remaining part of his life a 'despised time,' since the ill-conduct of his only daughter, in matching herself to an adventurer so much beneath her birth and rank, could not, in his apprehension, but draw great contempt on himself. JOHNSON: 'Despised time' is time of no value; time in which 'There's nothing serious in mortality, The wine of life is drawn, and the mere dregs Are left this vault to brag of,' Mach. II, iii, 89. STEEVENS: Again, in Rom. & Jul. I, iv, 110: 'a despised life closed in my breast.'

Is naught but bitterneffe. Now Rodorigo, 178
 Where didst thou see her? (Oh vnhappy Girle)
 With the Moore faist thou? (Who would be a Father?) 180
 How didst thou know 'twas she? (Oh she deceaues me Past thought:) what said she to you? Get moe Tapers:
 Raife all my Kindred. Are they married thinke you?
Rodo. Truely I thinke they are.
Bra. Oh Heauen: how got she out? 185
 Oh treason of the blood.
 Fathers, from hence trust not your Daughters minds
 By what you see them act. Is there not Charmes,
 By which the propertie of Youth, and Maidhood
 May be abus'd? Haue you not read Rodorigo, 190
 Of some such thing?

178. Is] I Q₃. naught] Ff, Rowe i. nought Qq
 et cet.

bitterneffe. Now] bitterneffe now
 Qq.

180. saiſt] saidst Theob. ii, Han. Warb.
 Johns.

181. ſhe deceaues] thou deceiueſt Q₃, Johns. Jen. Steev. Rann. Var. Coll. (No parentheses in this speech in Q₁.)

182. moe] Ff, Ktly. more Qq et cet.

183. kindred] kinred F₃F₃.

185, 186. One line, Qq, Cap. et cet.

185. got] gat Rowe ii+.

186. of the] of my Ff, Rowe+.

188. Is there] Qq, Var. Sing. Dyce, Ktly, Glo. Cam. Are there Ff et cet.

189. Maidhood] manhood Qq.

191. thing?] thing. Q₁Q₂. things? Q₃.

181. deceaues] May it not be permitted here to 'frolic in conjecture,' and suggest that the printer has accidentally substituted an s for a d, and that we should read deceaused? Even if we adopt the reading of Q₃, I should prefer they deceaused to 'thou deceiueſt.' In both cases a certain symmetry of the sentence is preserved in the alternation of thought, which is first fixed on the daughter, and then on the Moor, then recurring to the daughter, then to the Moor and the daughter both together, then to the daughter, and then to them both together again.—ED.

186. blood] BOOTH: With emotion, as with Shylock: 'my own flesh and blood to rebel!'

188. Is] See ABBOTT, § 335, for instances where the quasi-singular verb precedes the plural subject. This usage Abbott explains on the ground, that when the subject is as yet future, and, as it were, unsettled, the third person singular might be regarded as the normal inflection. Such passages are very common, particularly in the case of 'There is.'

188. charmcs] BOOTH: In your study of this play bear in mind the superstition that pervades it. Even Othello, while sneering at it, humours it when Desdemona is brought before the Duke as a witness against him; and he has faith in the 'antique token' and the sword of 'ice-brook's temper.' Reflections like these help the actor to feel the character he assumes.

189, 190. By . . . abus'd] JOHNSON: By which the faculties of a young virgin may be infatuated and made subject to illusions and false imagination.

Rod. Yes Sir : I haue indeed. 192
 Bra. Call vp my Brother : oh would you had had her.
 Some one way, some another. Doe you know
 Where we may apprehend her, and the Moore ? 195
 Rod. I thinke I can discouer him, if you please
 To get good Guard, and go along with me.
 Bra. Pray you lead on. At euery house Ile call,
 (I may command at most) get Weapons (hoa)
 And raife some speciall Officers of might : 200
 On good Rodorigo, I will deferue your paines. Exeunt.

192. Yes...indeed] I haue sir Q₁. 198. Ile] ile Q₃. I'll F₃. I'll F₄.
 193. Brother] brothers F₃F₄, Rowe, 199. most] most: or most. Q₁ et cet.
 Pope, Han. Weapons (hoa)] weapons ho, Q₁.
oh would] O that Q₁, Mal. Steev. 200. might] Ff Q₂ Q₃, Rowe+, Cap.
 Coll. Oh, 'would Theob. ii, Warb. Johns. Jen. Del. night Q₁ et cet.
 Rann. Kily. 201. On good] On, good F₄.
 194. you] yon Q₁. I will] Ff, Rowe, Knt. Ile Q₂ Q₄.
 195. her, and] her and Theob. ii et seq. ile Q₃. I'll Pope et cet.
 198. you lead] leade me Q₁.

193. Brother] SINGER: Gratiano was in the poet's mind, though he is not wanted or called upon the stage till the Fifth Act.

197. go] ABBOTT, § 30, notes that here, as in Mid. N. D. I, i, 123, Tam. of Shr. IV, v, 7; & Hen. IV. II, i, 191, 'go' is used where we should use come.

199. at most] JOURDAIN (Philol. Soc. Trans., 1860, p. 141): It here means, 'in the greatest degree,' Brabantio being one of the council of three. See note on I, ii, 16. [It was not until I had read Jourdain's note, and the following in the excellent edition of M. D'HUGUES: 'Nous n'avons trouvé dans aucun lexique l'explication de cette locution at most,' that any obscurity appeared to me here. Notwithstanding Jourdain's explanation, I still think that 'at most' is simply elliptical for at most of them. Brabantio says, in effect, 'I'll call at all the houses of my kindred; at most of them my call will be obeyed.'—ED.]

200. might] MALONE: I have no doubt that Shakespeare, before he wrote this play, read The Commonwealth and Government of Venice, translated from the Italian by Lewes Lewkenor, and printed in Qto, 1599; a book prefixed to which we find a copy of verses by Spenser. This treatise furnished our poet with the knowledge of those officers of night whom Brabantio here desires to be called to his assistance. 'For the greater expedition thereof of these kinds of judgements, the heades or chieftaines of the officers by night do obtaine the authority of which the advocators are deprived. These officers of the night are six, and six likewise are those meane officers, that have only power to correct base vagabonds and trifling offenses. Those that do execute this office are called heades of the tribes of the city, because out of every tribe (for the city is divided into six tribes,) there is elected an officer of the night, and a head of the tribe.—The duty of eyther of these officers is, to keepe a watch every other night by turn, within their tribes; and, now the one, and then the other, to make rounds about his quarter, till the dawning of the day, being always guarded and attended on with wearoned officers and serjeants, and to see that there be not any disorder done in the Scena Secunda.Enter Othello, Iago, Attendants, with Torches.

Ia. Though in the trade of Warre I haue flaine men,
 Yet do I hold it very stufte o'th'conscience
 To do no contriu'd Murder : I lacke Iniquitie 5
 Sometime to do me seruice. Nine, or ten times
 I had thought t'haue yerk'd him here vnder the Ribbes.
Othello. 'Tis better as it is. 8

1. Scene IV. Pope+, Jen.

2. Attendants] and attendants Qq. with Torches] Om. Cap. Steev. Mal.

Var. Sing.

[The Street. Rowe. Another Street, before the Sagittary. Theob.4. stufte o'th'conscience] stufte of con- science Q₂.5. Murder] murrher Q₂. murther Q₃, Pope, Theob. ii, Han. Warb. Cap. Knt, Wh.
i, Rlf.lacke] lack Q₃. lake F₂ F₃. take F₄.

Rowe.

6. Sometime] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Soc.
Sometimes Qq et cet.Nine,] nine QqF₂ F₄.7. I had] I Pope+. I'd Wh. ii.t'haue] Dyce ii, Huds. Wh. ii. *to've*Pope+. to haue QqFf et cet.yerk'd] ierk'd Q₂. jerk'd Q₂ Q₃.

Pope+, Jen. Rann. Wh. ii.

vnder the Ribbes] Separate line, Qq.
Ribbes] Rib F₄, Rowe.8. 'Tis] It's Pope+.

darkness of the night, which alwaies emboldeneth men to naughtinesse; and that there be not any houses broken up, nor thieves nor rogues lurking in corners with intent to do violence.'—Commonwealth of Venice, pp. 97, 99. [This note of Malone seems to have satisfied, with the exception of DELIUS, all modern editors, even KNIGHT, who has, in many another passage, maintained the F, on grounds less substantial than he might have stood on here. If Brabantio had wished to summon to his aid the customary guardians of the night, the epithet 'special' is needless, whereas it is not only expressed, but it is emphasized; it is transposed from the noun it particularly qualifies in order to give it importance. The logical order is 'officers of special might,' just as 'the whole ear of Denmark' in Ham. I, v, 36, means 'the ear of all Denmark,' or as 'course of direct session,' Oth. I, ii, 105, means the 'direct course of session.' I am afraid that here the zeal of Malone's learning hath eaten him up, and that 'night' of Q₂ is a misprint.—ED.]

2. Torches] DELIUS: To Shakespeare's public this conveyed the idea not only that the time was night, but also that the scene was in the street.

4. it very] Is not this a case of the absorption of the definite article in the t sound of 'it'?—ED.

4. stuff] JOHNSON: That is, substance or essence of the conscience. LLOYD: Iago gains the confidence of Roderigo by the proper force of his will, and by plain exposition of politic hypocrisy; this is his course with a fool destitute of principles; his pretensions to honesty [as in this line] gain him the confidence of Othello, whose credulousness in this respect would, in truth, appear to us as gross as that of Roderigo, but that it is not associated with the same circumstances of disgracefulness.

7. yerk'd] DYCE: To strike with a quick, smart blow. WHITE (ed. ii): A mere phonetic spelling of jerked.

8. COLERIDGE: How well these few words impress at the outset the truth of Othello's Iago. Nay but he prated,

 And spoke such scuruy, and prouoking termes 10
 Against your Honor, that with the little godlineesse I haue
 I did full hard forbear him. But I pray you Sir,
 Are you fast married ? Be assur'd of this,
 That the Magnifico is much belou'd,
 And hath in his effect a voice potentiall 15
 As double as the Dukes : He will diuorce you.

11. Against your Honor] Separate line,
 Pope et seq.

12. pray you] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Dyce,
 Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Rlf, Huds. pray
 Qq et cet.

13. Be assur'd] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt,

Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Rlf, Huds.
For be fure Qq et cet.

15. his] its Quincy (MS).

16. double] noble Quincy (MS). capa- ble Cartwright. indubitable Bulloch.

Dukes] Duke Qs.

own character of himself at the end—'that he was not easily wrought' ! His self-government contradistinguishes him throughout from Leontes. GOULD (p. 94) : J. B. Booth gave this with a gravity, a weighty distinctness on the last three words, 'better—as—it is,' which conveyed a reproof, and was intended to dismiss the subject.

9. he prated] STEEVENS asks, 'of whom is this said ? Of Roderigo ?' KNIGHT answers : 'Iago is preparing Othello for the appearance of Roderigo with Brabantio, which he does by representing that Roderigo has communicated to him his intention to apprise Desdemona's father of her flight, and that he resented his expressions toward Othello.'

12. forbear] SCHMIDT (Lex.) : To spare, to let alone. Conf. Ham. V, i, 261 : 'For love of God, forbear him.'

12. But] BOOTH : Now let your manner be more serious.

12. you] A mere enclitic in pronunciation, absorbed in the final sound of 'pray.'—ED.

14. Magnifico] TOLLET : 'The chiefe men of Venice are by a peculiar name called Magnifici, i. e. Magnificoes.'—Minsheu [s. v. Magnificent. Minsheu adds : Et Academicarum Rectores in Germania, eodem titulo insigniuntur.—ED.]

15. his] STAUNTON : Here employed for the then scarce known its, and refers to 'voice.'

16. double] WARBURTON, followed by THEOBALD (not CAPELL, as KNIGHT says), interpreted this as signifying as large, as extensive, equivalent to the Greek διπλοῦς, and cited Dioscorides and Theocritus. Whereupon Dr JOHNSON thus improved the occasion : All this learning, if it had even been what it endeavors to be thought, is, in this place, superfluous. There is no ground for supposing, that our author copied or knew the Greek phrase; nor does it follow, that, because a word has two senses in one language, the word which in another answers to one sense should answer to both. Manus, in Latin, signifies both a hand and troop of soldiers, but we cannot say, that 'the captain marched at the head of his hand;' or, 'that he laid his troop upon his sword.' It is not always in books that the meaning is to be sought of this writer, who was much more acquainted with naked reason and with living manners. 'Double' has here its natural sense. The president of every deliberative assembly has a double voice. In our courts the chief justice and one of the inferior judges prevail over the other two, because the chief justice has a double voice. Brabantio had in his effect, tho' not by law yet by weight and influence, a voice not actual and formal, but potential and operative, as doubt, that is, a voice that when a question was suspended would turn the balance as effectually as the Duke's. 'Potential' is used in the sense of science; a canstic is called a potential fire. MALONE's studies in early Venetian polity played him false here; so far from the Duke's having a 'double voice,' it appears from Thomas's History of Italy, 1560, that it was exactly what he had not: 'Whereas,' says Thomas, 'many have reported, the duke in ballotyng should have two voices; it is nothinge so, for in giving his voice he hath but one ballot, as all others have.' Nothing discouraged, Malone at once surmises that 'Shakespeare might have gone on this received opinion, which he might have found in some other book. Supposing, however, that he had learned from this very passage that the Duke had not a double voice in the Council of Seven, yet as he had a vote in each of the various Councils of the Venetian State (a privilege which no other person enjoys,) our poet might have thought himself justified in the epithet which he has here used; and this circumstance, which he might have found in a book already quoted, Contareno's Commonwealth and Government of Venice, 1599, was, I believe, here in his thoughts: "So great is the prince's authoritie, that he may, in whatsoever court, adjoine himselfe to the magistrate therein, being president, as his colleague and companion, and have equal power with the other presidents," &c., p. 41. Again, p. 42: "Besides this, the prince hath in every Councell equal authoritie with any of them, for one suffrage or lotte." Thus we see, continues Malone, though he had not a double voice in any one assembly, yet as he had a vote in all the various assemblies, his voice, thus added to the voice of each of the presidents of those assemblies, might with strict propriety be called double and potential.' STEEVENS: Double and single anciently signified strong and weak when applied to liquors, and perhaps to other objects. In this sense the former epithet may be employed by Brabantio, and the latter by the chief justice speaking to Falstaff: 'Is not your wit single?' Here the phrase may, therefore, only signify that Brabantio's voice, as a magnifico, was as forcible as that of the Duke. HENLEY: 'The double voice' of Brabantio refers to the opinion, (which, as being a magnifico, he was no less entitled to, than the duke himself), either, of nullifying the marriage of his daughter contracted without his consent; or, of subjecting Othello to fine and imprisonment for having seduced an heiress. PYE [does one reader in a thousand know or remember, that Pye is a predecessor of Tennyson as Poet-Laureate?—ED.]: Surely the obvious purport of the passage is that Brabantio, from his popularity and wealth, has effectually such a weight in the Senate as gives him a power equal to the double vote conferred by the constitution on the duke. KNIGHT: It is clear that Shakespeare did not take the phrase in a literal sense; for, if he had supposed that the duke had a double voice as duke, he would not have assigned the same privilege to the senator Brabantio. DELIUS: If what Brabantio says has as much weight as what the duke says, his voice must be twice as potential as that of the other nobles, i. e. as double as the duke's. HUDSON: 'A voice potential or powerful as much so as the Duke's.' JOURDAIN (Philol. Soc. Trans., 1860, p. 142): This is an historical mistake made by a typographical error; the 'as' should be of. The Duke had not a double voice, but the members of the Council of Three had very nearly such, as the following will show:—'Next vnto the Duke are three called the Signori Capi or Cai, whiche outwardly seeme inferioure to the Duke, and yet are of more auctoritee than he. For theyr power is so absolute that if there happen cause why, they maie arrest the Duke.'—The historie of Italie, by William Thomas, 1549.

[16. 'As double as the Dukes.']

Or put vpon you, what restraint or greeuance, 17
 The Law (with all his might, to enforce it on) [312 a]
 Will giue him Cable.
Othel. Let him do his spight; 20
 My Seruices, which I haue done the Signorie
 Shall out-tongue his Complaints. 'Tis yet to know,
 Which when I know, that boasting is an Honour,
 I shall promulgate. I fetch my life and being,
 From Men of Royall Seige. And my demerites 25
 May speake (vnbonnetted) to as proud a Fortune

17. or greeuance] Ff, Rowe+, Cap.
 Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. and griev- ances Q₃, and greeuance Q₁Q₂ et cet.

18. The] That Q₁.
enforce] inforce Qq.

19. Will] Weele Qq.

21. Seruices] service Q₃.

22. out-tongue] out tongue Q₁.
Complaints.] complaints, Qq.

23. Which...know] Om. Q₁.

24. promulgate.] pro-vulgate, Q₁. pro- mulgate) or promulgate, Pope et seq. pro- mulge Cap. conj. (p. 21, a).

25. Seige.] F₁, height, Q₁Q₂ Jen. hight, Q₃. Siege F₃F₄ et cet.

demerites] demerrits, Q₁.

26. (vnbonnetted)] vnbonnited Q₁. un- bonnetting Pope, Warb. and bonneted
 Theob. Johns. Cap. Jen. e'en bonneted
 Han.

to] Om. Q₂Q₃.

Therefore I read, 'as double of the Duke's.' [In note on I, i, 199, Jourdain asserts that Brabantio belonged to this Council of Three.—ED.] WHITE (ed. ii): A doubtful reading, but it may possibly mean merely as potential. [If Johnson's interpretation be not the obvious one, then I agree with White that the reading is doubtful, and am inclined to think that we might read 'as double of.' It is Iago's aim to poison Othello's delight and plague him with flies, therefore he exaggerates Brabantio's power in the State, even to saying that the effect of Brabantio's voice is as potential as double that of the Duke. But it is hardly worth the time and labour expended on it. We have the 'double,' and surely in the notes the 'toil and trouble,' needing but the 'fire and chauldron' to complete the round.—ED.]

21. To smooth away this Alexandrine, ABBOTT (§ 471) scans: My seru | ices which | I've done | the Sign | iorie. See also WALKER, Vers., p. 243.

23, 24. BOOTH: The keynote of his nature, a modest, simple-hearted gentleman, not a braggart as Iago would make him out.

25. Seige] JOHNSON: Men who have sat upon royal thrones. CLARENDON: Seat, thence rank, because people sat at table and elsewhere in order of precedence. See Ham. IV, vii, 77.

25. demerites] STEEVENS: This has the same meaning, among Elizabethan writers, as merits. [Both Bullokar, 1621, and Minsheu, 1617, give Demerit: A desert.] STAUNTON: 'Demerit' now signifies only ill desert; in Shakespeare's day it was used indiscriminately for good or ill deserving. In the present instance it is apparently employed in the good sense, for Othello could hardly mean that his blemishes might stand without concealment beside the dignity he had achieved.

26. vnbonnetted] POPE: It should be unbonnetting, i. e. without putting off the bonnet. THEOBALD: To speak 'unbonnetted' is to speak with the cap off, which is

As this that I haue reach'd. For know Iago, 27
But that I loue the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my vnhoufed free condition 29

29. not my...condition] not, my...condition, Qq.

directly opposite to the poet's meaning. So in Lear, III, i, 14, 'unbonneted he runs.' Othello means to say, that his birth and services set him upon such a rank that he may speak to a Senator of Venice with his hat on, i. e. without showing any marks of deference or inequality. I, therefore, am inclined to think Shakespeare wrote: 'May speak, and bonnetted,' &c. Or, if any like better the change of the negative un, in the corrupted reading, into the epitatic im, we may thus reform it: 'May speak imbonnetted,' &c. [This last conjecture was withdrawn by Theobald (ed. ii), but proposed anew by Steevens, without credit.] JOHNSON: Pope's emendation may as well be not putting on as not putting off, the bonnet. STEEVENS: Bonnetter, says Cotgrave, is to put off one's cap. So in Cor. II, ii, 30. Mr Fuseli explains this passage as follows: 'I am his equal or superior in rank; and were it not so, such are my demerits, that, unbonneted, without the addition of patrician or senatorial dignity, they may speak to as proud a fortune,' &c. 'At Venice the bonnet, as well as the toge, is a badge of aristocratic honours to this day.' A. C. (in Var. 21): 'Unbonneted' is uncovered, revealed, made known. See a similar expression in II, iii, 'you unlace your reputation.' COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., p. 250): Theobald's argument goes on the assumption that Shakespeare could not use the same word differently in different places; whereas I should conclude, that as in the passage in Lear the word is employed in its direct meaning, so here it is used metaphorically; and this is confirmed by what has escaped the editors, that it is not 'I' but 'my demerits' that may speak 'unbonneted,'—without the symbol of a petitioning inferior. STAUNTON: The import we take to be,—my services when revealed (unbonneted) may aspire or lay claim to (may speak to) as proud a fortune as this which I have attained. Even with Fuseli's interpretation it is indispensable for the integrity of the passage that 'speak to' be understood in the sense just mentioned of aspire or lay claim to. SCHMIDT (Lex.): Perhaps the meaning is simply: I may say so with all courtesy and humility, and Othello's words must, perhaps, be accompanied by a corresponding gesture, as the writing of F₂ seems to imply, by placing the word 'unbonneted' in a parenthesis. WHITE (ed. ii): The question of manners in Shakespeare's time as to the hat seems very difficult. The remembering courtesy, the off-capping, and the unbonneting are quite incongruous. No attempt to reconcile these expressions has been at all successful.

29. vnhoufed] JOHNSON: Free from domestic cares. A thought natural to an adventurer. WHALLEY: To Othello, talking as a soldier, 'unhoused' may signify the having no settled house or habitation. HUNTER (New Illust., ii, 282): This passage affords one of the best proofs of Shakespeare's acquaintance with the Italian language. 'Unhoused' conveys to English ears no idea of anything which any one would be unwilling to resign; and, in fact, it is only by recollecting the way in which the Italians use cassare that we arrive at its true meaning, which is unmarried. A soldier was as much 'unhoused,' in the ordinary meaning of the term, after marriage as before. Othello would not resign the freedom of his bachelor estate. KNIGHT: Othello expresses no satisfaction at having been houseless, but he simply uses 'unhoused' for unmarried. The husband is the head or band of the house,—the unmarried is the unhouse-banded—the 'unhoused.'

Put into Circumscription, and Confine, 30
For the Seas worth. But looke, what Lights come yond?

Enter Cassio, with Torches.

Iago. Those are the raifed Father, and his Friends:
You were best go in.

Othel. Not I: I must be found. 35
My Parts, my Title, and my perfect Soule
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they? 37

31. Seas] sea's Theob. et seq. seas' Anon. (ap. Cam.)	Qq. Enter, at a Distance...Cap. After no , line 38, Coll.
worth.] worth , Qq.	33. Those] These Qq, Jen. Steev. Var
Lights come] light comes Johns.	Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly.
yond] yonder Qq, Pope+, Jen.	34. in.] in : Q ₂ .
Steev. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. yond' Cap.	35. found.] found , Qq.
Scene V. Pope+, Jen.	36. Parts] part Han.
32. Enter...] Enter Cassio with lights, Officers, and Torches (after worth , line 31)	37. manifest] manifestly F. me rightly.] my right by : Q ₂ Q ₃ . Is it they?] it is they . Q ₂ .

31. the Seas worth] JOHNSON: I would not marry her, though she were as rich as the Adriatic, which the Doge annually marries. STEEVENS: As the gold ring annually thrown by the Doge into the Adriatic cannot be said to have much enriched it, I believe the common and obvious meaning of this passage is the true one. PYE: I think Steevens indubitably right, but not for the reason he gives. I believe Johnson thought no more of the Adriatic being enriched by the annual wedding-ring, than Shakespeare did of the Adriatic at all. [Steevens refers to the occurrence of the same phrase in D'Avenant's Cruel Brother (p. 131, ed. Maidment), and adds, 'perhaps the phrase is proverbial.' A citation from D'Avenant, in a case like this, carries but little weight. I doubt if there be an Act in all D'Avenant's plays, wherein Shakespearian phrases may not be found. For instance, the sixth line of this very play of The Cruel Brother reads: 'This way to madness leads,' and 'excellent wretch,' occurs more than once farther on. With more propriety Steevens refers to Wint. Tale, IV, iv, 501, and Ham. V: I, ii, 164; but is again far afield in referring to Pliny's Chapter (IX, 34) on The Riches of the Sea, which alludes to the high prices paid by luxury 'in furnishing the table with such varietie of dishes, in pleasing and contenting the taste with so many dainty and delicate fishes.' Conf. Rick. III: I, iv, 26: 'Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearls, Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels, All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea.'—ED.] BOOTH: Note the frequent reference to the sea;—for the same reason, that I gave anent the 'superstition' in the play.

34. You were] WALKER (Crit. ii, 202): Thou wert (sometimes written in the old poets Th'wert), you were, I was, &c., occur frequently, both in Shakespeare and contemporary dramatists, in places where it is clear they must have been pronounced as one syllable, in whatever manner the contraction was effected. [See Ham. IV, v, 14, and ANNOTT, § 401.]

36. Parts] SCHMIDT and ROLFE agree in interpreting this as merits. It seems to me that it is rather the endowments of nature, his natural gifts, like 'your sum of parts' in Ham. IV, vii, 74.—HUN

ACT I, SC. II.]	THE MOORE OF VENICE	35
Iago. By Ianus, I thinke no.		38
Othel. The Seruants of the Dukes?
And my Lieutenant?		40
The goodnesse of the Night vpon you (Friends)
What is the Newes?
Cassio. The Duke do's greet you (Generall)
And he requires your hafte, Post-hafte appearance,
Enen on the instant.		45
Othello. What is the matter, thinke you?
Cassio. Something from Cyprus, as I may diuine:
It is a bufinesse of some heate. The Gallies
Haue sent a dozen sequent Messengers
This very night, at one anothers heeles:		50
And many of the Consuls, rais'd and met,

39, 40. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.	Steev.'93 et cet.
39. Dukes ?] Duke, Qq, Rowe et seq.	46. What is] What's Qq, Jen.
40. Lieutenant ?] Lieutenant, Q.	you ?] you : Q.
Lieutenant ? Q ₂ Q ₃ . lieutenant : or lieutenant. Rowe et cet.	47. Cyprus] Cipres Qq.
41. you] your Q.	48. Gallies] Galleyes Qq.
42. Newes ?] newes. Q.	49. dosen] dozen F.
44. hafte, Post-hafte] Ff, Rowe +, Cap.	sequent] frequent Q.
Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. haft, post haft	50. at one] one at Q ₂ Q ₃ .
Q ₂ . haft, post-haft Q ₂ Q ₃ . haste-post-haste	51. Consuls] Counsel Han. Council Johns.

38. Ianus] WARBURTON: There is great propriety in making the double Iago swear by Janus, who had two faces. The address of it likewise is as remarkable; for as the people coming up appeared at different distances to have different shapes, he might swear by Janus without suspicion of any other emblematic meaning.

39, 40. Is it not better, as more dramatic, to retain the two separate questions of the Folio than to combine them as in the Qto? KNIGHT separates them by a semicolon, and STAUNTON by an exclamation-mark.—ED.

41. goodness] DELIUS: May night, usually unfriendly to everybody, show only its good side to you. [Is it not simply the ordinary salutation 'good day,' or 'Goddigoden' adapted to the hour?—ED.]

43. BOOTH: Cassio alone knew where Othello was to be found. Othello says, that he knew from first to last of the secret love, &c. Remember this when Iago tells you, 'he's married,' &c.

44. haste, Post-haste] RITSON: The comma, hitherto placed after 'haste,' should be a hyphen. 'Your haste-post-haste appearance' is your immediate appearance. The words 'Haste, post, haste,' were, in our author's time, usually written on the cover of packets or letters sent express.

51. Consuls] THEOBALD changed this to Couns'lers, for the reasons given at I, i, 27. KNIGHT says, that in both cases senators were probably meant. TH. ELZE (Sh. Jahrbuch, xiv, 179): Shakespeare has not clearly distinguished between the Collegio and the Senate. Brabantio's accusation of Othello could not have been brought

Are at the Dukes already. You haue bin hotly call'd for, 52
 When being not at your Lodging to be found,
 The Senate hath sent about three seuerall Quefts,
 To search you out. 55

Othel. 'Tis well I am found by you :
 I will but spend a word here in the house,
 And goe with you.

Cassio. Aunciant, what makes he heere?

Iago. Faith, he to night hath boarded a Land Carraçt, 60

54. hath sent] sent Qq, Pope, Theob.
 Han. Warb. Dyce iii, Coll. iii, Huds.

about] about Q₁Q₂. above Q₃,
 Pope +, Coll. i, Wh. i. out Johns.

57, 58. One line, Qq.

57. I will but spend] He spend Q₁. I will spend but F₃F₄.

58. And goe] And then go Ktly.
 [Exit Othello. Rowe et seq.]

59. Aunciant] Ancient Q₁Q₂Ff.

60. boarded] boarded QqFf, Rowe i.

Carraçt] Carrick Q₁. Carriact

Q₂Q₃. Carrac Ff.

before the Senate, but before the Ministerial Council—the Collegio. The Third Scene of the First Act is correctly laid in the 'Council Chamber,' not in the 'Hall of the Senate.' Properly also, Shakespeare speaks of 'the Council' and the 'Consuls,' that is, the Counsellors; but improperly in the same speech of the 'Senate' and [line 255] of the 'Senators.' But, perhaps, Shakespeare purposely avoided the use of the word College, because of its ambiguity to English ears.

52. You haue] LETTSOM (ap. DYCE, ed. iii) would read 'you had been,' &c. HUDSON adopted the emendation.

54. about] JOHNSON: That is, about the city. COLLIER (ed. i) preferred above of the Qq, because a "quest" necessarily searches in various directions; and the word "about" may, therefore, be considered surplusage. Cassio means that more than "three several quests" have been sent in search of Othello.' But as his (MS) retained 'about,' Collier, in his subsequent editions, followed it.

54. Quests] STEEVENS: That is, searches. So in Heywood's Brasen Age, 1613: 'Now, if in all his quests, he be withheld.' An ancient MS. entitled The Boke of Huntynge that is cleped Mayster of Game, has the following explanation of the word 'quest': 'This word quest is a terme of herte hunters of beyonde the see; and is thus moche to say as whan the hunter goth to fynde the hert and to herborow him.' HAL- LIWELL cites Cotgrave, s. v. 'Queste: f. A quest, inquirie, search, inquisition, seeking,' &c.

57. spend] GÉRARD: Les expressions to spend et to pay sont à tout moment employées par les Anglais, peuple commerçant et pratique par excellence. Ils ne rendent pas, ils paient une visite; ils ne passent pas, ils dépensent leur temps. En Amérique la première question que l'on fait sur quelqu'un, c'est: Combien vaut-il? [When Mons. Gérard enacts the 'Pow'r,' and 'wad the giftie gie us,' shall not we Americans accept it, however startling the revelation?—ED.]

59. BOOTH: Speak this with curiosity, as if to learn what Iago knows of the marriage.

60. Carraçt] SKEAT (Etym. Dict., s. v.): A ship of burden. (We also find carrick, which comes nearer to Low Lat. carrica, a ship of burden.) Low Lat. carracare, better carricare, to lade a car.—Lat. carrus, a car. STAUNTON: A ship of large

If it proue lawfull prize, he' made for euer. 61

Cassio. I do not vnderstand.

Iago. He's married.

Cassio. To who?

Iago. Marry to——Come Captaine, will you go? 65

Othel. Haue with you.

Cassio. Here come sanother Troope to seeke for you.

Enter Brabantio, Roderigo, with Officers, and Torches.

Iago. It is Brabantio: Generall be aduis'd, 69

63. married] marri'd F.

64. who] whom Q₂Q₃Ff, Rowe+, Jen.
Coll. Ktly.

[Enters Brabantio, Roderigo, and others with lights, and weapons. Qq.
(Enter... Q₂Q₃). Re-enter. Oth. Cap.

65. go ?] go ? Enter Oth. Rowe+.

66. Haue with you.] Ha, with who ? Q₂.

Ha' with you. Q₂Q₃.

68. Scene VI. Pope+, Jen.

Enter...] After line 64, Qq. After intent line 70, Coll. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Cam.
Sta. Del. Rlfe, Huds.

burden, like the Spanish galleon; but the compound in the text appears to have been a dissolute expression.

61. lawfull prize] LORD CAMPBELL (p. 114): A very distinct proof that Shakespeare was acquainted with Admiralty law, as well as with the procedure of Westminster Hall, the trope indicating, that there would be a suit in the High Court of Admiralty to determine the validity of the capture.

61. he'] This should be 'he's,' as it is in every other text, but in the copy of F₁, from which this is reprinted, the s has fallen out.—ED.

62. BOOTH: But show the audience that you do.

64. To who] THEOBALD (Nichols's Illust. of Lit., ii, 586): Surely, this is a terrible forgetfulness in our author. How came Cassio such a stranger to this affair, when it afterward appears he went a-wooing with Othello and took his part in the suit? [Cf. III, iii, 82.] RITSON (p. 227): It is very easy to imagine, that Cassio might wish to know if Iago were acquainted with the lady, to prevent the latter's suspecting that he was. BLACKSTONE: Cassio's seeming ignorance might only be affected, in order to keep his friend's secret till it became publicly known. MALONE: Or he might fear that Othello had proved false to the gentle Desdemona, and married another. STEEVENS: How far this suspicious apprehension would have become the benevolent Cassio, the intimate friend of Othello, let the reader judge. SINGER: It was probably a mere oversight of the poet. ABBOTT, § 274, gives many instances where the inflection of who is neglected. See IV, ii, 115; Macb. III, iv, 42; Ham. II, ii, 193; Lear, IV, iii, 7 and V, iii, 249. BOOTH: Feign much surprise, but do it carefully.

65. Captaine] ABBOTT, § 506: It is obvious that a syllable or foot may be supplied by a gesture, a beckoning, a movement of the head to listen, or of the hand to demand attention, as here: 'Marry | to—(Enter Othello.) | Come, cáp | tain, will | you gó?' However, we may scan, 'Marry | to—Come | Cap(i) | tain will | you go,' but very harshly and improbably.

66. you] STEEVENS: This expression denotes readiness.

69. aduis'd] JOHNSON: That is, be cool, be cautious, be discreet.

He comes to bad intent.

70

Othello. Holla, stand there.

Rodo. Signior, it is the Moore.

Bra. Downe with him, Theefe.

Iago. You, Rodorigoe? Cme Sir, I am for you.

Othe. Keepe vp your bright Swords, for the dew will rust them. Good Signior, you shall more command with yeares, then with your Weapons. 75

Bra. Oh thou foule Theefe,

Where hast thou stow'd my Daughter?

Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her

80

For Ile referre me to all things o f fense,

[312 b]

(If she in Chaines of Magick we re not bound)

Whether a Maid, so tender, Faire, and Happie,

So opposite to Marriage, that she shun'd

The wealthy curled Deareling of our Nation,

85

71. Holla,] Ho la, Q₃.

Coll. iii.

73. [They draw on both sides. Rowe.

80. Damn'd] Damnd Qq.

74. Rodorigoe? Cme] Rodorigo? Come

81. Ile] ile Q₁.

Ff. Rodorigo, come Booth's Rep.

things] thing Q₁.

75-77. Verse ending them...yeares...

82. Om. Q₁.

Weapons Qq, Rowe et seq.

85. wealthy curled] wealthy culled

76. rust them] rust em Qq. rust'em

Warb. Theob. ii. wealthiest cull'd Han.

Rowe+, Jen.

Deareling] Dearling F₁F₂, Knt.

78, 79. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

Darling F₁, darlings Wh. i. darlings

79. stow'd] stowed Qq. 'stow'd Wh. i,

Qq et cet.

72. BOOTH: This is spoken 'within.'

74. BOOTH: This is to prevent harm to Roderigo, for whose purse Iago has a tender regard. Make the audience understand this by your manner of singling him out,—a look will do it. [See Textual Notes for another instance of the difference between the copy of F₁, from which Lionel Booth reprinted, and that from which this edition is reprinted.—ED.]

75. BOOTH: Othello's party—Cassio, Iago, and others—should 'motion' to draw, when these words restrain them. Brabantio's friends enter with swords drawn. Be very respectful to Brabantio, resent his abuse, merely with a look of momentary anger.

75. for] See WALKER (Crit. ii, 321), for an Article, with many examples, on the confusion in the Folio of or and for. Walker would here read or, which may be correct, but of the instances of this confusion, cited by Walker, the present is, perhaps, the least manifest.—ED.

75. HUDSON: If I mistake not there is a sort of playful, good-humoured irony expressed in the very rhythm of this line.

85. curled] WARBURTON: I read culled, i. e. select, chosen. Shakespeare uses the word frequently. Cf. Hen. V. III, cho. 24. 'Curled' was an improper mark of difference between a Venetian and a Moor, which latter people are remarkably

Would euer haue (t'encurre a generall mocke) 86
 Run from her Guardage to the footie bosome,
 Of such a thing as thou: to feare, not to delight?
 Iudge me the world, if 'tis not grosse in fenfe,
 That thou hast practis'd on her with foule Charmes 90
 Abus'd her delicate Youth, with Drugs or Minerals,

86. t'encurre F₂F₃. t'incurr F₄.
 Rowe +, Dyce iii, Huds. to incurre Qq et cct.

87. Guardage gardage Qq.

88. as thou:] as thou? Qq. delight?] delight, Q₄. delight: Q₆Q₇.

89-94. Om. Q₁.

89. not] no Q₅.

curl'd by nature. JOHNSON: 'Curled' is elegantly and ostentatiously dressed. He had not the hair particularly in his thoughts. STEEVENS: Shakespeare evidently alludes to the hair in 'the curled Anthony,' Ant. & Cleo. V, ii, 304. D'Avenant uses the same expression in his Just Italian [but as was said before, parallel expressions in D'Avenant are of small avail.—ED.] MALONE: In R. of L., 981, the hair is expressly mentioned, and the epithet 'curled' is added as characteristic of a person of the highest rank: 'Let him have time to tear his curled hair.' [See notes in Lear, III, iv, 84, 'A Serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curled my hair.'—ED.]

85. Deareling] KNIGHT: This Saxon word is used in a plural sense. DYCE (Remarks, p. 233): The fact is, the s has been omitted in the Folio by a mistake of the compositor. In Shakespeare's time dearling could never have been used as a plural. That even Spenser (who antiquated his language more than any of his contemporaries) did not venture to employ such an archaism, is proved by the following from his Hymne in honour of Love:—'in a Paradize Of all delight, and ioyous happie rest, Where they doe feede on Nectar heauenly wize, With Hercules and Hebe, and the rest Of Venus dearlings, through her bountie blest.'

87. Guardage] ROLFE: Guardianship, used by Shakespeare nowhere else.

88. to feare] STEEVENS: To terrify, as in 3 Hen. VI. V, ii, 2, 'a bug that fear'd us all.' The line is redundant in measure. It might originally have ran, 'Of such as thou: to fear, not to delight.' MALONE takes 'fear' to be a substantive, and used for the object of fear; but ABBOTT, § 405, more correctly explains the phrase as an ellipsis, common among Elizabethans, after will and is, e. g. 'I will to the weird sisters.' 'I must to Coventry.' 'I am to thank you for it,' i. e. I am bound to thank you for it; so here 'such a thing as thou (a thing fit) to fear (act.), not to delight.'

89. Judge me] ABBOTT, § 365, Let the world judge for me. This optative use of the subjunctive, dispensing with 'let,' 'may,' &c., gives great vigour to the Shakespearean line. [It is doubtful if 'me' be here the Ethical Dative, as in I, i, 53: 'Whip me such honest knaues,' or 'He plucked me ope his doublet,' Jul. Cæs. Brabantio calls upon the world really to judge him and his position, which he immediately proceeds to state.—ED.]

90. practis'd] Very frequently used, as here, in the sense of plotting, with arts or magic. See Lear, III, ii, 57: 'Has practis'd on man's life.'

91. Minerals] In Ham. IV, i, 26, 'a mineral' means a mine, but in Cymb. V, v, 50, in the present passage, and in II, i, 330, it is used in the sense of a drug or mortal poison.

That weakens Motion. Ile haue't disputed on,

92

92. weakens Motion] weaken motion motion Han. Steev. Var. Sing. Wh. Sta.
Rowe, Pope i, Knt. Coll. Dyce, Glo. Cam. Huds. wakens motion Ktly. wake emotion
Del. Rife. weaken notion Theob. Pope ii, Anon.
Warb. Johns. Cap. Jen. Rann. waken

92. weakens Motion] THEOBALD suggested and adopted weaken notion. 'That is, her apprehension, right conception and idea of things, understanding, judgment; and supported the change by the apposite passage, 'his notion weakens,' Lear, I, iv, 221. CAPELL thought Theobald's change was 'open to no objections.' MALONE and STEEVENS approved of Hanmer's text, seeing that motion is used afterward in I, iii, 364, in the same sense, and also in Cymb. II, v, 20; Ham. III, iv, 72; Meas. for Meas. I, iv, 59; and because, as Malone said, there was 'good reason to believe that the words weaken and waken were in Shakespeare's time pronounced alike.' 'The objection to Theobald's "notion,"' continues Malone, 'is that no opiates or intoxicating potions or powders of any sort can distort or pervert the intellects, but by destroying them for a time; nor was it ever, at any time, believed by the most credulous that love-powders, as they were called, could weaken the understanding, though it was formerly believed that they could fascinate the affections; or, in other words, waken motion. Brabantio afterward asserts, "That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood He wrought upon her." Shakespeare, in almost all his plays, uses blood for passion. And one of the Senators asks Othello, not whether he had weakened Desdemona's understanding, but whether he did "by indirect and forced courses subdue and poison this young maid's affections.'" RITSON (p. 227), however, satisfactorily vindicates the Folio, thus: To 'weaken motion' is to impair the faculties. It was till very lately, and may be still an opinion, that philtres or love potions have the power of perverting, and of course weakening or impairing, both the sight and judgement, and of procuring fondness or dotage toward any unworthy object who administers them. And by motion Shakespeare means the senses which are depraved and weakened by these fascinating mixtures. STAUNTON thinks that this view is expressly contradicted by what Brabantio has just said: that Desdemona was 'so opposite to marriage,' and he 'therefore readily accepts the easy emendation Hanmer offers. Brabantio's grievance, it is plain, was not that Othello had, by charms and medicines, abated the motions of Desdemona's sense, but that he had aroused and stimulated them.' R. M. SPENCE (N. & Qu., 1879, 5th, xi, 383): Twice elsewhere in this Act 'motion' means emotion; the usus loquendi thus warrants me to regard emotion as the meaning of the word in this passage also; if so, then Hanmer's waken must indubitably be adopted. [Truly does KNIGHT say of this passage that the notes, here very much abridged, of the Commentators are neither satisfactory in a critical point of view, nor edifying in a moral one.—ED.]

92. disputed on] STAUNTON: This is an allusion to the manner in which causes were debated by the judges according to the custom of Venice formerly, and it affords one of many proofs that before writing Othello Shakespeare had attentively perused Lewkenor's translation of The Commonwealth and Government of Venice, written by the Cardinal Gaspar Contareno, &c., 1599. From this work he obtained his information concerning those 'officers of night,' whom Brabantio directs to be summoned; his knowledge of the Arsenal; as well as several particular expressions, such as Mine eares enclined; doe their countrie service; experience the mistresse of all things; serve 'he turne; their countrie customs, and others which he has modified and transplanted

ACT I, SC. II.]	THE MOORE OF VENICE	41
'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking ;		93
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,
For an abuser of the World, a practiser		95
Of Arts inhibited, and out of warrant;
Lay hold vpon him, if he do resist
Subdue him, at his perill.
Othe. Hold your hands
Both you of my inclining, and the rest.		100
Were it my Cue to fight, I should haue knowne it Without a Prompter. Whether will you that I goe
To answere this your charge ?
Bra. To Prifon, till fit time
Of Law, and courfe of direct Seffion		105
93. probable] portable Q ₂ Q ₃ Jen.	102. Whether] Whither Ft, Rowe.
95. For] Such Q ₁ .	where Qq et cet.
96. warrant ;] warrant ? Q ₁ .	that] Om. Pope +.
99. hands] hand . F ₄ .	103. To anfwere] And anfwere Q ₁ .
101. Cue] Qu . Q ₁ .	104, 105. fit...Seffion] Sep. line, Han.

into the piece. [Staunton then gives a long extract from Contareno, minutely setting forth the way in which criminal questions were disputed on in the ancient legal courts of Venice, which I do not reprint. I cannot detect a trace of any influence which this legal method had upon Shakespeare's mind, either while writing Othello or anything else, other than that, perhaps, he might have found there the two uncommon words disputed and of, which Staunton italicizes.—ED.]

95, 96. BOOTH: Othello and Cassio exchange smiles of pity for the old man's credulity.

99. BOOTH: Now Othello's friends draw. Othello stands between the two parties with sheathed scimeter held up; its crescent shape lends a little Oriental atmosphere to the picture. 'Tis harmless.

101. Cue] In Ham. II, ii, 534, WEDGWOOD's definition is quoted: 'The last words of the preceding speech, prefixed to the speech of an actor in order to let him know when he is to come on the stage. From the letter Q by which it was marked, "because," says Butler, Eng. Gram., 1634, "it is the first letter of quando, when, showing when to enter and speak."' [Note Q₁ in Textual Notes.] SKEAT now gives a different derivation; he says, 'that an actor's cue seems to be the same word as queue, as signifying the last words or tail-end of the speech of the preceding speaker. Oddly enough, it was, in this sense, sometimes denoted by Q; owing to the similarity of the sound.'

102. Whether] This passage is cited by WALKER (Vers. 106) as one of the many instances in which hither, whether, &c. are printed as dissyllables, where the verse indicates that they are monosyllables. Cf. Macb. I, iii, 111; Ham. III, ii, 193; Lear, II, i, 53, also in ABBOTT, § 466.

105. direct Session] HUDSON: The language is rather odd, and, perhaps, somewhat obscure; but the meaning probably is, till the time prescribed by law and by the regular course of judicial procedure.

Call thee to answer.

106

Othe. What if do obey?

How may the Duke be therewith fatisf'd,
Whose Messengers are heere about my side,
Vpon some present bufinesse of the State,
To bring me to him.

110

Officer. 'Tis true most worthy Signior,
The Dukes in Counsell, and your Noble selfe,
I am sure is sent for.

Bra. How? The Duke in Counsell?

115

In this time of the night? Bring him away;
Mine's not an idle Cause. The Duke himselfe,
Or any of my Brothers of the State,
Cannot but feele this wrong, as 'twere their owne:
For if such Actions may haue passage free,
Bond-flaues, and Pagans shall our Statesmen be. Exeunt

120

107. if do] if I Pope, Han. if I doe
QqFf et cet.

111. bring] beare Qq, Coll. i, ii.

112. Officer] i. O. Cap.

'Tis] Om. Pope+.

114. I am] I'm Pope+, Dyce iii, Huda.

116. night] nigh F₄.

117. Cause.] cause, Q₂. cause: Q₂Q₃.

121. Bond-flaues] Bondflaues QqF₃.
Bond slaves F₄.

116. In] For other instances of the use of 'in' for during or at, see ABBOTT, § 161.

121. Pagans] THEOBALD: Would Brabantio infer, if his private injury were not redressed, the Senate should no longer pretend to call themselves Christians? But pagans are as strict and moral as the most regular Christians in the preservation of private property. Difference of faith is not concerned, but mere human policy. I therefore read pageants, i. e. if we let such injurious actions go unpunished our statesmen must be slaves, ciphers in office, and have no power of redressing, be things of mere show and gaudy appearance only. STEEVENS: I believe the morality of either Christians or pagans was not in our author's thoughts. He alludes to the common condition of all blacks, who come from their own country both slaves and pagans; and uses the word in contempt of Othello and his complexion. If this Moor is now suffered to escape with impunity, it will be such an encouragement to his black countrymen, that we may expect to see all the first offices of our state filled up by the pagans and bondslaves of Africa. HEATH (p. 534). It is certain from this very play that the Moor had been both a bondslave and a pagan, though at that time he was neither. MALONE: In Shakespeare's time pagan was a very common expression of contempt.

Scena Tertia.Enter Duke, Senators, and Officers.

Duke. There's no composition in this Newes,
That giues them Credite.

1. Sen. Indeed, they are disproportioned; 5
My Letters say, a Hundred and seuen Gallies.

Duke. And mine a Hundred fortie.

2. Sena. And mine two Hundred :
But though they iumpe not on a iust accompt,
(As in these Cafes where the ayme reports, 10

1. Scene VII. Pope +, Jen.
The Senate House. Rowe. A Council
Chamber. Cap.

2. Enter...] Enter Duke, and Senators set at a Table, with lights and Attendants.
Qq.

3. There's] There is QqFf et cet.
this] Ff, Rowe. his Q₃. these Q₁Q₂
et cet.

5. they are] they're Pope, Theob. Han.

Johns. Dyce iii, Huds.

5. disproportioned] QqFf, Rowe, Jen.
Sta. disproportion'd Pope et cet.

7. And mine] and mine Q₂.
a Hundred fortie] F₂F₃, Knt, Sta. an hundred and forty Q₂Q₃. a hundred and forty Q₁F₄ et cet.

10. the ayme] they aym'd Q₃. they ayme
Q₂Q₃. they aim Pope, Theob. Johns. Jen.
Rann. Sing. Hal.

2. LLOYD: Central in the First Act is the scene in the Council Chamber; and the consideration, by the Duke and Senators, of the news from Cyprus is no mere surpluse; it strikes a tone of dispassionate appreciation of evidence and opinion that dominates all the succeeding scenes of agitation and disorders. From inconsistent intelligence, the main point of agreement is carefully adopted for further examination, notwithstanding predisposition to underrate it; intelligence, otherwise of good authority, is condemned as fallacious from collateral indications; and lastly, thus prepared for, the last courier has full credence, and the critical circumstances once understood action follows at once. Othello is dispatched that very night. The same solid perspicacity distinguishes the reception of the complaint of Brabantio.

3. composition] WARBURTON: That is, consistency, concordancy.

3. this Newes] SKEAT (Dict. s. v.): The form newes does not seem to be older than about A. D. 1500. It is nothing but a plural formed from new treated as a subs., so also tidings. It is a translation of F. nouvelles, plural of nouvelle, new (Cotgrave); so also Lat. nova = new things, i. e. news. [From a rough calculation by means of Mrs Cowden-Clarke's Concordance, I find that Shakespeare uses this word in the singular more than three times as often as in the plural.—ED.]

7. Hundred fortie] WHITE (ed. i): I think it not improbable that this passage stood, as the rhythm requires: 'My letters say a hundred seven galleys. Duke. And mine a hundred forty. a Sen. Mine, two hundred.' PURNELL: The occasional omission of the conjunction in numerals may be a relic of the French usage (cent-quarante).

10. the ayme] WARBURTON: Where there is no better ground for information than conjecture. JOHNSON: The reading of Q₂ has a sense sufficiently easy and commodious. Where men report not by certain knowledge, but by aim and conjecture. [For other instances of its use in the sense of guess, conjecture, see SCHMIDT, Lex.

'Tis oft with difference) yet do they all confirme 11
A Turkish Fleete, and bearing vp to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to iudgement :
I do not so secure me in the Error,
But the maine Article I do approue 15
In fearefull sence.

Saylor within. What hoa, what hoa, what hoa.

Enter Saylor.

Officer. A Messenger from the Gallies. [313 a]

Duke. Now? What's the businesse? 20

Sailor. The Turkish Preparation makes for Rhodes,
So was I bid report here to the State,
By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1. Sen. This cannot be 25
By no assay of reason. 'Tis a Pageant

11. do] Om. Pope, Han.

12. Cyprus] Cipresse Q₁. Cipres Q₂Q₃.

14. in the] to the Qq.

15. Article] Articles Q₁.

17. Saylor within] One within Qq.

hoa] ho Qq.

18. Enter Saylor.] Enter a Messenger.
(after sence, line 16), Qq. Enter an Officer bringing in a Sailor. Cap. After Gallies, line 19, Dyce.

19. Officer] Sailor Q₁. First Off. Dyce.
Gallies] Galley Q₁.

20. Now? What's the] Now, the Qq,
Coll. Wh. Ktly. Now? the Cap. Steev.
Mal. Knt, Sing.

23. By Signior Angelo] Om. Q₂,
Pope+. Ending line 22, Q₂Q₃.

[they withdraw. Cap.

25, 26. This...reason] One line, Qq.

26. reason.] reason— Qq.

s. v.] COLLIER (ed. ii) adopts from his (MS) 'with the same reports,' with the note that 'the clear meaning being, that even when reports of such occurrences are mainly the same, it is often with difference. It appears highly probable that the passage was misheard, as well as misprinted, and that the true text is what we have adopted.' [Nevertheless, Collier returned to F₂ in the text of his ed. iii. The Cam. Ed. records 'aim besorts' and 'main accords' as anonymous conjectures.—ED.]

14. secure] STAUNTON paraphrases, 'I do not so over-confidently build on the discrepancy;' but PURNELL, with more fidelity to the derivation of the word, 'I do not lay aside anxiety on account of the discrepancy.'

21. Rhodes] See Appendix, 'Date of the Action.'

24. by] For other instances where 'by' means about, concerning, see ABBOTT, § 145. PURNELL refers [as does also Abbott] to '1 Corinth. iv, 4, "I know nothing by myself" (the Greek being, "I am conscious of nothing against myself")', where Alford quotes, "I know no harm by him," as a midland-county current expression.'

25, 26. cannot . . . no] For instances of double negatives, see ABBOTT, § 406.

26. assay] JOHNSON: Bring it to the test, examine it by reason as we examine metals by the assay, it will be found counterfeit by all trials.

To keepe vs in falſe gaze, when we conſider 27
 Th'importancie of Cyprus to the Turke;
 And let our felues againe but vnderſtand,
 That as it more concerns the Turke then Rhodes, 30
 So may he with more facile queſtion beare it,
 For that it ſtands not in ſuch Warrelike brace,
 But altogether lacks th'abilities
 That Rhodes is drefs'd in. If we make thought of this,
 We muſt not thinke the Turke is ſo vnſkillfull, 35
 To leaue that lateſt, which concerns him firſt,
 Neglecting an attempt of eaſe, and gaine
 To wake, and wage a danger profitleſſe.

Duke. Nay, in all confidence he's not for Rhodes.

Officer. Here is more Newes. 40

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſen. The Ottamites, Reueren'd, and Gracious, 42

27. gaze,] gaze: or gaze. Qq et cet.	eaſe and gaine, To wake Q ₂ Q ₃ F ₃ F ₄ et cet.
31. facile] fertile Pope.
32-38. Om. Q ₁ .	39. Nay,] And Q ₁ .
33. But] Who Q ₂ Q ₃ .	all] Om. Rowe ii.
34. thought] nought Q ₂ (ap. Steevens's reprint).	41. a Meſſenger.] a 2. Meſſenger. Q ₂ .
	a 2 Meſſenger Q ₂ Q ₃ .
37, 38. eaſe, and gaine To wake,] F ₄ .	42. Reueren'd] reverend QqF ₃ F ₄ .

28. importancie] ROLFE: Used by Shakespeare nowhere else.

31. facile queſtion] JOHNSON: 'Queſtion' is for the act of ſeeking, with more easy endeavour. MASON: May carry it with leſs diſpute, with leſs oppoſition. SCHMIDT (Lex.) from the uſe of 'queſtion' in the ſenſe of a judicial trial, deduces the meaning here of 'a trial and deciſion by the force of arms as the ultima ratio regum.'

32. brace] JOHNSON: State of defence. WHITE (ed. ii): Warlike ſtrain, military neceſſity or compulſion. [I cannot underſtand how White deduces this interpretation. The very point of the ſpeech is, that Cyprus is of greater 'military neceſſity' to the Turk than Rhodes. 'Brace' is, I think, here equivalent to readineſſe; when a knight had braced on his armour he was ready.—ED.]

38. wage] STEEVENS gives as the meaning here, to fight, to combat, and cites in proof, 'To wage againſt the enmity o'th'air.'—Lear, II, iv, 206; but 'wage' is tranſitive here; accordingly, SCHMIDT gives the better interpretation: to haſard, to attempt.

42. BOOTH here begins his Scene IV, in the Council Chamber. The Duke and the Senators are diſcovered R. with a Meſſenger who is kneeling before them. Enter as the ſcene opens, Gra. Rod. and others. The advantage of placing the Duke at the ſide inſtead of at the back as in the old 'ſet' is, that the characters need not turn their backs on the audience when addreſſing the Duke.

- Steering with due course toward the Ile of Rhodes, 43
 Haue there inioynted them with an after Fleete.
 1. Sen. I, so I thought : how many, as you gueffe? 45
Mess. Of thirtie Saile : and now they do re-stem
 Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance
 Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
 Your trustie and most Valiant Seruitour,
 With his free dutie, recommends you thus, 50
 And prayes you to beleue him.
Duke. 'Tis certaine then for Cyprus :
Marcus Luccicos is not he in Towne?
 1. Sen. He's now in Florence. 54

44. injoynted] injoin'd Rowe, Pope,
 Theob. Han. Warb.

them] Om. Q₁, Huds. iii.

Fleete.] fleete Q₁. fleet, Q₂ Q₃. fleet—
 Rowe +, Jen.

45. Om. Q₁.

46. thirtie] 30. Qq.

re-stem] resterne Q₁. resterne
 Q₂ Q₃.

48. toward] towards Q₁ Q₃. towarcs Q₂.

50. his] this Cap. (misprint).

50. thus] this Lettsom (ap. Dyce iii).

51. beleue] relieve (T. Clark, Cap. conj.), Sing. ii, Ktly.

52, 53. 'Tis...Luccicos] One line, Theob.
 Warb. Johns.

53. Luccicos] Lucchese, Cap. Steev.
 Var. Rann. Luccicos, Booth's Rep.

not he] not here Q₁. he not Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Steev. Var. he not here Theob.
 Warb. Johns.

Towne ?] Towne. Q₂.

44. injoynted] WALKER (Crit. iii, 285): Injoint? Ham. I, ii, 20: 'Our state to be disjoint, and out of frame.' Yet I doubt whether the cases are parallel. [For other instances of the omission, in participles, of ed after d or t, see WALKER (Crit. ii, 324), and ABBOTT, § 342.]

51. beleue] JOHNSON: The late learned and ingenious Mr Thomas Clark, of Lincoln's Inn, read the passage, 'relieve him.' But the present reading may stand. He entreats you not to doubt the truth of this intelligence. CAPELL: Montano's message to the Senate is worded with great politeness in all the parts of it; in this last relief, the thing he stood in want of and wish'd, is only insinuated; knowing it would follow from them, was belief accorded him. [This emendation of relieve for 'believe,' COLLIER attributed to Rev. Mr Barry. DYCE and WHITE ascribe it to Capell; White pronounces it 'plausible;,' DYCE (ed. iii) quotes LETTSOM as follows: 'Believe,' I think right as Johnson takes it. Relieve would mean 'send a successor.']

53. Luccicos] CAPELL changed this to Lucchese, and justified the change in a note in his usual style: 'The corruptions of "Veronese" may induce belief, that this which we are come to is no strain'd one; and the Italian will call it necessary, terminations like that below being unknown in his language.' 'But,' asks KNIGHT, with more shrewdness than grammar, 'who is the Duke inquiring after? Most probably a Greek soldier of Cyprus, an Estradiot, one who from his local knowledge was enabled to give him information. Is it necessary that the Greek should bear an Italian name? And does not the termination in cos better convey the notion which we believe the poet to have had?'

Duke. Write from vs, 55
To him, Post, Post-haste, dispatch.

1. Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the Valiant Moore.

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Cassio, Iago, Rodorigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you, 60
Against the generall Enemy Ottoman.

I did not see you : welcome gentle Signior,
We lack't your Counsaile, and your helpe to night.

Bra. So did I yours : Good your Grace pardon me.
Neither my place, nor ought I heard of businesse 65
Hath rais'd me from my bed ; nor doth the generall care

55, 56. Two lines, Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.
Cap. One line, Qq et cet.

Write...Post,] One line, Cap.

Write...him] One line, Pope, Han.

56. To him,] wish him Q₂, Cap. Steev,
Var. Rann. Sing. to him Q₂Q₃.

Post, Post-haste] post, post haste Qq.

Post-haste Pope, Han. post-post-haste
Steev. Var. Sing. Dyce, Sta. Del. Glo.
Cam. Huds. Rife, Wh. ii.

Post-haste, dispatch] Post-haste :
dispatch Cap. Steev. Var. Sing.

57. Valiant] Om. Ff, Rowe.
Scene VIII. Pope +, Jen.

59. and Officers] Defdemona, and Officers Qq (after line 56).

60. employ] imploy Qq.

61. Ottoman] Ottaman Q₁.

62. [To Braban. Theob.

63. lack't] lacke Q₁.

65. nor] nor Qq. for Ff. ought] ought Theob. ii.

66. nor] not Q₂.
care] Om. Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.

56. To] MALONE interprets the text of the Qq, for those who adopt it, as meaning :
'tell him we wish him to make all possible haste;' and adds that all messengers in the time of Shakespeare were enjoined, 'Haste, haste; for thy life, post haste.'

61. Ottoman] MALONE: It is part of the policy of the Venetian state never to entrust the command of an army to a native. 'To exclude, therefore, (says Contareno, trans. by Lewkenor, 1599) out of our estate the danger or occasion of any such ambitious enterprises, our ancestors held it a better course to defend the dominions on the continent with foreign mercenary soldiers, than with their home-bred citizens.' Again :
'alwaies they do entertain in honourable sort with great provision a captaine generall, who alwaies is a stranger borne.' REED: So in Thomas's Hist. of Italy, p. 82: 'By lande they are served of straungers, both for generalls, for capitaines, and for all other men of warre; because theyr lawe permitteth not any Venetian to be capitaine over an armie by lande: Fearing, I thinke, Caesar's example.' SCHMIDT (Lex.) queries whether this be used here as an adjective or substantive; ROLFE inclines to think it is the former.

62. BOOTH: The Duke should be busy with papers or conferring with the Senators, while Brabantio takes his seat; which will account for his 'I did not see you.'

64. Good your] ABBOTT, § 13: The possessive adjectives when unemphatic are sometimes transposed, being really combined with nouns (like the French monsieur, milord).

Take hold on me. For my perticular grieve 67
 Is of so flood-gate, and ore-bearing Nature,
 That it engluts, and fwallowes other sorrowes,
 And it is still it felfe. 70
Duke. Why? What's the matter?
Bra. My Daughter: oh my Daughter!
Sen. Dead?
Bra. I, to me.
 She is abus'd, stolne from me, and corrupted 75
 By Spels, and Medicines, bought of Mountebanks;
 For Nature, so prepostrously to erre, 77

67. hold on] any hold of Q ₁ . hold of Q ₂ Q ₃ Coll. Wh. i. any hold on Rann.	Theob. Han. Warb. Jen. Rann. 73. Sen.] All. Qq.
griefe] griefes Q ₁ .	74. I,] I Qq. Ay , Rowe. Om. Pope+.
69. engluts] ingluts Ff, Rowe+, Jen. snd] F ₁ .	75. stolne] stollen Rowe ii, Pope. 76. Medicines] medicines Q ₃ . med' -
70. And it] And yet Rowe, Pope,	cines Cap. (Errata).

66. To eliminate the two extra syllables in this line, JOHNSON proposes to omit 'care' at the end; and STEEVENS, 'Hath' at the beginning, and 'my' before 'bed.'

68. so] See ABBOTT, § 67, for instances where 'so' is used before an adjective, where now-a-days we use the adverbial such or so with a. But note, says Abbott, that in these instances the 'so' follows a preposition. After prepositions the article (see § 90) is frequently omitted. Shakespeare could have written, 'My grief is of nature so floodgate,' &c.

69. engluts] PURNELL; French 'engloutir,' to swallow.

76. Spels] GREY (ii, 312) cites a law of 1 Jac. cap. xii, to the effect: 'That if any person or persons should take upon him or them, by witchcraft, enchantment, charm or sorcery, to the intent to provoke any person to unlawful love; and being thereof lawfully convicted, should, for the first offence, suffer imprisonment for the space of one whole year,' &c. WARBURTON says that Rymer ridicules this accusation of charms and medicines, but the passage in Rymer has escaped me, and small wonder, in that headlong torrent of amusing abuse of Shakespeare. Warburton, however, avails himself of the chance to cite a Venetian law, Dei maleficii et herbarie, cap. xvii, of the code, entitled 'Della promission del maleficio.' Whereupon STEEVENS remarks: 'Though I believe Shakespeare knew no more of this Venetian law than I do, yet he was well acquainted with the edicts of that sapient prince King James the First.' 'But,' says RITSON (p. 228), 'there is no doubt that Shakespeare had the substance of Brabantio's speech from Cinthio's novel, however he might come by it; and Cinthio, it may be supposed, knew something of the Venetian Statute.' At this line and at line 80, BOOTH says, Cassio and Othello should exchange smiles, as at I, ii, 95.

77-79. to erre . . . could not] ABBOTT cites this passage under § 350, where examples are given of the use of 'to' when the finite principal verb is an auxiliary or like an auxiliary, as in Ham. I, v, 18 and 178, and thus explains: 'Here either (1) "to erre" depends on "could," i. e. "Nature was not able to erre;" or (2) "could not" might perhaps stand for "could not be," "was impossible," having for its subject

(Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,) 78
 Sans witch-craft could not.

Duke. Who ere he be, that in this foule proceeding 80
 Hath thus beguil'd your Daughter of her selfe,
 And you of her; the bloodie Booke of Law, [313 b]
 You shall your selfe read, in the bitter letter,
 After your owne sense : yea, though our proper Son Stood in your Action. 85

Bra. Humbly I thanke your Grace,
 Here is the man ; this Moore, whom now it seemes
 Your speciall Mandate, for the State affaires Hath hither brought.

All. We are verieforry for't. 90

Duke. What in your owne part, can you say to this ?

Bra. Nothing, but this is fo.

Othe. Most Potent, Graue, and Reueren'd Signiors, 93

78. Om. Q ₂ .	sense, yea tho Q ₂ Q ₃ . sense; though Pope.
not] Om. Q ₃ .	90. All.] Duke and Sen. Mal.
or] nor Johns.	We are] We're Pope +, Dyce iii,
79. Sans] Saunce Q ₂ .	Huds.
not.] not—Rowe +, Jen. Steev.	verieforry] very sorry F ₂ .
Rann. Var. Knt, Sing. not be Cap. Ktly.	for't] for it Steev. Var. Rann. Coll.
82. her;] her, Q ₄ .	Sing. Wh. Ktly, Del.
84. your owne] its owne Q ₄ , Coll. i.	91. [To Othel. Theob. et seq.
sense: yea, though] sense, tho Q ₂ .	your] F ₂ .

"Nature to err." In (2) "for" may be either (a) a conjunction, or (b) a preposition :
 "It was not possible for Nature thus to err." I prefer (1).'

77. prepostrously] MOREL: Worcester donne comme étymologie directe un ad-jectif français 'prépostère,' dont nous n'avons pu trouver trace.

84. your] DYCE (Remarks, p. 234): 'Your' of the Folio is manifestly the true reading, i. e. 'According to your own interpretation.'

84. proper] That is own, very. Is there not a survival, in the copious vocabulary of old English phrases still to be found in New England, of this word in this sense?
 I have frequently heard the phrases there, 'proper good,' 'proper nice,' in the sense of 'very good,' 'very nice.' Webster marks it, in this sense, as 'colloquial and vulgar,' which is in favour of its antiquity. GÉRARD calls attention to it, as having 'la même valeur que propre en français: "notre propre fils."—ED.

85. action] JOHNSON: Were the man exposed to your charge or accusation.
 MOREL: C'est là un sens tout français du mot.

91. in] ABBOTT, § 160, gives instances of 'in' used for on. See note on I, i, 149.

93, &c. RYMER (p. 100): We find the Duke of Venice with his Senators in Councel at Midnight, upon advice that the Turks or Ottomites, or both together, were ready in transport Ships, put to sea, in order to make a Descent upon Cyprus. This is the posture, when we see Brabantio and Othello join them. By their Conduct and manner of talk, a body must strain hard to fancy the Scene at Venice; And not rather in some

My very Noble, and approu'd good Masters;
 That I haue tane away this old mans Daughter, 95
 It is most true : true I haue married her;
 The verie head, and front of my offending,
 Hath this extent; no more. Rude am I, in my speech,
 And little blest'd with the soft phrase of Peace;
 For since these Armes of mine, had seuen yeares pith, 100
 Till now, some nine Moones wasted, they haue vs'd
 Their deereft action, in the Tented Field :
 And little of this great world can I speake,
 More then pertaines to Feats of Broiles, and Battaile,
 And therefore little shall I grace my cause, 105
 In speaking for my selfe. Yet, (by your gracious patience)

- | | |
|---|--|
| 98. am I] I am Q ₂ Q ₃ .
my] Om. Johns. | 104. Feats of Broiles] Ff, Rowe +, Jen.
Knt, Sta. feate of broyle Q ₂ . feates of
broyles Q ₂ Q ₃ . feats of broil Cap. et cet. |
| 99. soft] set Qq, Warb. Jen. Steev. Var.
Coll. | 105. grace] grac Q ₂ .
106. for] of Q ₃ .
gratious] Om. Pope, Theob. Han.
Warb. |
| 101. now, some] now some Qq.
Moones] more Jourdain. | |
| 102. deereft] dearft F ₄ . | |

of our Cinque-ports, where the Baily and his Fisher-men are knocking their heads together on account of some Whale, or some terrible broil upon the Coast. But to show them true Venetians, the maritime affairs stick not long on their hand; the public may sink or swim. They will sit up all night to hear a Doctors Commons, Matrimonial, Cause. And have the Merits of the Cause at large laid open to 'em, that they may decide it before they stir. What can be pleaded to keep awake their attention so wonderfully? Never, sure, was form of pleading so tedious and so heavy, as this whole scene and midnight entertainment.

96. her] FECHTER: To Brabantio with tender courtesy.

98. FECHTER's version: 'Hath this—(to the Senate) this extent! (with passion on the mute denial of Brabantio) no more! (Brabantio rises in anger: They regard each other with menace. Several members rise simultaneously; Othello is at once calm, and submits to the Council.)

99. soft] WARBURTON: This apology, if addressed to his mistress, had been well expressed. But what he wanted, in speaking before a Venetian Senate, was not the soft blandishments of speech, but the art and method of masculine eloquence. I am persuaded, therefore, that set of the Qq is right.

101. wasted] KNIGHT: He had been unemployed during nine months.

102. deereft] JOHNSON: That is, dear, for which much is paid, whether money or labour; dear action is action performed at great expense, either of ease or safety. MALONE thinks it here means most important; STEEVENS that in modern language we should say, their best exertion; and M. MASON that it means their favourite action. [To me, Dr W. ALDIS WRIGHT's definition seems exact: 'dear is used of whatever touches us nearly, either in love or hate, joy or sorrow.' See Ham. I, ii, 182.—ED.]

106. speaking] Forrest emphasized this word, and not 'myself.'—Rees's Life p. 140.

I will a round vn-varnish'd u Tale deliuer, 107
 Of my whole courfe of Loue.
 What Drugges, what Charmes,
 What Coniuration, and what mighty Magicke, 110
 (For fuch proceeding I am charg'd withall)
 I won his Daughter.

Bra. A Maiden, neuer bold :
 Of Spirit fo ftill, and quiet, that her Motion 114

107. I will] I would Q ₂ Q ₃ . vn-varnish'd] vnrauish'd Q ₂ . un- ravish'd Q ₃ .	111. proceeding] proceedings Qq. I am] am I Qq, Jen.
108, 109. One line, Qq et cct.	112. Daughter.] Daughter with. Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Jen. Steev. Rann. Coll. Sing.
109, 110. Drugges, ... Charmes, ... Con- iuration,] Drugs ? ... Charmes ? ... conju- ration ? F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe i.	Ktly, Huds. 113, 114. A ... Spirit] One line, Q ₂ (reading bold of spirit).

107. vn-varnish'd u] This is a noteworthy and praiseworthy attempt at correcting a typographical error: 'vn-varnish'd' should be spelled vn-uarnish'd. In aiming at correcting it by the substitution of the u for the v, the compositor forgot to remove the v, and put u, with unusual accuracy, within seven letters of its true place.—ED.

108. my . . . Loue] That is, 'the whole course of my love.' This construction, plain enough here, sometimes gives rise to difficulty: see 'your sovereignty of reason,' Ham. I, iv, 73; 'his means of death,' Ib. IV, v, 207; 'my better part of man,' Mach. V, viii, 18, and many other examples in ABBOTT, § 423.

109. What] The preposition with, which is here omitted, as in so many other instances of adverbial expressions of time, or of manner (see ABBOTT, § 202), the F₃ supplied after 'daughter,' line 112, 'The editor of that edition,' says Dyce (ed. iii), 'not knowing that, according to the earlier phraseology, such an addition was unnecessary for the sense.' Doubtless through inadvertence, GRANT WHITE (ed. ii) says that with was 'recklessly omitted.' Cf. 'The interim having weighed it,' Mach. I, iii, 154; 'shall . . . More suffer and more sundry ways,' Ib. IV, iii, 48; 'Which time she chaated,' Ham. IV, vii, 179. DELIUS thinks that with was omitted, because the preceding line in the parenthesis ended in 'withal.'

112. RYMER (p. 101): All this is but Preamble, to tell the Court that He wants words. This was the Eloquence which kept them up all night, and drew their attention in the midst of their alarms. One might rather think the novelty and strangeness of the case prevail'd upon them: no, the Senators do not reckon it strange at all. Instead of starting at the Prodigy, every one is familiar with Desdemona, as he were her own natural Father, rejoice in her good fortune, and wish their own several Daughters as hopefully married. Should the Poet have provided such a Husband for an only daughter of any noble Peer in England, the Black-amoor must have chang'd his Skin, to look our House of Lords in the face.

114. Motion] This may mean, undoubtedly, as GRANT WHITE (ed. ii) interprets it: 'her natural desires,' but I prefer to interpret it with SCHMIDT (Lex.), 'movement of the soul, tendency of the mind, impulse; German, Regung,' especially since 'herself,' in the next line, refers to it. Shakespeare frequently refers to the soul as feminine. Cf. 'Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,' Ham. III, ii, 58; 'Could force his soul . . . That from her working,' Ib. II, ii, 526.—ED.

Bluff'd at her selfe, and she, in spight of Nature, 115
 Of Yeares, of Country, Credite, every thing
 To fall in Loue, with what she fear'd to looke on;
 It is a iudgement main'd, and most imperfect.
 That will confesse Perfection so could erre
 Against all rules of Nature, and must be driuen 120
 To find out practises of cunning hell
 Why this should be. I therefore vouch againe,
 That with some Mixtures, powrefull o're the blood,
 Or with some Dram,(coniur'd to this effect)
 He wtought vp on her. 125
 To vouch this, is no prooffe,
 Without more wider, and more ouer Test
 Then thefe thin habits, and poore likely-hoods 128

- | | |
|---|---|
| 115. her selfe] it selfe Pope+, Jen. | 125. vp on] F ₁ . |
| 117. on ;) Ff. on —Rowe+, Jen. on ? | 126. To] Du. To Q, et cet. |
| or on ! Qq et cet. | vouch] youth Q ₂ . |
| 118. main'd] maid Q ₂ Q ₃ . maid 'd | 127. wider] certaine Qq, Pope+, Cap. |
| F, et cet. | Jen. Steev. Var. Rann. Coll. Sing. Cam. |
| imperfect .] imperfect , Qq. | Huds. evidence Coll. (MS). |
| 119. Perfection] Affection Theob. Han. | ouer Test] ouer-Test Ff. ouer test |
| Jen. | Q ₂ , Rowe. ouer test Q ₂ Q ₃ et cet. |
| could] would Qq, Jen. | 128. Then thefe] These are Qq, Coll. |
| 122. be .] be , Qq. | Sing. Wh. i, Huds. |
| 125. wtought] F ₁ . | |

118. main'd] In reference to this misprint DYCE says, that he does not mean to defend it when he observes that in 2 Hen. VI. IV, ii, 172, we have the provincialism in Cade's speech: 'mained,' i. e. lamed.

119. Perfection] To THEOBALD the expression perfection erring seemed a contradiction. 'I have ventured,' he says, 'to imagine that our author wrote "Affection so could err."' DR JOHNSON: The objection is childish; 'perfection' is used here, as almost everywhere else, for a high degree of excellence.

121. practises] That is, stratagems, treacherous plots, very frequently thus used. Cf. 'a pass of practice,' Ham. IV, vii, 139; 'my practices ride easy,' Lear, I, ii, 172.

127. more wider] Is not this to be preferred to 'more certain' of the Qq? A wide and open proof seems to stand in clear contrast to thin, narrow shows and trivial conjectures. JOHNSON defines 'overt test,' open proofs, external evidence; and the phrase 'thin . . . seeming,' weak show of slight appearance. For the double comparative 'more wider,' see Shakespeare passim.—ED.

128. habits] SINGER: 'Thin habits' may be a metaphor from dress, but it may also be a Latinism from habita, things considered, reckoned, as in the phrase habita and repute, i. e. held and esteemed. JOHN HUNTER: Than the thin garb with which you invest the matter, and your slender probabilities as to the aspect in which it must be generally regarded.

Of moderne seeming, do prefer against him.

Sen. But Othello, speake, 130
Did you, by indirect, and forced courtes
Subdue, and poyson this yong Maides affections?
Or came it by request, and such faire question
As foule, to foule affordeth?

Othel. I do beseech you, 135
Send for the Lady to the Sagitary.
And let her speake of me before her Father;
If you do finde me foule, in herreport,
The Trust, the Office, I do hold of you,
Not onely take away, but let your Sentence 140
Euen fall vpon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.

Othe. Aunciant, conduēt them :
You best know the place.
And tell she come, as truely as to heauen, 145
I do confesse the vices of my blood,
So iustly to your Graue eares, Ile present
How I did thrue in this faire Ladies loue, [314 a]
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it Othello. 150

Othe. Her Father lou'd me, oft inuited me :

129. seeming] seemings Q ₂ Q ₃ .	Q ₂ Q ₃).
do] you Q ₂ , Coll. Sing. Wh. i,	143, 144. One line, Q ₂ , Rowe et cet.
Huds. doe F ₂ .	144. [Exit Iago. Rowe. Exeunt At-
130. Sen.] i Sena. Q ₂ , Rowe et cet.	tendants and Iago. Cap.
But] Om. Han.	145. tell] F ₂ .
speake,] speak; Theob.	truely] faithfull Q ₂ .
135. do] Om. Pope +.	heauen,] Heav'n or Heaven howe
136. Sagitary] Sagittar Q ₂ , Cap. Sag-	et cet.
itary Q ₂ Q ₃ F ₂ , et cet.	146. Om. Q ₂ .
139. Om. Q ₂ .	151-154. Lines end father...question'd
142. [Exit two or three. Q ₂ . (Exeunt...	me...to year...pass'd. Mal.

129. moderne] Always, I believe, used by Shakespeare in the sense of trite, ordinary, commonplace.—ED. MOREL: On comprend quelle association d'idées a pu donner au mot cette valeur. Il y a là un corollaire de l'idée qui a inspiré l'adage célèbre: major a longinquo reverentia.

133. question] That is, conversation, discourse, as in 'made she no verbal question,' Lear, IV, iii, 24.

136. Sagitary] See I, i, 173.

147. iustly] That is, truthfully. Among the Four Cardinal Virtues: Temperance, Justice, Prudence, and Fortitude, the second includes or implies Truth.—ED.

151. FECHTER: (Regarding Brabantio with regret.) Her father lov'd me!—(check

Still question'd me the Storie of my life, 152
 From yeare to yeare : the Battaile, Sieges, Fortune,
 That I haue past.
 I ran it through, euen from my boyish daies, 155
 Toth'very moment that he bad me tell it.
 Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances :
 Of mouing Accidents by Flood and Field,
 Of haire-breadth scapes i'th'imminent deadly breach ;
 Of being taken by the Insolent Foe, 160
 And sold to slauery. Of my redemption thence,

- | | |
|--|--|
| 152. question'd] questioned Qq.
Storie] stories Q ₃ . | 155. from] to Q ₃ . |
| 153. yeare:] yeare , Qq.
Battaile] batailles Qq. Battails
F. Battells F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe. battles Warb.
et seq. | 156. bad] bade Q ₂ Q ₃ , Johns. et seq.
157. spoke] Ff, Rowe+, Jen.Var. Ktly.
spake Qq, Cap. et cet. |
| Fortune] Ff, Knt. fortunes Qq et
cet. | 158. Accidents by] accident of Q ₃ .
159. imminent deadly] Hyphened by
Sta. Del. Pur. |
| 154. haue past.] haue past : Qq. had
past . Coll. (MS). have passed . With his
demands complying , Ktly conj. | 160. Foe,] foe : Q ₁ .
161. slauery.] slavery , Q ₁ . slavery ;
Q ₂ Q ₃ , Rowe et cet.
Of my] and my Q ₃ . |

ing his emotion, and continuing calmly). BOOTH: Brabantio may, perhaps, manifest denial of Othello's assertion; and Othello's tone, after a slight pause, may imply that he had at least had reason to think so. But Love often meant merely liking, and since certainly Brabantio did like the Moor, it may not be proper for him to express any disapprobation here.

153. Fortune] MOREL: Aventures ou accidents. Comparez le sens du mot chez Froissard: 'Leurs vaisseaux eurent si grand fortune sur mer . . . que plusieurs de leurs nefes furent peries.'

154. PURNELL: The hemistich adds to the effect of the enumeration by giving the actor time to think over the list.

157 et seq. BOOTH: All this as modestly as possible,—not a breath of bluster, and not declamatory; very difficult to render naturally. The Duke and Senators, indeed all present, should listen with rapt attention.

161–168. In some early Acting Copies these lines are omitted, and in their place the following inserted:

'Of battles bravely, hardly, fought; of victories
 For which the conqueror mourn'd, so many fell:
 Sometimes I told the story of a siege,
 Wherein I had to combat plagues and famine;
 Soldiers unpaid; fearful to fight,
 Yet bold in dangerous mutiny.'

The earliest trace of them that I can find is in the Acting Copy for the 'Theatres Royal in Drury-Lane and Covent-Garden' in 1770. As Garrick did not retire from Drury-Lane until June, 1776, it is not improbable that these lines were written by him; it is hard to see why he felt any necessity for the substitution, unless he were infected with Iago's scorn for 'fantastical lies.' WOOD (Personal Recollections, &c., p. 265) says

And portance in my Trauellours historie.

162

Wherein of Antars vast, and Defarts idle,

162. portance in my] with it all my Q₁,
Pope, Han. Warb.

Trauellours] trauells Qq, Rowe.

Travellers F₁F₂, Traveller's F₁, Knt,

Sing. Ktly. travels Glo. Cam. Dyce iii,

Huds. Wh. ii. travel's Pope et cet.

163. Antars] QqFf, Rowe. Antrées
Q₁. antrées Pope. antrés Theob. et cet.

Defarts] Deserts Q₁, Sing. i, Coll.

et seq.

idle] wilde F₁F₂, wild F₁, Pope,

Han. Sing. i.

that he 'distinctly remembers finding these lines in an old Covent-Garden Prompt-book of our early library, not in the printed text, but interwritten upon a blank leaf. [Edmund] Kean, like every other actor or reader to whom I have applied, had never met with them, but acknowledged their great beauty and power.'—ED.

162. portance] RYMER (p. 90) in quoting this line reads portents. JOHNSON reads 'portance in't;' and explains: 'my redemption from slavery, and my behaviour in it.' STEEVENS: Perhaps Shakespeare meant—my behaviour in my travels as described in my history of them. 'Portance' is used in Cor. II, iii, 232. DYCE (Gloss.): That is, bearing, carriage, deportment, behaviour. KNIGHT puts a full stop after 'portance,' and includes 'Wherein . . . speake,' 163–165, in parenthesis, with only a comma after 'speake.' MOREL: Montaigne l'emploie comme synonyme de 'façon d'agir.'

162. Trauellours] I cannot but think the Qq are right here. KNIGHT thus upholds the Ff: Othello modestly, and somewhat jocosely, calls his wonderful relations a traveller's history,—a term by which the marvellous stories of the Lithgows and Coryats were wont to be designated in Shakespeare's day. DYCE: A personage less inclined to jocoseness than Othello cannot well be conceived. Dr Richardson suggests to me that 'Trauellours' is a misprint for travellous (or travailous), and adds that Wiclif has 'Jobs travailous nights' and 'the travailous presoun of the Egipcians;' but though the epithet is very properly applied to 'nights' or to a 'prison,' can we speak of a 'travailous history'?

163. Antars] POPE: French, grottoes. JOHNSON: Caves and dens. CHALMERS, (Supp. Apol., 464), whose learning was rather tickle o' the sere, has on this line a good specimen note: 'Shakespeare by no very uncommon quibble has used the expressions "anters vast" and "desarts idle" in one sense, when he meant another. The progress of the word "anters" seems to be this: anters, aunters, aventers, adventures; and hence the word "anters" came to signify, in the language of Yorkshire, strange things or strange stories. So in a disputation bytweene a Chrystens mon and a Jew, written before the year 1300: "Hur schull we longe abyde Auntres [adventures] to hear." The play on "desarts idle" consists in confounding "desart" for a wilderness with desert for merit; and deserts idle, or unworthy desert, might be deemed desert, sine pulvere.'

163. idle] JOHNSON: Every mind is liable to absence and inadvertency, else Pope could never have rejected a word like this so poetically beautiful. 'Idle' is an epithet used to express the infertility of the chaotic state in the Saxon translation of the Pentateuch. GIFFORD (Sejanus, I, i): It does not seem to have occurred to the commentators that wild might add a feature of some import, even to a desert; whereas, sterile leaves it just as it found it, and is (without a pun) the idlest epithet which could be applied. Pope, too, had an ear for rhythm; and as his reading has some touch of Shakespeare, which the other has not, and is besides better poetry, I should hope that it will one day resume its proper place in the text.

Rough Quarries, Rocks, Hills, whose head touch heauen,
 It was my hint to speake. Such was my Proceffe, 165
 And of the Canibals that each others eate,
 The Antropophague, and men whose heads 167

- | | |
|---|--|
| 164. Hills] and hills QqFf, Rowe et cet. et cet. | |
| head] Rowe ii. heads QqFf etcet. | 166. others] F ₂ . other QqF ₃ F ₄ et cet. |
| 165. hint] hent Q ₂ , Warb. eate] eate ; Qq. | |
| speake] speake , Qq, Knt. | 167. Antropophague] Anthropophagie |
| my] Q ₂ Q ₃ Ff, Rowe, Knt. the Q ₂ | Qq. Anthropophagi Ff, Rowe et cet. |

165. hint] Warburton adopted hent, interpreting it as meaning use, custom, a meaning which Johnson said hent did not have either in Shakespeare or in any other author, adding: 'hint' or cue is commonly used for occasion of speech, which is explained by such is the process, that is, the course of the tale required it. Skeat (Etym. Dict., s. v.): Only the substantive occurs in Shakespeare . . . Hint properly signifies 'a thing taken,' i. e. a thing caught or apprehended; being a contraction of Middle English hinted, taken; or rather a variant of the old past participle hent, with the same sense, . . . which occurs in Meas. for Meas. IV, vi, 14.

167. Antropophague] Whalley (p. 73) says, that the origin of all these fables is to be found in Sir John Mandeville's Travels.—'Aftreward men gon be many Yles be See, unto an Yle that men clepen Milke: and there is a fulle cursed peple: for thei delyten in ne thing more, than for to fighten and to sle men. And thei drynken gladlyest mannes Blood, the whiche thei clepen Dieu' [p. 195, ed. Halliwell]. 'And in another Yle, toward the Southe duellen folk of foule Stature and of cursed kynde, than have no Hedes; and here Eyen ben in here Scholdres' [p. 203, ib.]. Theobald: Sir Walter Raleigh in his Travels [The Discoverie of Guiana, 1596, p. 85, ed. Hakluyt Soc.] has given the following account: 'Next vnto Arui there are two riuers Atoica and Caora, and on that braunch which is called Caora are a nation of people, whose heades appeare not aboue their shoulders, which though it may be thought a meere fable, yet for mine owne parte I am resolu'd it is true, because euery child in the prouinces of Arromaia and Canuri affirme the same: they are called Ewaipanoma: they are reported to haue their eyes in their shoulders, and their mouths in the middle of their breasts, and that a long train of haire groweth backward between their shoulders . . . It was not my chaunce to heare of them til I was come away, and if I had but spoken one word of it while I was there, I might haue brought one of them with me to put the matter out of doubt. Such a nation was written of by Maunderuile, whose reportes were held for fables many yeares, and yet since the East Indies were discouered, wee finde his relations true of such thinges as heeretofore were held incredible: whether it be true or no the matter is not great, neither can there be any profit in the imagination, for mine owne part I saw them not, but I am resolu'd that so many people did not all combine, or forethinke to make the report.' . . . 'To the west of Caroli are diuers nations of Canibals, and of those Ewaipanoma without heades' [p. 108, ib.]. In a footnote the editor, Sir R. H. Schomburgk, calls attention to Humboldt's mention of an old Indian whom he met, who boasted of having seen these Acephali with his own eyes.—Ed.] This passage in Othello, continues Theobald, and the same allusion in Temp. III, iii, 46, help us in fixing the date of these plays; neither of them could have been written before 1596. The mystery of these headless People is accounted for by Olearius, who, speaking of the Samojeds, a people of Northern Muscovy, says: 'Thei

Grew beneath their shoulders. These things to heare, 168

168. Grew] Ff. Did grow Rowe. Doe grow Qq et cct. Rowe, Jen. All these Pope+. this Q₂, Coll. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Sta. Cam. Del. Rife, Huds.

These things] Ff. these Q₂Q₃, garments are made like those that are call'd Cosaques, open only at the Necks. When the Cold is extraordinary, they put their Cosaques over their Heads, and let the Sleeves hang down; their Faces being not to be seen, but at the Cleft which is at the Neck. Whence Some have taken Occasion to write, that in these Northern Countries there are People without Heads, having their Faces in their Breasts.' STAUNTON thinks that possibly Shakespeare had in mind the 2d chap. of the Seventh Book of Plinies Naturall History, wherein the Anthropophagi and these headless men are mentioned; but I am inclined to think that if Shakespeare had ever read this chapter in Pliny, brimming over as it is with monstrosities, he would not have selected as a striking item in Othello's 'trauels history' such a trifling distortion as a man with his face in his breast. Within a few pages of the account of the Anthropophagi in Sir Walter's Discoverie, mention is made of a very high hill, and of digging out crystals with daggers and fingers,—rough quarrying certainly.—ED.

168. RYMER (p. 90): This was the Charm, this was the philtre, the love-powder that took the Daughter of this Noble Venetian. This was sufficient to make the Black-amoor White, and reconcile all, tho' there had been a Cloven-foot into the bargain. A meaner woman might be as soon taken by Aqua Tetrachymagogon. Shakespeare in this Play calls 'em the supersubtle Venetians. Yet examine throughout the Tragedy, there is nothing on the noble Desdemona, that is not below any Country Chambermaid with us. And the account of their Noblemen and Senate can only be calculated for the latitude of Gotham. SHAFTESBURY (Advice to an Author, 1710, Part III, sect. 3): Tho Christian Miracles may not so well satisfy 'em [i. e. Atheists]; they dwell with the highest Contentment on the Prodigys of Moorish and Pagan Countrys. They have far more Pleasure in hearing the monstrous Accounts of monstrous Men and Manners, than the politest and best Narrations of the Affairs, the Governments, and Lives of the wisest and most polish'd People. . . . This Humour our old Tragick Poet seems to have discover'd. He hit our Taste in giving us a Moorish Hero, full fraught with Prodigy: a wondrous Story-teller! But for the attentive Part, the Poet chose to give it to Woman-kind. What passionate Reader of Travels, or Student in the prodigious Sciences, can refuse to pity that fair Lady, who fell in Love with the miraculous Moor? especially considering with what sutable grace such a Lover cou'd relate the most monstrous Adventures, and satisfy the wondering Appetite with the most wondrous Tales; [lines 163-169 are here quoted]. Seriously, 'twas a woful Tale! unfit, one wou'd think, to win a tender Fair-one. It's true, the Poet sufficiently condemns her Fancy; and makes her (poor Lady!) pay dearly for it in the end. But why, amongst his Greek names, he shou'd have chosen one which denoted the Lady Superstitious, I can't imagine: unless, as Poets are sometimes Prophets too, he shou'd figuratively under this dark Type have represented to us, That about a hundred Years after his Time, the Fair sex of this Island shou'd, by other monstrous Tales, be so seduc'd as to turn their Favour chiefly on the persons of the Tale-tellers; and change their natural Inclination for fair, candid, and courteous Knights into a Passion for a mysterious Race of black Enchanters: such as of old were said to creep into Houses, and lead captive silly Women. . . . But whatever monstrous Zeal or superstitious Passion the Poet might foretel, either in the Gentlemen, Ladys, or common

Would Desdemona seriously incline :

But still the house Affaires would draw her hence : 170

Which euer as she could with haste dispatch,

She'l'd come againe, and with a greedie eare 172

170. house Affaires] house-affairs Pope. 171. Which] And Q. hence] Ff, Rowe, Del. thence 172. She'l'd] Shee'd Qq. She'd Ff.
 Qq et cet.

People, of an after Age; 'tis certain that as to Books, the same Moorish Fancy, in its plain and literal sense, prevails strongly at the present time. Monsters and Monsterlands were never more in request: And we may often see a Philosopher, or a Wit, run a Tale-gathering in those idle Desarts, as familiarly as the silliest Woman or the merest Boy. WARBURTON: Discourses of this nature made the subject of the politest conversation, when voyages into, and discoveries of, the new world were all in vogue. So, when the Bastard Faulconbridge in King John, describes the behaviour of upstart greatness, he makes one of the essential circumstances of it to be this kind of table-talk. The fashion then running altogether this way, it is no wonder a young lady of quality should be struck with the history of an adventurer. JOHNSON: Whoever ridicules this account of the progress of love, shows his ignorance not only of history, but also of nature and manners. It is no wonder that, in any age or in any nation, a lady—recluse, timorous, and delicate—should desire to hear of events and scenes which she could never see; and should admire the man who had endured dangers and performed actions, which, however great, were yet magnified by her timidity.

170. still] That is, constantly. Very frequent in Shakespeare thus used, see Rom. & Jul. V, iii, 106; Macb. V, viii, 14; Lear, II, iv, 102; Ham. II, ii, 42.

170. would] ABBOTT, § 330: 'Would' often means 'liked,' 'was accustomed.' Compare ἐφίλει.

170. hence] Is there any necessity for deserting the Ff here? Is not 'hence' somewhat more vivid than 'thence,' just as here is nearer than there?—ED.

172. greedie eare] MALONE cites, 'Hang both your greedy ears upon my lips; Let them devour my speech,' as a parallel passage from Lust's Dominion, which he says was written by Marlowe, and before 1593. If Marlowe were the author, it was, of course, written before that year, the year in which Marlowe was killed. Collier, however, has shown (Dodsley's Old Plays, vol. ii, p. 311, ed. 1825) by internal evidence that this tragedy was written after 1598, the year in which Philip II. of Spain died, whose death is represented in the First Act; furthermore, that a tract was printed in London in 1599, called 'A briefe and true Declaration of the Sicknesse, last words, and Death of the King of Spain, Philip Second,' from which various passages of the play were clearly borrowed; Collier cites three or four of them, which reveal not 'similarity, but identity.' In Henslowe's Diary (p. 165, ed. Shaks. Soc.), an item refers to the payment on 'the 13 of febrearye, 1599,' of three pounds 'for a boocke called the Spanesche Mores tragedie, unto Thomas Deckers, Wm. Harton, John Daye;' this tragedy Collier conjectured (Hist. of Dram. Poetry, vol. ii, p. 477, ed. 1879), with 'great probability,' says Dyce (Marlowe's Works, i, p. lviii), to be the same as Lust's Dominion. I have thought it worth while to be thus particular about this miserable stuff, quite as wretched as portions of Titus Andronicus, which it somewhat resembles, because Malone finds in it another parallelism with Othello, in II, i, 229, and Steevens goes so far as to suggest that possibly Shakespeare may have acted in it. Collier men-

Deuoure vp my discourfe. Which I obseruing, 173
 Tooke once a pliant houre, and found good meanes
 To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart, 175
 That I would all my Pilgrimage dilate,
 Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
 But not instinctiue: I did consent,
 And often did beguile her of her teares,
 When I did speake of some distressefull stroke 180
 That my youth suffer'd: My Storie being done,
 She gaue me for my paines a world of kisses: 182

- | | |
|---|---|
| 173. discourse .] discourse ; Qq. Dis- | Rowe+, Cap. Rann. intentiue Qq, |
| course , F. | Johns. et cet. |
| 176. dilate] relate Quincy (MS). | 180. distressefull] distressed Q ₄ , Morel. |
| 177. parcels] parcell Q ₄ . | 181. suffer'd] suffered Qq. |
| 178. not] nought Cap. conj. | 182. kisses] Ff, Rowe. thanks South- |
| instinctiue] distinctiue Ff, | ern (MS). sighs Qq et cet. |

tions no earlier printed copy of it than 1657. Malone also cites from the Faerie Queene, VI, ix (231, ed. Grosart), 'Whylest thus he talkt, the knight with greedy eare Hung still upon,' &c. And STEEVENS shows that aures auida may be found in Cicero.

174. good] Forrest emphasized this word—Rees's Life, p. 141.

176. dilate] That is, relate at length. Conf. Ham. I, ii, 38, 'these dilated articles.'

178. instinctiue] KNIGHT: A decided typographical error. This, and a few other errors of the same sort which are corrected by a reference to the Qto, prove that the Folio was printed from MS., and most probably before the publication of the Qto; had it been consulted, these errors would not have been committed. STEEVENS: Intention and attention were once synonymous. Desdemona, who was often called out of the room on house-affairs, could not have heard Othello's tale intentiue, i. e. with attention to all its parts. DYCE (Remarks, p. 234): Intentiue was always used as equivalent to attentiue, not only by the writers of Shakespeare's time, but by those of a much earlier date. Palsgrave has 'Intentyse, hede-full.'—'Ententyse, busy to do a thyng or to take hede to a thyng.' SINGER quotes Bullokar's Expositor: 'Intentiue. Which listeneth well, and is earnestly bent to a thing.' LETTSOM (Walker's Crit. i, 181, Foot-note): 'Distinctiue' seems a mere sophistication of F₄ for instinctiue, the nonsensical reading of F₄. In this particular passage intentiue seems to mean either all at a stretch, or so as to comprehend the story as a whole. R. M. SPENCE (N. & Qu., 5th, xi, 383) upholds distinctiue, which means, he alleges, in detail. [*Ententiue*ment:]ntentiue, busily, earnestly; attentiue, carefully, heedfully.—Cotgrave. But it is needless to multiply proofs that intentiue meant attentiue. Lettsom seems to me to have rightly interpreted the requirements of the meaning here.—ED.]

180. distresseful] MOREL, whose thoughtful edition enlists respect for his opinion, prefers the Qto, as an instance where the past participle in -ed is equivalent to the adjective in -full, as delighted for delightful, &c.

182. kisses] POPE: Sighs is evidently the true reading. The lady had been forward indeed, to give him a world of kisses upon the bare recital of his story, nor does it agree with the following lines. [And yet we must remember that kissing in Eliza-

She swore in faith 'twas strange : 'twas passing strange, 183
 'Twas pittifull : 'twas wondrous pittifull.
 She wifh'd she had not heard it, yet she wifh'd 185
 That Heauen had made her such a man. She thank'd me,

183. in faith] I faith Qq. ful, ... pitiful. F₄, Kily. pitiful, ... pitiful— strange : ... strange,] strange, ... Rowe +, Jen. pittifull, ... pittifull ; Qq et strange, F₄, Rowe +, Jen. Glo. Rlf, Wh. cet.
 ii. strange, ... strange. F₃F₄. strange, ... 185. wifh'd] wifht Qq.
strange ; Qq et cet. 186. thank'd] thanked Qq.
 184. pittifull : ... pittifull.] F₃F₄, piti- beth's time was not as significant as it is now. See the openness with which, in II, i, Cassio kisses Emilia.—ED.]

183. swore] STEEVENS quotes Whitaker's Vindication of Mary Queen of Scots, ii, 487: 'Let not the modern reader be hurt here and in paragraph X. at a Lady, a Queen, and a Mary, swearing. To aver upon faith and honour was then called swearing, equally with a solemn appeal to God, and considered the same with it. . . . And thus Shakespeare makes Othello to represent Desdemona as acting, in a passage [the present one] that I have often condemned, before I saw this easy explanation of it, as one among many proofs of Shakespeare's inability to exhibit the delicate graces of female conversation.' 'This remark,' adds Steevens, 'serves at once to justify Desdemona and Queen Mary, and to show what kind of swearing was done by both; not a bold and masculine oath put into the mouth of Desdemona, such as Elizabeth frequently used, but a more earnest affirmation upon her faith and honour, which she considered as the same with a solemn appeal to God.' Whitaker's confession that he had once condemned this passage as one of the many proofs of Shakespeare's inability to exhibit the delicate graces of female conversation, KNIGHT quotes, but attributes it to Steevens, and upon Steevens lets fall his bitter indignation. 'Perhaps,' he says, 'the remainder of his many proofs would, in the same way, have been destroyed, if he had possessed the slightest capacity for distinguishing between the true and the meretricious in sentiment and style; but what could be expected of a man who, writing Notes upon the Sonnets, laments his "piteous constraint to read such stuff at all"?'

183, 184. The punctuation of F₄ (discarded by almost every modern editor) in these two lines is noteworthy, and, in my opinion, should be retained. 'It was strange; nay, it was much more than strange, it was pitifull; it was wondrous pitifull.' Staunton says, at V, ii, 236, that 'strange' here means more than it now means, it is equivalent to 'incredible.'—ED.

185, 186. She . . . man] In this wifh of Desdemona is 'her' the accusative or the dative? Our German brothers, in their translations, are forced to decide this question; we can smiling put it by. TIECK (or, probably, BAUDISSIN, to whose share fell the translation of Othello) notes that Eschenburg in 1779 translated 'her' as an accusative, and rightly, as Tieck thinks: 'der Himmel hätte solch einen Mann aus ihr gemacht,' but that in his translation of 1805 he had gone astray on the dative: 'der Himmel hätte ihr solch einen Mann bestimmt.' Tieck did not notice that the error, if such it be, lay farther back than Eschenburg. In 1766 Wieland translated the line: 'der Himmel hätte einen solchen Mann für sie gemacht.' Among English editors KNIGHT is not sure that the dative is wrong; COWDEN-CLARKE (surely a good authority on matters of womanly delicacy,—if not the court of last resort therein) decides for

And bad me, if I had a Friend that lou'd her, 187
 I should but teach him how to tell my Story,
 And that would wooe her. Vpon this hint I spake,
 She lou'd me for the dangers I had paft, 190
 And I lou'd her, that she did pittie them.
 This onely is the witch-craft I haue vs'd. 192

187. had] hat Q₁.lou'd] loved Qq.189. wooe] woe Q₁Q₂.Vpon] On Pope+.189. hint] heate Qq.190. lou'd] loved Q₁.had] have Ff, Rowe.

the dative, and even thinks it strange that it should be questioned; HUDSON also is emphatically in favour of the dative, and exclaims at those who, 'lest the lady's delicacy should be impeached!' insist on the accusative; ROLFE pronounces in favour of the dative: 'That is, for her,' and adds that what follows 'favours this explanation.' PURNELL thinks it is the dative, but gives it a shade of softness by calling it the ethical dative. And yet in spite of all this array, I cannot bring myself to believe that the young girl's thoughts had so quickly turned to marriage,—she was still lost in the wondrous, pitiful story, which, although she had with earnest heart prayed for it, she now wished she hadn't heard; 'yet she wished' she could herself have seen these wondrous sights, and have been herself the hero of these distressful strokes. Is it not a most natural wish, to be the very hero himself before whose feet smooth success is strewn, as it had been before Othello's? Is it unusual to hear a girl express the wish that she were a man? It was not in this wish that Othello detected the 'hint,' but in the 'Friend that loved her.' If Desdemona had expressed the wish to Othello's face, that Heaven had made a husband for her just like Othello himself, I doubt if the latter, or any one else, would have softened the expression into a 'hint.'—ED.

192. LEWES (On Actors, &c., p. 5): Even in earlier and better days there was much in [Kean's] performance of Othello which was spasmodic, slovenly, false. The address to the Senate was very bad. He had little power of elocution, unless when sustained by a strong emotion; and this long, simple narrative was the kind of speech he could not manage at all. He gabbled over it, impatient to arrive at the phrase: 'And this was all the witchcraft I have used. Here comes the lady, let her witness it.' His delivery of this 'point,' always startled the audience into applause by its incisive tone and its abrupt transition; yet nothing could be more out of keeping with the Shakespearian character. Othello might smile with lofty disdain at the accusation of witchcraft, or rebut it calmly, but not make it the climax of a withering sarcasm,—attacking the word 'witchcraft' with high and sudden emphasis, and dropping into an almost disrespectful colloquialism as the lady appeared. Indeed, throughout the First and Second Acts, with the exception of occasional flashes (as in the passionate fervour with which he greets Desdemona on landing at Cyprus), Kean's Othello was rather irritating and disappointing,—arresting the mind, but not satisfying it. From the Third Act onwards, all was wrought out with a mastery over the resources of expression such as has been seldom approached. In the successive unfolding of these great scenes he represented with incomparable effect the lion-like fury, the deep and haggard pathos, the forlorn sense of desolation alternating with gusts of stormy cries for vengeance, the misgivings and sudden reassurances, the calm and deadly resolution of one not easily moved, but who, being moved, was stirred to the very depths.

Here comes the Ladie : Let her witnesse it. 193

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Attendants.

Duke. I thinke this tale would win my Daughter too, 195
Good Brabantio, take vp this mangled matter at the best :
Men do their broken Weapons rather vse,
Then their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you heare her speake ?
If she confesse that she was halfe the wooer, 200
Deftruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man. Come hither gentle Mistris,
Do you perceiue in all this Noble Companie,
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My Noble Father, 205
I do perceiue heere a diuided dutie.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 193. Two lines, Qq. | Pope et seq. |
| Ladie :] Lady , QqF ₃ F ₄ . | 201. on my head] lite on me Qq. (light |
| 194. Attendants.] and the rest. Qq. | ... Q ₄ Q ₅). |
| Scene IX. Pope+, Jen. | 203. this] his F ₄ . |
| 195. too] to —Q ₄ . to —Q ₄ Q ₅ . too — | 204. most you] you most Pope+. you |
| Pope+. too . Rowe, Johns. et seq. | must Warb. |
| 196. Good Brabantio] Separate line, | 205. My Noble] Noble Pope, Han. |

BOOTH : Let this line be the climax, not 'she did pity them.' After 192 : Re-enter Roderigo and others. Their return announces the lady's coming. FECHTER's Stage direction here is : 'Goes to lead in Desdemona.'

195. BOOTH : Othello should playfully acknowledge this compliment. LLOYD : This round, unvarnished tale carries conviction to all,—even to Brabantio himself; for though he professes to reserve his belief till his daughter shall confess whether she were half the wooer, he never asks her that question, but another instead, which she could not have answered otherwise than she did, had the accusation of witchcraft been well founded.

202. Come hither] FECHTER directs Othello to conduct Desdemona to the place he (Othello) occupied, and then retire among his followers. BOOTH : The 'evil eye' is dreaded, even now, by superstitious Italians, more than other charms; it is strange that Shakespeare did not refer to it. Othello must not 'give a loop to hang a doubt on' touching his influence over Desdemona; he must not even look at her, nor, worse still, go to meet her, which the Court would not permit. But he must turn his back towards her until she announces him as her husband, then let him turn and face her and the whole Court.

206–210. BOADEN (Life of John Kemble, i, 258) : I question whether equal discrimination was ever before given [as by Mrs Siddons] to these lines : 'My noble father, I do perceive HERE, a divided duty; To YOU, I am bound, &c. But here's my husband.' MOBERLY (Rom. & Jul. II, vi, 25, in that most exquisite of all love-scenes where Romeo begs Juliet to 'let rich music's tongue unfold the imagined happiness') : Compare the admirable way in which Desdemona, when called upon to say whether

To you I am bound for life, and education : 207
 My life and education both do learne me,
 How to respect you. You are the Lord of duty,
 I am hitherto your Daughter. But heere's my Husband; 210
 And so much dutie, as my Mother shew'd
 To you, preferring you before her Father : [314 b]
 So much I challenge, that I may professe
 Due to the Moore my Lord.
Bra. God be with you : I haue done. 215
 Please it your Grace, on to the State Affaires;
 I had rather to adopt a Child, then get it.
 Come hither Moore;
 I here do giue thee that with all my heart,
 Which but thou hast already, with all my heart 220

207, 210, 222. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds.

209. you.] you, Qq.

You are] You're Pope +, Dyce iii,
 Huds.

the Lord of] Lord of all my Q₄.

211. shew'd] shewd Qq.

213. much] much must Q₃.

215. God...you :] God be'sy, Qq. God

b'w'ye, Jen. God be wi'you; Cap. Glo.
 Ktly. God b'wi'you! Sing. ii, Wh. i,
 Dyce iii, Huds.

haue] ha Qq. ha' Jen.

219. with all] withall Q₄Q₃.

220. Om. Q₄.

Which] Which, F₄, Rowe et seq.

all] Om. Pope, Han.

her love for Othello grew up as he had said, confines herself, with perfect dignity, to a declaration that her duty is now to the Moor, her lord, in the same sense in which her mother's duty had been to her father. The same point is prettily brought out in the Gaillie of Ponsard, in which two lovers, Taddeo and Antonia, are imagining a conversation between two like themselves in the moon: 'Ant. Et comment répond elle? Tadd. Ah, je l'ignore! Ant. Eh, bien, Je le sais, moi. Tadd. (ardemment) Parlez! que dit elle? Ant. Rien. Tadd. Rien? Ant. Mais elle sourit, sur son bras s'appuie Et se sent tout émue et tout épanouie.'

208. learne] See SCHMIDT (Lex.) for eight or ten instances, besides the present, where we should now use teach.

214, 215. WALKER (Vers., 227): 'God be with you' is, in fact, God b' wi' you: sometimes a trisyllable, sometimes contracted into a disyllable; now Good-bye. Accordingly write: 'Due to the Moor, my lord. God b' wi' you! I've done' [one line. See III, iii, 433.]

214. FECHTER: Othello advances, and kisses her hand. Brabantio, overpowered, resumes his seat.

217. SCHMIDT (Trans.) refers to a similar thought, amplified, in Much Ado, IV, i, 129.

217. get] That is, beget. For other instances of dropped prefixes, see ABBOTT, § 460.

220. WHITE: The omission of this line in the Qto is doubtless due to an oversight of the compositor, caused by the recurrence of the same words at the end both of this and of the previous line.

I would keepe from thee. For your fake (Iewell) 221
 I am glad at foule, I haue no other Child,
 For thy escape would teach me Tirranie
 To hang clogges on them. I haue done my Lord.

Duke. Let me speake like your selfe: 225
 And lay a Sentence,
 Which as a grise, or step may helpe these Louers. 227

221. For your] And for your Han.	225. your selfe] our self Warb.
Cap.	227. as a] like a Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.
222. foule, I] foule. I Q.	Cap.
224. them.] em , Qq.	grise] greefe Qq.
my Lord] lord Q ₂ (Steevens's	Louers.] Ff, Rowe, Knt. louers
Rep.).	Into your fauour (reading Into...fauours
225, 226. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.	as a separate line) Qq et cet.

219 et seq. BOOTH: Let the actor speak these lines with anguish, and he'll find out why the 'First Old Man' is generally cast for so small a part; the audience will tell him.

220. hast] Equivalent to 'hast it;' the it has been absorbed in the final t of 'hast.' Compare 'That' worthied him,' Lear, II, ii, 116.—ED.

221. your] LETTSOM: The sense, as well as the metre, requires 'For my own sake, jewel.' [Although HUDSON, in his ed. iii, adopts this reading of Lettsom, yet in his note he gives what is, to my thinking, a sufficient reason for adhering to the Folio: 'For your sake' can nowise be made to tally with the context, except by taking the phrase as equivalent to on your account,—a sense which, to be sure, it sometimes bears, and which I cannot but think is the very meaning here: 'It is on account of your example, jewel, that I am glad,' &c., is what I think Brabantio says in effect.—ED.]

223. escape] COWDEN-CLARKE: Besides its meaning of 'getting forth,' 'flight,' 'elopement,' we think it probable that 'escape' here includes the sense of 'sally,' 'prank,' as shown to be derived from the French, escapade.

224. To hang] That is, in hanging clogs, &c. For instances of the infinitive thus indefinitely used, see ABBOTT, § 356.

225–227. HANMER reads and divides thus: 'Let me now speak more like yourself; and lay || A sentence in, which, like a grise or step || May help these lovers here into your favour.'

225. your selfe] WARBURTON: It should be 'our self,' i. e. let me mediate between you as becomes a prince and common father of his people. The prince's opinion, here delivered, was quite contrary to Brabantio's sentiment. JOHNSON: The duke seems to mean, when he says he will speak like Brabantio, that he will speak sententiously. HEATH (p. 557): That is, Let me add my own judgement in confirmation of what you yourself have just said. For in effect, what Brabantio had just said, implying an acquiescence in what was done, merely because it was done and could not be undone, is the very purport of the duke's speech. SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS: That is, let me speak as yourself would speak were you not too much heated with passion.

227. grise] DYCE (Gloss.): A step. 'She gan anone by greces to assende Of a Touret in to an hye pynacle.'—Lydgate's Warres of Troy, B. i, ed. 1555. See Twelfth Night, III, i, 135; Tim. IV, iii, 16.

When remedies are past, the griefes are ended 228
 By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.
 To mourne a Mischeefe that is past and gon, 230
 Is the next way to draw new mischiefe on.
 What cannot be prefern'd, when Fortune takes :
 Patience, her Iniury a mock'ry makes.
 The rob'd that smiles, steales something from the Thiefe,
 He robs himselfe, that spends a bootelesse griefe. 235
Bra. So let the Turke of Cyprus vs beguile,
 We loose it not so long as we can smile :
 He beares the Sentence well, that nothing beares,
 But the free comfort which from thence he heares.
 But he beares both the Sentence, and the sorrow, 240
 That to pay griefe, must of poore Patience borrow.
 These Sentences, to Sugar, or to Gall,
 Being strong on both sides, are Equiuocall.
 But words are words, I neuer yet did heare :
 That the bruized heart was pierc'd through the eares. 245

228. ended] ended, Qq, Cap. ended;

Han.

229. the worst] worst F₃F₄.

230. gon] F₁.

231. new] more Qq, Coll. Wh. i.

232. prefern'd] preferu'd QqFf. takes:] takes, Qq.

233. mock'ry] mockery Q₁Q₂Ff. mock- er Q₃.

234. the Thiefe] a thiefe Q₃.

236. So let] So, let Theob. +, Jen.

Cyprus] Cipres Q₁.

237. loose] lofe QqFf.

238, 239. beares...comfort] cares For the false comforts Han.

240. beares] heares F₃, hears F₄, Rowe,
 Pope. heaps Han.

244. words...heare:] words...heare,
 Qq. words:...hear, F₃F₄.

245. bruised...pierc'd] bruis'd...pierced QqFf et cetera.

pierc'd] pieced Theob. +, Cap.
cares] F₁.

227. louers] The addition of the Qq: 'Into your favour' is not needed; does it not, in fact, sound a little weak after the Duke has said, 'Let me speak like yourself'? —ED.

228. Compare 'Past cure is still past care,' Love's Lab. V, ii, 28; 'What's gone and what's past help Should be past grief,' Wint. Tale, III, ii, 223; 'Things without all remedy Should be without regard,' Macb. III, ii, 11.—ED.

238. nothing beares] RANN: Who is no further interested therein than barely to admire the moral beauties it contains.

239. free comfort] JOHNSON: But the moral precepts of consolation, which are liberally bestowed on occasion of the sentence.

245. pierc'd] THEOBALD: It is obvious that the text must be restored, as Mr Warburton acutely observed to me: pieced, i. e. That the wounds of sorrow were ever cured or a man made heart-whole merely by words of consolation. JENNENS: Theobald, and all after, read pieced (i. e. cured), because 'pierced' (it seems) signifies wounded. True, so it does sometimes; but it is also used in a good sense, as here, for touching, affecting, comforting, as with music, the 'bruised heart'—'the ear-piercing fife.'—Pierc'd is a wretched emendation; who ever talked of piecing a bruise? SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS: Shakespeare was continually changing his first expression for another, either stronger or more uncommon; so that very often the reader, who has not the same continuity or succession of ideas, is at a loss for its meaning. Many of Shakespeare's uncouth, strained epithets may be explained by going back to the obvious and simple expression, which is most likely to occur to the mind in that state. I can imagine that the first mode of expression that occurred to the poet was this: 'The troubled heart was never cured by words.' To give it poetical force, he altered the phrase: 'The wounded heart was never reached through the ear.' Wounded heart he changed to broken, and that to 'bruised,' as a more common expression. Reached he altered to touched, and the transition is then easy to 'pierced,' i. e. thoroughly touched. When the sentiment is brought to this state, the commentator, without this unravelling clue, expounds piercing the heart in its common acceptation wounding the heart, which, making in this place nonsense, is corrected to pieced the heart, which is very stiff, and, as Polonius says, is a vile phrase. STEEVENS's thoughts turn to surgery, and he suggests that as inflammation sometimes results from a bruise, a cure can be effected only by 'piercing' or lancing. MALONE: 'Pierced' is merely a figurative expression, and means not wounded, but penetrated in a metaphorical sense; thoroughly affected. [Malone here gives a dozen citations from Shakespeare, Spenser, Marlowe, and The Mirrour for Magistrates, which merely show that what is pierced is penetrated; while the need is, in this instance, of examples in proof that piercing can mean, what Jennings rightly says it means, viz.: penetrating with a soothing or consoling power. Of Malone's many quotations only four are in this sense quite germane, viz.: 'Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief,' Love's Lab. V, ii, 763; 'With sweetest touches pierce your mistress' ear,' Mer. of Ven. V, i, 67; 'Nor thee, nor them, thrice noble Tamburlane, Shall want my heart to be with gladness pierc'd,' Marlowe's Tamburlane, Part First, I, ii; 'Whose [Meliboe's] sensefull words empierst his hart so neare That he was rapt with double rauishment,' Faerie Queene, Bk VI, ix, 233 (ed. Grosart). Another example Malone gives from Spenser, where, as he says, 'we have the very words of the text,' with the implication that the drift is parallel, which I do not think is the case. It is in the description of Sclaunder, Bk IV, viii, 231: 'Her words . . . Which passing through the eares, would pierce the hart And wound the soule it selfe with grief vnkind: For like the stings of Aspes, that kill with smart, Her spightfull words did pricke, and wound the inner part.' Malone quoted only the words which are italicized, probably in all honesty, and the trifling matter would not have deserved attention had not Knight, and Staunton, and even Dyce, been misled into citing the passage, assuredly without looking it up; the two former, unfortunately, without acknowledgement to Malone. Hudson cites it, but had verified it. PURNELL says, that we must 'take the word here as meaning merely reached.' BAILEY (ii, 107), whose notes life (or at least, my life) is, alas, too short to cite in full, and whereof the felicity is not always in direct ratio to their length, proposed as an emendation, which he is 'quite sure is far more likely to have been Shakespeare's language' than either 'pierced' or 'pieced': 'That the bruised heart was plaster'd through the ear.'—ED.]

[245. the bruized heart was pierc'd through the eares].

245. eares] See I, i, 31.

I humbly beseech you proceed to th' Affaires of State. 246

Duke. The Turke with a most mighty Preparation makes for Cyprus: Othello, the Fortitude of the place is best knowne to you. And though we haue there a Substitute of most allowed sufficiency; yet opinion, a more 250 ioueraigne Mistris of Effects, throwes a more safer voice on you: you must therefore be content to slubber 252

246. I...proceed] Beseech you now Qq, Theob. Warb. Johns. Jen. Coll. Wh. i, Ktly, Huds. Rlfe. I humbly beseech you to proceed F₃ F₄ (Humbly F₄).

to th'...of State] to the...of the State Qq. to the...o' th' State Theob. Warb.
Johns. Jen.

247. a most] most Qq. a Johns.

249. you.] you, Qq.

there] here Q₃.

250. sufficiencie;) Ff, Rowe+, Jen. sufficiency, Qq, Cap. et cet.

a more] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.

Knt. a Qq et cet.

251. safer] safe Ff, Rowe+, Cap.
Rann.

246. I] As a trifling instance of the way in which typographical errors are perpetuated in the early editions, it may, perhaps, be worth noting that in one of my two copies of F₃ this letter is exceedingly faint, in the other copy it has failed to leave any impression whatever, although the type has not fallen out; the space that it should occupy is still there and the line begins 'humbly,' &c. The compositor of F₄, using F₃ as his copy, failing to note the omission of this 'I,' leaves a space at the beginning of the line and boldly starts with a capital letter: 'Humbly,' &c.—ED.

247-254. COLLIER: As this speech is the only one in this part of the scene printed as prose, it may be doubted, especially from the rhythm of some of the passages, whether it was not originally verse. It would not be difficult to render it metrical. DELIUS: This sudden change from verse to prose indicates a transition, correspondingly sudden, from theoretical moralizing and epigrammatic banter to the practical demands of the moment. For this reason in the Ff the prose begins even in the last words of Brabantio's speech, whereas the Qq continue the rhythm: 'Beseech you now to the affairs of state.'

248. Fortitude] MOREL: C'est un vieux mot français que Montaigne employait encore; mais il n'a jamais eu dans notre langue que le sens du latin fortitudo, force morale.

248. BOOTH: Othello leaves Desdemona with Cassio, who regards her with tender, yet respectful admiration. Iago, at back, watches them curiously, but let him not be obtrusive; he must keep in the background and assume this expression, and feel the curiousness, even if only one person in the whole audience sees or understands it; the 'censure,' as Hamlet calls it, of that one is worth all the rest.

250. more] COLLIER: The printer caught 'more' from the line below, and inserted it also before 'sovereign'; it is altered to most in the (MS). [Is there any good reason why we should not retain the 'more' of the Ff here?—ED.]

251. Mistris] D'HUGUES: Il est naturel que l'opinion soit regardée comme souveraine dans une république. Cependant en France, dans le courant du XVIIe siècle, Pascal lui rendait le même témoignage à propos d'un livre italien intitulé, Della opinione, regina del mondo.

252. slubber] STEEVENS: That is, obscure. So in the First Part of Jeronimo, 1605: 'The evening, too, begins to slubber day' [p. 74, ed. Dodsley]. ROLFE: This the glosse of your new Fortunes, with this more stub- 253 borne, and boystrous expedition.

Othe. The Tirant Custome, most Graue Senators, 255
Hath made the flinty and Steele Coach of Warre
My thrice-driuen bed of Downe. I do agnize
A Naturall and prompt Alacartie,
I finde in hardneffe : and do vndertake
This present Warres against the Ottamites. 260
Most humbly therefore bending to your State,
I craue fit disposition for my Wife,
Due reference of Place, and Exhibition, 263

253. glosse] grosse F₁. grofs F₃F₄.

Rowe.

more] most Rowe ii.

255. Graue] great Q₁.

256. Coach] Ff, Rowe. Cooch Qq.

couch Pope et cet.

257. thrice-driuen] thrice driuen Q₁.

258. Alacartie] F₁.

259. in] it Theob. i, Steev.'85.

hardneffe] harness Mason.

259. do] would Q₁.

260. This... Warres] This...warre Q₂.

F₁. This...war Q₃F₃F₄, Rowe+, Cap.

Jen. Rann. Sing. Ktly, Dyce iii, Huds.

These...wars Mal. et cet.

Ottamites] Ottomites Q₂Q₃Ff et

seq.

263. reference] reuerence Q₁.

reuerence F₃F₄, Rowe, Pope, Han.

word occurs in Shakespeare only here, and, in the sense of slighting, slurring over, in Mer. of Ven. II, viii, 39: 'slubber not business for my sake.'

253. glosse] STEEVENS: See Macb. I, vii, 34: 'golden opinions Which would be worn now in their newest gloss.' ROLFE adds from Much Ado, III, ii, 6: 'that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage.'

257. thrice-driuen] JOHNSON: A driven bed is a bed for which the feathers are selected by driving with a fan, which separates the light from the heavy. BOOTH says that he has heard his mother say that this driving of the feathers was for the purpose of drying them, and that not until they had been thrice driven were they considered fit for use. 'A suggestive movement of the hands,' he adds, 'might explain this.'

257. agnize] MURRAY (New Eng. Dict., s. v.): To recognize the existence of, to acknowledge, to confess (with examples from Becon, Policy of War, 1543; Woolton, Chr. Manual, 1576. In Shakespeare only here). MOREL: C'est du vieux français agniser.

259. hardness] SCHMIDT (Lex.): Hardship. Also in Cymb. III, vi, 21: 'hardness ever Of hardiness is mother.' [In the Quincy (MS) it is corrected to hardiness.] POTWIN (Bibliotheca Sacra, July, 1862): Compare 'endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.'—2 Tim. ii, 3.

260. This . . . Warres] DYCE (ed. iii): No doubt formerly the plural of war was sometimes used as equivalent to the singular; but in the next page Desdemona, speaking of the same expedition, calls it 'the war.' [See I, i, 31; also Lear, V, iii, 258. 'This present war' seems to be preferable to 'These present wars.'—ED.]

263. reference] JOHNSON: I desire that proper disposition be made for my wife, that she may have precedency and revenue, accommodation and company, suitable to her rank. I should read preference.

With such Accomodation and befort

As leuels with her breeding.

265

Duke. Why at her Fathers?

Bra. I will not haue it fo.

Othe. Nor I.

Def. Nor would I there recide,

To put my Father in impatient thoughts

270

By being in his eye. Most Graious Duke,

To my vnfoldng, lend your prosperous eare,

And let me finde a Charter in your voice

T'affist my simpleneffe.

Duke. What would you Desdemona?

275

Def. That I loue the Moore, to liue with him,

264. With] Which Q₁.

Accomodation] accomodation? Q₁.

266. Why...Fathers] Ff, Rowe +, Knt,

Del. If you please, bed't at her fathers

(One line) Qq, Jen. (Beginning new line with Bed't) Cap. et cet.

267. I will] Ff, Rowe +, Rann, Knt.

Ile Qq, Cap. et cet.

269. Nor...there] Ff, Rowe +. I would not there Knt i. Nor I, I would not there

Qq, Cap. et cet.

272. your prosperous] a gracious Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. your

gracious Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.

273. Charter] character Ff, Rowe.

274. T'affist] And if Q₁. To assist

Cap.

simpleneffe.] simpleneffe.— Qq.

275. you Desdemona?] you—speake.

Q₁.

276. I loue] Ff, Knt. I did loue Qq

et cet.

263. Exhibition] STEEVENS: Allowance. The word is at present used only at the Universities. [See 'The king . . . Confined to exhibition,' Lear, I, ii, 25 and notes.]

264. besort] COWDEN-CLARKE: Befitting attendance, proper retinue. Compare 'such men as may besort your age,' Lear, I, iv, 244.

268. Nor I] BOOTH: Not harshly, but firmly.

272. prosperous] STEEVENS: Propitious. MOREL: Le mot n'a plus en anglais le sens que nous trouvons ici et que le français a longtemps conservé. 'S'il révere les dieux, ils lui seront propères'—Desmarets, cité par Littré.

273. Charter] JOHNSON: Let your favour privilege me. HUDSON: About the same as pledge or guaranty. The word is used in a considerable variety of senses by Shakespeare, and seems to have been rather a favourite with him, as with other Englishmen, probably from the effect of Magna Charta and other like instruments in securing and preserving the liberties of England.

276. I loue] KNIGHT: Desdemona's love remains, and though the did of the Qq assists the rhythm, it enfeebles the sense. COWDEN-CLARKE: Desdemona is gentle even to timidity; but, like many women whose gentleness has been wrought into timidity by a too rigid strictness of their elders, she is capable of singularly bold action and of self-assertion on occasion. Her independent act in leaving her father's house, and in marrying the man of her choice, is precisely characteristic of the one, and her present speech is an eminent specimen of the other. Encouraged by loving treatment, she is capable of moral strength; chilled by severity, she is a moral coward.

My downe-right violence, and storme of Fortunes, 277
 May trumpet to the world. My heart's subdu'd [315 a] Euen to the very quality of my Lord; 279

277. and....Fortunes] and scorne of Fortunes Q₄. to forms, my fortunes Warb.
 Fortunes] Fortune Ktly.

278. heart's subdu'd] hearts subdued
 Qq.
 279. very quality] utmost pleasure Q₄.

277. EDWARDS (Canons, &c., p. 144): 'Downright violence,' means the unbridled impetuosity with which her passion hurried her on to this unlawful marriage; and 'storm of fortunes' may signify the hazard she thereby ran of making shipwreck of her worldly interest. Both very agreeable to what she afterwards says: 'to his honours and his valiant parts Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.' HEATH (p. 557): That is, my entrance upon the fortunes I have chosen in that violent manner of proceeding as if I had taken them by storm. JOHNSON: 'Violence' is not violence suffered, but violence acted. Breach of common rules and obligations. Perhaps the Qto has the true reading. M. MASON cannot understand the 'storm of fortunes' with 'fortunes' in the plural, and asserts that we should read either 'scorn of fortunes,' or 'storm of Fortune,' the latter meaning 'not the injuries of Fortune, but Desdemona's own high-spirited braving of her.' STEEVENS: The same mistake of scorn for 'storm' occurs in the old copies of Tro. & Cress. I, i, 35: 'as when the sun doth light a scorn.' DYCE (Remarks, &c., p. 234) believes that scorn of the Qto was 'no doubt right;' but as an editor he preferred 'storm.' He cites a passage, which Mason had cited before him, from B. and Fl.'s Honest Man's Fortune, IV, i: 'where we find,' says Dyce, 'according to the old eds., "He'll laugh and storm you," &c., while the excellent MS. of that play in my possession affords the true reading: "He'll laugh and scorn you," &c.' SINGER: 'Storm' seems to be used intensively of violence, 'the stormy violence I have used against my fortunes.' HUDSON: The meaning, probably, is the state or course of life which the speaker has boldly ventured upon in forsaking the peaceful home of her father to share the storms and perils, the violences and hardships, of a warrior's career. Scorn will not cohere with violence, unless by making it express a quality of Desdemona herself, not of her fortunes. She evidently means the violence and storm of fortunes which she has braved or encountered in marrying the Moor, and not any thing of a violent or scornful temper in herself. ROLFE: The bold action I have taken, and the stormy fortunes I have voluntarily encountered, in order to marry him.

279. quality] MALONE: That is, profession. 'I am so much enamoured of Othello, that I am even willing to endure all the inconveniences incident to a military life and to attend him to the wars.' That this is the meaning appears not only from the reading of the Qto: 'even to the utmost pleasure of my lord, i. e. so as to prompt me to go with him wherever he wishes I should go,' but also from the whole tenour of Desdemona's speech, viz: that as she had married a soldier, so she was ready to accompany him to the wars, and to consecrate her soul and fortunes to his honours and his valiant parts; i. e. to attend him wherever his military character and his love of fame should call him. COWDEN-CLARKE says 'quality' here means 'individual nature,' 'moral and mental identity.' ROLFE interprets it 'very nature.' HUDSON: 'Quality' is here put for nature, idiot, distinctive grain, or personal propriety. Desdemona means that her heart is tamed and tuned into perfect harmony with the heroic manhood that has spoken out to her from Othello's person, that her soul gravitates towards him as its pre-estab-

I faw Othello's vifage in his mind, 280
 And to his Honours and his valiant parts.
 Did I my foule and Fortunes confecrate.
 So that (deere Lords)if I be left behind
 A Moth of Peace, and he go to the Warre,
 The Rites for why I loue him, are bereft me : 285
 And I a heauie interim fhall fupport
 By his deere abfence. Let me go with him. 287

280. Othello's] Othelloes Qq.

Ktly.

283. deere] my dear Q₂.285. for why] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Del.285. Rites] rights Warb. Knt. parts for which Qq et cet.

lished centre and home. So that the sense of the passage may be fitly illustrated from the 111th Sonn.: 'And almost thence my nature is subdued To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.' [MALONE's interpretation of 'quality' has been followed by DYCE, SINGER, DELIUS, and STAUNTON, and unquestionably it is a technical interpretation which 'quality' frequently bears; see a striking instance of it in Ham. II, ii, 333: 'Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing?' and Ib. 411, 'give us a taste of your quality,' but I cannot think that the word has this technical sense here. Desdemona is vindicating her indifference to the storm of fortunes, and, glorying in that as a virtue which others would impute to her as a fault, proclaims that the 'quality' in Othello which might be supposed to be most abhorrent to her, 'even to that very quality' her heart is subdued. What that quality is, the connection of thought shows: 'I saw Othello's visage in his mind;' and as she had fallen in love with his mind, his honours, and his valour, without a taint of passion, so had she fallen in love with the very colour of his face. HENLEY says, that 'quality' means 'the Moorish complexion of Othello and his military profession,' but I do not think that the passage appeared to Henley as it appears to me, for he goes on to say that the 'virtues of Othello had subdued her heart in spite of his visage;' whereas the 'very quality' distinctive of Othello was the colour of his visage, and to that, even to that, Desdemona would trumpet to the world, her heart was subdued.—ED.]

280. ROFFE (Ghost Belief of Sh., p. 4) finds included in these words 'the all-important facts' that we are all ghosts clad in gross dimensions and muddy vestures of decay; that the ghost, which is truly the man, is in a human form as much as the body is; and that the body is in that form simply because the ghost or soul is so. 'The common expression that we see the mind in the countenance, of course conveys a truth, or rather a part of the truth; but Desdemona's words are fuller, for they give the fact that the mind has a visage of its own.'

285. Rites] WARBURTON: Without question Shakespeare wrote rights, i. e. the right of sharing his dangers with him. Othello tells the Senate: 'She lov'd me for the dangers I had passed,' and she was now desirous of sharing with him what were to come. KNIGHTLEY (Exp., 299): Is not this, whether we read 'rites' or rights, rather indelicate coming from the lips of Desdemona? Juliet (Rom. & Jul. III, ii, 8) might, to herself, speak of the 'amorous rites,' but for Desdemona to do so before the Senate of Venice! impossible. Would it not, then, be better to read parts? She had just said, that it was 'for his honours and his valiant parts' she loved him.

287. deere] See WRIGHT's definition, line 102.

Othe. Let her haue your voice. 288
 Vouch with me Heauen, I therefore beg it not
 To please the pallate of my Appetite : 290
 Nor to comply with heat the yong affects
 In my defunct, and proper satisfaction. 292

288, 289. Let...I] Your voyces Lords: beseech you let her will, Haue a free way, I Q₂, Pope +, Cap. Your voyces Lords: beseech you let her will Haue a free way: Vouch with me heauen, I (reading Haue a free way as a separate line) Q₂ Q₃, Rowe, Jen. Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. Sing. Ktly, Coll. iii, Dyce iii, Huds. (I do beseech you let Her will Rann. As a separate line, Your voyces, lords Ktly, Coll. iii, Dyce iii, Huds.)

288. haue your voice] Ff, Knt, Sta. Del. haue your voyces Dyce i, Wh. Glo. Cam. Rlfe.

291, 292. heat...defunct?] F₂, Rowe, Wh. i. heate, the young affects In my defunct?, Qq. heat the young effects In my defunct?, Ff (yong F₂). heat the young affects, In my defunct Pope, Knt. heat the young affects In my defunct Warb. heat, the young Affects, In my distinct Theob. Steev.'93. heat affects the young, In my distinct Han. heat, the young Affects, In my defunct Johns. Coll. i, Del. heat, (the young affects In me defunct) Upton, Cap. Jen. Sing. Dyce, Glo. Sta. Cam. Coll. iii, Rlfe, Wh. ii. heat, (the young effects In me defunct) Steev.'85. heat, the young affects, In my disjunct Mal. Var. heat, (the young affect's In me defunct) Rann. heat of the young affects In my distinct Ktly. wi' th' heat of young affects,—In me defunct,—Huds. iii. heat, and young affects, In my distinct Steev. conj. heat, and young affects, In my disjunct Rann. conj.

288, 289. I do not think that the Qq here give us a reading which is of essential importance. There is a tone of humble, almost servile, entreaty in 'beseech you,' which jars a little on the dignified, 'unbonneted' bearing of Othello throughout this scene.—ED.

291, 292. heat . . . defunct] THEOBALD was the first to note the obscurity of this passage, which, as it had been theretofore printed, he pronounced a 'period of as stubborn nonsense as the editors have obtruded upon poor Shakespeare throughout his whole works;' the difficulty lay, he thought, in the word 'defunct,' which 'signifies nothing else either primitively or metaphorically' than dead; and Othello could not mean to say that 'appetite was dead in him,' because he afterwards says, 'I am declined Into the vale of years; yet that's not much.' Wherefore Theobald changed 'defunct' to distinct, and paraphrased the passage thus: 'I do not beg her company with me, merely to please myself; nor to indulge the heat and affects (i. e. affections) of a new-married man, in my own distinct and proper satisfaction, but to comply with her in her request and desire of accompanying me.' Shakespeare, he adds, uses 'affects' for affections in several other passages which are cited. UPTON (p. 183), reading 'the young affects' in parenthesis, says that 'defunct' is 'not to be taken strictly here as signifying absolutely dead, but almost so; or from the Latin defunctus, it might mean, discharged from youthful appetite, and proper to his age and character. So afterwards (II, i, 262), Iago says, "there should be loveliness in favour, sympathy in years, manners, beauties, all which the Moor is defective in." Now, if any alteration be proposed, instead of "defunct" the properest word seems defect: "In my defect and proper satisfaction," in which sense the Latins use defectus. Or what if, with a slighter variation still, we read: "Nor to comply with heat (the young affects In me defunct) and proper"? &c.' WARBURTON paraphrases thus: 'with that heat and new affections which the indulgence of my appetite has raised and created;' and then dogmatically adds: 'this is the meaning of "defunct," which has made all the difficulty of the passage.' JOHNSON, whose note, wherein he follows Upton's 'in me defunct,' does not agree with his text, says: 'I do not think Theobald's emendation clears the text from embarrassment, though it is, with a little imaginary improvement, received by Hanmer. Warburton's explanation is not more satisfactory: what made the difficulty will continue to make it. "Affects" here stands not for love, but for quality, for that by which anything is affected. "I ask it not," says he, "to please appetite, or satisfy loose desires, the passions of youth which I have now outlived, or for any particular gratification of myself, but merely that I may indulge the wishes of my wife."' STREEVENS: In The Bondman (I, iii, p. 29, ed. Gifford) by Massinger is a passage which seems to countenance and explain 'the young affects In me defunct.' Timoleon is the speaker, and says to Cleon, 'youthful heats, That look no further than your outward form, Are long since buried in me.' TYRWHITT (p. 5): If I could persuade the reader, as I am almost persuaded myself, that lines 292 and 293 have by some accident changed places, and that the passage ought to read: 'Nor to comply with heat, the young affects; But to be free and bounteous to her mind, In my defunct and proper satisfaction,' I would then recommend it to consideration, whether the word 'defunct' (which would be the only remaining difficulty) is not capable of a signification drawn from the primitive sense of its Latin original, which would very well agree with the context. TOLLET: I would propose: 'In my defenc't, or defenc'd,' &c., i. e. I do not beg her company merely to please the palate of my appetite, nor to comply with the heat of lust which the young man affects, i. e. loves and is fond of, in a gratification which I have by marriage defenc'd, or inclosed and guarded, and made my own property. . . . I am persuaded that the word 'defunct' must be at all events ejected. HENLEY: Othello here supposes that his petition for the attendance of his bride might be ascribed to one of these two motives: either solicitude for the enjoyment of an unconsummated and honourable marriage, or the mere gratification of a sensual and selfish passion. But as neither was the true one, he abjures them both: 'I therefore beg it not To please the palate of my appetite; Nor to comply with heat (——) and proper satisfaction.' The former, having nothing in it unbecoming, he simply disclaims; but the latter, ill-according with his season of life, he assigns a reason for renouncing: 'the young affects In me defunct.' As if he had said, 'I have outlived that wayward impulse of passion by which younger men are stimulated.' By 'young affects' the poet clearly means those 'youthful lusts' which St. Paul admonishes Timothy to flee from and the Romans to mortify. MALONE: For the emendation disjunct I am responsible. Some emendation is absolutely necessary, and this appears to me the least objectionable of those which have been proposed. To the reading of Upton '(the young affects In me defunct),' there are three strong objections. The first is, the suppression of the word being before defunct, which is absolutely necessary to the sense, and of which the omission is so harsh that it affords an argument against the probability of the proposed emendation. The second and the grand objection is, that it is highly improbable that Othello should declare on the day of his marriage that the youthful affections were dead in him. He himself (as Theobald has observed) informs us afterwards that he is 'declined into the vale of years;' but adds at the same time, 'yet that's not much.' This surely is a decisive proof that the text is corrupt. My third objection to Upton's regulation is, that by the introduction of a parenthesis, which is not found in the old copies, the words 'and proper satisfaction' are so unnaturally

[291, 292. heat the yong affects In my defunct].

[291, 292. heat the yong affects In my defunct].

disjoined from those with which they are connected in sense, as to form a most lame and impotent conclusion; to say nothing of the awkwardness of using the word 'proper' without any possessive pronoun prefixed to it. All these difficulties are done away by retaining the original word 'my,' and reading disjunct, instead of 'defunct;' and the meaning will be, 'I ask it not for the sake of my separate and private enjoyment, by the gratification of appetite, but that I may indulge the wishes of my wife.' RANN (reading 'the young affect's In me defunct'): 'The tumult of such young desires is at my time of life considerably abated.' Rann here anticipates GIFFORD, who in his note on the passage in Massinger's Bondman, cited by Steevens, says: "'Affects" occurs incessantly in the sense of passions, affections: "young affects" are, therefore, perfectly synonymous with youthful heats. Othello was not an old man, though he had lost the fire of youth; the critics might, therefore, have dismissed that concern for the lady, which they have so delicately communicated for the edification of the rising generation. . . . I would wish the future editors of Shakespeare to consider whether he might not have given affect in the singular (this also is used for passion) to correspond with heat.' KNIGHT: 'Comply' may be used in the sense of supply, 'affects' are affections, and 'defunct' does not necessarily mean dead. Tyrwhitt considers that 'defunct' may be used in the Latin sense of performed. As function has the same Latin root, we would suggest that Shakespeare used 'defunct' for functional, and then the meaning is clear: 'nor to gratify the young affections in my official and individual satisfaction.' COLLIER (ed. i): 'In my defunct and proper satisfaction' is merely 'in my own dead satisfaction' or gratification, the youthful passions or 'young affects' being comparatively 'defunct' in him. For the sense, though not for the harmony of the verse, it ought to have run 'for my proper and defunct satisfaction;' and had it so run, we doubt if so much ink would have been spilt and wasted upon it. It requires no proof that 'proper' was often used for own. DYCE (Remarks, p. 235) apprehends that 'few persons will be satisfied with Collier's explanation; nobody, assuredly, with Knight's,' and then cites the passage already given from Massinger's Bondman, together with one from Fletcher's Fair Maid of the Inn, I, i, first cited by Gifford, to show, as Gifford had already observed, how these lines of Shakespeare were understood by his contemporaries. 'They also show,' adds Dyce, 'that Upton's alteration of "my" to me is absolutely necessary.' Both Dyce and Gifford approve of Johnson's explanation. COLLIER (ed. ii) gives the lines as they are made to stand in his (MS), thus: 'Nor to comply wi' the young affects of heat (In me defunct) and proper satisfaction.' JOURDAIN (Trans. Philolog. Soc., 1860, p. 139) is anticipated by Tyrwhitt in suggesting that the lines should be transposed, but asserts as 'his firm persuasion' that 'defunct' is a misprint for default, meaning 'in my want of appearance, in my absence, and for my own satisfaction.' For the use of default in this sense Jourdain cites several examples. WHITE (ed. i): Utterly unable either to explain this passage or to suggest in what particular it may be corrupted, I leave it exactly as it appears in the old copies. Of the page after page of comment which has been written upon it, and the several conjectural attempts which have been made to modify it into intelligibility, only Johnson's appears worthy of notice. . . . That Shakespeare, although he may very probably have written 'comply with heat,' wrote 'comply with proper satisfaction,' I think almost impossible. BAILEY (ii, 102) is dissatisfied with all that has been said about this passage, and asserts that nothing can be less felicitous than Johnson's text, wherein the parenthesis and the change of 'my' to me combine 'to ruin the meaning of the speaker, which yet seems plain enough.' 'The epithet "young" does not refer, as is generally supposed, to young people or the young, but to the recency of his marriage.' [Wherefore Bailey proposes to read:] 'Nor to comply with heat of young affects.' 'Instead of merely "heat," th'heat might be put with advantage and with the probability that it was the original reading. This slight emendation gives to the line clearness, precision, and propriety.' "Defunct" is used in its etymological sense to have done with, like "defunctus laboribus" of Horace, and by its use here Othello refers to the gratification of his moments of leisure and privacy, when he would be free from the duties of his office. Perhaps, to comprise the same meaning in another single epithet, we could not select a better than unofficial: "In my unofficial and proper or personal satisfaction." KRIGHTLEY (Expositor, p. 300) after citing Upton's reading, asks: 'But can any one produce a single instance of Shakespeare's thus interposing a parenthesis between two substantives connected by a copula, or forming a sentence like that in the parenthesis? and what can be more rugged and disjointed than the whole passage as thus arranged? Would not the following not very violent corrections make the whole more Shakespearian and more harmonious? [See Textual Notes.] "Distinct and proper" means separate and peculiar. Distinct, the correction of "defunct," I regard as nearly certain. Its meaning here is separate. "Sheds stuff'd with lambs and goats, distinctly kept, Distinct the biggest, the more mean distinct, Distinct the youngest."—Chapman, Odyss., ix, 34.' DANIEL (Notes, &c., p. 77): Read: 'heat the young affects—In me defunct—but for her satisfaction And to be,' &c. Hudson adopts this reading with the remark that it seems to him 'one of the happiest emendations ever made of the Poet's text. Nor can the changes be justly termed violent; as forher might easily get misprinted "proper;" and such transpositions as and and but are among the commonest of typographical errors.' Daniel interprets 'the young affects' as that 'which affects the young,' in which interpretation he follows DELIUS, who conceived himself justified therein by Malone, but over which Dyce lifts his hands in wonder at 'what Gifford would have thought if he had lived to read it. ROLFE: Othello only means that the early impetuosity of youthful passions is past—that he can control them, and is no longer controlled by them. WHITE (ed. ii): The parenthetic passage is in a very doubtful condition. The confession put into Othello's mouth is the last that a lover would make, and on this occasion, especially after Desdemona's foregoing speech. HUDSON: "Defunct" properly goes with "heat," not with "affects." Othello means simply that the heat of youthful impulse has cooled down, that his passions have become tempered to the rule of judgement.' Hudson agrees with Bailey in thinking that 'with' should be with the, regarding it as a case of absorption, as in 'Bring her to Try with Maine-course,' Temp. I, i; 'Let's all sink with King,' Id. [Cf. also 'Holds such an enmity with blood of man,' Ham. I, v, 65, and ALLEN's note in Rom. & Jul., p. 429.] Hudson adds, 'that to "comply with one's own satisfaction" is not and never was English, as it seems to me.' [Is not this the speech to be expected from Othello after what Desdemona had just said? As there was no alloy of passion in her love for him whose visage she saw in his mind, and to whose honours she had consecrated her soul, so Othello proclaimed that it was for the nobler intercourse of marriage that he wanted Desdemona to accompany him, to be free and bounteous to her mind, not to please the palate of his appetite; and in saying this, he wishes as delicately as possible to intimate that the 'compulsive ardour' of 'flaming youth,' as Hamlet calls it, was over for him. This, I think, is the idea which, if we heard the speech on the stage only, we should all gather from it, nor do the various emendations and changes convey any very different meaning. Here then,

[291, 292. heat the yong affects In my defunct].

But to be free, and bounteous to her minde : 293
 And Heauen defend your good foules, that you thinke
 I will your serious and great bufinesse scant 295
 When she is with me. No, when light wing'd Toyes
 Of feather'd Cupid, seele with wanton dulnesse 297

293. to her] of her Q ₁ .	297. Of] And Q ₁ .
295. great] good Q ₁ .	seele] F ₁ F ₂ , foyles Q ₁ . feel Rowe
296. When] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Knt. For	ii. foi Pope +, Jen. Coll. Ktly. feel F ₄ et
Q ₁ et cet.	cet.
me.] me ;— Q ₁ . me — Rowe,	dulnesse] dalliance Theob. conj.
Pope, Han.	(withdrawn).

I think, we may rest. The object of the speaker is attained; he has given us his meaning. As a mere intellectual amusement we may inquire into the passage more curiously, and rearrange the puzzle while retaining the sense; the pleasure and the profit will, by the exercise, accrue to ourselves alone, with but little likelihood of ever heading, except in imagination, a band of converts. Moreover, in the inexplicable passages in Shakespeare, like 'the runaway's eyes,' 'the dram of eale,' 'Vllorxa,' the present passage, and others, after the printers have borne all the obloquy which we can heap upon them, might we not frown a little at Shakespeare himself? He must have written rapidly. Would his fame be seriously impaired or stabbed to the centre, if we cautiously whispered among ourselves that he now and then wrote carelessly?—ED.]

294. defend . . . soules] STEEVENS says, and he has been followed by all editors who have noticed the word, that 'defend' here means to forbid, a meaning which it undoubtedly bears in many passages; but it may be doubted if it be worth while to reject here its ordinary meaning; if it has a military flavour it is certainly not inappropriate to Othello. ABBOTT gives prevent as its equivalent, which to me is scarcely better than forbid.—ED. COLLIER (Notes, &c., p. 451): 'Good souls' become counsels in the (MS). Othello would hardly apply 'good souls' to the Duke and Senators of Venice. [Certainly a plausible emendation, which evidently gave DYCE pause; he advises (Few Notes, p. 149) 'an editor of Shakespeare to weigh it well before he adopts it.' 'What is the meaning,' he asks, 'of "Heaven defend your counsels"?' adding in parenthesis: 'If "defend" be equivalent here, as Steevens supposes, to forbid, the alteration [counsels] must be decidedly wrong.'—ED.]

294. that . . . think] ABBOTT, § 368: 'Think' seems used subjunctively, and 'that' as a conjunction, in this passage, i. e. 'that you (should) think.'

296. When] Is there any urgent reason for deserting the Ff here? For those, however, who prefer the Q₁, ABBOTT, § 151, gives many examples where For is equivalent to because.—ED.

297. seele] HARTING (p. 69): 'Seeling,' consisted in sewing a thread through the upper and under eyelids of a newly-caught hawk to obscure the sight for a time, and accustom her to the hood. Turberville, in his Book of Falconrie, 1575, gives the following directions 'how to seele a hawke': 'Take a needle threaded with untwisted thread, and (casting your Hawke) take her by the beake and put the needle through her eye-lidde, not right against the sight of the eye, but somewhat nearer to the beake, because she may see backwards. And you must take good heede that you hurt not the webbe, which is under the eye-lidde, or on the inside thereof. Then put your needle also through that other eye-lidde, drawing the endes of the thread together, tye

My speculatiue, and offic'd Instrument : 298
 That my Disports corrupt, and taint my businesse :
 Let House-wiues make a Skillet of my Helme, 300

298. offic'd] active Qq, Johns. Jen.
 Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i, Ktly, Huds.

299. my businesse] by business Steev.
 '85.

Instrument] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt,
 Sing. Del. instruments Qq et cet.

300. House-wiues] huswives Qq.
Skillet] skellet Qq.

them over the beake not with a straight knotte, but cut off the threedes endes neare to the knotte and twist them together in such sorte, that the eye-liddes may be raysed so upwards, that the Hawke may not see at all, and when the threed shall ware loose or unttyed, then the Hawke may see somewhat backwardes, which is the cause that the threed is put nearer to the beake. For a Sparrow-hawke should see somewhat backwardes, and a Falcon forwardes. The reasō is that if the Sparrow-hawke should see forwardes, shee would beat off her feathers or break them when she bateth upon the fist, and seeing the companie of men, or such like, she would bate too much.' Sir Emerson Tennant (Sketches of the Nat. Hist. of Ceylon, p. 246), says: 'Where it [the goshawk] is trained for hawking, it is usual, in lieu of a hood, to darken its eyes by means of a silken thread passed through holes in the eyelids.' This practice of 'seeling,' has happily given way to a great extent to the more merciful use of the hood. [See post, III, iii, 242; also notes on 'seeling night,' Macb. III, ii, 46.—ED.] WRIGHT (Bible Word-Book, s. v. Cieled): The etymology of this word is obscured by the spelling, which seems to connect it with the Fr. ciel, It. cielo, 'a canopy.' To seel or seele a room was to cover it with boards, or wainscoting, like Fr. plancher. To seel the eyes of a hawk or dove (Fr. siller les yeux) was to sew up their eyelids. 'What we now call the ceiling was formerly called the upper-seeling, Fr. sus-lambris, to distinguish it from the seeling or wainscoting on the walls.'—Wedgwood, Dict.

298. MALONE: 'Speculative instruments,' in Shakespeare's language, are the eyes, and 'active instruments,' the hands and feet. As 'seel' is here metaphorically used, it applies very properly to the 'speculative instruments;' but foils, of the Qq, agrees better with 'active instruments.' KNIGHT: The modern editors have made up a text between the Qto and Ff. They reject the foils of the Qto, and adopt the 'seel' of the Ff, while they substitute the active of the Qto for the 'offic'd' of the Ff. Having accomplished this hocus-pocus, they tell us that speculative instruments are the eyes, and active instruments the hands and feet; that to 'seel' is to close the eyelids of a bird, which applies very properly to the speculative instruments, but that foils better suits the active. It is their own work they are quarrelling with, and not that of the author. Either reading is good, if they had let it alone. The speculative and active instruments, which are foiled, are the thoughts and the senses; the speculative and offic'd instrument, which is seeled, is the whole man in meditation and in action. When the poet adopted the more expressive word seel, he did not leave the ugly anomaly which the commentators have made. He took the whole man as an instrument, spiritual and material, and metaphorically seeled the perceptions of that instrument. [Cf. 'no speculation in those eyes,' Macb. III, iv, 95.]

300. Skillet] HALLIWELL: It is unlikely that the poet had any substantial image in his mind when penning this line; but, nevertheless, the following note, communicated by Mr Fairholt, is an exceedingly curious one: 'The Museum of London Antiquities, formed by C. Roach Smith, F.S.A., furnishes a curious illustration of this passage, proving the custom of so turning an old helmet to use. In this instance a

And all indigne, and bafe aduerfities, 301
Make head againſt my Eſtimation.

Duke. Be it as you ſhall priuately determine,
Either for her ſtay, or going : th'Affaire cries haſt:
And ſpeed muſt anſwer it. 305

Sen. You muſt away to night.

Othe. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i'th'morning, here wee'l meete againe.
Othello, leaue ſome Officer behind
And he ſhall our Commiſſion bring to you : 310
And ſuch things elſe of qualitie and reſpect
As doth import you.

Othe. So pleaſe your Grace, my Ancient, 313

302. Eſtimation] reputation Qq, Coll. Ktly.

304. Either] Or Pope+.

her] Om. Q₁.

th'Affaire cries] the affaires cry

Q₁.

305. anſwer it.] anſwer, you muſt hence to night. Qq. anſwer. You muſt hence to-night. Pope+, Jen. Coll. iii. anſwer it. You muſt hence to-night. Johns. Cap. Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. Coll. ii, Ktly. anſwer't; you muſt hence to-night. Cam.

306. Sen. You...night] Defd. Tonight

my Lord? Du. This night. Qq, Theob. Warb. Johns. Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. Coll. Cam. Ktly. Des. To-night, my lord, to-night? Pope, Han. 1. Sen. You... night. Duke. This night. Wh. i.

308. nine] ten Q₁.

311. And ſuch] Ff, Rowe+. Cap. Jen. Rann. Knt. With ſuch Qq et cet. and reſpect] or reſpect Q₁.

312. import] concerne Q₁. import to F₃F₄, Rowe.

313. So] Om. Qq, Pope+, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. Coll. Wh. i.

crested Morion of the ſixteenth century has been fitted with a hook and chain, and formed into a camp-kettle. It was found in dredging the Thames near the Tower of London.'

301. indigne] DYCE (Gloss.): Unworthy, diſgraceful.

303. BOOTH: After conſultation with the Senators.

306. BOOTH: Roderigo ſhows alarm at this, but Iago quiets him. This muſt not interfere with the action of the ſcene, but merely be ſuggested.

306. In reference to the reading of the Qq, KNIGHT ſays: It appears to us that the careful rejection of the ſpeech of Deſdemona was a great improvement in the Folio. COLLIER (ed. ii): It is ſurely very natural that Deſdemona ſhould expreſs ſurprise at the ſuddenneſs of the command, and our perſuaſion is, that the words were left out in the Folio by accident. WHITE (ed. i): In my judgement ſhakeſpeare probably wrote the paſſage originally as in the Qq, but modified it from a conſciouſneſs that Deſdemona had already expreſſed with ſufficient candour the nature of her feelings towards Othello, and that both delicacy and truth of characterization would be gained by ſuppreſſing her exclamation.

308. nine] BOOTH: Probably the hour of rehearſal in ſhakeſpeare's time.

312. As doth] For other inſtances of ſingular verbs in relative ſentences where the antecedents are plural, ſee ABBOTT, § 247; alſo, 'it is not words that ſhakes me thus,' IV, i, 50; 'they laugh, that winnes,' IV, i, 141; 'you [gods] that ſtirs,' *Lea*r, II, iv, 271

A man he is of honesty and trust:
 To his conueyance I assigne my wife, 315
 With what else needfull, your good Grace shall think
 To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so:

Good night to euery one. And Noble Signior,
 If Vertue no delighted Beautie lacke, 320
 Your Son-in-law is farre more Faire then Blacke.

Sen. Adieu braue Moore, vfe Desdemona well.

Bra. Looke to her(Moore)if thou hast eies to see:
 She ha's deceiu'd her Father, and may thee. Exit. 324

316. good] Om. Q₃.

Ktly.

319. [to Bra. Cap.

324. deceiu'd] deceiud'd Q₂. deceiud'd

320. delighted] delighting Han. Cap.

Q₃.

322. Sen.] 1 Sena. Q_q.

and may thee] may doe thee Q₂.

323. if...eies] haue a quicke eye Q₂.

Exit.] Exeunt. Q_q.

Johns. Jen. Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. Sing.

313-315. So . . . wife] COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 250): Compare this with the behaviour of Leontes to his true friend Camillo.

316. needfull] ROLFE: That is, whatever else your grace shall think needful, &c. For many similar transpositions, see ABBOTT, §419 a. Cf. 'whiter skin of hers then snow,' V, ii, 6.

320. delighted] WARBURTON: This is a senseless epithet. We should read be-lighted, i. e. white and fair. JOHNSON: I should rather read delight or. Delight for delectation or power of pleasing, as it is frequently used. STEEVENS: The meaning is, if virtue comprehends everything in itself, then your virtuous son-in-law is, of course, beautiful; he has that beauty which delights every one. 'Delighted' for delighting, Shakespeare often uses the active and passive participles indiscriminately. The same sentiment occurs in Twelfth Night, III, iv, 403. TYRWHITT: 'Delighted' is used for delighting or delightful in Cymb. V, iv, 102. [In illustration of 'the delighted spirit' in Meas. for Meas. III, i, RITSON cites from Sir Thos. Herbert's Relation of Some Years Travels, &c., 1634, p. 104: 'Mirza . . . gave a period to his miseries in this world by supping a delighted cup of extreame poyson,' which WALKER (Crit., ii, 11) interprets as meaning rendered delicious by the admixture of certain ingredients. Thereupon Walker queries if 'delighted' be not used here in Othello nearly as in Herbert—that is, endowed with delights, deliciis exornata. DELIUS adopts this interpretation, and it is to me also eminently satisfactory both here and in Meas. for Meas.: 'If virtue lacks not beauty that is endowed with every delightful quality, Then,' &c.—ED.]

323-325. Looke . . . faith] COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 251): In real life, how do we look back to little speeches as presentimental of, or contrasted with, an affecting event? Even so, Shakespeare, as secure of being read over and over, of becoming a family friend, provides this passage for his readers and leaves it to them.

324. LLOYD: Thus it is that the Venetian Senate comes to the truth of a matter, and the impression thus gained of its judiciousness gives great emphasis to the parting words of the Senator as he goes out. The words fall on the heart like an omen; it is true, then, that the Senator recognizes as no improbability the ill-treatment of Desde-

Othe. My life vpon her faith. Honeft Iago, 325
 My Desdemona muſt I leaue to thee :
 I prythee let thy wife attend on her,
 And bring them after in the beſt aduantage.
 Come Desdemona, I haue but an houre
 Of Loue, of wordly matter, and direction 330
 To ſpend with thee. We muſt obey the the time. Exit.
Rod. Iago.
Iago. What ſaiſt thou Noble heart?
Rod. What will I do, think'ſt thou ? 334

325. faith.] faith; Q₂. faith Q₃.
 327. prythee] preethee Q₂. prethee Q₄.
 Q₃F₃F₄.
 328. them] her Qq, Pope +, Jen. Coll.
 Wh. i.
the] their Ff, Rowe.
 330. wordly] F₄. matter] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Jen.
 Knt, Sta. matters Qq, Mal. et cet.
 331. ſpend] ſpeake F₂. ſpeak F₃F₄,
 Rowe +.
thee.] thee, Qq.

331. the the] F₁.
Exit.] Exit Moore and Desdemona. Qq. Exeunt. Manent Rodorigo and Iago. Pope.
 Scene X. Pope +, Jen. Scene V. A dark Street. Booth.
 332. Iago.] Iago—Johns. Cap. Sta. Glo. Dyce iii, Huds. Rlfe, Wh. ii.
 333. ſaiſt] ſayest Rowe +, Jen.
 334. think'ſt] thinkeſt Q₂, Rowe +, Var. Coll. Sing. Dyce, Glo. Cam. Ktly, Rlfe.

mona by the gallant husband she has chosen for herself at such a sacrifice. Even so, and the words strengthen the sense of separation between the Moorish and the Venetian noble; for addressed by one equal to another, they would justify an answer with the hand at the sword-hilt.

324. FECHTER : Brabantio goes out last, disengaging himself from his daughter, who attempts to kiss his hand; and addressing Othello with threatening irony. BOOTH : Exeunt Duke and Senators. All bow to them as they pass. Desdemona appeals, in action, to her father.

326. LLOYD : Some critics moralize the fate of Desdemona as punishment for un- dutiful and ill-assorted marriage, yet the punishment falls quite as severely on the severity of Brabantio,—on his cruelty, we may say, for he is the first,—and out of un- natural pique,—to belie his own daughter's chastity. MOREL : Ce premier acte nous a donné jusqu'ici une exposition complète du sujet. Othello, Desdémone, Iago, Cassio, les caractères de tous les personnages principaux nous sont déjà parfaitement connus; tous les faits dont le jeu et les conséquences amèneront les péripéties diverses de l'ac- tion sont indiqués, toutes les données du problème dramatiques sont fixées.—Les deux vers dits par Brabantio sont le prélude d'une phase nouvelle de l'intrigue : ils nous font pressentir les suites tragiques de ces amour sur lesquelles pèse dès la première heure la malédiction d'un père.

328. aduantage] JOHNSON : Fairest opportunity.

329. GUIZOT : C'est justement le contraire de ce que Voltaire a fait dire à Orosmane cet autre jaloux, dans Zaïre : 'Je vais donner une heure aux soins de mon empire Et le reste du jour sera tout à Zaïre.'

334. will] The despairing emphasis laid on this word shows, I think, why it is used, and not shall.—ED.

Iago. Why go to bed and sleepe. 335

Rod. I will incontinently drowne my felfe.

Iago. If thou do'ft, I fhall neuer loue thee after. Why thou filly Gentleman?

Rod. It is fillyneffe to liue, when to liue is torment :
and then haue we a prefcription to dye, when death is 340
our Phyfition.

Iago. Oh villanous : I haue look'd vpon the world for foure times feuen yeares, and fince I could diftinguifh 343

337. If thou do'ft] Ff, Rowe, Pope,
Han. Knt, Dyce, Glo. Sta. Cam. Huds.
Rlfe, Wh. ii. Well, if thou doeft Qq et cet.
after.] after it, Qq, Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i, Del.

337, 338. Why... Gentleman] Separate line, Qq, Theob. Warb.

338. Gentleman?] Ff. Gentleman. Q,
Q₂. Gentleman, Q₃. Gentleman! Rowe

et cet.

339. torment] Ff, Knt, Dyce, Glo. Sta.
Cam. Huds. Rlfe, Wh. ii. a torment Qq
et cet.

340. haue we] we haue Qq.
prescription to dye] prescription, to dye Qq.

342. Oh villanous] Om. Q₁.
I haue] I ha Qq. I ha' Jen.

336. incontinently] ROLFÉ: Immediately; used by Shakespeare here only; see 'incontinent,' IV, iii, 16, in the same sense. MOREL: Le mot, employé par Montaigne et Amyot, a été introduit en anglais par les écrivains du XVI^e siècle, mais ne s'est pas imposé à l'usage.

338. Gentleman] BOOTH: Tapping him playfully on the forehead. Roderigo is a gentleman, though a silly one, not a 'stage-idiot.'

343. yeares] MALONE: From this, Iago's age may be ascertained; and it corresponds with the account in the novel on which Othello is founded, where he is described as a young, handsome man. [LE TOURNEUR having said in his translation: Jago pouvoit auoir environ quarante ans; les années qu'il compte sont celles de l'expérience, Malone replies:] that Iago meant to say he was but twenty-eight years old is clearly ascertained by his marking particularly, though indefinitely, a period within that time ['and since I could distinguish,' &c.] when he began to make observations on the characters of men. VERPLANCK: The actors who have been most celebrated in the part, from Quin to Cooke, are understood to have represented Iago as at least a middle-aged man. Yet the incident of Iago's youth seems to add much to the individuality and intensity of the character. An old soldier of acknowledged merit, who, after years of service, sees a young man like Cassio placed over his head, has not a little to plead in justification of deep resentment, and in excuse, though not in defence, of his revenge; such a man may well brood over imaginary wrongs. The caustic sarcasm and contemptuous estimate of mankind are, at least, pardonable in a soured and disappointed veteran. But in a young man the revenge is more purely gratuitous, the hypocrisy, the knowledge, and dexterous management of the worst and weakest parts of human nature, the recklessness of moral feeling,—even the stern, bitter wit, intellectual and contemptuous, without any of the gayety of youth,—are all precocious and peculiar; separating Iago from the ordinary sympathies of our nature, and investing him with higher talent and blacker guilt. COWDEN-CLARKE: It is remarkable that Shakespeare has here taken pains to specify the exact age of Iago, as he has specified that of Hamlet. They are, betwixt a Benefit, and an Iniurie : I neuer found man that [315 δ] knew how to loue himfelfe. Ere I would fay, I would 345 drowne my felfe for the loue of a Gynney Hen, I would change my Humanity with a Baboone.

Rod. What fhould I do? I confefle it is my fhame to be fo fond, but it is not in my vertue to amend it.

Iago. Vertue? A figge, 'tis in our felues that we are 350 thus, or thus. Our Bodies are our Gardens, to the which, our Wills are Gardiners. So that if we will plant Net- 352

344. betwixt] betweene Qq, Jen. Mal.
 Var. Sing. Ktly. Om. Steev.'93.

Iniurie :] iniury, QqFf.

man] a man Qq, Mal. Steev. Var.
 Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del.

346. Gynney Hen] Ginny Hen Qq.

Guinney-Hen F, Rowe+. Guinea-hen
 Johns.

348. do f] doe, Ff, Rowe.

349. in my] in Mal. Steev.'93, Var.

551. our Gardens] gardens Qq, Jen.

Coll. Wh. i, Dyce, Cam.

352. Gardiners.] Gardiners, Qq.

perhaps, the two most intellectual characters that our poet has drawn; and he has made them nearly of the same age, as if at that period of life a man's intellect were at the culminating point of activity and energy. . . . Iago is a hard, cold-blooded, almost vivacious scoundrel from inherent disposition, who uses his keen intellect with the same fierce joy in its skill and power to destroy that he uses his sharp dagger or sword. HUDSON (Introd., p. 22): Moreover Iago's youth goes far to explain the trust which others repose in him; they cannot suspect one so young of being either skilled in villainous craft or soured by hard experience of the world; while his polished manners and winning address gain him the credit of superior parts, without breeding any question of his truth.

346. Gynney Hen] STEEVENS: Anciently the cant term for a prostitute.

350. Vertue] COLERIDGE (Notes, 251): This speech comprises the passionless character of Iago. It is all will in intellect; and therefore he is here a bold partisan of a truth, but yet of a truth converted into a falsehood by the absence of all the necessary modifications caused by the frail nature of man. And then comes the last sentiment: 'Our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts, whereof I take this that you call—love to be a sect or scion!' Here is the true Iagoism of, alas! how many! Note Iago's pride of mastery in the repetition of 'Go, make money!' to his anticipated dupe, even stronger than his love of lucre; and when Roderigo is completely won—'I am chang'd. I'll go sell all my land,' when the effect has been fully produced, the repetition of triumph—'Go to; farewell; put money enough in your purse!'

351. thus, or thus] BOOTH: Qy. Point up and down, to signify good or bad?

351. our Gardens] In his first ed. WHITE considered 'our' an interpolation of the printers, due to the recurrence of the same word twice elsewhere in this clause of the sentence.

352, 353. Nettels] ELLACOMBE (p. 136): We have two native species (Urtica urens and U. dioica). 'Nettle,' etymologically, is the same word as needle, and the plant is so named not for its stinging properties, but because at one time it supplied the chief aid to sewing; not in the little familiar instrument, but in the thread, and very tels, or fowe Lettice : Set Hisope, and weede vp Time: 353 Supplie it with one gender of Hearbes, or diftract it with

353. Lettice :] Lettice, Qq. lettuce ;
 Theob.

353. Hisope] Isope Qq. Hyssop F₃. Hyf- sope F₄.
Time] thyme Pope.

good linen it made. In many parts of England the young shoots are boiled and much relished as food, and M. Soyer tried hard, but almost in vain, to introduce it as a most dainty dish. In other points the nettle is a most interesting plant. Microscopists find in it most beautiful objects; entomologists value it as a favourite of butterflies and other insects, of which in Britain alone upwards of thirty varieties feed solely on the nettle-plant, and it marks the progress of civilization by following man wherever he goes. But as a garden plant the only advice to be given is to keep it out of the garden by every means, where, if allowed, it would soon become a sad weed.

353. Lettice] ELLACOMBE (p. 106): This excellent vegetable with its Latin name came to us, probably, from the Romans. It was cultivated by the Anglo-Saxons, who, in recognition of its narcotic qualities, called it 'Sleepwort.' In Shakespeare's time the sorts cultivated were very similar to ours, and probably as good.

353. Hisope] ELLACOMBE (p. 97): The Hyssopus officinalis is not a British plant, but it was held in high esteem in Shakespeare's time. It is now very little cultivated; it has not much beauty, and its medicinal properties are not much esteemed; yet it will always have an interest to readers of the Bible, though whether or not the hyssop of Scripture is the Hyssopus offic. is still a question. It seems likely from the following passage in Lyly's Euphues, that the plants were not named at random by Iago: 'Good gardeniers, in their curious knots, mixe Hisoppe with Time, as ayders the one to the growth of the other; the one beeing drye, the other moyst' [p. 37, ed. Arber].

353. Time] ELLACOMBE (p. 233): It is one of the most curious of the curiosities of English plant names that the Wild Thyme,—a plant so common and so widely distributed, and that makes itself so easily known by its fine, aromatic, pungent scent that it is almost impossible to pass it by without notice,—has yet no English name, and never seems to have had one. Thyme is the Anglicized form of the Greek and Latin Thymum, which it probably received from its use as incense in sacrifices; while its other name, serpyllum, refers to its creeping habit. It is another curious point connected with the name that thymum does not occur in the old English vocabularies. Nor is even its Latin form found, except in the Prompt. Parv., where it is 'Tyme, herbe, Tima, timum—Tyme, flowre, Timus.' It is thus a puzzle to know how it can have got naturalized among us, for in Shakespeare's time it was completely naturalized. It is as a bee-plant especially that the thyme has always been celebrated. See Ovid's Fasti, v; Vergil, Ecl. vii. The wild thyme can be scarcely considered a garden plant, except in its variegated and golden varieties; but if it ever should come naturally in the turf, it should be welcomed and cherished for its sweet scent.

354. gender] BUCKNILL (The Medical Knowledge of Shakespeare, p. 270): This word, which with a degree of probability not more overstrained than that which attributes to Shakespeare the knowledge of Harvey's great discovery, by a literal reading would lead to the conclusion that he had anticipated Linnæus's theory of the sexes of plants. No other author I know of uses the word 'gender' in any other sense than to mark the attributes of sex; while he himself uses it in this sense in several passages: 'the numbers of the genders,' Merry Wives, IV, i, 73. But he also uses it to desig-many : either to haue it fterrill with idlenesse, or manu- 355 red with Industry, why the power, and Corrigeable au-thoritie of this lies in our Wills. If the braine of our liues had not one Scale of Reason, to poize another of Senfualitie, the blood, and basenesse of our Natures would conduct vs to most prepostrous Conclusions. But we 360 haue Reason to coole our raging Motions, our carnall Stings, or vnbitted Lufts : whereof I take this, that you call Loue, to be a Sect, or Seyen.

Rod. It cannot be,

Iago. It is meerly a Luft of the blood, and a permissiō 365 of the will. Come, be a man : drowne thy selfe? Drown

- | | |
|---|---|
| 355. to haue] haue Ff, Rowe +, Cap. nal F ₄). | 362. or] Ff. our Qq, Rowe et cet. |
| Jen. Rann. | 363. Sect] slip Han. set Johns. |
| 355, 356. manured] manur'd Qq. | Seyen] syen Qq, Rowe +. scyon |
| 357. Wills] will Rowe ii +. | Han. Cap. Steev. Mal. scien Johns. scyen |
| braine] F ₄ . Ballence Q ₃ . brain | Jen. scion Steev.'93. |
| F ₃ F ₄ . beam Theob. Cap. Rann. ballance | 365. of the blood] of blood Q ₃ . |
| Q ₂ Q ₄ . Rowe et cet. | permissiō] primissio Q ₃ . |
| 361. our carnall] or carnall Ff (car- | |

nate a kind or species, as 'the great love the general gender bear him,' Ham. IV, vii, 18. It is probable, therefore, that it is in this sense the word is used by Iago, and that Shakespeare had not necessarily any idea of the sexual physiology of plants which the great Swedish naturalist developed into a system; and thus also when he refers, in other places, to the sex of plants, that it is merely a poetical metaphor.

356. Corrigeable] For many instances of the use of adjectives in able and ible in an active sense, see WALKER, Crit., i, 183; ABBOTT, § 3; also Ham. I, i, 57; Lear, I, iv, 300. PURNELL refers to Milton's use of deceivable in both an active and a passive sense, 'what not in man Deceivable and vain,' Sams. Agon. [349]; 'blind, and thereby Deceivable,' Id. [941].

357. braine] THEOBALD rejected ballance of the Qto as 'certainly wrong,' because it is equivalent to saying, 'if the scale of our lives had not one scale,' &c.; wherefore he believed that the true word is beame, inasmuch as Shakespeare 'generally distinguishes betwixt the Beam and Balance; using the latter to signify the scales, and the former the steel bar to which they are hung and which poises them.' [Theobald's argument and the examples which he cited in support, especially one from Rich. II. III, iv, 87, where balance signifies scale and nothing else, quite converted CAPELL, who 'yerked' out the following note]: Were beam spelt as of old with an (e) final, it's corruption into the word below is very easy and natural: consider'd then as a true Folio reading, the word beam or beame merits preference that way; and if consider'd another way, as a word absolutely unequivocal, and used often by Shakespeare in the sense that belongs to it, we shall not greatly applaud the gentlemen who discard it for balance. [Theobald overlooked, I think, a notable instance where 'balance' is used for both scales and beam in Mer. of Ven. IV, i, 255: 'Are there balance here to weigh the flesh?'—ED.]

363. Sect] STEEVENS: By modern gardeners called a cutting.

Cats, and blind Puppies. I haue profest me thy Friend, 367 and I confesse me knit to thy deseruing, with Cables of perdurable toughnesse. I could neuer better steed thee then now. Put Money in thy purse: follow thou the 370 Warres, defeate thy fauour, with an vsurp'd Beard. I say put Money in thy purse. It cannot be long that Desdemona should continue her loue to the Moore. Put Money in thy purse: nor he his to her. It was a violent Commencement in her, and thou shalt see an answerable Seque- 375 stration, put but Money in thy purse. These Moores

367. haue profest] professe Qq, Coll. i.
 369. toughnesse] toughnesse Q₃.
steed] steede Q₁Q₂, stead Han.
 et seq.
 370. thou the] Ff, Knt, Dyce, Glo. Sta.
 Cam. Huds. Wh. ii. thou these Rowe +,
 Jen. Rann. these Qq et cet.
 371. defeate] disseat Warb.
vsurp'd] usurped Ff.
 372, 373. be...continue] Ff, Rowe, Knt,
 Wh. i. be, that Desdemona should long continue Qq. (be, the Q₃) et cet.
 373. to the] unto the Qq, Cap. Coll. i.
 373, 374. Moore. Put...purse: nor
Moore,—put...purse,—nor Qq et cet.
 (subs.).
 374. he his] he Q₁.
 375. in her] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Knt,
 Del. Om. Qq et cet.
Sequestration] sequestration Q₃.
 376. put but] but put F₃F₄, Rowe,
 Pope, Han.
 376, 377. purse. These...wills: fill] Ff, Rowe +. purse.—These...wills:—fill Qq et cet. (subs.).

368. deseruing] SCHMIDT (Lex, s. v.) interprets this as 'that which is due to thee, viz.: Desdemona's love;' I rather think that it has here no special reference, but refers to deserts or merits in general, quite equivalent to worthiness as used by Shakespeare elsewhere.—ED.

369. perdurable] Simply durable with the Latin prefix per-, equivalent to thorough, thorough.—ED.

371. defeate] MALONE: Florio, A Worlde of Wordes, 1598, gives Disfare, to vndoe, to spoils, to waste, to marre, to vnmake, to defeate. [Cotgrave, Desfaire. To vndoe, breake, defeat.]

371. faouour] HENLEY: It here means that combination of features which gives the face its distinguishing character. WRIGHT (Bible Word-Book): From Fr. faveur; it is the rendering of a word meaning 'face, countenance, or appearance,' in which sense it constantly occurs in old writers, and is retained in the adjectives ill-favoured, well-favoured.

375, 376. Sequestration] JOHNSON: There seems to be an opposition of terms here intended, which has been lost in transcription. We may read, 'It was a violent conjunction, and thou,' &c.; or, what seems to me preferable, 'It was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an answerable sequel.' STEEVENS: I believe 'sequestration' is here used for sequel. Shakespeare might conclude that it was immediately derived from sequor; it may, however, mean no more than separation. We have 'a sequestor from liberty,' III, iv, 48. MALONE: Surely 'sequestration' was used in the sense of separation only, or, in modern language, of parting. It is explained in Bullokar [Expositor]: a putting apart. DYCE (Gloss.): No doubt it means separation.

are changeable in their wils : fill thy purfe with Money. 377
 The Food that to him now is as lufhious as Locuftis, fhallbe to him fhortly, as bitter as Coloquintida. She muft change for youth : when fhe is fated with his body 380 fhe will find the errors of her choice. Therefore, put Money in thy purfe. If thou wilt needs damne thy felfe, do it a more delicate way then drowning. Make all the Money thou canft : If Sanctimonie, and a fraile vow, be- 384

378. Locuftis] Locuft Q₃. loches Warb. lohocks Johns.

379. fhallbe...fhortly] fhall to him fhort- ly bee Ff, Rowe. shall fhortly be Pope +.
as bitter as] as acerbe as the Q₁.
as bitter as a Warb. Johns.

379, 380. She...youth] Om. Q₁, Theob.
 Warb. Johns.

381. errors] Ff, Rowe +, Knt. error
 Qq et cet.

choyce. Therefore] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Cap. Knt. choyce: fhee muft haue change, fhe muft. Therefore Qq et cet.

378. Locusts] WARBURTON: Whether you understand by this the insect or the fruit, it cannot be given as an instance of a delicious morsel, notwithstanding the exaggerations of lying travellers. The true reading is loches, a very pleasant confection introduced into medicine by the Arabian physicians; and so very fitly opposed both to the bitterness and use of Coloquintida. [Warburton's 'very pleasant confection' becomes a 'sirop très-doux' in Le Tourneur's translation, which he poetically converts in his text into 'la manne des roseaux.'—ED.] BEISLY (p. 163): These 'locusts' are the fruit of the Carob tree (Siliquea dulcis). Gerarde in his Herball says: 'The carob groweth in Apulia, a province of Naples, and other countries eastward, where the cods are so full of sweet juice that it is used to preserve ginger. It groweth also in sundry places in Palestine, where there is such plenty of it that it is left unto swine and other wild beasts to feed on. Moreover, both young and old feed thereon for pleasure, and some have eaten thereof to supply and keep the necessary nutriment of their bodies. This is of some called St. John's bread, and thought to be that which is translated locusts whereon St. John did feed when he was in the wilderness. The fruit or cod is called Siliquea dulcis.' ELLACOMBE (p. 113) says it is the fruit of 'the Ceratonia siliqua, a native of Southern Europe and the Levant. Its fruit contains a sweet pulp, and in Spain and elsewhere it is fed to cattle. The Carob was cultivated in England before Shakespeare's time. Its name survives in the carat of the jewellers, who in trading in the East used the Carob beans for weighing small objects. Though the Carob tree did not produce the locusts on which St. John fed, there is little doubt that the "husks which the swine did eat," and the prodigal son longed for, were the produce of the Carob tree.'

379. Coloquintida] REED: This, says Bullein (Butwarke of Defence, 1579), 'is most bitter, white like a baule, full of seedes, leaves like to cucummers, hoat in the second, dry in the third degree.' He then gives directions for the application of it, and concludes, 'and thus do I end of coloquyntida, which is most bitter and must be taken with discretion.'

381. PURNELL: The repeated reference to 'money' is equivalent to 'This is your game. But you must be prepared to pay for it.'

383. delicate way] DELIUS: That is, by adultery with Desdemona.

twixt an erring Barbarian, and super-futtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits, and all the Tribe of hell, thou shalt enioy her : therefore make Money : a pox of drowning thy selfe, it is cleane out of the way. Seeke thou rather to be hang'd in Compassing thy ioy, then to be drown'd, and go without her.

390

Rodo. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue ?

Iago. Thou art fure of me: Go make Money : I haue told thee often, and I re-tell thee againe, and againe, I hate the Moore. My cause is hearted; thine hath no lesse reason. Let vs be coniunctiue in our reuenge, against him. If thou canst Cuckold him, thou dost thy selfe a pleasure, me a sport. There are many Euent in the Wombe of Time, which wilbe deliuered. Trauerse go,

399

385. erring] arrant Han. errant
Warb.

and] Ff, Knt. and a Qq, Pope
et cet.

super-futtle] super-supple Coll.
(MS).

387. Money : a] money,—a Qq.

387, 388. of drowning thy selfe] a drowning Qq. of drowning Jen.

388. it is] tis Qq, Jen.

390. drown'd] drowned Qq.

391, 392. if...issue] Om. Q.

393. me : Go...Money : I] me—goe...
Money—I Qq.

haue] had Wh. ii (misprint ?)

394. re-tell] tell Qq.

thee] the Q.

395. hath] has Qq.

396. coniunctiue] communicatiue Q.

397. Cuckold] cuckole Q.

398. me] and me Q, Q, Theob. Warb.

Johns. Jen. Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. Sing.

Ktly.

399. Trauerse] Trauerce Q.

385. erring] WARBURTON: We should read errant, that is, a vagabond, one that has no house nor country. STEEVENS: So in Ham. I, i, 154, 'Th' extravagant and erring spirit.' MALONE: Perhaps he means a rover from Barbary. M. MASON: 'Erring' is explained by 'extravagant and wheeling stranger,' I, i, 149. RITSON (p. 229): Here is a collection of quibbles. By an 'erring Barbarian' is meant not only a roving Moor, but a shallow, blundering brute; and this character is set in opposition to that of a supersubtle Venetian woman. The vow, he concluded, must needs be frail that was made between two such unnatural extremes as brutal folly and the most refined female cunning. WHITE (ed. ii) considers Hanmer's text 'plausible.'

389. hang'd] See Cotgrave, s. v. Couillatris.—ED.

399. Trauerse] STEEVENS, who has, I think, been uniformly followed, says this is an 'ancient military word of command,' and cites in proof, from a Hen. IV: III, ii, 291, Falstaff's command to Wart after a caliver has been put in Wart's hand, 'Hold, Wart, traaverse,' which is clearly the ordinary fencing or musket-drill phrase, and is scarcely parallel with the present passage. MALONE cites BULLOKAR (Eng. Exp., s. v.): 'Trauerse. To march vp and downe, or to moue the feete with proportion as in dancing,' which seems somewhat more appropriate here, but is not altogether satisfactory. L. Booth's Reprint gives a comma after 'Trauerse.'—ED.

prouide thy Money. We will haue more of this to morrow. Adieu. 400

Rod. Where shall we meete i'th'morning?

Iago. At my Lodging.

Rod. Ile be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go too, farewell. Do you heare Roderigo? 405

Rod. Ile sell all my Land. Exit.

Iago. Thus do I euer make my Foole, my purfe :
For I mine owne gain'd knowledge should prophane
I fi would time expend with such Snpe, 409
But for my Sport, and Profit : I hate the Moore, [316 a]
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets
She ha's done my Office. I know not if't be true,
But I, for meere fuspition in that kinde,
Will do, as if for Surety. He holds me well, 414

401. Adieu] Adieu Q.

405. Do...Roderigo?] Om. Cap.

heare] here F₃F₄.

405-407. Roderigo?... Thus] Ff, Rowe, Pope. Roderigo? Rod. what say you? Iag. No more of drowning, doe you heare? Rod. I am chang'd. Exit Roderigo. Iag. Goe to, farewell, put money enough in your purse: Thus Q₂; followed subs. (except that after chang'd they add merely Ile goe sell all my land. Exit Roderigo. Iag. Thus) Q₂Q₃, Rann, Dyce, Glo. Cam. Rife, Wh. ii. Q₂ is also followed (including Ile... land from Q₂) by Theob. Warb. Johns. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt. Coll. Sing. Wh.

i, Ktly, Sta. Del. Huds. Roderigo? No more drowning. Rod. I'll sell all my land. Iago. Thus Han.

406. Ile sell] Ile goe sell Q₂Q₃, Theob. Warb. Johns. Jen. Rann, Dyce, Glo. Sta. Cam. Wh. ii.

Exit.] Exit Roderigo. Qq.

Scene XI. Pope +, Jen.

408. would] should Q₂, Pope +, Jen.

409. Snpe] a snipe Qq. a Swaine F₃, a Swain F₃F₄, Rowe, Pope, Han.

412. She ha's] Ha's Qq. He ha's F₃, 'Has Dyce iii. He has F₃F₄ et cet.

true,] true—Qq. true; Johns.

413. But I] Yet I Qq, Jen. Coll. Del.

409. would] See ABBOTT, § 331, for passages where 'would' is not used for should. Here 'would' is equivalent, says Abbott, to 'If I were willing to expend,' &c., and should would take from the sense.

409. Snpe] STEEVENS: Woodcock is the term generally used by Shakespeare to denote an insignificant fellow; but Iago is more sarcastic, and compares his dupe to a smaller and meaner bird. HALLIWELL cites Cotgrave: 'a snipe-knave, so called because two of them are worth but one snipe.'

410. COLERIDGE (p. 251): Iago's soliloquy—the motive-hunting of a motiveless malignity—how awful it is! Yea, whilst he is still allowed to bear the divine image, it is too fiendish for his own steady view,—for the lonely gaze of a being next to devil and only not quite devil,—and yet a character which Shakespeare has attempted and executed, without disgust and without scandal! FECHTER: Roderigo runs out at the door at back. Iago, who has followed him so far, and, leaning against the door-post, watches him as he goes; then breaks out into a loud laugh.

414, 415. HERRAUD (p. 268): Iago is the really jealous person, and suspecting

The better shall my purpose worke on him : 415
Caffio's a proper man : Let me see now,
 To get his Place, and to plume vp my will
 In double Knauery. How? How? Let's see.
 After some time, to abuse Othello's eares,
 That he is too familiar with his wife : 420
 He hath a person, and a smooth dispose

- | | |
|---|---|
| 417. his] this QqFf, Rowe, Pope.
to plume] to make Q ₂ . plume F ₃ F ₄ . | 418. Let's] let me Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal.
Var. Sing. Ktly. |
| 418. In] A Qq, Pope+, Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Sta. | 419. cares] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. care
Qq et cct. |
| Knauery...see] knauery—how ,
how,—let me see Qq. | 420. his] my Q ₃ .
421. hath] has Qq. |

Othello with his own wife hates him accordingly, and determines on revenge. SNIDER (vol. i, p. 100): The true motive for Iago's hate is given here in this and in his succeeding soliloquies, since he would not be likely to announce his own shame or herald his self-degrading suspicions. He considers that Othello has destroyed the chastity of his wife. . . . It is often taken for granted that his suspicions are wholly groundless,—in fact, that he does not believe them himself. [In the Appendix will be found Snider's theory that Othello's guilt in this regard is one of the hinges of the tragedy.—ED.] But that Iago is sincere in his belief cannot be consistently questioned. . . . With this interpretation there is a motive quite adequate for the subsequent vindictive conduct of Iago; otherwise, he is an unnatural character,—a monstrosity. His slight in regard to promotion would doubtless excite his enmity, but not an enmity sufficient to involve Desdemona in destruction, or even Othello. To inflict worse than death upon a man because he did not advance a subordinate when he could have done so is altogether disproportionate to the offence, but to cause his wife to perish also is merely horrible. Thus Iago is a monster, a wild beast, and needs no motive at all,—not even neglect of promotion,—to bring on a rabid fit of cruelty. And what then becomes of the artistic merit and beauty of this drama? . . . The second motive is therefore the true one, and at the same time is adequate. The family of Iago has been ruined by Othello; now Iago, in his turn, will ruin the family of the destroyer of his domestic life. Hence Desdemona is included in his retaliation. He thus requites the Moor with like for like. His conduct is logical, and his revenge only equals the offence. But there is absolutely no proportion between motive and deed if he involved Othello's family in destruction merely because the latter would not promote him.

414. Surety] M. MASON: That is, 'I will act as if I were certain of the fact.'

414. holds] REED: That is, 'esteems me.' So in Matt. xxi, 26: 'All hold John as a prophet.'

416. proper] BOOTH: Not only handsome, but a refined and dignified gentleman; so 'proper' that his conduct when tipsy is the more surprising.

417. plume vp] COWDEN-CLARKE: As if any project that involved reduplication of knavery were a feather in the cap of his depraved will, a thing to plume himself upon as a feat of intellectual volition.

421. dispose] KEIGHTLEY (Expositor, p. 301): I do not see clearly the sense of 'dispose' here; perhaps we should read discourse. ABBOTT, § 451, cites this in a list

To be suspected : fram'd to make women false. 422
 The Moore is of a free, and open Nature,
 That thinkes men honest, that but seeme to be so,
 And will as tenderly be lead by'th'Nose 425
 As Asses are :
 I haue't : it is engendred : Hell, and Night,
 Must bring this monstrous Birth, to the worlds light. 428

423. is...Nature] a free and open nature too, Q₁.

424. seeme] seemes Q₂Q₃. seems Q₅.

425, 426. One line, Qq.

425. lead] led QqF₃F₄.

425. by'th' Nose] bit'h nose—Q₁. bit'h nose—Q₂Q₃.

427. haue't] ha't Qq.

engendred] ingender'd Q₂Q₃. ingender'd Q₅.

[Exit. Qq.]

of words used by Shakespeare as nouns, to which we should append -ation or -ition, -ure or -ing. [See also 'every gale and vary,' Lear, II, ii, 74.]

427. Night] WARBURTON changed this to spite, 'i. e. love of mischief and love of revenge,' an emendation which HEATH (p. 559) properly called 'insipid,' and interpreted the original as meaning 'Hellish practices working in impenetrable darkness.'

428. FECHTER's Iago, while meditating revenge, 'sits on the angle of the table,' 'leaning his forehead on his hands, his face hidden,' but at 'How? how? Let's see,' he 'slowly raises his head and shows his face, which gradually brightens with a diabolical smile.' At the last word of the scene he 'breaks into a savage, ringing laugh, stops suddenly, turning quickly round, and looking on all sides, in fear that he has been overheard.' BOOTH says: Be not too flippant with Roderigo, nor too eager to show the audience your villainy. Change your manner at Roderigo's exit from 'bonhomie' to seriousness.

428. 'Menar per il naso, to leade by the nose, to make a foole of one.' Florio, A Worlde of Wordes, 1598—New Sh. Soc.

428. W. N. (Memorials of Sh., p. 356): Shakespeare has shown great judgement in the darkness which he makes to prevail in the first counsels of Iago. To the poet himself all the succeeding events must have been clear and determined; but to bring himself again into the situation of one who sees them in embryo, to draw a mist over that which he had already cleared, must have required an exertion of genius peculiar to this author alone. In so lively a manner does he make Iago show his perplexity about the future management of his conduct, that one is almost tempted to think that the poet had determined as little himself about some of the particulars of Iago's destruct c.n.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Montano, and two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the Cape, can you discern at Sea?

1. Gent. Nothing at all, it is a high wrought Flood:

I cannot 'twixt the Heauen, and the Maine, 5
Defcry a Saile.

Mon. Me thinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at Land,
A fuller blast ne're shooke our Battlements:
If it hath ruffiand so vpon the Sea, 9

1. Actus...] Actus 2. Scena 1. Qq.
The Capital City of Cyprus. Rowe. A plat-form. Cap. A Sea-port town in Cyprus. A Platform. Mal. ...An open place near the quay. Glo.

2. Enter...] Enter Montanio, Gouvernor of Cypres, with two other Gentlemen. Qq (Cyprus Q₂Q₃). Enter Montano, and Gentlemen. Ff.

4. high wrought] high-wrought F₁,
Pope et seq.

5. Heauen] hauen Q₂, Mal. Var. heav'n
Rowe ii, Pope, Han.

7. hath spoke] does speake Q₂Q₃. doth speake Q₅.

Land] hand Q₃.

9. hath] ha Qq.

RYMER: For the Second Act, our Poet having dispatcht his affairs at Venice shews the Action next (I know not how many leagues off) in the Island of Cyprus. The Audience must be there too; And yet our Bays had it never in his head to make any provision of Transport Ships for them. In the days that the Old Testament was Acted in Clerkenwell by the Parish Clerks of London, the Israelites might pass through the Red Sea; but alas, at this time we have no Moses to bid the Waters make way, and to Usher us along. Well, the absurdities of this kind break no Bones. They may make Fools of us, but do not hurt our Morals. FECHTER: Cyprus: A Platform before the Town looking upon the Harbour. At the back of the Scene a large Arcade. Gate on the right. Left corner a Capstan, around it bales of merchandise. In the distance a storm which is gradually abating. BOOTH: Famagusta, a fortified seaport Town in the island of Cyprus. Castle on Platform R. Sea-view C. Stone seat C. Platform and Steps at back. Arch L. The Scene is a front of the Castle at Sunset. Cassio, Montano, and several gentlemen discovered. [For the notes of Malone, Reed, and others on the locality, see Appendix, 'Date of the Action.']

3. COLERIDGE (Notes, 253): Observe in how many ways Othello is made, first, our acquaintance, then our friend, then the object of our anxiety, before the deeper interest is to be approached!

5. Heauen] MALONE is the only editor who prefers the hauen of Q₁; we should not have had his note in defence of it had he not read in Knolles's History of the Turks, 1570, that there was a 'hauen' of Famagusta, which was defended from the main by two great rocks' forty paces apart.

What ribbes of Oake, when Mountaines melt on them, 10
Can hold the Morties. What shall we heare of this?

2 A Segregation of the Turkish Fleet :

For do but stand vpon the Foaming Shore,
The chidden Billow feemes to pelt the Clouds, 14

10. Mountaines...them,] the huge mountaine mes lt, Q₂. mountaine...them, Q₂. Mountains...them F₃F₄. the huge mountains melt Pope, Rann. the huge mountain melts Jen.

11. Morties.] Ff, Rowe. morties,—Qq. morties ? Pope, Theob. i. mortise ? or mor- tice ? Theob. ii et cet.

12. 2] 2 Gent. Qq.

13. Foaming] banning Q₂.

14. chidden] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Coll. Dyce
i, Wh. Glo. Sta. Cam. Del. Rife. chiding
Qq et cet.

Billow] billowes Q₂Q₃, Pope+, Jen. feemes] seem Q₂, Pope+, Jen.

10. Mountaines] In adopting the Qq, POPE evidently supposed that 'mountains' here referred, not to water but, to land; THEOBALD showed that Shakespeare refers to 'hills of seas' in this very Scene, line 215, and 'liquid mountains' in Tro. & Cress., and that he had abundance of classical authority for the simile, in Homer, and Vergil, and Ovid; and that therefore 'mountains' here refers to waves. Despite this clear exposition, JENNENS, the sturdy follower of Q₂, thinks that 'the sense seems to require' either Pope's text or his own, both founded on the Qto. In the mes lt of Q₂ he sees, correctly, a typographical error for melts, and thus interprets the passage: 'If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea as here at land, where the huge mountain melts away before the storm, what ribs of oak can hold the mortise? Theobald did not consider the impropriety of waves melting; clouds have been said to melt indeed, but never waves that I remember. I don't doubt that Shakespeare had the following passage of Scripture in his eye, "The mountains melt at the presence of the Lord," &c.'

12. Segregation] DYCE (Gloss.): A separation, or dispersion. WHITE (ed. ii): The opposite of congregation; an extraordinary use of the word.

13. Foaming] STEEVENS: The Qto offers the bolder image, i. e. the shore that execrates the ravage of the waves. DELIUS: Even if banning were erased by Shakespeare and 'foaming' substituted, the former justifies 'chidden' rather than chiding.

14. chidden] KNIGHT: How weak is the chiding billow pelting the clouds! but the billow 'chidden' by the blast is full of beauty. [Both DYCE and SCHMIDT give to this word in this passage the meaning of 'to sound, to resound, to echo' and 'to be noisy about,' and they refer in support to the Qto. But this definition contains, it seems to me, but a small share of the full definition of 'chidden.' I have searched in vain for a passage in Shakespeare where 'to chide' has the meaning to sound, and that meaning alone; in every instance there is, it seems to me, the essential idea of scolding, brawling, contention in all degrees, from 'chiding as loud as thunder' to 'the sweet chiding of well-tuned sounds.' The 'gallant chiding' which Hippolyta (Mid. N. D. IV, i, 120) heard when Hercules and Cadmus bayed the bear in a wood in Crete, applies, I think, to the hunters scolding, urging on, the hounds; which Hippolyta afterward calls a 'musical discord;' the 'discord' was the brawling of the hunters, the hounds, their followers, and the bear; the 'music' was the softened echoes of it all from 'the skies, the fountains, every region near.' The essential idea of 'chiding' is there not merely 'sound.' The 'chiding nativity' of Marina (Per. III, i, 32) was the rude, brawling welcome to the world given to her by the contest of 'fire, air, water earth, and Heaven.'—ED.]

The winde-fhak'd-Surge, with high & monst'rous Maine 15
Seemes to cast water on the burning Beare,
And quench the Guards of th'euer-fixed Pole: 17

15. winde-fhak'd-Surge] F₁F₂. winde fhak'd surge Qq. wind-fhak'd Surge F₃F₄ et cet. F₄, Rowe+, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. mane Knt et cet.
17. euer-fixed] euer fixed Qq, Pope+, Jen. ever fixed F₄, Rowe, Johns.
Maine] F₂. mayne Qq. Main F₃

15. Maine] To KNIGHT belongs the credit of giving the modern spelling and interpretation of this word; his note is: What is 'high and monstrous main'? We use the word main elliptically; for the main sea, the great sea, as Shakespeare uses it, in 'twixt the heaven and the main.' The main is the ocean. Substitute that word, and what can we make of the passage before us? 'the wind-shak'd surge with high and monstrous ocean.' But adopt the word mane, and it appears to us we have as fine an image as any in Shakespeare. It is more striking even than the passage in Hen. IV.: '—the winds, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads.' In the high and monstrous mane we have a picture which was probably suggested by the noble passage in Job: 'Hast thou given the horse strength? Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?' One of the biblical commentators upon this passage remarks, that Homer and Vergil mention the mane of the horse; but that the sacred author, by the bold figure of thunder, expresses the shaking of the mane, and the flakes of hair which suggest the idea of lightning. The horse of Job is the war-horse, 'who swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage;' and when Shakespeare pictured to himself his mane wildly streaming, 'when the quiver rattleth against him, the glittering spear and the shield,' he saw an image of the fury of the 'wind-shak'd surge,' and of its very form; and he painted it with 'high and monstrous mane.'

17. Guards] JOHNSON: Alluding to the star Arctophylax. STEEVENS: I wonder that none of the advocates of Shakespeare's learning have observed that Arctophylax literally signifies 'the guard of the Bear.' J. F. MARSH (N. & Qu., 1877, 5th, viii, 83): Both Johnson and Steevens are in error; and Shakespeare knew better than his commentators what he was talking about when he spoke of the guards of the pole, and not of the guard of the Bear. Arctophylax is not a synonym for the star Arcturus, but for the constellation Boötes; and the Bear, of which he is the guard, or rather keeper, is not the Little Bear, of which Polaris is the lucida, but the Great Bear, as will be evident in the most cursory glance at a celestial globe. Arctophylax, whether it mean the star or the constellation, has no connection with the Polar guards. They are the two stars β and γ Ursæ Minoris, on the shoulder and foreleg of the Little Bear, as usually depicted, or sometimes on the ear and shoulder. They were more observed in Shakespeare's time than now for the purposes of navigation. Norman's Safeguard of Sailors, 1587, has a chapter, 'Howe to knowe the houre of the night by the Guards,' &c. They were even made the subject of mechanical contrivances for facilitating calculation, one of which is described in The Arte of Navigation, trans. by Richard Eden from the Spanish of Martin Curtis (or Cortez), 1561, consisting of fixed and movable concentric circles with holes, through which to observe 'the two starres called the Guardians, or the mouth of the horne.' Further details will be found in Admiral Smyth's Cycle of Celestial Objects, ii, 331, where is also cited Tap's Seaman's Grammar, 1609, 'containing still more upon the Guards;' and Hood's Use of the Celestial Globe, 1590, deriving the name 'from the Spanish word guardare, which is to beholde,

I neuer did like mollestation view 18
 On the enchafed Flood.
Men. If that the Turkish Fleete 20
 Be not enfhelter'd, and embay'd, they are drown'd,
 It is impossible to beare it out.

Enter a Gentleman.

3 Newes Laddes : our warres are done :
 The deſperate Tempeſt hath ſo bang'd the Turkes, 25
 That their deſignement halts. A Noble ſhip of Venice,
 Hath ſeene a greeuous wracke and ſufferance 27

19. On the enchafed] On the inchaſed
 Qq. On'th'enchaf'd Han. On th'en- chaf'd Steev.'93.

20. that the] that be the F.
 21. enfhelter'd] inſhelter'd QqFf, Rowe+, Cap. Jen. Coll. Wh.
embay'd] embayed Qq.
they are] they're Pope+, Jen. Sta.
 Dyce iii, Huds.

22. to beare] Ff, Q₂Q₃, Rowe+, Knt, Coll. Sing. Dyce i, Wh. i, Cam. Del. they beare Q₁ et cet.

[Scene II. Pope+, Jen.

23. Enter...] Enter a third Gentleman.
 Qq.

24 and throughout. 3.] 3 Gent. Qq.
Laddes:] F₂, Lords, Q₂, Pope+,
 Jen. Lords! Steev. Mal. Var. Rann. Lads, or Lads: Q₂Q₃F₃F₄, Rowe, Johns. et cet.
our] your Qq.

25. Turkes] Turke Qq.

26. Two lines, Q₂Q₃.

26, 27. That...ſcene] One line, Q₂.

26. A Noble] Another Q₂, Pope. A
 Han.

27. wracke] QqFf, Rowe, Pope, Knt,
 Sing. Del. wreck Theob. ii et cet.

because they are diligently to be looked unto, in regard of the singular use which they have in navigation.' Shakespeare probably meant to include in the Guards all the three stars [i. e. β and γ Ursæ Minoris, and Polaris] required for the observations above noticed. Otherwise in describing a tempest which seemed to cast water on one constellation, and quench two of the principal stars of another, he could scarcely have avoided mentioning the third star, the brightest and most important of the three.

19. enchafed] There is an unusual number, in this Scene, of words with the prefix en: enſhelter'd, embay'd, enſteep'd, enclogge, enwheele. In Scene iii, enſetter'd, enmesh; in IV, i, encave. For this usage elsewhere, see ABBOTT, § 440.

22. to beare] For those who prefer they bear of Q₂, ABBOTT, § 368, explains that it is probably a subjunctive, and 'that' is omitted.

27. wracke] HUNTER (Disq. on The Tempest, p. 134) condemns the substitution of the modern spelling in this word as a loss in melody in the lines he cites from The Tempest, and implies that we should throughout the plays retain the old word. 'These are but niceties (he says), but poetry is a luxury, and should therefore be as refined and perfect as possible.' 'The reason for the substitution is evident. "Wrack" has in a great measure gone out of use, though we still use the familiar phrase "wrack and ruin." But "wrack" continued in use long after Shakespeare, and cannot have been, by any means, extinct in the days of Rowe.' [For four instances from V. & A., R. of L., and the Sonn., where the rhyme will not permit the substitution of wreck, see Mrs Furness's Concordance, s. v.—ED.]

On most part of their Fleet.

28

Mon. How? Is this true?

3 The Ship is heere put in: A Verenneffa, Michael Cassio 30

- | | |
|---|--|
| 28. On] Of Johns.
 their] the Q, Q₂, Pope ii, Theob.
 Warb. Johns.
 30. Two lines, Qq, Pope et seq.
 is heere] is F, Rowe.
 in: A Verenneffa,] in: A Veronneffa,
 Qq, Sta. in: A Veronneffo, Ff, Rowe, Pope.
 in, A Veronessa; Theob. Warb. Jen. Knt, | Sing. Dyce i, Del. in: A Veronessa; Han.
 in, A Veronese; Johns. Cap. Steev.'85. in,
 A Veronest: Mal. Rann, Steev.'93, Var.
 Coll. iii. in: A Veronest, Coll. i, Wh. i,
 in: A Florentine, Coll. (MS). in, A
 Veronesa; Glo. Cam. Dyce iii. in. A
 Veronest, Ktly. in: A Veronese, Rlfé,
 Wh. ii. |
|---|--|

28. most] For many other instances of the omission of the, see ABBOTT, § 89.

30. Verenneffa] THEOBALD, by simply altering the punctuation, was the first to make this refer to the ship and not to Cassio, 'who was no Veronese,' says Theobald in his ed. i; 'but we find from other passages in the play he was of Rome' (withdrawn in ed. ii). 'The vessel properly belonged to Verona, but was in the service of Venice.' HEATH: Shakespeare had no ship in his thoughts, but intended to inform us that Cassio was of Verona, an inland city of the Venetian State. The word Veronese should be pronounced after the Italian manner as a quadrisyllable. T. WARTON: It was common to introduce Italian words, and in their proper pronunciation then familiar; see Faerie Queene, III, xii, 90: 'And sleeues dependant Albanese-wyse.' The ship was a Veronesté, just as we now say a Hamburger. Cassio was a Florentine. In this speech the Third Gentleman, who brings the news of the wreck of the Turkish fleet, returns to the tale, and tells the circumstances more distinctly. In his former speech he speaks of 'a noble ship of Venice,' and now he adds: 'The very ship is just now put into port, and she is a Veronesté.' That is, a ship fitted out or furnished by the people of Verona, a city of the Venetian State. STEEVENS: I believe we are all wrong. Verona is an inland city. Every inconsistency may, however, be avoided if we read The Veronessa, i. e. the name of the ship is the Veronessa. [While all the critics thus far had stated that Verona was tributary to Venice, yet, having cited no authority, they had apparently drawn the fact from the depths of their consciousness; it was reserved for MALONE to justify the assertion in a note, which is the only one from the mass that DYCE quotes, as follows:] 'Besides many other towns (says Contareno), castles, and villages, they [the Venetians] possess seven faire cities; as Trevigi, Padoua, Vicenza, Verona, Brescia, Bergamo, and Crema.'—Commonwealth of Venice, 1599. KNIGHT retains the Veronessa, because 'as a feminine it is applicable to a ship.' COLLIER: The Third Gentleman has already said that the ship was 'of Venice,' and it is not likely that he would assert just afterwards that she was a 'Veronesté;' it seems much more probable that he would by mistake call Cassio, whom he did not know, a 'Veronesté.' SINGER: Whether a Veronessa signified a ship fitted out by Verona, or designated some particular kind of vessel, is not yet fully established. But as it has not hitherto been met with elsewhere, the former is most probably the true explanation. WHITE (ed. i): There is difficulty in either reading; but of the two errors, one of which it is necessary to suppose on Shakespeare's part, a momentary forgetfulness appears the more probable. KEIGHTLEY (Exp., 301): Another instance of the poet's negligence or forgetfulness. . . . Though the metre is perfect, it might be better to insert nam'd or one. It is not likely that the ship was called 'the Veronessa.' DANIEL (p. 78): Read: 'The ship is here put in, | "La Veronesa:" Michael Cassio, |

Lieutenant to the warlike Moore, Othello, 31
Is come on Shore . the Moore himfelfe at Sea,
And is in full Commiffion heere for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't:

'Tis a worthy Gouvernour. 35

3 But this fame Caffio, though he speake of comfort,
Touching the Turkish losse, yet he lookes fadly,
And praye the Moore be fafe ; for they were parted
With fowle and violent Tempest.

Mon. Pray Heauens he be :

For I haue feru'd him, and the man commands 40 [316 δ]

- | | |
|--|--|
| 31. Lieutenant] Leutenant Q ₁ Q ₂ .
to] of F ₁ , Rowe+. | 33. heere] bound Daniel. |
| 32. on Shore] ashore Q ₁ . a shore Q ₂ Q ₃ .
Moore] Moor's Dyce conj. | 34, 35. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq. |
| himfelfe] QqFf, Dyce, Glo. Sta.
Cam. Del. Rlf, Wh. ii. himself's Rowe et cet. | 34. I am] I'm Pope+, Dyce iii, Huds.
38. praye] prayer QqF ₁ F ₂ . prays F ₄
et cet. |
| | 40. Heauens] Heaven Qq, Cap. Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Ktly. |

Lieutenant,' &c. HUDSON adopts Daniel's suggestion. ROLFE agrees with White that the confusion is perhaps due to a momentary forgetfulness on Shakespeare's part. TH. ELZE (Sh. Jahrbuch, xiv, 176): The word is clearly corrupt, but F₂ puts us on the right track. Let the true word be 'verrinessa,' and the changes, due to editorial lack of knowledge, through 'verennessa' and 'Veronessa' to 'Veronese' are easily understood. Now although I cannot at the moment give an Italian authority for the noun 'verinessa,' yet there is the word 'verrina' and the verb 'verrinare,' which is an old nautical term and still in use, equivalent in meaning to tenebrare, perforare, traforare, that is, to 'cut through,' to 'cleave,' like the French percer. Wherefore the 'noble ship of Venice' was a verrinessa, 'un perceflot.' [Is not this the exact equivalent of the nautical term 'cutter'? If only an instance of the use of the Italian word could be produced, this vexed question would be settled for ever. As it is, Th. Elze's explanation seems far more satisfactory than any other; but if a supersubtle compositor forces us to choose between a lack of memory on Shakespeare's part and a lack of geographical information, I prefer the latter. The nationality of a chance ship, mentioned once and never again, is of less moment than the nationality of an important character; the same wind that can blow a ship to Aleppo can waft one from Verona. Furthermore, how in the wild excitement of the moment could the Third Gentleman find out from what city of Italy Cassio came? That he was the lieutenant to the warlike Moor might be revealed at a glance by some distinctive decoration of his dress, such as the scarf of company, which always bore the Captain's colours.—ED.]

33. heere for Cyprus] Unless this means 'for Cyprus, here,' it is not easy to explain it. Daniel's emendation perfects the sense, but the ductus literarum is against it.—ED.

34. JOHN HUNTER: Montano would be well pleased to resign the post in a time of so great peril to such a man as Othello, under whom he had served.

34. on't] See ABBOTT, § 181.

Like a full Soldier. Let's to the Sea-side (hoa) 42
 As well to see the Veffell that's come in,
 As to throw-out our eyes for braue Othello,
 Euen till we make the Maine, and th'Eriall blew, 45
 An indistinct regard.

Gent. Come, let's do so;
 For euery Minute is expectancie
 Of more Arriuanacie.

Enter Caffio. 50

Caffio. Thankes you, the valiant of the warlike Isle,
 That so approoue the Moore : Oh let the Heauens
 Giue him defence against the Elements,
 For I haue loft him on a dangerous Sea.

Mon. Is he well ship'd? 55

Caffio. His Barke is stoutly Timber'd, and his Pylot
 Of verie expert, and approu'd Allowance; 57

- | | |
|---|---|
| 42. Two lines, Qq. | Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. iii. Thankes you |
| hoa] ho Qq. Om. Pope+. | Ktly. Thanks, you Knt et cet. |
| 44. throw-out] F ₄ . throw out QqF ₃ F ₄ | 51. the] Ff, Knt, Coll. iii. this Qq et |
| et cet. | cet. |
| 45, 46. Om. Q ₁ . | wartlike] worthy Q ₂ , Jen. Rann. |
| th'Eriall blew] F ₃ F ₄ . th'Ayre all | Om. Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| blue Q ₂ Q ₃ . th'Eriall blue F ₄ , Rowe. th' | 52. Moore: Oh let] Moore, and let Qq. |
| or the aerial blue Pope et cet. | Moor! O, let Knt. |
| 46. Aw] And FfQ ₂ . | 53. against] from F ₄ . |
| 47. Gent.] 3 Gent. Qq. | the] their Qq. |
| 49. more] our F ₄ . | 54. a] the Q ₃ . |
| Arriuanacie] Arriuanacy Ff, Knt. | 56. his] is Q' ⁸¹ . |
| arriuanace Qq et cet. | Pylot] Pilate Q ₁ . Pilote Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| Scene III. Pope+, Jen. | Pilot F ₃ F ₄ . |
| 51. Thankes you,] Ff, Rowe, Coll. i, | 57. Of...and] Very expert, and of |
| Dyce, Wh. i. Thankes to Qq, Pope+, Cap. | Johns. conj. |

44. to throw] A typographical error, in the omission of 'to,' begun in Reed's Var. of 1803, was continued in the Var. of 1813, of 1821, and in Singer's ed. i. The line thus mutilated, and almost painfully prosaic, was accepted as complete by GUEST (i, 239), and thus bravely scanned: 'As | throw out | our eyes | : for brave | Othel | lo.' ED.

49. Arriuanacie] DYCE: A manifest error caught from the 'expectancie' of the preceding line. COWDEN-CLARKE: There is a marked prevalence of words ending in ce in this play.

57. expert, and approu'd Allowance] STEEVENS: This is put for 'allow'd and approv'd expertness.' [For a list of similar expressions where the relations of adjectives and their nouns seem inverted, like 'paly ashes,' 'shady stealth,' &c. see the excellent Grammatical Obs. on p. 1417 of SCHMIDT's Lex.—ED.]

Therefore my hope's (not surfeited to death)

58

Stand in bold Cure.

Within. A Saile, a Saile, a Saile.

60

58. hope's] F₃Qq. hopes F₃F₄ et cet.

60. Within.] Meff. Qq. 4 G. Cap.

59. [Enter a Messenger. Qq. Enter another Gentleman. Cap.

Without. Sta.

Within....Saile.] In margin as Stage Direction Glo. Cam. Rife, Wh. ii.

58, 59. JOHNSON: I do not understand these lines. I know not how hope can be surfeited to death, that is, can be increased, till it be destroyed; nor what it is, 'to stand in bold cure;' or why hope should be considered a disease. Shall we read: 'Therefore my fears, not surfeited to death'? &c. This is better, but it is not well. Shall we strike a bolder stroke, and read thus: 'Therefore my hopes, not forfeited to death, Stand bold, not sure'? JENNENS: Wishes may be called the food upon which hope is very apt to surfeit; and to surfeit to death too, when there is no ground or foundation to expect the thing hoped for. Hope is in perfect health where the grounds for it are equal to the wish; but if the wish preponderate the grounds of expectation, hope is in a sickly state. This was the case with Cassio; his wishes for Othello's safety were greater than the probability of it, for he had left him on a dangerous sea; so his hope was sick; but not sick to death, because the ship had a good pilot; this thought physick'd hope, and put it in a bold state of cure. STEEVENS: Presumptuous hopes, which have no foundation in probability, may poetically be said to surfeit themselves to death, or forward their own dissolution. 'In bold cure' means in confidence of being cured. MALONE: It is not hope which is here described as the disease; those misgiving apprehensions which diminish hope are, in fact, the disease, and hope itself is the patient. HENLEY: I believe that Solomon upon this occasion will be found the best interpreter: 'Hope deferred maketh the heart sick.' KNIGHT: Hope upon hope, without realization, is a surfeit of hope and extinguishes hope. Cassio had some reasonable facts to prevent his hope being 'surfeited to death.' COLLIER: The meaning seems to be, that Cassio's hopes are not destroyed by constant repetition and disappointment. SINGER: 'Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death by excess of apprehension, stand in confidence of being cured.' STAUNTON (Note on Ant. & Cleo. II, i, 38): As in our early language to expect most commonly meant to stay or wait, so to hope on some occasions was used where we should now adopt to expect. (Note on present passage): 'Hopes' here are expectations or presentiments. COWDEN-CLARKE: My hopes, not having been utterly destroyed by reiterated false excitement and successive defeat, remain in confident expectation of being fulfilled. HUDSON: Cassio, though anxious, does not despair; and the meaning of 'stand in bold cure' seems to be, 'my hopes, though near dying, stay themselves upon, or are kept alive by, bold conjecture;' or, it may be, 'are confident of being cured.' I was for a while in doubt whether to read 'not suffocate to death' or 'not sick yet unto death;' but on the whole preferred the former as involving somewhat less of change, and as being perhaps rather more in Shakespeare's manner. D'HUGUES: Il est clair cependant que les espérances s'ajoutant aux espérances, sans être jamais réalisées, constituent un trop plein (surfeit) d'espérances, qui fait évanouir toute espérance. C'est la même chose que Molière a voulu dire dans le fameux sonnet d'Oronte: Belle Philis, on désespère Alors qu'on espère toujours. [These paraphrases are all of them intelligible, and would be entirely satisfactory could we only forget the text, which as it now stands is unintelligible to me, and I am willing to 'say ditto to' Dr Johnson.—ED.]

Caffio. What noife ?

61

Gent. The Towne is empty ; on the brow o'th'Sea
Stand rankes of People, and they cry, a Saile.

Caffio. My hopes do shape him for the Gouvernor.

Gent. They do discharge their Shot of Courtesie,
Our Friends, at least. 65

Caffio. I pray you Sir, go forth,
And giue vs truth who 'tis that is arriu'd.

Gent. I shall. Exit.

Mon. But good Lieutenant, is your Generall wiu'd? 70

Caffio. Most fortunately : he hath atchieu'd a Maid
That paragons description, and wilde Fame :
One that excels the quirkes of Blazoning pens,
And in th'essentiall Vesture of Creation,
Do's tyre the Ingeniuer. 75

61. noife] news Cap.

62. Gent.] Mess. Qq. 4 G. Cap. empty; on] empty, one Q₃.

63. Stand] otand Q₃. Stands Q₂Q₃.

64. Gouernor] guernement Q₂. gou- ernment Q₂. government Q₃.

[Guns heard. Cap.

65, 69, 78, 112. Gent.] 2 Gen. Qq. their] the Qq.

66. Friends] friend Qq.

[A shot. Qq. Sound of cannon.
Johns.

70. Lieutenant] Leutenant Q₂Q₃.

71. fortunately:] fortunately, Qq.
Rowe, Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.

73. quirkes of] Om. Q₂.

74. th'essentiall] the essentiall Qq.

75-77. Do's...in ?] One line, Qq et cet.

75. tyre the Ingeniuer.] beare all excel- lency :—Q₂, Pope +, Jen. Steev. Mal.Var.
Coll. Wh. i, Ktly. beare an excellency :—
Q₂Q₃, Rowe. tire the Ingeniuer Ff. tire
the inuenter. Cap. Rann. tire the ingener.
Knt, Dyce, Glo. Sta. Cam. Del. Huds.
Rlfe. tire the ingenier Sing. ii. beare all excellence Wh. ii. tire the imaginer Jervis.

73. excels] MALONE: See 103d Sonn.: 'a face That over-goes my blunt invention quite, Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.'

74, 75. WARBURTON: It is plain that something very hyperbolic was here intended. But what is there as it stands? Why this, that in the essence of creation she bore all excellency. The expression is intolerable, and could never come from one who so well understood the force of words as our Poet. The essential vesture is the same as essential form. So that the expression is nonsense. For the vesture of creation signifies the forms in which created beings are cast. And essence relates not to the form, but to the matter. Shakespeare certainly wrote: 'And in terrestrial vesture,' &c. And in this lay the wonder, that all created excellence should be contained within an earthly mortal form. HEATH (p. 559): I entirely agree with Warburton that the common reading is indefensible. . . . I should rather suspect that the poet wrote: And in the sensual vesture,' &c. The sense is, And within that vesture of the human senses with which she is clothed by the Creator she is endued with every excellency. JOHNSON: I do not think 'essential' inexplicable; it seems to be used for existent, real. She excels the praises of invention says he, and in real qualities with which creation has invested her bears all excellency. [Line 75 in the Folio] I explain thus: Does tire

[74, 75. essentiall Vesture of Creation, Do's tyre the Ingeniuer.]

the ingenious verse. This is the best reading, and that which the author substituted in his revisal. STEEVENS: I believe the word 'tire' was not introduced to signify to fatigue, but to attire, to dress. The verb to attire is often so abbreviated. Thus in Holland's Leaguer, 1633: 'Cupid's a boy, And would you tire him like a Senator?' Again in Com. of Err. II, ii, 99: 'To save the money he spends in tiring' ['trimming'.—Glo.] 'The essentiall vesture of Creation' tempts me to believe that it was so used here. I would read something like this: Does tire the ingenuous virtue, i. e. invests her artless virtue in the fairest form of earthly substance. In Mer. of Ven. V, i, 64, Lorenzo calls the body 'the muddy vesture of decay.' It may be observed that ingener did not anciently signify one who manages the engines or artillery of an army, but any ingenious person, any master of liberal science. Cf. Jonson's Sejanus, I, i: 'No, Silius, we are no good ingeners, We want the fine arts,' &c. Ingener, therefore, may be the true reading of this passage; a similar thought occurs in Temp. IV, i, 10: 'For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise, And make it halt behind her.' In the Argument of Sejanus, Jonson likewise says that his hero 'worketh with all his ingene,' apparently from the Latin, ingenium. MALONE: Perhaps we should read: 'Does tire the ingene ever.' Ingene is used for ingenium by Puttenham, Arte of Poesie, 1589: 'Such also as made most of their workes by translation out of the Latin and French tongue, and few or none of their own engine;' engine is here without doubt a misprint for ingene. I believe, however, the reading of the Qto is the true one. If 'tire' was used in the sense of weary, then 'ingener' must have been used for the ingenious person who should attempt to enumerate the merits of Desdemona. We have in Fleckno's Discourse of the English Stage, 1664: 'We in England . . . having proceeded no further than to bare painting, and not arrived to the stupendous wonders of your great ingeniers.' For a similar imagery to that in the first of these lines, see one of Daniel's Sonnets: 'Though time doth spoil her of her fairest vaile That ever yet mortalitie did cover.' M. MASON: The reading of the Folio appears to have been, 'Does tire the engineer,' that is, 'One whose real perfections were so excellent that to blazon them would exceed the abilities of the ablest masters.' HENLEY: 'Ingenieur' is no doubt of the same import with ingener or engineer, though perhaps differently written by Shakespeare in reference to ingenious, and to distinguish it from engineer, which he has elsewhere used in a military sense. Daniel uses ingeniate: 'Th' adulterate beauty of a falsèd cheek Did Nature (for this good) ingeniate,' &c. KNIGHT: The text of the Folio presents no difficulty when we understand the word ingener. The word engine is so called 'because not made without great effort (ingenii) of genius, of ingenuity, of contrivance.'—Richardson. The ingener, then, is the contriver by ingenuity, the designer, and, here applied to a poet, is almost literally the Greek ποιητής, maker. COLLIER (ed. i): 'Ingeniuer' has been taken for inginer, though if that were the true word, we cannot tell why the compositor should have put so many letters into it. JERVIS (p. 25): Read: 'doth tire the imager.' Cf. 'And still he did it by first telling the imager, and after bidding the actor think.'—Bacon's Nat. Hist. [Century X, p. 205, ed. 1677.—Dyce]. STAUNTON: By ingener is meant, perhaps, the painter or artist, as in the extract from Fleckno [quoted by Malone]. Ingener, or ingener, was, however, a term for any ingenious person; and from a passage in Certain Edicts from a Parliament in Eulopia, by Lady Southwell: 'Item, that no Lady shall court her looking-glasse, past one houre in a day, unlesse she professe to be an Ingenir,' it might be thought in the present instance to signify what is now called a modiste, or deviser of new fashions in female apparel. WHITE (ed. i): The tame

[74, 75. essentiall Vesture of Creation, Do's tyre the Ingeniuer.]

reading of the Qto is given [in the text] with the full consciousness that it does not represent the passage as Shakespeare left it, and in the belief that very probably he did not write it at all. The attempt to make something of the Folio text by regarding the last word as a misprint of ingener, i. e. artist, writer, ingenious person, I cannot but regard as utterly futile. Possibly 'tire' here means attire, and refers to 'vesture'; it may also mean weary, and have for its subject the word or phrase which is incorrectly, or both incorrectly and imperfectly, represented by 'ingeniuer.' For in V. & A., Venus's tongue is called 'the engine of her thoughts;' and in Tit. And. III, i, Marcus styles Lavinia's tongue 'that delightful engine of her thoughts.' Here Shakespeare may have meant Cassio to say, that Desdemona's charms were beyond description either by pen or tongue. I am inclined to believe that the reading of the text [i. e. the Qto] was substituted for the true, but illegible or incomprehensible, reading by the transcriber of the passage who prepared the copy. BR. NICHOLSON (N. & Qu., 1865, 3d, viii, 43): The Qto text lacks a sufficient rise in hyperbole to conclude fitly the previous hyperbolic praises, and a poetical conclusion to the simile commenced in 'vesture.' In the Folio 'tire' cannot mean weary; but as a verb suggested by 'vesture,' and having reference to it, it must be either the shortened form of attire, or formed (perhaps for the nonce, as is not unfrequent in writers of that day) from tire, a head-dress; and this either transitively or agentially in the sense of 'arrange a head-dress,' or reflectively in the sense of 'to act as.' But if creation be represented as a vesture, it follows that Desdemona, as a part of creation, should (agreeably to the last given meaning of 'tire') be part of the dress; and giving the word this sense, we obtain the plain meaning corresponding with the reading of the Qto,—that creation being the vesture, she, Desdemona, is the tire, tiara, or crown of it, one who 'tops all.' Again, if all creation be represented as a vesture, it can only be as the regal robe of God its ingener or artificer; hence we may consider ingeniver as the representative of some form of ingener; the exact form is unimportant, but I would prefer the French, ingenieur, as this, printed ingenieur, might easily have been changed by an ignorant compositor into ingeniver. As to the probable origin of the phrase, I cannot but think that these two lines were formed on the remembrance of Psalm cii, 25, 26: 'Thou hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of Thine hands, . . . they all shall wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt Thou change them, and they shall be changed.' This being combined with the thought of Desdemona as a pure daughter of Eve, the last and therefore, according to the previous gradation of creation, the crowning work of God. Combined, perhaps, with these, and assisting the association of the two, may have been the remembrance of the ray, circlet, or 'glory,' which surrounds the head of sacred images or pictures, and the phrase 'forasmuch as man is the glory of God.' Possibly the reader who has not paid attention to the frequency with which Shakespeare draws from Scriptural sources, and to the frequency with which these form his phrases, may consider my remarks more subtle than sound; but the addition of the word 'essential' strongly corroborates them, and illustrates how fully and perfectly Shakespeare elaborated a thought, and how comprehensively and succinctly he expressed it. Desdemona is represented as a being of purity and love, a female Abdiel 'mong Italian women; and hence Cassio is made to break out into such expression-seeking praise as to call her the top of creation, as creation is 'essentially' and without 'the accident' of sin, or as it was when it was beautiful before God and pronounced to be very good. KEIGHTLEY (Exp., p. 301): It seems almost impossible to make any good sense out of the Folio. 'The essential,' &c. means person, body, form.

Enter Gentleman.

76

How now? Who ha's put in?

Gent. 'Tis one Iago, Auncient to the Generall.

Caffio. Ha's had most fauourable, and happie speed :
 Tempests themselues, high Seas, and howling windes, 80
 The gutter'd-Rockes, and Congregated Sands,
 Traitors ensteep'd, to enclogge the guiltlesse Keele, 82

Scene IV. Pope +, Jen.	Glo. Wh. ii. He's Wh. i, Huds. Rlfe. 'Has
76. Enter... Enter 2 Gentleman (after	Dyce iii. He has Qq et cet.
line 77) Qq. Re-enter Sec. Gent. Cap.	80. high] by Q ₁ .
77. How now? now, Qq. Now? Cap.	81. gutter'd-Rockes] guttered rocks Qq.
Rann.	gutter'd Rocks Ff.
Ha's] has Qq Ff.	82. ensteep'd] enscerped ; Q ₁ . enstee'd
79. Caffio.] Om. (continuing speech to	Pope conj.
2 Gent.) Qq.	enclogge] F ₂ F ₃ . enclog F ₄ , Cap.
Ha's] Has Rowe +. Has Dyce i,	Knt, Del. clog Qq et cet.

HUDSON: This seems to mean, she is one who surpasses all description, and in real beauty or outward form goes beyond the power of the artist's inventive or expressive pencil. ROLFE: The reading of the Folio is doubtful, but it is preferable to the tame phrase of the Qto. WHITE (ed. ii): From the text of the Folio no tolerable reading or sense has yet been extracted. [It is to be feared that Steevens's remark on I, iii, 291, is equally applicable here, and that it is 'highly probable that this passage will prove a lasting source of doubt and controversy.'—ED.]

79. Ha's] An instance of the absorption of the personal pronoun, similar to that of 'it' in I, iii, 220. DYCE in his last edition has indicated this. SCHMIDT in his admirable translation thus renders this line: 'Er stand in eines guten Engels Schutz,' and pleads for it thus: If we consider the meaning of this line in connection with what follows it is evident that there must be some reference to Desdemona. 'Speed' in Shakespeare means not only swiftness, haste, but success, fortune, and also that propitious power, or exalted guardianship, which brings success, especially in the expression of good wishes. 'Saint Nicholas be thy speed!' Two Gent. III, i, 301; 'Hercules be thy speed,' As You Like It, I, ii, 222, and elsewhere; and with a comic turn in 'good manners be your speed,' 1 Hen. IV. III, i, 190. Hence, therefore, Desdemona is here the guardian angel who saves Iago's ship, and at the conclusion of the speech she is styled not without a purpose, 'the divine Desdemona.'

82. ensteep'd] THEOBALD (Sk. Rest., p. 143): That is, That Rocks and Shoals lurk under, and lye covered by the Deep, treacherously to destroy Vessels which happen to be thrown upon them. STEEVENS: Perhaps enscerped was an old English word borrowed from the French, escarpé, which Shakespeare, not finding congruous to the image of clogging the keel, afterwards changed. I once thought it might be Traitors enscauf'd, i. e. muffled in their robes, as in Jul. Cas. or Ham., 'My sea-gown scarf'd about me.' HENLEY: Steevens's difficulty would, perhaps, have been removed had he recollected Othello's speech in IV, ii, 60: 'Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips.' BOSWELL: Traitors ensteep'd are merely traitors concealed under the water. KNIGHT: Rocks and sand are beneath the water, and what is beneath the water is steep'd in the water. The identical word thus applied is in the Faerie Queene, I, xi, 276: 'Now gan the golden Phoebus for to steepe His fierie face in billowes of the west.' WHITE (ed.

As hauing fence of Beautie, do omit 83

Their mortall Natures, letting go safely by

The Diuine Desdemona. 85

Mon. What is she?

Cassio. She that I spake of:

Our great Captaine Captaine, 90

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago,

Whose footing heere anticipates our thoughts,

A Senights speed. Great Ioue, Othello guard,

And swell his Saile with thine owne powrefull breath,

That he may blesse this Bay with his tall Ship,

Make loues quicke pants in Desdemonaes Armes,

Giue renew'd fire to our extincted Spirits. 95

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Rodorigo, and Emilia.

Oh behold, 97

84. mortall] common Qq.
go safely] safe go Pope+, Cap.

87, 88. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

87. spake] spoke Q₂. speake Q'81.

88. great] Om. Q₃.

94. Make...in] And swiftly come to Qq, Jen.

95. Two lines, Qq.

95. extincted] extinctest F₄F₅. extin- guish'd Rowe, Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.

Spirits.] Ff. spirits: And bring all Cypresse comfort,— (subs.) Qq et cet.
(And five Rowe).

96. Enter...] After armes, line 94 Qq.
Scene V. Pope+, Jen.

i) reads enscarp'd and upholds the word: because Shakespeare never uses 'steep' in the sense of 'plunge' or 'submerge,' but always in that of 'lave' or 'soak,' which is almost ridiculously inappropriate here; because 'scarp' in Shakespeare's day meant the inner slope of a ditch or intrenchment, then as now descriptive of shelving rocks; and because enscarped might be easily mistaken for 'ensteeped,' owing to the likeness between c and t in the MS. of the early seventeenth century. DYCK in his ed. ii reminded White of Henley's reference to IV, ii, 60, and White adopted 'ensteep'd' in his ed. ii, and enscarp'd was heard of no more.

84. mortall] REED: That is, deadly, destructive.

88. Captaine] MALONE: Cf. 'And she shall be sole victress, Cæsar's Cæsar,' Rick III: IV, iv, 336.

91. Ioue] MALONE: For this absurdity I have not the smallest doubt that the Master of the Revels, and not our poet, is answerable. [Malone made the same remark on a Hen. VI: IV, x, 56, where the Ff have 'Jove,' and the Qq God. The inference is that Malone deemed God the true word here; Hudson has adopted it.—ED.] COWDEN-CLARKE: We believe it to have been the author's own word characteristically put into Cassio's mouth here. To this day Italians use mythological adjurations in common with Christian appeals; and in Shakespeare's time the custom was almost universal.

95. The omission in the Folio of the phrase found in the Qto, WHITE (ed. i) pronounces due to 'manifest accident;' as well as me in line 104.

- The Riches of the Ship is come on shore : 98
 You men of Cyprus, let her haue your knees.
 Haile to thee Ladie : and the grace of Heauen, 100
 Before, behinde thee, and on euery hand
 Enwheelee thee round.
Des. I thanke you, Valiant Cassio,
 What tydings can you tell of my Lord?
Cas. He is not yet arriu'd, nor know I ought [317 a]
 But that he's well, and will be shortly heere. 106
Des. Oh, but I feare :
 How loft you company ?
Cassio. The great Contention of Sea, and Skies
 Parted our fellowship. But hearke, a Saile. 110
Within. A Saile, a Saile.
Gent. They giue this greeting to the Cittadell :
 This likewise is a Friend. 113

98. on shore] ashore Q₁.
 99. You] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob. Han.
 Warb. Cap. Knt, Wh. i. Ye Qq et cet.
 100. thee Ladie] the Lady Q'81.
 104. tell] tell me QqFf et cet.
 105. yet] Om. Ff.
 arriu'd] arriued Q₁ Q₂. arived Q₃. ought] QqFf, Rowe, Pope, Han.
 Warb. ought Theob. et cet.
 107, 108. One line, Qq et cet.
 107. feare: How] Ff. feare:—how Qq, Cap. Steev. Mal. Sing. fear.—How Coll. i, Wh. i, Ktly. fear—how Rowe et
 cet.
 109. Sea] the sea QqFf et cet.
 110. fellowship.] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Del.
 Huds. fellowship—Glo. Cam. Rlfe, Wh.
 ii. fellowship: Qq et cet.
 111. Within...Saile] [within] A saile, a saile (Stage direct. after line 108) Qq.
 Sound of Cannon. Johns. Cry within of—
A sail! a sail: afterwards, Guns (Stage direct.) Cap. After fellowship Coll.
 112. this] Ff, Rowe+, Steev.'85. their
 Qq et cet.
 greeting] geerting Q₃.
 to the] to this Rowe ii.

98. Riches] For instances of its use, according to its derivation as a singular noun, see SCHMIDT, s. v.

100–102. WALKER (Crit., iii, 286): Wheel for circle is not altogether unfrequent in the old dramatists. Cf. 'Heaven's grace in-wheel you, And all good thoughts and prayers dwell about you.'—B. and F. The Pilgrim, I, ii, p. 17, ed. Dyce. PECK (Memoirs of Milton, p. 164): These lines are almost directly copied in Il Penseroso, 151: 'And, as I wake, sweet music breathe Above, about, and underneath.'

103. BOOTH: Desdemona gives her hand to Cassio, who kisses it, and rises from his knee.

107. fear] D'HUGUES: Est-ce un pressentiment vague et mystérieux de la destinée qui l'attend dans cette île? Ce mot n'est évidemment pas placé au hasard: tout a un sens dans Shakespeare.

112. this] WHITE (ed. i): This seems a misprint, due to the occurrence of 'this' in the next line. [It hardly can be called a misprint. To me, it is doubtful if it be not a little better than their.—ED.]

Cassio. See for the Newes :

Good Ancient, you are welcome. Welcome Miftris : 115

Let it not gaule your patience (good Iago)

That I extend my Manners. 'Tis my breeding,

That giues me this bold shew of Curtesie.

Iago. Sir, would she giue you somuch of her lippes,
As of her tongue she oft bestowes on me, 120
You would haue enough.

Def. Alas : she ha's no speech.

Iago. Infaith too much : 123

114. See...Newes] So speakes this voyce
Q.

[Exit Gentleman. Cap. et seq.

115. [To Æmilia. Rowe et seq.

117. [Kisses her. Johns.

119. Sir.] For Q.

120. oft bestowes] has bestowed Q.
on] of Ff, Rowe i.

121. You would] Ff, Rowe. You'd Q
et cet.

123. Infaith] F₂F₃. I know Q. In faith Q. et cet.

118. Courtesy] COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 254): Here is Cassio's warm-hearted, yet perfectly disengaged, praise of Desdemona, and sympathy with the 'most fortunately' wived Othello; and yet Cassio is an enthusiastic admirer, almost a worshipper, of Desdemona. Oh, that detestable code that excellence cannot be loved in any form that is female, but it must needs be selfish! Observe Othello's 'honest,' and Cassio's 'bold Iago, and Cassio's full guileless-hearted wishes for the safety and love-raptures of Othello and 'the divine Desdemona.' And also note the exquisite circumstance of Cassio's kissing Iago's wife, as if it ought to be impossible that the duller auditor should not feel Cassio's religious love of Desdemona's purity. Iago's answers are the sneers which a proud, bad intellect feels towards women, and expresses to a wife. Surely it ought to be considered a very exalted compliment to women, that all the sarcasms on them in Shakespeare are put in the mouths of villains. BOOTH: Kiss her face; not, as is frequently done, her hand. Iago winces slightly, for he 'suspects Cassio with his nightcap.' I was once so irritated by Cassio's kissing the hand of Emilia, despite directions at rehearsal, that I said 'If she would give you so much of her hand,' &c., which staggered Cassio and set all the actors giggling.

123 et seq. RYMER (p. 110): Now follows a long rabble of Jack-pudding farce betwixt Iago and Desdemona, that runs on with all the little plays, jingle, and trash below the patience of any Country Kitchenmaid with her Sweetheart. The Venetian Donna is hard put to 't for pastime! And this is all, when they are newly got on shore, from a dismal Tempest, and when every moment she might expect to hear her Lord (as she calls him) that she runs so mad after, is arrived or lost. And moreover 'in a town of war, the people's hearts brimful of fear.' Never in the World had any Pagan Poet his Brains turned at this Monstrous rate. But the ground of all this Bedlam-Buffoonery we saw in the case of the French Strollers, the company for acting Christ's Passion, or the Old Testament, were Carpenters, Cobblers, and illiterate fellows; who found that the Drolls, and Fooleries interlarded by them, brought in the rabble, and lengthened their time, so they got money by the bargain. Our Shakespeare, doubtless, was a great Master in this craft. These Carpenters and Cobblers were the guides he followed. And it is then no wonder that we find so much farce and Apocryphal matter in his Tragedies.

I finde it still, when I haue leaue to sleepe.

Marry before your Ladyship, I grant,

125

She puts het tongue a little in her heart,

And chides with thinking.

Æmil. You haue little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on : you are Pictures out of doore : Bells in your Parlours : Wilde-Cats in your Kitchens : Saints in your Iniuries : Diuels being offended :

130

124. it still, when] it, I; for when Q₁.

it still, for when Q₂Q₃.

haue] ha Q₄.

leaue] Q₂Q₃Ff, Coll. i, Wh. i. lust

Coll. ii (MS). liß Q₂ et cet.

126. het] her Q₄Ff.

in her] in Q₃.

128. haue] ha Q₂Q₃.

129-133. Verse, ending doore :...kitch ens :...offended :...beds. Q₄, Rowe et seq.

129. you are] you're Pope +, Dyce iii,
Huds.

129, 130. of doore] Knt. adores Q₂.

of dores Q₂F₂Q₃. of doores F₃. o' doors

Cap. of doors F₄ et cet.

Thereby un-hallowing the Theatre, profaning the name of Tragedy; And instead of representing Men and Manners, turning all Morality, good sense, and humanity into mockery and derision.

124. Leaue] DYCE (Remarks, &c., p. 237): When Collier adopted 'leave' of the Folio, what meaning did he attach to it? did he suppose it to be only another form of 'leve,' 'leef,' or 'lief' (a word which, I apprehend, was never used as a substantive)? List is clearly the true reading. COLLIER (ed. ii): Lust is from the (MS.). 'Leave' merely means 'when I have permission to sleep,' and has nothing to do with 'leef,' 'leve,' or 'lief.' DYCE (Strictures, p. 197): Collier's present explanation of 'leave' makes Iago talk sheer nonsense.

129. Pictures] GÉRARD: Nous avons en français la même expression: 'Sages comme des images.' [This refers to the 'paintings' with which Hamlet taxes women, III, i, 142: 'I have heard of your paintings too, well enough; God has given you one face, and you make yourselves another.'—ED.]

129-133. STEEVENS: Almost the same thoughts are to be found in Puttenham's Arte of Poesie, 1589: 'We limit the comely parts of a woman to consist in foure points, that is to be a shrewe in the kitchin, a saint in the Church, an Angell at the board, and an Ape in the bed' [p. 299, ed. Arber]. See also Middleton's Blurt, Master-Constable, 1602 [III, iii], and The Miseries of Inforced Marriage, 1607 [I, i, p. 10, ed. Collier]. Puttenham, who mentions all other contemporary writers, has not once spoken of Shakespeare; so that it is probable that he had not produced anything of so early a date. The truth is, that this book appears to have been written several years before its publication. See p. 115 [p. 152, ed. Arber], where the author refers to Sir Nicholas Bacon, who died in 1579, and recounts a circumstance, from his own knowledge, that happened in 1553. MALONE: How does it appear that this book was written several years before its publication, from the circumstances mentioned? Puttenham does not speak of Sir Nicholas Bacon as living; but speaks of those that knew him; from which we might rather infer that it could not be written before 1578, when that lord keeper died.

131. Saints] JOHNSON: When you have a mind to do injuries, you put on an air of sanctity.

Players in your Hufwiferie, and Hufwiues in your Beds. 132

Def. Oh, fie vpon thee, Slanderer.

Iago. Nay, it is true : or else I am a Turke, 135
You rise to play, and go to bed to worke.

Æmil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Desde. What would'st write of me, if thou should'st praise me? 140

Iago. Oh, gentle Lady, do not put me too't,
For I am nothing, if not Criticall.

Def. Come on, assay.

There's one gone to the Harbour?

Iago. I Madam. 145

Def. I am not merry : but I do beguile

132. Hufwiferie] houfwifery Q₂. Hufwifery Ff, Rowe, Pope, Knt. huswifry Cap. houfwifery Q₂Q₃ et cet.

and] Om. Han.

Hufwiues] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt. houfwines Q₂, Pope. houfwines Q₂Q₃ et cet.

134. Def.] Om. Q₁.

139. Two lines, Qq. One line, as verse, Rowe et seq.

139. would'st] Ff, Rowe, Knt. wouldst thou Qq et cet.

140. me I] me. F₂F₃.

141. too't] toot F₂. to't QqF₃F₄.

143. Come on, assay] Come, one assay Pope +.

143, 144. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

assay. There's] assay—there's Qq.

144. Harbour ?] Harbour— Rowe, Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.

145. I] I, F₃F₄. Ay, Rowe et seq.

132. Huswiues] WHITE (ed. ii) : In Shakespeare's day, and in some parts of England still, housewife is pronounced husif, which has passed into hussy, with a half jocular, half serious, implication of wantonness, which seems not to have been lacking three hundred years ago. Indeed, perhaps, we should read here 'hussies in your beds.'

134. JENNENS : Perhaps this speech should be Æmilias; Iago's next speech seems to require it. COLLIER : In a handwriting of the time it is given to Emilia in the Duke of Devonshire's copy of Q₁.

138. No] BOOTH : Linger on 'no,' with a significant side glance at her. All that he says till he speaks 'Aside' should be delivered humorously, to conceal his bitterness, which his features occasionally reveal.

140. praise me ?] HORN (i, 340) : Many a poet, heaping up tragic devices for tragic ends, would have probably represented Desdemona as feeling an involuntary, foreboding aversion to Iago; but even her very freedom from all forebodings is in itself deeply tragic, and devised with a rare insight into character.

142. Criticall] JOHNSON : That is, censorious. MALONE : Cf. Sonn., 122, 'my adder's sense To critic and to flatterer stopped are.'

145. BOOTH : Cassio should make this reply. He has been awaiting their arrival; Iago has just landed with Desdemona.

146. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 254) : The struggle of courtesy in Desdemona to

The thing I am, by seeming otherwife. 147
Come, how would'st thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it, but indeed my invention comes from my pate, as Birdlyme do's from Freeze, it pluckes 150 out Braines and all. But my Muse labours, and thus she is deliuer'd.

*If she be faire, and wise : fairenesse, and wit,
The ones for use, the other vseth it.*

Def. Well prais'd: 155
How if she be Blacke and Witty?

Iago. *If she be blacke, and thereto haue a wit,
She'll find a white, that shall her blacknesse fit.*

Def. Worfe, and worfe.

Æmil. How if Faire, and Foolish? 160

Iago. *She neuer yet was foolish that was faire,
For euen her folly helpt her to an heire.*

Desde. These are old fond Paradoxes, to make Fooles laugh i'th' Alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's Foule, and Foolish. 165

149-152. Prose Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob.
Han. Warb. Four lines of verse, ending invention...freeze...labors...deliuer'd Qq
et cet.

149. indeed] Om. Q₃.

my] Om. Johns.

150. Freeze] FfQq, Rowe +, Cap. Jen.

frize Huds. Wh. ii. frise Steev. et cet.

151. Braines] braine Qq.

152. deliuer'd] deliuered Q₂FfQ₃,

Rowe +, Jen.

153, 154, 157, &c. Printed in Roman, Q₁.

153. wife:] wife, Qq. wise,—Cap.

154. vseth] vsing Q₁.

155, 156. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

158. fit] hit Q₁.

160, 165. Foolish?] foolish. F₂F₃.

162. her to an heire] her, to a heire Q₁.

163-165. Three lines, ending Alehouse,
...her,...foolish? Qq.

163. old fond] old Qq.

164. i'th' Alehouse.] i'th' the Alehouse, Q₁.

i'th' Alehouse: Q₂. i'th' Alehouse Q₃.

hast] haste F₁.

abstract her attention. DELIUS: Perhaps lines 146, 147 should be considered as an aside.

158. fit] STEEVENS: I believe Q₁ has the true reading here, as in Love's Lab. IV, i,
127. [To the same effect, STAUNTON. See Bishop Percy's Folio MS., vol. iv.—ED.]

161, 162. JOHNSON: We may read: 'She ne'er was yet so foolish that was fair, But even,' &c. Yet I believe the common reading to be right; the law makes the power of cohabitation a proof that a man is not a natural; therefore, since the foolish woman, if pretty, may have a child, no pretty woman is ever foolish. HALLIWELL:
To elucidate this sentence, the reader may remember, that 'if one have so much knowledge as to measure a yard of cloth; number twenty pence rightly; name the days of the week; or become the parent of a child; he shall not be accounted an idiot by the laws of the realm.' A statement of which may be seen in The Student's Companion, or the Reason of the Law, 2d ed. 1734.—Anon.

163. fond] DYCE (Lex.): Foolish, simple, silly.

Iago. There's none so foule and foolish thereunto,
But do's foule pranks, which faire, and wife-ones do. 166

Desde. Oh heauy ignorance : thou praifest the worst best. But what praise could'st thou bestow on a deseruing woman indeed? One, that in the authorithy of her 170 merit, did iustly put on the vouch of very malice it [317 b] selfe.

Iago. She that was euer faire, and neuer proud,
Had Tongue at will, and yet was neuer loud :
Neuer lackt Gold, and yet went neuer gay, 175
Fled from her wish, and yet said now I may.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 167. wife-ones] Hyphen, F ₁ . | 170. authorithy] F ₁ . |
| 168. thou praifest] that praises Qq. | 171. merit] merrits Q ₂ . merits Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 170. indeed f] indeed / Sing. indeed ,— | 171, 172. it selfe .] Ff, Ktly. it selfe ? |
| Dyce, Sta. indeed , Glo. Cam. Rlf, Wh. | Qq et cet. |
| ii. indeed ; Huds. | 175. went neuer] never went Theob. ii. |

170. STEEVENS: The hint for this question, and the metrical reply of Iago, is taken from a strange pamphlet, called Choice, Chance, and Change, or Conceits in their Colours, 1606; when after Tidero has described many ridiculous characters in verse, Arnolfo asks him, 'But, I pray thee, didst thou write none in commendation of some worthy creature?' Tidero then proceeds, like Iago, to repeat more verses. [It would not have been worth while to cite this note of Steevens, had not SINGER repeated it, without acknowledgement, in both his First and Second editions. I never saw the pamphlet, and dislike to depart from the safe rule of verifying all Steevens's citations, especially those wherefrom Steevens asserts that Shakespeare 'took hints,' assertions always doubtful, frequently absurd, and here especially uncertain, in view of the date 1606.—ED.]

171. put on] THEOBALD could not understand how merit could put on the vouch of malice. 'I should rather think,' he says, 'that merit was so safe in itself, as to repel and put off all that malice and envy could advance to its prejudice.' He therefore changed his text to 'put down.' WARBURTON: The sense is, one that was so conscious of her own merit, and of the authority her character had with every one, that she durst venture to call upon malice itself to vouch for her. This was some commendation. And the character only of the clearest virtue; which could force malice, even against its nature, to do justice. JOHNSON: To put on the vouch of malice, is to assume a character vouched by the testimony of malice itself. CAPELL (p. 142): 'Put on' is—push on, push forward the unwilling; so that the sense is—push malice on to vouch, dare it to give its testimony, say what it knows of her; this is the very force of 'put on' and 'vouch,' and their explanation combin'd; and other comment than this the passage does not require.

173 &c. BOOTH: These lines should be spoken as though composed on the spur of the moment; not glibly, as though studied beforehand.

173. She that] ABBOTT, § 268: Generally it will be found that which is more definite than that. Which follows a name, that a pronoun. Sometimes which is used in this sense to denote an individual or a defined class, while that denotes a hypothetical person or an indefinite class, as here.

She that being angred, her reuenge being nie, 177
Bad her wrong flay, and her displeasure flie:
She that in wisedome neuer was so fraile,
To change the Cods-head for the Salmons taile: 180
She that could thinke, and neu'r disclofe her mind,
See Suitors following, and not looke behind:
She was a wight, (if euer such wightes were)
Def. To do what?
Iago. To suckle Fooles, and chronicle small Beere. 185

177. being] when Pope+.	183. such wightes] Ff, Knt, Sta. Del.
181. neu'r] ne're QqF ₃ F ₄ . neu'r F ₅ .	such wight Qq et cet.
ne'er Rowe.	were)] F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe ii+, Jen. were .
182. Om. Q ₁ .	Q ₁ . were ,) Q ₂ , Rowe i. were .) F ₄ . were ,— not] ne'er Johns.	Johns.

180. To] For the omission of as in relative constructions, see Lear, I, iv, 36, or ABBOTT, § 281.

180. Cods-head] STEEVENS: That is, to exchange a delicacy for coarser fare. See Queen Elizabeth's Household Book for the 43d year of her Reign: 'Item, the Master Cookes have to fee all the salmons' tailes,' &c., p. 296. WHITE (ed. ii): That is, to give up the best part of a homely thing for the worst part of something very fine. LÜDERS (p. 43) detects herein another, and für feinere Ohren weniger schmackhafte Bedeutung. PURNELL: By the despised salmon's tail he means Othello, whom she had chosen in preference to the wealthy, curled darlings of Venice.

182. BOOTH: A glance at Roderigo would imply that Desdemona is the 'wight' particularly referred to. Roderigo has long been an unnoticed follower. [Qu. Ought not Roderigo to be disguised? Did not Iago tell him to defeat his favour with a usurped beard? It seems almost impossible to suppose that Cassio had never met in Venice, Desdemona's assiduous wooer, Roderigo, and yet see line 297 of this scene, where Iago tells Roderigo that Cassio does not know him. Can this refer to anything else than to his 'defeated favour'?—ED.]

183, 185. were . . . Beere] This rhyme is recorded merely in Ellis's Early-Eng. Pron., p. 965. It is hazardous to deny that a perfect rhyme is here intended, and yet it seems to me that Iago pauses so long in search of one that Desdemona breaks in with her question; and that Iago, thus spurred, rushes to his lame and impotent conclusion, where a defective rhyme would indicate its off-hand character, and supply a dash of humour to counteract the bitterness. There is, however, authority elsewhere for rhyming were and beer. In Com. of Err. IV, ii, 9–10, we have were and here; in R. of L. 631, were and appear; in Sonn. 140, 5, were and near; but were rhymes with beer in Sonn. 13, 6. Chapman frequently rhymes here, were, there, cheer, and dear.—ED.

185. Chronicle] In this word JOHNSON discerned an allusion 'to the Roman practice of marking the jars with the name of the Consul. The appearance of such a woman would make an era, but as the merit of the best woman is but small, that era might be properly applied to the distinction of the different ages of small beer.' This note was not repeated in either of the two editions which Dr Johnson and Steevens afterwards edited. In its stead appeared the interpretation by STEEVENS, which has been since then generally accepted, 'of keeping the accounts of a household.'

Desde. Oh most lame and impotent conclusion. Do not learne of him Æmilia, though he be thy husband. How say you (Cassio) is he not a most prophane, and liberall Counsaillor?

Cassio. He speakes home (Madam) you may relish him more in the Souldier, then in the Scholler.

Iago. He takes her by the palme : I, well said, whisper. With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a Fly as Cassio. I smile vpon her, do : I will giue thee in thine owne Courtship. You say true, 'tis so indeed. If such tricks as these strip you out of your Lieutenantrie, it had beene better you had not kifs'd your three fingers so oft, which now againe you are most apt to play the Sir, in. Very good : well kifs'd, and excellent Curt-

- | | |
|--|---|
| 186-189. Four lines, ending conclusion :
...husband : ...liberall... Counsaillor. Qq. | 194. giue] F ₃ F ₄ . catch Qq, Jen. gyve F ₄ , Rowe et cet. glue Daniel. |
| 187. learne] larne Q ₃ . | thee] you Qq, Jen. |
| 188. liberall] illiberal Han. | 195. thine] your Qq, Jen. |
| 189. Counsaillor] censurer Theob. Han. Cap. Coll. iii (MS), Huds. | Courtship] courtesies Q ₃ , Jen. indeed.] indeed—Rowe. |
| 190, 191. He...him] One line, Qq. | 196, 197. Lieutenantrie] Lieutenancy Rowe +, Jen. |
| 191. the Scholler] Scholler F ₄ . [They converse apart. Cap. | 197. kifs'd] rift Qq. |
| 192. Iago.] Iago. Aside. Rowe. | 198. againe] againe, Qq. |
| I,] I Qq. Ay, Rowe et seq. said,] sed, Qq. said—Rowe. whisper] whisper—Rowe. | 199. Very good] good Q ₁ . Very good—Rowe. |
| 193. With as...will I] as...will Q ₁ . | kifs'd,] kiss'd! Steev. et seq. (Johns. conj.). |
| 194. Fly] Flee Q ₁ . Flee Q ₃ Q ₄ . I smile] I, smile Q ₃ Q ₄ Ff. Ay, smile Rowe. | and] Q ₃ Q ₄ Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Knt. an Q ₁ et cet. |
| do:] do—Rowe. | Curtise] courtesie Qq. Curtesie F ₄ . |

188. prophane] JOHNSON: Gross of language, of expression broad and brutal. See 'profane wretch,' I, i, 127.

188. liberall] WARBURTON: Licentious.

189. Counsaillor] JOHNSON: This seems to mean not so much a man that gives counsel, as one that discourses fearlessly and volubly. A talker.

192. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 254) calls attention in this speech to the importance given to trifles, and made fertile by the villainy of the observer.

192. palme] BOOTH: The hands of both should be ungloved. They seldom are so.

192. well said] SCHMIDT (s. v. 4, 2): That is, well done. So also IV, i, 133, and V, i, 124.

194. giue] POPK: Catch, shackle.

195. Courtship] KNIGHT: This is used for paying courtesies.

195. You . . . indeed] DELIUS: This is in answer to Cassio's last speech.

197. three fingers] BOOTH: Cassio kisses his three fingers as though describing some pleasing act or scene, not as though complimenting Desdemona.

hie : 'tis so indeed. Yet againe, your fingers to your lippes ? Would they were Clufter-pipes for your fake.

The Moore I know his Trumpet.

Cassio. 'Tis truely so.

Des. Let's meete him, and recieue him. 205

Cassio. Loe, where he comes.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. O, my faire Warriour.

Des. My deere Othello.

Othe. It giues me wonder great, as my content To see you heere before me. 210

Oh my Soules Ioy:

If after euery Tempest, come such Calmes,

May the windes blow, till they haue waken'd death : 214

- | | |
|---|---|
| 200. 'tis so] tis Q ₃ .
again,] againe Q ₂ Q ₃ . again—
Rowe.
to] at Qq, Jen. | 207. Enter...] Trumpets within. Enter
...(after line 203) Qq. (Trumpet Q ₂ Q ₃).
Scene VI. Pope+, Jen. |
| 201. Clufter-pipes] Clufterpipes Qq.
Clufter-pipes F ₃ F ₄ . Clufter-pipes F ₄ . | 211, 212. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq. |
| 202. fake.] fake.—Q ₂ Q ₃ .
[Trumpet. Rowe. | 212. Oh] Om. Pope, Han. |
| 203. Moore] Moore, Qq. Moor—
Theob. Moor. Johns. Moor! Coll. | 213. come] came Q ₃ .
Calmes] calmeneffe Qq, Steev.'85,
Mal. Rann. calms F ₄ . |
| 206. comes] come F ₃ F ₄ . | 214. waken'd] wakened Q ₂ Q ₃ . wakened Q ₃ . |

199. the Sir] HENLEY: That is, to show your good breeding and gallantry. STAUNTON: The courtier, or gallant.

199. Curtsie] JOHNSON: Spoken when Cassio kisses his hand, and Desdemona courtesies. MALONE: We have just had 'I will catch you in your own courtesies' [Q₂]. Here, therefore, he probably meant only to speak of Cassio, while kissing his hand. 'Well kissed! an excellent courtesy!' i. e. an excellent salute. Courtesy, in the sense of obeisance or salute, was applied to men as well as to women. 'The homely villain court'sies to her low,' R. of L. 1338. ROLFE: It is doubtful whether this refers to Cassio or Desdemona.

208. Warriour] STEEVENS: In III, iv, 173, Desdemona calls herself an 'unhandsome Warrior.' This phrase was introduced by our copiers of the French Sonneteers. Ronsard frequently calls his mistresses guerrières; and Southern, his imitator, is not less prodigal of the same appellation. Had I not met with the word thus fantastically applied, I should have concluded that Othello called his wife a 'warrior' because she had embarked with him on a warlike expedition, and not in consequence of Ovid's observation: 'Militat omnis amans, et habet sua castra Cupido.' [Southern was not born until nigh a half century after Shakespeare's death. Steevens's reading was so extensive, his memory so tenacious, and his wit so ready, that we shall always owe him gratitude

And let the labouring Barke climbe hills of Seas 215
Olympus high : and duck againe as low,
 As hell's from Heauen. If it were now to dye,
 'Twere now to be most happy. For I feare,
 My Soule hath her content so absolute,
 That not another comfort like to this, 220
 Succeedes in vnknowne Fate.
Def. The Heauens forbid
 But that our Loues
 And Comforts should encrease
 Euen as our dayes do grow. 225
Othe. Amen to rhat (sweet Powers)
 I cannot speake enough of this content,
 It stoppes me heere : it is too much of ioy.
 And this, and this the greatest discords be
 That ere our hearts shall make. 230

215. climbe] clime Qq.	225. do grow] Om. Steev. conj.
216. Olympus high] Olympus-high	226. rhat (sweet Powers)] that sweete
Steev.'93 et seq.	power , Q ₁ . that sweet Prayer! Warb.
high :] high , Qq.	that .— Sweet powers! Sing. that, sweet
217. from] for Q ₂ .	Powers! Rowe et cet.
it] / Rowe ii+.	229. And] Let Quincy (MS).
223, 224. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.	discords] discord Qq.
224. encrease] increase QqF ₄ .	[they kiffe . Q ₂ . kiffe . Q ₂ Q ₃ .

for his labours, and ought not to 'mock his useful toil' if now and then he wanders far, very far, afield. Desdemona had protested that she could not stay at home a 'moth of peace,' but must go to 'the War' with Othello; and to that, I think, is the allusion here.—ED.] WALKER (Vers. p. 175) notes this as pronounced dissolutè. BOOTH: They embrace, with delicacy. There is nothing of the animal in this 'noble savage.'

215. climbe] STEEVENS: Cf. 'The sea making mountaines of itself, over which the tossed and tottering ship should climbe, to be straight carried downe againe to a pit of hellish darknesse.'—Sidney's Arcadia, b. i.

217. WHALLEY (p. 71): Thus in Terence's Eunuchus [III, v, 2; ed. Weise], Chærea in an ecstasy of joy breaks out in a like exclamation: 'Pro Iuppiter! Nunc est profecto, interfici quum perpeti me possum, Ne hoc gaudium contaminet vita aegritudine aliqua.' BOOTH: To be uttered in low, foreboding tones.

229. and this] MALONE: So in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion: 'I pri'thee chide, if I have done amiss, But let my punishment be this and this [Kissing the Moor.' STEEVENS: Marlowe's play was written before that of Shakespeare, who might possibly have acted in it [see I, iii, 172]. BOOTH: I think their heart-throbs are better than kisses. Holding Desdemona clasped to his breast, Othello feels the quick beating of her heart against his own. [However much more refined than kissing this interpretation may seem to us to be, the stage direction in the Qq leaves us in no doubt as to the practice in Shakespeare's day.—ED.]

Iago. Oh you are well tun'd now : But Ile fet downe 231
the peggs that make this Musicke, as honest as I am.

Othe. Come : let vs to the Castle. [318 a]

Newes (Friends) our Warres are done :

The Turkes are drown'd. 235

How do's my old Acquaintance of this Isle ?

(Hony) you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus,

I haue found great loue among't them. Oh my Sweet,

I prattle out of fashon, and I doate 239

231, 232. Prose, Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob.
Warb. Verse, ending now, ... musique, ...
am. Qq et cet.

231. [Aside. Rowe et seq.

Om.] Om. Han.

[set] let Pope+, Cap. Jen. Steev.'85.

232. make makes Q₂Q₃.

233. let vs lets Q₁. let's Rowe ii+,
Cap. Mal. Steev.'93, Var. Sing.

234, 235. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

234. Newes] Now Rowe ii+.

235. drown'd] dre Q₂.

236. do's my] doe our Q₂, Pope+, Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

of this] of the Q₁. in this Rowe ii.

[To Montano. Cap.

237. Hony] Honny Qq. Honey F₄.

238. I haue] I've Pope+, Dyce iii,
Huds.

231. set downe] MALONE: Who can prove that set down [in opposition to let down] was not the language of Shakespeare's time, when a viol was spoken of? To set formerly signified to tune, though it is no longer used in that sense. STEEVENS: To 'set down' has this meaning in no other part of our author's works. However, virtus post numerus; we have secured the phrase, and the exemplification of it may follow when it will. BOSWELL: To 'set down' has the same meaning as to put down, to lower. Yet, as the phrase to let down is the usual phrase, and might be easily corrupted, it was probably the true one. COWDEN-CLARKE: It is possible that 'set down' was formerly as much a technical musical phrase as 'let down' is now. HUDSON: It is worth noting that Milton's Satan relents at the prospect of ruining the happiness before him, and prefaces the deed with a gush of pity for the victims; whereas the same thought puts Iago in a transport of jubilant ferocity. Is our idea of Satan's wickedness enhanced by his thus indulging such feelings, and then acting in defiance of them, or as if he had them not? or is Iago more devilish than he? BOOTH: This should be spoken with calm assurance; not too pointedly. He knows he will make the discord,—so does the audience.

236. Acquaintance] CAPELL supposed that this was addressed to Montano only, but both JENNENS and KNIGHT assume that it is here a noun of multitude.

237. well desir'd] STEEVENS: That is, much solicited by invitations. So in the Pastorals Letters: 'at the whych wedding I was with myn hostes, and also desyryd by the jentylman hym selfe' [i, 396, ed. Fenn; iii, 241, ed. Gairdner]. DELIUS doubts this interpretation, and prefers the simpler and more obvious meaning of welcome, well beloved, like 'a well-wish'd king' in Meas. for Meas., II, iv, 27; in which both ROLFE and the present editor agree with him.

239. fashon] JOHNSON: Out of method, without any settled order of discourse.

239. doate] SCHMIDT: Talk irrationally. GÉRARD: Comparez le mot français raoter.

In mine owne comforts. I prythee, good Iago,
 Go to the Bay, and difimbarke my Coffers:
 Bring thou the Master to the Cittadell,
 He is a good one, and his worthynesse
 Do's challenge much respect. Come Desdemona,
 Once more well met at Cyprus. 245

Exit Othello and Desdemona.

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the Harbour.
 Come thither, if thou be'st Valiant, (as they say bafe men being in Loue, haue then a Nobilitie in their Natures, more then is natue to them) lift-me; the Lieutenant to 250

240. comforts] comfort Pope+.
 I] Om. Pope+.
prythee] preethee Q₁. prethee Q₂Q₃

F₃F₄.
 241. difimbarke] difembarke F₃F₄.
my] thy Ff.

244. Do's] Doe's F₄.
Desdemona.] Desdemoda Q₁.

246. Exit...] Exit Q₁. Exeunt Q₂Q₃.
Exeunt F₄.

Scene VII. Pope+, Jen.

247. thou] you Ff, Rowe+, Cap.
Harbour] Habour Q₁.

248. thither] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. hither
 Qq, Cap. et cet.

[Calling him back. Cap.

248, 250. (as...them)] as...them—Q₁.
(as—them)—Q₂Q₃. as...them. Johns.

250. lift-me.] lift me. QqF₄, Rowe et seq. List me, Johns.

Lieutenant] Lieutenant Q₁Q₂.

242. Master] JOHNSON says this is the Pilot, but MALONE says that the 'Master' is a distinct person, and has the principal command and care of the navigation of the ship, under the captain; STEEVENS quotes from Smith's Sea-Grammar, 1627, 'The Master and his Mates are to direct the course, command all the sailors, for steering, trimming, and sailing the ship,' &c.

245. well met] JOHN HUNTER: This generally means you (not we) are well met, that is, I am glad to meet you.

247. This dialogue, COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 255) says, is the rehearsal on the dupe of the traitor's intentions on Othello.

247. COLLIER (ed. i): Roderigo, in his foolish haste, was probably starting off to meet Iago before Iago was himself gone, when he was impatiently recalled by 'Come hither.' Iago had already told him to meet him at the harbour, so that the repetition 'Come hither' was needless. Afterwards Iago changes his mind and tells Roderigo to meet him at the citadel. DELIUS supposes that line 242 was addressed to a servant. [To me, the simplest explanation of 'Come hither' is that Iago wishes Roderigo to come nearer to him that he may talk more confidentially.—ED.].

248. they say] Where is this reference to be found? To this question, with the suggestion that it might be in Plato's Symposium, where love is discussed, Prof. J. D. BUTLER (Shakespeareana, p. 444, Sept., 1885) replied that the original was to be found in the following passage: οὐδεὶς οὐτω καλός, ὅτινα οὐκ ἂν αὐτὸς ὁ ἔρως ἐνθεον ποιήσει πρὸς ἀρετήν, ὥστ' ἄνθρωπον εἶναι τῷ ἀρίστῳ φέσει.—Symposium, p. 179 a, ed. Hermann. 'No man is such a coward that love would not so inspire him to valor [or virtue in the classical sense] that he would become like him who is bravest [best] by nature.'

night watches on the Court of Guard. Firſt, I muſt tell 251 thee this : Deſdemona, is directly in loue with him.

Rod. With him? Why, 'tis not poſſible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus: and let thy ſoule be inſtructed. Marke me with what violence ſhe firſt lou'd 255 the Moore, but for bragging, and telling her fantaſticall lies. To loue him ſtill for prating, let not thy diſcreet heart thinke it. Her eye muſt be fed. And what delight ſhall ſhe haue to looke on the diuell? When the Blood is made dull with the Act of Sport, there ſhould be a 260 game to enflame it, and to giue Satiety a freſh appetite.

251. Court of Guard] Court-of-Guard
Dyce, Ktly.

of] Om. Rowe ii.

muſt] will Qq, Jen.

252. thee this: Deſdemona,] thee, this Deſdemona Q₂, Theob. Warb. Johns. thee
this: Deſdemona F₂F₄, Rowe, Pope, Han. Cam. thee this, Deſdemona Q₄Q₅
et cet.

254. finger] fingers F₄, Rowe, Pope,
Theob. Han. Warb.

255. firſt] Om. Ff, Rowe.

257. To] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt. and will ſhe Qq et cet.

257. prating,] Ff, Rowe, Knt. prating!
Cap. prating? Qq et cet.

thy] the Qq.

258. thinke it] thinke ſo Q₄.

260. be a game] Ff, Rowe, Pope. be again Q₂, Theob. +, Del. be,—again
Cap. et cet.

261. enflame] influence Wh. ii (misprint?).

to giue] giue Qq.

Satiety] fatiety Q₁Q₂. ſatiety Q₃.

appetite.] FfQq. appetite; Rowe,

Pope. appetite, or appetite,—Theob. Cap.
et cet.

251. Court of Guard] STEEVENS: The place where the Guard muſters.

253. BOOTH: Expreſs by a ſlight pause and by a reflective tone, after 'him,' that you believe her to be incapable of loving any man but Othello. In the dialogue that follows, Iago ſees that Roderigo is loſing hope, and ſhows his anxiety by rapid utterance and nervous manner.

254. thus] JOHNSON: On thy mouth, to ſtop it while thou art liſtning to a wiſer man. D'HUGUES: Ces paroles ſont accompagnées d'une pantomime, dans laquelle Iago ſaiſit la main de Roderigo, et porte l'un de ſes doigts ſur ſes lèvres, comme pour lui recommander le ſilence le plus abſolu.

257. The Qq have the better text here, albeit the infinitive in the Ff might be uſed as indicating ſupreme incredulity.—ED.

259. diuell] HUDSON: Another characteristic fling at Othello's color.

261. Satiety] The ſpelling in Q₁Q₂ is not accidental, but is the ſame as that in the only other three inſtances where the word occurs in Shakeſpeare. 'And yet not cloy thy lips with loth'd ſacietie,' V. & A., 1593; 'A mere ſacietie of commendations,' F₂, Tim. I, i. 'And with ſacietie ſeeks to quench his thirſt,' F₂, Tam. of Shr., I, i. I am inclined to think that occaſionally it muſt be pronounced as a trisyllable—certainly in the lines from Tam. of Shr. and V. & A., where a trisyllabic termination is wholly out of place. WALKER (Vers. 206) goes ſo far as to ſuggeſt that the Elizabethan poets dropped the ſyllable before -ty in 'all ſubſtantives, ſuch as honesty, liberty, purity. Hence majesty is almoſt uniformly a diſyllable.' BOADEN (Life of Kemble, i, 252), ſpeaking

Louelineſſe in fauour, ſimpathy in yeares, Manners, 262 and Beauties : all which the Moore is defectiue in. Now for want of theſe requir'd Conueniences, her delicate tenderneſſe wil finde it ſelfe abus'd, begin to heaue the, 265 gorge, difrelliſh and abhorre the Moore, very Nature wil inſtruēt her in it, and compell her to ſome ſecond choice.
 Now Sir, this granted (as it is a moſt pregnant and vnforc'd poſition) who ſtands ſo eminent in the degree of this Fortune, as Caffio do's : a knaue very voluble : no 270 further conſcionable, then in putting on the meere forme of Ciuill, and Humaine ſeeming, for the better compaſſe of his falt, and moſt hidden looſe Affection ? Why none, why none : A flipper, and ſubtle knaue, a finder of occa- 274

262. Louelineſſe] Loue lines Q₁. Louelynes, Q₃.

265, 266. the, gorge] the gorge QqFf.

266. abhorre] arbhore Q₃.

267. in it] to it Qq.

268. a moſt] moſt Q₁Q₃.

268, 269. unforc'd] unforced Qq.

269. eminent] eminently Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Cam. Ktly.

270. Fortune] F₁.

271. farther] farder Qq. farther Jen. Coll.

272. Humaine ſeeming] hand-ſeeming Q₁. human ſeeming Rowe, Pope. humane ſeeming Q₂Q₃Ff et cet.

compaſſe] Ff, Rowe. compassing

Qq et cet.

273. moſt hidden looſe] hidden Q₁. moſt hidden-looſe Walker, Sta. Del. Huds.

Affection ?] affections : Qq, Jen.

273, 274. Why none, why none :] Om. Qq, Pope+, Jen.

274. ſlipper, and ſubtle] ſubtle ſlippery Qq, Jen. Coll. ſlippery, and ſubtle F₁F₃. ſlippery and ſubtle F₄, Rowe+, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

274, 275. finder of occaſion] Ff. finder out of occaſions Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Cam. Ktly, Del. Huds. (finder-out, Cap. Del. Huds.). finder of warm occaſions Johns. finder out of occaſion Wh. i. finder of occaſions Rowe et cet.

of Sheridan's Readings, ſays : 'The word satiety is commonly pronounced, I think, with the full power given to all the letters as they ſtand, and the accent on the letter i in the ſecond ſyllable. Mr. Sheridan pronounced it as if written sassiety.' Although Boaden goes on to ſay that Chapman in his Homer always ſpells and accents this word sactety, he does not make it any clearer whether Sheridan pronounced it as of three ſyllables or of four. It is ſcarcely likely that Sheridan pronounced it sas-si-e-ty; it would bear too ſtrong a ſimilarity in ſound to society. In Sheridan's Dictionary, 1797, the pronunciation is given, sa-ti'-e-ty.—ED.

262. ſimpathy in yeares] PURNELL: Perhaps here, as in Mid. N. D. I, i, 137, Shakespeare is thinking of his own marriage.

266. very] As in Latin.

268. pregnant] NARES: Full of force or conviction, or full of proof in itſelf. [See Lear, II, i, 76, and note.—ED.]

270. voluble] STAUNTON: Not fluent in ſpeech, as the word now imports, but fickle, inconstant.

274. ſlipper] KNIGHT: Why, when the editors followed the Ff in the arrangement of the words, could they not have retained this fine old adjective?

sion : that he's an eye can stampe, and counterfeit Advan- 275
 tages, though true Advantage neuer present it selfe.
 A diuelish knaue : besides, the knaue is handsome, young:
 and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and greene mindes looke after. A pestilent compleat knaue, and the woman hath found him already. 280

Rodo. I cannot beleuee that in her, she's full of most blefs'd condition.

Iago. Blefs'd figges-end. The Wine she drinkes is made of grapes. If shee had beene blefs'd, shee would neuer haue lou'd the Moore : Blefs'd pudding. Didst thou 285 not see her paddle with the palme of his hand? Didst not marke that?

Rod. Yes, that I did : but that was but curtesie.

Iago. Leacherie by this hand : an Index, and obscure prologue to the History of Lust and foule Thoughts. 290
 They met so neere with their lippes, that their breathes embrac'd together. Villanous thoughts Rodorigo, when these mutabilities so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the Master, and maine exercise, th'incorporate conclusion : Pish. But Sir, be you rul'd by me. I haue 295

- | | |
|---|--|
| 275. he's] has QqFf. | 286. see her] se her Q ₃ . |
| eye] eye , Qq. | 286, 287. Didst...that] Om. Q ₄ . ded't |
| 275, 276. counterfeit...it selfe] counter- | ... that Q ₃ . |
| feit the true advantages neuer present | 288. that I did] Om. Qq, Cap. |
| themselves Q ₄ . | 289. Leacherie] Lechery Qq. |
| 277. A diuelish knaue] Om. Qq. | obscure] Om. Q ₄ . obscene Sta |
| 279. pestilent compleat] pestilent-com- | conj. |
| plete Walker, Sta. Dyce iii, Huds. | 291. met] meet Warb. |
| 280. hath] has Qq. | 292. Villanous thoughts] Om. Q ₄ . |
| 281. in her] of her Pope +. | Rodorigo] Om. Qq. |
| 282, 283, 284. blefs'd] bleß Qq, Cap. | 293. mutabilities] Ff, Rowe. mutua- |
| Jen. Cam. blessed Var. Coll. Dyce, Sta. | ities Qq et cet. |
| Glo. Ktly, Del. Huds. Rlf. | hard] hand Qq. |
| 282. condition] conditions Q ₃ , Cap. conj. | 294. comes...and] comes the Q ₂ , Johns. |
| Wh. i. | comes Roderigo, the master and the Q ₄ Q ₃ . |
| 283. drinkes] drinke F ₂ . | th'incorporate] the incorporate Q ₄ . |
| 285. Blefs'd pudding] Om. Qq. blessed | Q ₄ . the incorrupt Q ₃ . |
| pudding Dyce, Sta. Glo. Ktly, Coll. iii, | 295. Pish] Om. Qq. |
| Rlf., Huds. | |

278. greene mindes] JOHNSON : Minds unripe, not yet fully formed.
 282. condition] JOHNSON : Qualities, disposition of mind. [See IV, i, 210.]
 286. paddle] PURNELL : Corruption of pattle, to pat gently.
 289. Index] EDWARDS (Canons, p. 156) : The index was formerly placed at the beginning of a book. [See Ham. III, iv, 52.]

brought you from Venice. Watch you to night : for 296 the Command, Ile lay't vpon you. Cassio knowes you not : Ile not be farre from you. Do you finde some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or [318 b] tainting his discipline, or from what other course 300 you please, which the time shall more fauorably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he's rash, and very fodaine in Choller : and happely may strike at you, prouoke him that he may : for 305 euen out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to Mutiny.
 Whose qualification shall come into no true taste againe, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you haue a shorter iourney to your desires, by the meanes I shall then haue to preferre them. And the impediment 310 most profitably remoued, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperitie. 312

296, 297. for the] for your Q₄. for Q₄Q₅.

300. tainting] taunting Cap. conj. (p.
 26 a).

course] cause Q₄, Coll. iii.

304. he's] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. he is Qq
 et cet.

305. happely] haply with his Trunchen
 Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. (hoply Q₅, happely Wh. i). hap- pily Ff, Rowe+. haply Johns. et cet.

306. these] those Rowe ii+.
Cyprus] Cypres Q₄.

306. Mutiny.] mutiny, Qq. mutiny :
 Pope et seq.

307. qualification] qualifications Jen.
taste] trust Q₄. taft Q₅.

307, 308. againe] again't Qq.

308. by the] by F₃F₄, Rowe+.

displanting] displaying Q₅. trans- planting Theob. ii, Warb.

310. impediment] impediments Rowe
 ii+.

311. profitably] profitable Q₅.
the which] which Qq, Pope+, Jen. were] was Pope, Theob. Han.

Warb.

297. knowes you not] See note, line 182.

306. tainting] JOHNSON: Throwing a slur upon his discipline.

307. qualification] JOHNSON: Whose resentment shall not be so qualified or tem- pered as to be well tasted, as not to retain some bitterness. The phrase is harsh, at least to our ears. SINGER: 'Qualification,' in our old writers, signifies appeasement, pacification, assuagement of anger. 'To appease and qualifie one that is angry; tran-quillum facere ex irato.'—Baret. STAUNTON: Whose temperament, crisis. [In Baret, 1580, I do not find the definition literally as cited by Singer. Under 'Appease' (to which the word 'qualife' is referred) is given, 'To asswage, appease or qualife. Ira-cundias restringere et cupiditates.—Cic.' I do not think that Dr. Johnson's paraphrase is happy, although it is adopted by both DYCE and ROLFE. HALLIWELL, HUDSON, COWDEN-CLARKE, and PURNELL follow Singer.—ED.]

310. preferre] MALONÉ: That is, advance, promote.

Rodo. I will do this, if you can bring it to any opportunity. 313

Iago. I warrant thee. Meete me by and by at the Cittadell. I must fetch his Necessaries a Shore. Farewell. 315

Rodo. Adieu.

Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loues her, I do well beleeu't: That she loues him, 'tis apt, and of great Credite. 320
The Moore (howbeit that I endure him not)

Is of a constant, louing, Noble Nature,
And I dare thinke, he'lle proue to Desdemona
A most deere husband. Now I do loue her too,
Not out of absolute Lust, (though peradventure 325
I stand accomptant for as great a sin)

But partely led to dyet my Reuenge,
For that I do suspect the lustie Moore
Hath leap'd into my Seate. The thought whereof, 329

313. if you can] Ff, Rowe +, Steev.'85, Knt, Sing. Ktly, Del. if I can Qq et cet.

316. a Shore] ashore Q₁F₃F₄.

318. Adieu] Adue Qq.

Exit.] Om. Q₄.

[Scene VIII. Pope +, Jen.

319. beleeu't] Ff, Rowe, Cap. believe Pope +. beleue it Qq et cet.

321. howbeit] howbe't Qq.

322. constant, louing] constant-loving Sta. Dyce iii.

louing, Noble] noble, louing Qq.

324. do] Om. Pope +.

325. peradventure] perapventure Q₃.

326. accomptant] accountant Q₄FL.

327. led] lead Qq.

328. lustie] lustfull Qq, Mal. Coll. i lusty Ff et cet.

329. thought] thoughts F₄, Rowe.

313. if you can] JENNENS: The sense requires if I can; Iago had brought the affair to opportunity by fixing on Roderigo for one of the watch; Roderigo's part remained to be done, viz.: provoking Cassio, which in this speech he promises to do, if opportunity offered to give him cause. KNIGHT: But Roderigo is not one of those who relies upon himself; and the reading of the Ff is far more characteristic. Iago replies to this expression of reliance on him, 'I warrant thee.' DYCE (ed. iii): Iago's reply, in fact, determines nothing; it suits equally well with either lection.

320. him] BOOTH: Pause, as though questioning the possibility of this.

322. constant, louing] WALKER (Crit. i, 29): I think Shakespeare wrote constant-loving; inasmuch as Othello's nature, with all its aptitude for true, manly affection, could hardly be described as, emphatically, a loving nature.

325, 327. peradventure . . . partely] SWINBURNE (A Study, &c., p. 179, note). What would at least be partly lust in another man is all but purely hatred in Iago. For 'partly' read wholly, and for 'peradventure' read assuredly, and the incarnate father of lies, made manifest in the flesh, here speaks all but all the truth for once, to himself alone.

329. seate] COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 255): This thought, originally by Iago's own

Doth (like a poyfonous Minerall) gnaw my Inwardes : 330
 And nothing can, or shall content my Soule
 Till I am eeuen'd with him, wife, for wift.
 Or fayling fo, yet that I put the Moore,
 At leaft into a Ielouzie fo strong
 That iudgement cannot cure. Which thing to do, 335
 If this poore Trafh of Venice, whom I trace

- | | |
|--|---|
| 331. or] nor Qq. | 336. Trafh...trace] trafh...crush Q ₂ , |
| 332. eeuen'd] euen Qq, Steev. Mal. | Mal. brach...trace Theob. brach...cher- |
| Sing. | ish Warb. trash...trash Steev. Var. Dyce, |
| wif] F. | Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Rlife. brach... |
| 334. At leaft] At last Theob. ii, Warb. | trash Coll. iii (MS), Sing. ii, Huds. |
| Johns. | |

confession a mere suspicion, is now ripening, and gnaws his base nature as his own 'poisonous mineral' is about to gnaw the noble heart of his general.

330. Minerall] JOHNSON: This is philosophical. Mineral poisons kill by corrosion.

332. eeuen'd] According to SCHMIDT (Lex.), even is used as a verb in two other passages: All's Well, I, iii, 3; Cymb. III, iv, 184. SKOTTOWE (ii, 78): Of this enterprise of Iago nothing afterwards is heard; Shakespeare seems either to have forgotten his original intentions, or found that Iago had already enough business on his hands. BOOTH: This line should be very intense, 'not loud, but deep.'

336. Trash . . . trace] WARBURTON: 'A trifling insignificant fellow may perhaps be called Trash, but the metaphor of hunting is not preserved. I suppose therefore that the word is brach, which is a low species of hounds of the chase, and a term generally used in contempt. As to "trace," crush of Q₂ is plainly a corruption of cherish.' WARTON was the first to suggest that trash should be substituted for 'trace,' but he was not strictly accurate in his definition of its technical meaning; he supposed that it meant simply to rate, to check, and cited Caratach's reply to Nennius (Bonduca, I, i) when Nennius taunted him with flying from the Romans: 'I fled too; But not so fast,—your jewel had been lost then, Young Hengo there; he trash'd me,' i. e., says Warton, he stopped me. At last STEEVENS (1793) discovered the meaning of trash which has since been generally accepted. 'To trash is still a hunter's phrase, and signifies to fasten a weight on the neck of a dog, when his speed is superior to that of his companions. . . . "Trash" in the first instance in this line may be used to signify a worthless hound, as the same term is afterwards employed to describe a worthless female: "I do suspect this trash" (V, i, 108). It is scarcely necessary to support the present jingle on the word, it is so much in our author's manner, although his worst.' KNIGHT upholds 'trace,' but was misled in his interpretation. 'Trash' and 'trace,' says Knight, 'are used with perfect propriety. The "trash" is the thing traced, put in traces—confined—as an untrained worthless dog is held, and hence the present meaning of trash.' DYCE (Remarks, p. 237): Knight's explanation of 'trash' is borrowed from Richardson's Dict., where we find: 'A trash—anything (man, dog) trashed or traced or confined in traces, that it may not, because it would, run or pursue too fast, rashly; like an untrained dog; a worthless hound; hence it is anything worthless,' &c. But in this explanation Richardson is undoubtedly mistaken; he gives to trash a meaning which it never did and never could bear. When used as a huntsman or dog-trainer's term, or metaphorically with an allusion to their practices, it invariably

For his quicke hunting, stand the putting on, 337
 Ile haue our Michael Cassio on the hip, signifies the thing WHICH RESTRAINS: 'Above this lower roome shall be your huntsmans lodging, wherein hee shall also keep his coopes, liams, collars, trashes, boxes,' &c.—Markham's Countrie Contentments, b. i. c., i, p. 15, 1615. The trash, whether a strap, a rope dragging loose on the ground, or a weight, was fastened round the neck of a too forward dog, to check his movements. COLLIER (ed. ii) in justification of his (MS.) says that 'trash and trace were used somewhat synonymously, as a mode of keeping back braches, i. e. dogs, who hunted too quickly. Iago speaks of Roderigo as a poor hound, who was so eager in the chase that it was necessary to restrain him.' SINGER (ed. ii) thinks that Warburton's brack is correct, and that crush is a misprint for trash. 'The converse has happened in the Ind. to the Tam. of Shr., where brack has been misprinted trash.' 'Roderigo is cheeked or trashed by Iago for his quick hunting; i. e. he is in too great a hurry to come to an explanation with Desdemona.' WHITE (ed. i): 'Whom I trash,' i. e. whom I restrain, whip in. 'Trace' seems to have been only a varied form of trash. The misprint in the O to is evidently due to the likeness of t and o. STAUNTON cannot subscribe to Warburton's emendation brack, 'although persuaded that "trash of Venice" is a vitiation of what the poet wrote. Trash signifying to clog, to impede, is surely the genuine word for "trace" of the Folio.' BAILEY (ii, 108): It is plain to me that the genuine reading is leash, i. e. whom I hold in leash for the quick hunting of the Moor. KNIGHTLEY (Exp. 302): 'The jingle,' Steevens says, 'being in Shakespeare's manner.' Now to this I object—first, that this was not Shakespeare's manner, for the apparent instances of it are mostly printers' blunders; and, secondly, that Roderigo did not require to be trashed or checked 'for his quick hunting,' for he was always hanging back and ready to give up the chase till urged on by Iago. This last objection also applies to 'trace' in the sense of follow or accompany. It would apply also, though in a less degree, to train, which would yield a tolerable sense. On the whole, I think that Iago's words may have been praise, which would suit his sneering, ironical tone. As to brack, though we frequently find it used of a woman, I believe it was never applied to a man. DYCE (ed. iii): I give the reading of Steevens, but I now (1865) entertain great doubts if it be what Shakespeare wrote. [I have reserved HALLIWELL's note for the last, because it gives what seems to me to be the true interpretation; the Folio needs no change; 'trace' bears here one of its commonest meanings; 'For his quick hunting' does not mean, because of his quick hunting but in order to make him, for the purpose of making him, hunt quickly, a meaning of 'for' which White (ed. ii) especially notes, and, thus noting it, it is strange that White should have missed the common meaning of the word 'trace.' It was Steevens who gave a bias to the word from which it never recovered until Halliwell set it straight, whose note is as follows: 'The meaning seems to be—if this wretched fellow, whose steps I carefully watch in order to quicken his pace, follows my directions, I will have our Michael Cassio on the hip.'—ED.]

337. the putting on] ROLFE: This refers to his picking a quarrel with Cassio, not to his 'quick hunting' of Desdemona.

338. hip] JOHNSON: A phrase from the art of wrestling. DYCE (Remarks, p. 52): But in his Dictionary Johnson defines the phrase, and with more probability, from hunting: 'the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.' [The phrase occurs twice in Mer. of Ven. and here, the only three times in Shakespeare; as instances elsewhere are not common, Dyce gives four; in none of them, however, is it

Abuse him to the Moore, in the right garbe
 (For I feare Cassio with my Night-Cape too) 340
 Make the Moore thanke me, loue me, and reward me,
 For making him egregiously an Asse,
 And practising vpon his peace, and quiet,
 Euen to madnesse. 'Tis heere : but yet confus'd,
 Knaueries plaine face, is neuer seene, till vs'd. Exit. 345

339. right] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob. cap Ff.
 Johns. Knt. ranke Qq et cet. too] to Qq.
 340. Night-Cape] night cap Qq. Night- 344. madnesse] madnesse.—Q₂Q₃.

clear to me that the simile is derived from hunting. Halliwell gives three references; two, like those of Dyce, are uncertain, one from Fuller's Historie of the Holy Warre, 1647, is decidedly from wrestling, 'fearing to wrestle with the king, who had him on the hip, and could out him at pleasure for his bad manners.'—ED.]

339. right garbe] Since JOHNSON'S time, every modern editor, except KNIGHT, has preferred rank of the Qto, which Steevens interprets as meaning 'grossly, i. e. without mincing the matter,' and cites Marston's Dutch Courtesan [III, i], 'Whether, in the ranke name of madnesse,—whether?' To this meaning MALONE adds, lascivious, as in Mer. of Ven. [I, iii, 81], 'The ewes, being rank.' For 'garbe' STEEVENS cites, 'as perhaps employed in the sense here required,' Chapman's Odyssey [xviii, 482] where 'cheek-proud Melantho' rails at the disguised Ulysses: 'Or 'tis like To prove your native garb, your tongue will strike On this side of your mouth.' [Despite this array of authority, I cannot but think the Folio has the true reading. Iago's plans are not settled, all is 'but yet confus'd,' details will depend on circumstances as they arise; the main point is to get Cassio on the hip, and then abuse him to the Moor in the right garb, in the best fashion, whatever that fashion may turn out to be. If rank were the word here, I do not think that Iago would say 'the rank garb,' as though there were but one coarse way of dealing, but rather 'in a rank garb.' Whether 'garb' is here used subjectively or objectively, as the style of address which Iago will himself assume in approaching Othello or as the address which he will impute to Cassio, is scarcely important; the question lies in the use of 'right' or rank. I prefer the former. It is, probably, the fear which Iago expresses in the next line that has influenced the preference for rank over 'right.' But this fear is only Iago's 'motive-hunting' for dieting his revenge on Cassio; it does not specify the manner of his revenge, all that, as he expressly says, is but yet confused, which would hardly be true if he had already decided that the garb in which Cassio was to be abused should be rank. For references to 'garb' see Lear, II, ii, 92. SINGER (ed. ii) says that 'rank garb' is merely in the right down or straightforward fashion, and in support refers to 'the right butterwoman's rank to market,' which is about as apt as would be the familiar phrase in which Hamlet's uncle refers to his own offence. An appropriate support of the Folio is to be found in Mid. N. D., where Helena says, 'I am a right maid for cowardice,' or in the 'right butterwoman' in Singer's own quotation from As You Like It.—ED.]

344. madnesse] HUDSON: Here we have perhaps the most appalling outcome of Iago's proper character—namely, a pride of intellect, or lust of the brain, which exults above all things in being able to make himself and others pass for just the reverse of Scena Secunda.Enter Othello's, Herald with a Proclamation.

Herald. It is Othello's pleasure, our Noble and Valiant Generall. That vpon certaine tydings now arriu'd, importing the meere perdition of the Turkish Fleete: 5 euery man put himselfe into Triumph. Some to daunce, some to make Bonfires, each man, to what Sport and Reuels his addition leads him. For besides thefe bene- 8

1. Scena Secunda.] Om. Qq. Scæna Secunda F₂. Scene IX. Pope+, Jen. The Street. Pope.

2. Enter...] Enter a Gentleman reading a Proclamation. Q₁.

3. Herald.] Om. Qq. pleasure,] pleasure; Q₁.

4. Generall.] Generall; Ff, Rowe. Generall, Qq et cet.

arriu'd] arriued Qq.

6. euery] that euery Qq.

6. Triumph.] triumph: or triumph; Qq et cet.

7. to make] make Qq.

Bonfires] bonefires Q₁Q₃F₂, Pope, Theob. Han. bonefirs Q₂. Bone-fires F₂, Rowe.

8. addition] Ff. minde Q₁, Pope+, Jen. addiction Q₂Q₃, Rowe et cet. mind's addiction Anon. (ap. Cam.).

theſe] this Rowe ii+.

what they are; that is, in being an overmatch for truth and Nature themselves. And this soliloquy is, I am apt to think, Shakespeare's supreme instance of psychologic subtilty and insight; as it is also Iago's most pregnant disclosure of his real springs of action, or what Coleridge aptly calls 'the motive-hunting of a motiveless malignity.' For it is not that Iago really believes or suspects that either Cassio or Othello has wronged him in the way he intimates; he is merely seeking to opiate or appease certain qualms of conscience by a sort of extemporized make-believe in that kind.

345. scene] JOHNSON: An honest man acts upon a plan, and forecasts his designs; but a knave depends upon temporary and local opportunities, and never knows his own purpose but at the time of execution.

5. meere] ABBOTT, § 15: That is, unmixed with anything else; hence, by inference, intact, complete.

6. put himselfe into] For instances of this reflexive use, see SCHMIDT (Lex.), where, however, I find neither this passage nor that quoted by Steevens in Per. I, ii, 24.

8. addition] DYCE (ed. iii) calls this a 'stark misprint.' Is it? Granting, for a moment, that it is nonsense, would it be altogether out of place in the mouth of a pompous Herald, who has just given us a taste of his quality in the stilted phrase, 'put himself into triumph'? But is there not a glimmer of meaning to be discovered in it? That 'addition' may mean title we have seen in Macb., Ham., and Lear, and that it may so mean elsewhere, see examples in Schmidt, s. v. Would it then be a 'stark misprint' were the Herald to use it here in this military sense and transfer the title to the holder of the rank himself? Then the meaning is that the soldiers are to enjoy themselves according to their rank—a somewhat superfluous proclamation, it must be confessed; it is hardly to be supposed that Cassio and Iago would fall to making bonfires; yet is it not in keeping with the rest of the Herald's fiціаль Newes, it is the Celebration of his Nuptiall. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offi- 10 ces are open, & there is full libertie of Feasting from this presenr houre of fwe, till the Bell haue told eleuen. [319 a] Bleffe the Isle of Cyprus, and our Noble Generall Othel- lo. Exit.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio, and Attendants. 15

Othe. Good Michael, looke you to the guard to night.

- | | |
|--|--|
| 9. Celebration] Delebration F ₃ .
Nuptiall] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.
Knt, Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Del. Huds.
Rlse, Wh. ii. Nuptialls Qq et cet. | 13. Bleffe] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt.
Heauen bleffe Qq et cet.
Cyprus] Cypres Q ₁ .
13, 14. Bleffe ... Othello .] As a separate line, Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. |
| 11. of Feasting] Om. Qq. | 14. Exit .] Om. Qq. |
| 12. presenr] F ₁ .
fwe] nine Cap. conj. (p. 26 b).
haue] hath Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. | Scene X. Han. Johns. Jen. Scene III.
Cap. et seq. |
| Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly. | The Castle. Theob. |
| told] toll'd F ₃ , F ₄ , Rowe, Pope, Han.
Wh. i. | 15. Enter ...] Enter Othello, Cassio, and
Desdemona. Qq. |

phrases? But there is an instance in Tro. & Cress. (I, ii, 24) where 'addition' seems to stand for characteristic quality or natural bent; it is where Alexander says that Ajax 'hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions; he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant.' This is the meaning that I think it possible for 'addition' to bear here, certainly with enough plausibility to remove it from a black list of 'stark misprints.' Each man is to betake himself to what sport or revel his particular disposition leads him to indulge in; and if in 'addition' a military flavor be found, it is all the more appropriate among soldiers. Addiction is a cacophonous word, never used by Shakespeare, except in one other passage.—ED.]

9. Nuptiall] RICHARDSON (Dict. s. v.): The noun is usually written with the plural termination s. Shakespeare writes it without. [This assertion of Richardson is an illustration of the fact which we are all so liable to forget, viz.: that, omitting V. & A. and Lucrece, we cannot know how Shakespeare wrote anything except through the medium of the printers, whose work, it is believed, he never corrected. In this very word we find the s of the plural in the Qq, which some editors think were fresher from Shakespeare's hand than the Folio.—ED.]

10. offices] HALLIWELL: The rooms appropriated to the upper servants of great families.

13. Blesse] WALKER (i, 215) supposes that the word God, softened in the Qq, was omitted by the editor of the Folio in deference to the well-known act of Parliament; or was, perhaps, expunged by the licenser of the press.

16. Good Michael] COWDEN-CLARKE (The Shakespeare Key, p. 91): These few words, seemingly insignificant, are of important dramatic use. They give augmented effect to Othello's subsequent anger at Cassio's being betrayed not only into neglect of duty in preserving order, but into breach of order himself; while they set well before the mind Othello's trust and confidence in Cassio as his chosen officer, and his liking for him as a personal friend, calling him by his Christian name 'Michael,' which, after

Let's teach our felues that Honourable stop, 17
Not to out-sport discretion.

Caf. Iago, hath direction what to do.
But notwithstanding with my personall eye 20
Will I looke to't.

Othe. Iago, is most honest:
Michael, goodnight. To morrow with your earliest,
Let me haue speech with you. Come my deere Loue,
The purchase made, the fruites are to ensue, 25
That profit's yet to come 'twene me, and you.
Goodnight. Exit.

Enter Iago.

Caf. Welcome Iago: we must to the Watch.
Iago. Not this houre Lieutenant: 'tis not yet ten 30 o'th'clocke. Our Generall cast vs thus earely for the loue of his Desdemona: Who, let vs not therefore blame;
he hath not yet made wanton the night with her: and she is sport for Loue.

Caf. She's a most exquisite Lady. 35

- | | |
|---|--|
| 17. that] the Q ₁ . | (ap. Cam.). |
| 19. direction] directed Q ₁ . | 27. Exit.] Exit Othello and Desdemona. |
| 20. notwithstanding] notwithstanding | Qq. |
| F ₄ . | 30. Lieutenant] Leutenant Q ₁ Q ₂ . |
| 21. to't] to it Qq, Jen. | Lieutenant F ₄ . |
| 23. your] our Mal. Steev. Var. | 31. o'th'clocke] aclock Qq. o'clock Cap. |
| 24. you.] you , Qq. | Steev. Mal. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Del. |
| [To Desd. Johns. | 32. Desdemona:] Desdemona Q ₁ . Des- |
| 26. That] The Q ₁ . | demonia , Q ₁ Q ₂ . |
| profit's] profits Qq. | Who] Qq, Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. |
| 'twene] 'tween F ₄ , Rowe +, Knt, | Del. Huds. Rife, Wh. ii. Whom Ff et cet. |
| Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Wh. ii. twene F ₄ . | 33. wanton the night] the wanton night |
| twist Qq et cet. | Pope, Han. |
| 27. Goodnight] Cas. Goodnight Anon. | 35. She's] She is Qq, Jen. |

the one final impressive appeal, 'How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?' he never again uses.

22. honest] D'HUGUES: Il semble, à partir de ce moment, que l'épithète 'honest' soit devenue inséparable, dans la pensée d'Othello, du nom de ce scélérat. La destinée a de ces ironies, et l'esprit humain de ces aberrations.

31. cast] JOHNSON, perhaps forgetting that in I, i, 164, he had given to this word the meaning which is now generally accepted, to dismiss, here interprets it as equivalent to 'appointed us to our stations. To cast the play' he continues, 'is to assign to every actor his proper part.' See II, ii, 302, and V, ii, 400, where the meaning to dismiss is equally suitable.—ED.

- Iago.* And Ile warrant her, full of Game. 36
Caf. Indeed shes a most fresh and delicate creature.
Iago. What an eye she ha's?
Methinkes it founds a parley to prouocation.
Caf. An inuiting eye: 40
And yet me thinkes right modeft.
Iago. And when she speakes,
Is it not an Alarum to Loue?
Caf. She is indeed perfection.
Iago. Well: happinesse to their Sheetes. Come Lieu- 45 tenant, I haue a stope of Wine, and heere without are a brace of Cyprus Gallants, that would faine haue a measure to the health of blacke Othello.
Caf. Not to night, good Iago, I haue very poore, and vnhappy Braines for drinking. I could well with 50 Curtesie would inuent some other Custome of entertainment. 52

36. her,] her QqF, Rowe, Pope, Han. Jen.

37. shes] she is Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. she's Ff et cet.

38, 39. Prose, Pope et seq.

38. ha's f] has f QqF, F, has / Han.

39. to] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Dyce, Wh. i, Cam. Del. of Qq et cet.

40-43. Two lines, Qq, Pope et seq.

43. Is...Loue f] tis an alarme to loue. Qq, Jen.

43. Alarum] alarm Mal. Steev.

44. She is] It is Q.

45. Well:] Well, Qq, Rowe et seq.

Sheetes.] sheetes—Qq. sheets / Han.

46. I haue] haue Jen. (misprint?).

stope] stoup Glo. Cam. Rife, Wh. ii. stoop Rowe et cet.

47. Cyprus] Cypres Q. Cyprus Cap.

48. of] of the Qq, Theob. Warb. Johns.

Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly.

39. BOOTH: Iago watches Cassio intently.

43. Alarum] JOHNSON: The voice may sound an alarm more properly than the eye can sound a parley. RITSON (p. 229): The eye is often said to speak. Thus we frequently hear of the language of the eye. Surely that which can talk may, without any violent stretch of the figure, be allowed to sound a parley. STEEVENS: So in Tro. & Cress. IV, v, 55: 'There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip, Nay, her foot speaks.' BOOTH: So in Mer. of Ven. I, i, 164: 'from her eyes I did receive fair speechless messages.'

46. stope] It occurred to me that the uniformity of spelling in Qq and Ff might nere betoken the pronunciation, especially as this form is given by SKEAT as Middle-English. But a comparison of the five times where the word occurs in Shakespeare shows that no such inference can be drawn. It is 'stoope' in Twelfth Night, II, iii, 14; 'stope,' Id. 129; 'stoupe,' Ham. V, i, 68; 'stopes,' Id. 278. The fact that the spelling agrees in three cases out of the five might at best indicate that the pronunciation was in the transition state from the old to the new.—ED.

Iago. Oh, they are our Friends : but one Cup, Ile drinke for you. 53

Cassio. I haue drunke but one Cup to night, and that was craftily qualified too : and behold what inouation it makes heere. I am infortunate in the infirmity, and dare not taske my weakenesse with any more. 55

Iago. What man? 'Tis a night of Reuels, the Gallants desire it. 60

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Heere, at the doore : I pray you call them in.

Cas. Ile do't, but it dislikes me. Exit.

Iago. If I can fasten but one Cup vpon him
With that which he hath drunke to night alreadie, 65
He'l be as full of Quarrell, and offence
As my yong Mistris dogge.
Now my sicke Foole Rodorigo,
Whom Loue hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To *Dejdemon*a hath to night Carrows'd. 70

- | | |
|--|---|
| 53. Friends :] friends — Qq. | F ₄ , Rowe, Pope. mistress' Theob. et seq. |
| Cup :] Cup F ₄ , Rowe. cup : Qq, | 67. dogge :] dog :— Qq. dog , Ff. |
| Theob. ii et seq. | 68. Now my] Noy mw Q ₂ . |
| 55. haue] ha Qq. | 69. Whom...out] (Whom...out) Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 56. too :] to , Q ₂ Q ₃ . Om. Johns. | hath] has Qq. |
| 57. infornate] unfortunate Qq. | out] outward Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal. |
| 59. Reuels :] revels ; Cap. | Var. Coll. Wh. i. |
| 63. Exit .] Om. Ff. | 70. Carrows'd :] carroust Qq. Carrows'd , |
| 67, 68. One line, Qq, Cap. et seq. | F ₄ F ₅ . Carrows'd F ₄ . |
| 67. Mistris] Mistris's F ₃ . Mistris's | |

54. Ile drink for you] What does this mean? Is it that Iago will use any and every argument, even one as ridiculous as drinking by proxy, to induce Cassio to join the revels?—ED.

56. craftily qualified] JOHNSON: Slyly mixed with water. [Cannot 'craftily' here mean strongly, powerfully? 'I have drunk but one cup, and that was "powerful weak," too.' The necessity of his 'qualifying' his cup furtively is not clearly apparent to me, when he confesses the action thus freely to Iago. To be sure, Cassio may have accompanied the confession with a wink to indicate that he thought it a good joke; but this jars a little with my conception of Cassio's character. I prefer to think that he openly and freely qualified that first cup, and the innovation it wrought made him forget to qualify the second among the lads of Cyprus.—ED.]

57. heere] BOOTH: Merely a flushed face.

63. it dislikes] For similar instances of the use of impersonal verbs, see ABBOTT, § 297.

64. one Cup] BOOTH: This should warn Cassio against overdoing the intoxication.

Potations, pottle-deepe; and he's to watch. 71
 Three else of Cyprus, Noble swelling Spirites,
 (That hold their Honours in a wary distance,
 The very Elements of this Warrelike Isle)
 Haue I to night fluster'd with flowing Cups, 75
 And they Watch too.
 Now 'mongst this Flocke of drunkards [319 b]
 Am I put to our Cassio in some Action
 That may offend the Isle. But here they come.

Enter Cassio, Montano, and Gentlemen. 80

If Consequence do but approue my dreame,
 My Boate failes freely, both with winde and Streame.
Caf. 'Fore heauen, they haue giuen me a rowfe already. 83

- | | |
|---|---|
| 71. watch.] watch Qq.
 72. else] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt, Dyce i,
 Wh. i. elues Coll. (MS). lads Qq et cet.
 Cyprus] Cypres Q₁.
 73. Honours] honour Qq.
 76, 77. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.
 76. they] the Qq.
 77. 'mongst] amongst Q₃.
 78. Am I] I am Qq. And I F₃F₄.
 in] on Cap. conj. (p. 26 v).
 79. Two lines, Qq. | 80. Enter...] Enter Montanio, Cassio,
 and others (after Isle, line 79), Qq. Re-
 enter... (after line 79), Cap.
 Scene X. Pope, Warb. Scene XI. Han.
 Johns. Jen.
 81. dreame] Deem Theob. Han. Warb.
 Cap.
 83. 'Fore heauen] Fore God Qq, Cap.
 Jen. Sta. Glo. Cam. Dyce iii, Huds. Rlfe,
 Wh. ii. |
|---|---|

71. pottle-deepe] DYCE (Gloss.): A pottle was a measure of two quarts ('A Pot-tle, Quatuor libra liquidorum, congi Anglicani dimidium,' Coles's Lat. and Eng.
Dict.), but frequently meaning a drinking-vessel without reference to the measure.

72. else] DELIUS suggests, with great ingenuity, that this may have been meant for Ls, the abbreviation of Lords. DYCE (ed. iii): In my former edition I followed the Folio (comparing King John, II, i, 276: 'Bastards and else'); but I now think it safer to adhere to the lection of the Qq.

73. ROLFE: That is, are sensitive with regard to their honour, or quick to take offence at a supposed insult.

74. Elements] JOHNSON: As quarrelsome as the discordia semina rerum; as quick in opposition as fire and water. SCHMIDT (Lex.): A pure extract, as it were, the very quintessence of the isle.

80. Montano] BOOTH doubts if Shakespeare meant to have Montano take part in this carouse, and therefore makes him enter later from a different direction just in time to see Cassio stagger off. STEEVENS felt the same impropriety; see his note line 85.

81. Consequence] An instance of the omission of the plural s in words whose termination has a plural sound. See WALKER's Vers. Art. li, p. 243. This line is not there noted. Or see ABBOTT, § 471.

81. dreame] THEOBALD suggested and adopted deem, i. e. opinion, judgement.
 JOHNSON: I rather read scheme. But why should 'dream' be rejected? Every scheme subsisting only in the imagination may be termed a 'dream.'

Mon. Good-faith a litle one : not past a pint, as I am a Souldier. 85

Iago. Some Wine hoa.

And let me the Cannakin clinke, clinke:

And let me the Cannakin clinke.

A Souldiers a man : Oh, mans life's but a span,

Why then let a Souldier drinke. 90

Some Wine Boyes.

Cap. 'Fore Heauen : an excellent Song.

Iago. I learn'd it in England : where indeed they are most potent in Potting. Your Dane, your Germaine, and your swag-belly'd Hollander, (drinke hoa) are 95
nothing to your English.

Cassio. Is your Englishmen so exquisite in his drinking? 98

84. I am] I'm Cap.

84, 104. Mon.] Gent. Booth.

84, 85. as...Souldier] Separate line, Qq,
Cap. Steev.'85, Mal.'90.

87. [Iago sings. Rowe.

87, 88. Cannakin] Cannikin Qq, Jen.

87. clinke, clinke:] clink, clink, clink.
Han. Johns. Cap.

88. clinke.] clinke, clinke: Qq.

89. One line, QqFf, Rowe+, Jen. Knt.
Two lines, Cap. et cet.

Oh...life's] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Knt,

Wh. i, Sta. Del. Man's life's Coll. iii. a life's Qq et cet.

91. Some Wine] Come, wine Jen.

92. 'Fore Heauen] Fore God Qq, Cap.
Jen. Sta. Glo. Cam. Dyce iii, Huds. Rlf, Wh. ii.

96. English] Englishman Coll. ii (MS).

97. Englishmen] Englilh man Qq.
Englishman Ff et cet.

exquisite] FfQq, Rowe+, Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Rlf. expert Qq
et cet.

84. rowse] GIFFORD (The Duke of Milan, Massinger, vol. i, p. 237, ed. 1805): A 'rouse' was a large glass ('not past a pint' as Iago [sic] says) in which a health was given, the drinking of which by the rest of the company formed a carouse. Barnaby Rich is exceedingly angry with the inventor of the custom, which, however, with a laudable zeal for the honour of his country, he attributes to an Englishman, who, it seems, 'had his brains beat out with a pottlepot' for his ingenuity. There could be no rouse or carouse unless the glasses were emptied. In process of time both these words were used in a laxer sense. [See Ham. I, ii, 127; I, iv, 8.] BOOTH: Don't be drunk, but silly,—absurdly polite.

85. Souldier] STEEVENS: If Montano was Othello's predecessor in the government of Cyprus (as we are told in the Dramatis Personæ), he is not very characteristically employed in the present scene, where he is tippling with people already flustered, and encouraging a subaltern officer, who commands a midnight guard, to drink to excess.

87, &c. HALLIWELL: This song appears to be referred to in The Knaue in Grain new Vampt, 1640: 'Fub. The drawers have drawne him out, sir.—Lod. Clinke, boyes.—Toma. Drinke, boys.—Stult. And let the cannikin clinke, boyes.' The song itself does not appear to have been discovered. [This allusion I cannot find in Ingleby's Centurie of Prayse.—ED.]

Iago. Why, he drinkes you with facillitie, your Dane dead drunke. He sweates not to ouerthrow your Al- 100 maine. He giues your Hollander a vomit, ere the next Pottle can be fill'd.

Caf. To the health of our Generall.

Mon. I am for it Lieutenant : and Ile do you Iustice.

Iago. Oh sweet England. 105

King Stephen was and-a worthy Peere,

100. sweates] sweares F₂F₃. sweares dash after England, and with king...peere F₄ Rowe. in Roman) Q₁.

104. Ile] I will Q₁, Jen.

106. and-a] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. and 105, 106. Oh...Peere] One line (with a Q₂Q₃. an a Theob. Warb. Johns. a Q₁

et cet.

97. Englishmen] STEEVENS: This accomplishment in the English is likewise mentioned in B. and F.'s The Captain [III, ii, p. 267, ed. Dyce]: 'Lod. Are the Englishmen Such stubborn drinkers? Piso. Not a leak at sea Can suck more liquor; you shall have their children Christen'd in mull'd sack, and, at five years old, Able to knock a Dane down.' SINGER (ed. ii): Peacham, in his Compleat Gentleman, 1622, p. 193, has a section entitled, 'Drinking the Plague of our English Gentry,' in which he says, 'Within these fiftie or threescore yeares it was a rare thing with us to see a drunken man, our nation carrying the name of the most sober and temperate of any other in the world. But since we had to doe in the quarrell of the Netherlands . . . the custom of drinking and pledging healthes was brought over into England; wherein let the Dutch be their owne judges, if we equall them not; yea I think rather excell them.

99. you] D'HUGUES: Comme on dit en français: 'il vous boit.'

103. BOOTH: Iago empties his own glass on the ground.

106, &c. STEEVENS: So in Greene's Quippe for an Vpstart Courtier [1592, vol. xi, p. 234, ed. Grosart], 'I tell thee sawcy skipiack, it was a good and blessed time heer in England when K. Stephen wore a pair of cloth breeches of a Noble a paire, and thought them passing costlye.' HALLIWELL: This ballad is alluded to in Dekker's Guls Horn-book [1609, vol. ii, p. 210, ed. Grosart]: 'his breeches were not so much worth as K. Stephen's, that cost but a poore noble.' [These two allusions, together with the version in Percy's Reliques, point to an English origin of this song. The earliest Scotch version (according to J. W. E., N. & Qu., 1876, 5th, v, 249,) is in Allan Ramsay's Tea-Table Miscellany, about 1728, certainly later than Percy's MS. by three-quarters of a century, if not more. CHAPPELL (Pop. Mus., ii, 505) remarks that the 'tune to "Take thy old Cloak about thee" is evidently formed out of Green Sleeves,' an additional reason, perhaps, for assuming its English origin. The version in Percy's Folio Manuscript, ii, 324, is as follows:

'King Harry was a verry good K[ing:]
I trow his hose cost but a Crowne;
he thought them 12^d ouer to deere,
therfor he called the taylor Clowne.
he was King & wore the Crowne, & thouse but of a low degree;
itts pride that putts this cumtrye downe;
man! put thye old Cloake about thee!'—ED.]

- His Breeches cost him but a Crowne,* 107
He held them Six pence all to deere,
With that he call'd the Tailor Lowne:
He was a wight of high Renowne, 110
And thou art but of low degree:
'Tis Pride that pulls the Country downe,
And take thy awl'd Cloake about thee.
 Some Wine hoa.
Cassio. Why this is a more exquisite Song then the o- 115 ther.
Iago. Will you heare't againe?
Caf. No: for I hold him to be vnworthy of his Place, that do's those things. Well: heau'ns about all: and there be foules must be faued, and there be foules must 120 not be faued.
Iago. It's true, good Lieutenant. 122
108. them] 'em Qq.
 all to] all too Q₁F₃F₄ et seq.
 110. wight] weight Han.
 113. And] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Knt.
 Then Qq et cet.
 thy] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Knt. thine Qq et cet.
 awl'd] Ff, Rowe. owd Q₁. old
 Pope, Han. auld Q₂Q₃ et cet.
 115. Why] Fore God Q₁.
 117. heare't] hear it Steev. Mal. Var.
 Knt i, Coll.
117. again] agen Qq.
 118. to be] Om. Qq.
of his] in his Jen.
 119. things. Well:] things: well, Q₁ things well, Q₂Q₃. things. Well— Rowe.
heav'ns] Heaven's Q₂Q₃F₃F₄.
God's Q₂, Cap. Jen. Sta. Glo. Cam. Dyce
 iii, Huds. Rife, Wh. ii.
 120. must be] that must bee Qq, Rowe ii+, Jen. Steev. Mal. Var.
 120, 121. and...faued] Om. Qq.
 122. It's] It is Qq, Jen. Coll. Del.

106. and-a] Compare 'He that has and—a little tiny wit,' Lear, III, ii, 74, and 'When that I was and—a little tiny boy,' Twelfth N. V. i, 398, where ABBOTT, § 96, considers the use of 'and' as equivalent to and that too. [I doubt if ever in old Ballad days it conveyed any more meaning than it does now. It pieced out the line, giving a swing to the rhythm and a charm of homeliness to the verse which are to me as indispensable as they are indispensable.—ED.]

106. Peere] RITSON (p. 230): That is a worthy lord, a title frequently bestowed upon Kings in our old romances. So, in Amadis de Gaule, 1619: 'Sir, although you be a King and a great lord.' Spenser constantly uses the word 'peer' in this sense.

113. awl'd] This, the solitary indication of an unusual pronunciation, points, I imagine, to a rustic rather than to a purely Scotch origin, although CAPELL seems to assume that the whole ballad is Scottish. Speaking of the line in which this word occurs, Capell, in one of his characteristic notes, says that the usual version, 'something unscotifies it to it's injury: (a) in "take," and what is call'd the diphthong in "auld," should have the Scottish twang with them, namely—our (a) sounded broader; and to make out the line's Iambi, the first syllable of "about" must have a small thesis, and "thee" a full one.'—ED.

Caf. For mine owne part, no offence to the Generall, 123 nor any man of qualitie : I hope to be faued.

Iago. And so do I too Lieutenant. 125

Cassio. I : (but by your leaue) not before me. The Lieutenant is to be faued before the Ancient. Let's haue no more of this : let's to our Affaires. Forgiue vs our finnes : Gentlemen let's looke to our bufinesse. Do not thinke Gentlemen, I am drunke : this is my Ancient, this 130 is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunke now : I can stand well enough, and I speake well enough.

Gent. Excellent well.

Caf. Why very well then : you must not thinke then, that I am drunke. Exit. 135

Monta. To th'Platforme (Masters) come, let's set the Watch. 137

- | | |
|---|---|
| 125. too] Om. Qq. | '85, Knt, Sta. speake Qq et cet. |
| 126. I.] Ay , Rowe et seq. Ay ; Coll. | 133. Gent.] All. Qq, Cap. Steev. et seq. |
| (but] but , Theob. | 134. Why] Om. Qq. |
| 127. haue] ha Qq. | thinke then] thinke Qq. |
| 128. Forgiue] Godforgiue Qq, Jen. Del. | Scene XI. Pope, Theob. Warb. Scene |
| vs our] our F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe+. | XII. Han. Johns. Jen. |
| 131. this is] this Qq. | 136. Platforme] plotforme Qq, Qq. plet- |
| left] left hand Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. | forme Qq. plat-form Cap. |
| Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. | Masters] maisters Qq. |
| 132. I speake] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Steev. | set] see Rowe, Pope, Han. |

126. 'The habit which he [KEAN] had acquired in early life, and which led to such important results, viz. : that of closely observing the expression of the human face whenever he had the opportunity, continued with him to the last. It was in a room at the Castle one night that he was asked by a friend when he studied? Indicating a man on the other side of the room, who was very much intoxicated, but who was labouring to keep up an appearance of sobriety, he replied, "I am studying now. I wish some of my Cassios were here. They might see that, instead of rolling about in the ridiculous manner they do, the great secret of delineating intoxication is the endeavour to stand straight when it is impossible to do so. The only man who ever played the drunken scene in Othello properly was Holland."—Hawkins's Life of Kean, vol. ii, p. 360.

129. sinnes] BOOTH : The traditional 'business,' said to be Charles Kemble's, cannot be improved upon. Cassio drops his handkerchief, and in his effort to recover it, falls on his knees; to account for this position to his companions, he attempts to pray. His clothes being awry, his sword has slipped to his right side, and this confuses him for a moment as to which is his right or his left hand. Whatever you do here, do 't delicately and with great seriousness, and show a readiness to fight any one who thinks you're drunk. The more dignified your manner, the more absurd and yet correct your performance will be.

131. right . . . left] PURNELL : A British soldier is not considered drunk if he can go through his facings.

Iago. You see this Fellow, that is gone before, 138
 He's a Souldier, fit to stand by Casfar,
 And giue direction. And do but see his vice, 140
 'Tis to his vertue, a iust Equinox,
 The one as long as th'other. 'Tis pittie of him : [320 a]
 I feare the trust Othello puts him in,
 On some odde time of his infirmitie
 Will shake this Island. 145
Mont. But is he often thus?
Iago. 'Tis euermore his prologue to his sleepe,
 He'le watch the Horologe a double Set,
 If Drinke rocke not his Cradle.
Mont. It were well 150
 The Generall were put in mind of it:
 Perhaps he fees it not, or his good nature 152

139. He's] He is Qq, Ff et cet.

141. vertue] Virtues F₁F₂, Rowe+.

143. puts] put Qq.

him in] in him Cap. Coll. iii,
 Huds.

147. his prologue] Ff, Rowe, Knt. the Prologue Qq et cet.

148. Horologe] Horolodge Q₂Q₃. Horolodge Ff, Rowe+, Cap.

150, 151. One line, Qq.

150. It were] Twere Q₁. T'were Q₂Q₃.

151. were] wete Q₂.

136. BOOTH: Montano enters here, in time to witness Cassio's conduct as he goes off. D'HUGUES: On a jugé avec raison qu'une pareille exhibition de crapule n'était pas absolument nécessaire à la marche ni à l'intelligence du drame, et que Shakespeare aurait aussi bien fait de supprimer toute cette scène.

140. direction] HUDSON: How differently the liar speaks of Cassio's soldiership to Montano and to Roderigo! He is now talking where he is liable to be called to account for his words.

141. Equinox] ROLFE: Equal, counterpart; the only instance of the word in Shakespeare.

143. puts him in] DYCE (ed. iii) quotes LETTSOM's approval of Capell's emendation: puts in him. [I think that change is needless and the Folio is right. The 'trust' that Othello put Cassio in was that of being Othello's 'own second,' referred to in line 159.—ED.]

148. Horologe] JOHNSON: If he have no drink, he'll keep awake while the clock strikes two rounds, or four and twenty hours. HALLIWELL quotes a description by Admiral Smyth of an ancient clock, wherein the dial is described as 'divided into 24 hours, in two portions of 12 each, as was customary on the clockfaces of those days.' [This starts the question whether a 'double set' is twice twelve or twice twenty-four; HALPIN (Dram. Unities, p. 18) affirms that as 'the Italian horologe numbers upon its dial-plate twenty-four hours, a "double set" or round, i. e. forty-eight hours, is the true time meant.' It is, however, of small moment here; Iago is not to be taken literally as to the very hours and minutes of Cassio's watchfulness. To Halpin the term is important; on it he bases his theory as to the limit of a dramatic action.—ED.]

ACT II, SC. II.]	THE MOORE OF VENICE	135
Prizes the vertue that appeares in Cassio ,		153
And lookes not on his euills : is not this true ?
Enter Rodorigo.		155
Iago. How now Rodorigo ?
I pray you after the Lieutenant, go.
Mon. And 'tis great pittie, that the Noble Moore Should hazard such a Place, as his owne Second
With one of an ingraft Infirmitie,		160
It were an honest Action, to say so
To the Moore.
Iago. Not I, for this faire Island,
I do loue Cassio well : and would do much
To cure him of this euill, But hearke, what noife ?		165
Enter Cassio pursuing Rodorigo.
Cas. You Rogue : you Rascall.		167

153. Prises] Praifes Qq. vertue] vertues Q ₄ .	162. Moore] Moor , Iago Anon. (sp. Cam.)
154. lookes] looke Q ₄ .	163. Not] Nor Q ₄ .
156, 157. [Aside. Cap. Mal. et seq.	164. [Helpe, helpe , within (Italics, in the margin) Qq, Om. Ff, Rowe, Knt.
157. [Aside. Wh. i.	Within, or , A cry within, or , A cry with-
[Exit Rod. Qq, Rowe et seq. push-	out, help ! help ! Theob. et cet.
ing him out. Cap.	165. But] Om. Pope +.
160. of an] Om. Ff.	166. Enter...] Enter Cassio , driving in 161, 162. One line, Qq. Two lines, the	Roderigo. Qq. Re-enter... Pope.
first ending /ay, Mal. et seq. (except Knt,	167. You Rogue] Zouns, you rogue Q ₄ , Sta.).	Jen. Cam.
162. To] Unto Pope +, Cap. Steev.'85.

160. ingraft] JOHNSON: An infirmity rooted, settled in his constitution. HENLEY: This explanation seems to fall short of the poet's meaning. The qualities of a tree are so changed by being engrafted, that its future fruits are not such as would have naturally sprung from the stock, but derive their qualities from the graft inserted in it. Conformably to this idea is the assertion of Hamlet concerning the same vice of his countrymen. MALONE: Johnson's explanation is certainly just. So in Lear, I, i, 295; 'the imperfections of long-engrafted condition.' See ABBOTT, § 342, for other instances of the omission of the participial -ed after t. BOOTH: This is not the language of one who had taken part in the carouse.

161. Action] WALKER (Vers. 230) cites this as an instance in the middle of the line of the old dissyllabic pronunciation of -tion, so very common at the end of a line.

161-236. My copy of Q₄ is imperfect and lacks the page containing these lines. For all references to that Q₄ within these limits I am indebted to the Cambridge Edition, which we can all trust as implicitly as anything can be trusted which bears the common stamp of human imperfection.—ED.

164. DYCE justifies the stage direction here of the Qq, because Iago, line 252, says, 'There comes a fellow, crying out for helpe, And Cassio following him,' &c.

- Mon.* What's the matter Lieutenant? 168
Caf. A Knaue teach me my dutie? Ile beate the Knaue into a Twiggen-Bottle. 170
Rod. Beate me?
Caf. Dost thou prate, Rogue?
Mon. Nay, good Lieutenant:
 I pray you Sir, hold your hand.
Cassio. Let me go(Sir) 175
 Or Ile knocke you o're the Mazard.
Mon. Come, come : you're drunke.
Cassio. Drunke?
Iago. Away I say : go out and cry a Mutinie.
 Nay good Lieutenant. Alas Gentlemen : 180
 Helpe hoa. Lieutenant. Sir Montano :
 Helpe Masters. Heere's a goodly Watch indeed. 182

169, 170. Prose, Qq, Pope +, Jen. Cam.
 Dividing the lines at duty / Cap. et cet.

169. Knaue...dutie ? Ff, Rowe, Pope,
 Han. Knaue...duty : Qq. Knaue...duty !
 Theob. +, Jen. Sta. Glo. Cam. Knaue... duty / Cap. Knaue to teach...duty / Dyce
 iii. Knaue...duty / Steev. et cet.

Ile but I'll Qq, Jen. Cam.

170. Twiggen-Bottle wicker bottle Qq,
 Cap. Jen. Coll. Cam.

171. me ! Qq, Jen. me. Ff. me—
 Rowe +. me / Cap. et cet.

172. [Beats Rod. Cap. et seq.

173, 174. Prose, Qq, Jen. Cam.

173. Nay Om. Qq.

[Staying him. Rowe et seq.

174. I pray you pray Qq.

175, 176. Prose, Qq, Rowe +, Jen. Cam.

176. knocke] know Ff, Rowe.

o're] on Q₃.

177. you're] you are Qq, Jen.

178. [they fight. Qq.

179. [Aside. Cap. et seq.

[A bell rung. Q₁. Exit Rod. Q₂

Q₃.

180. Alas] godswill Q₁. God's-will Q₂Q₃ Cam. Del.

181. Sir Montano :] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sing. Sir Montanio, for Q₁. Sir, Mon-
tanio, for Q₂Q₃. —Sir, Montano—Pope,
 Han. —Sir—Montano—Theob. +. Sir,
 —Montano, —Sir—Cap. et cet.

182. Masters] mafter Q₃.

[A bell rings. Q₂Q₃ Rowe et seq.

168. BOOTH: Montano holds Cassio.

170. Twiggen-bottle] BOOTH: That is, slash him till he resembles a 'Chianti' bottle covered with straw net-work; such a bottle as he has been drinking from, perhaps, is in his mind. I have such a bottle used,—when I can get one.

178. BOOTH: Here they fight, and Cassio should utter incoherent sounds as though 'high in oath,' as Iago, line 261, states that he was. I think Shakespeare intended Cassio to 'cuss' a little. Montano should not thrust, but merely defend, himself. For the same reason, to make his subsequent account of the fray correct, Iago should disappear with Roderigo at the word 'mutinie,' and before they return, almost immediately, let them both shout 'Mutiny! Mutiny!' behind the scenes.

181. Sir Montano] KNIGHT: Iago is pretending to separate the lieutenant and Montano, but he is not familiar with Montano, the ex-governor, and he gives him a title of courtesy.

Who's that which rings the Bell: Diablo, hoa: 183
 The Towne will rife. Fie, fie Lieutenant,
 You'le be aham'd for euer. 185

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Othe. What is the matter heere?

Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt to th'death. He dies. 188

183. that which] that that Qq, Cap. Jen.
 Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Cam.
 Ktly. that who Pope+.

Bell: Diablo, hoa:] bell? Diablo
—ho, Qq.

184. Fie, fie Lieutenant] Ff, Rowe,
 Pope, Han. Sing. fie, fie Lieutenant, hold
Q₂Q₃, Theob. Warb. Johns. Jen. Knt. godf-will Lieutenant, hold Q₂ et cet.

185. You'le] Ff, Knt. you will Qq et
 cet.

aham'd] F₃F₄, Knt. sham'd Qq
 F₃ et cet.

186. Enter...] Enter Othello, and Gentlemen with weapons. Qq.

Scene XII. Pope, Warb. Scene XIII.
 Han. Johns. Jen.

187. What is] what's Q₂Q₃.

188. I bleed] Ff, Q₂Q₃, Rowe+, Cap.
 Jen. Steev. Knt. Zouns, I bleed Q₂, Mal.
 et cet.

hurt] hurt, Q₂. hurt, but not Ff,
 Rowe, Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.

He dies.] —he dies. Cap. Steev.
 Del. He dies—Knt. Om. Q₂, Ff, Rowe+,
 Jen. Mal. Var. Sing. Dyce i. [he faints.
(As Stage direction) Q₂Q₃, Coll. Wh. Glo.
 Sta. Cam. Ktly, Dyce iii, Huds. Rlfe. [He is supported (As Stage direction) Coll. iii.
 [assailing Cassio again. Cap.

183. Diablo] COLLIER: An exclamation employed by other dramatists. M. Mason observes that 'it is a mere contraction of Diavolo, the Italian word for the devil.' Why should we go to a contraction of the Italian, when 'Diablo' is the ordinary Spanish word?

184. Fie, fie] In comparison with the vehement God's will of the Qq, this 'fie, fie' does sound weak; but is Iago in earnest? does he wish to be vehement? does he really want Cassio to hold? Between his desire to tarre Cassio on and yet to seem to hold him back, this half-hearted 'fie' seems to me a not unbefitting exclamation.—ED.

185. DYCE pronounces this line, as compared with the Qq, 'most ridiculous.' It does not make me laugh. Indeed, to me, it is as much better than the Qq as an appeal to a man's own self-respect is higher than an appeal to the opinion the world may have of him. Unfortunately, we must not forget that it is Iago who utters it.—ED.

188. He dies] MALONE: The editor of the Folio, thinking it necessary to omit the first word of the line, absurdly supplied its place by adding these words at the end of the line. TOLLET: Montano thinks he is mortally wounded, yet by these words he seems determined to continue the duel and to kill his antagonist, Cassio. So, when Roderigo runs at Cassio in Act V, he says: 'Villain, thou diest.' STEEVENS: That is, he shall die. He may be supposed to say this as he is offering to renew the fight. Thus, Othello in his very next speech: 'he dies upon his motion.' I do not therefore regard these words, when uttered by Montano, as an absurd addition in F₁. KNIGHT and DELIUS give the same explanation as Tollet's. COLLIER: These words are, in fact, nothing more than a printer's blunder, which F₂ corrects by making Montano say, 'I am hurt, but not to the death.' The true stage direction, for which 'He dies' was, no doubt, intended, is found in Q₂, 'He faints.' [It is not easy here to decide between the rival claims. As stage directions there are objections both to 'He dies' and 'He

Oth. Hold for your liues.

Iag. Hold hoa : Lieutenant, Sir Montano, Gentlemen : 190
Haue you forgot all place of sense and dutie?

Hold. The Generall speaks to you : hold for shame.

Oth. Why how now hoa ? From whence ariseth this?
Are we turn'd Turkes ? and to our selues do that
Which Heauen hath forbid the Ottamittes. 195

For Christian shame, put by this barbarous Brawle :

He that stirs next, to carue for his owne rage,
Holds his soule light : He dies vpon his Motion.

Silence that dreadfull Bell, it frights the Isle, 199

190. Hold hoa :] F₂F₃. Hold, hold Q₁Q₂,
Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Hold, hold

Q₃. Hold ho : F₄ Rowe et cet.

Sir Montano,] F₂F₃, Jen. Knt,
Sing. Wh. i. sir Montanio, Qq. Sir Mon- tano, F₃. Sir, Montano Mal. Steev. Var.
Coll. Ktly. Sir—Montano—Rowe et cet.

191. place of sense] QqFf, Rowe, Pope, Theob. Steev. '85. sense of place Han. et
cet.

192. Hold.] Om. Pope+. Hold, hold!

Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i, Ktly
Closing line 191, Huds.

192. hold for] hold, hold, for Qq,
Pope+, Jen. Glo. Cam. Huds. Rlf, Wh.
ii. for Wh. i.

193. ariseth] arises Qq.

195. hath] has Qq.

Ottamittes] Ottamites QqF₄. Ottomites Q'95 et seq.

197. for his] forth his Q₂, Jen. Steev.
'85, Mal. Var.

faints.' Assuredly Montano does not die; and it is difficult to see with what propriety a man who had fainted could be adjured to stop fighting, both by Othello and Iago. If these words be not a stage direction, but a part of the text, there is to Tollet's interpretation this objection, viz.: that Montano was acting throughout in self-defence, as he himself tells Othello, line 227, which he would have scarcely presumed to assert had he renewed the attack with such bitterness before Othello's very eyes. This is one of the passages, I think, where it will not do to inquire too closely. The dramatic action demands a barbarous brawl, in which Montano shall be worsted, and latitude is given to the actors to portray the extent of his discomfiture. I am not sure that COWDEN-CLARKE's course of omitting the words altogether be not the wisest.—ED.]

196. barbarous Brawle] WORDSWORTH (Sh.'s Knowl. and Use of the Bible, p. 225): This line is one of those which make it difficult to believe that Shakespeare had altogether forgotten his schoolboy classics. Surely, when he wrote it he was thinking of Horace [Lib. I, Ode xxvii]: 'Natis in usum lætitiæ scyphis Pugnare Thracum est; tollite barbarum Morem, verecundumque Bacchum Sanguineis prohibete rixis.' FECHTER: Othello speaks with passion.

197. carue for] STEEVENS: That is, supply food or gratification for his own anger. So in Ham. I, iii, 20: 'he may not . . . Carve for himself.' SCHMIDT: To indulge, to act at a person's pleasure.

198. BOOTH: Iago should go to assist Cassio, hoping that he is hurt. The Gentlemen enter in time to care for Montano, whom they place on the seat where Desdemona sat.

199. dreadful bell] WALKER (Crit. ii, 78) cites this as an instance of the use of 'dreadful' in an active sense, as in Ham. I, ii, 207: 'This to me In dreadful secrecy

From her propriety. What is the matter, Masters? 200
 Honest Iago, that lookes dead with greewing,
 Speake : who began this? On thy loue I charge thee?
Iago. I do not know : Friends all, but now, euen now.
 In Quarter, and in termes like Bride, and Groome 204

200. What is] what's Qq, Jen.	et cet.
Masters] Om. Pope+.	202. this ?] this , Qq.
201. lookes] QqF ₂ . looks F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe,	203. not] not not F ₂ .
Pope, Theob. Warb. Johns. look'st Han.	all,] all Qq, Cap. Steev. et seq.

impart they did.' MALONE: When David Rizzio was murdered in Edinburgh, the Provost ordered the common bell to be rung, and five hundred persons were immediately assembled. So in Peacham's Valley of Varietie, where he is speaking of the use of bells, 'they call for helpe when houses in cities and townes are on fire; or when there is any mutinie or uproare.' HALLIWELL: At the poet's native town, Stratford-on-Avon, it has been the practice from time immemorial to ring the bell of the Guild chapel on the alarm of fire being given. ALGER (Life of Forrest, i, 308): From the general group he [Forrest as Othello] turned to a single attendant who stood at his elbow, and delivered the command in a subdued tone, as though it were not intended for the ear of the multitude. OTTLEY (Fechter's Version, &c., p. 19): This command Fechter almost screams in passion, rushing up the stage the while. Kean gave it calmly and authoritatively, as a thing of course, and 'more in sorrow than in anger.'

200. propriety] JOHNSON: From her regular and proper state.

201. lookes] An instance (cited by WALKER, Crit. ii, 132) of s substituted for st in the second person singular of the verb. Compare IV, ii, 207; V, ii, 79; and two other striking instances: Ham. I, iv, 53: 'That thou . . . Revisits thus the glimpses,' &c., and Lea, IV, vi, 160: 'Thou hotly lusts to use her,' &c. I think this usage should be observed in even modern editions, when to give the full grammatical form would result in harshness.—ED.

204. Quarter] JOHNSON: In their quarters; at their lodging. MALONE: That is, on our station. So in Timon, V, iv, 60: 'not a man Shall pass his quarter.' Their station or 'quarter' in the present instance was the guardroom in Othello's castle. It cannot mean lodgings, for Montano and the Gentlemen had continued, from the time of their entrance, in the apartment of Othello's castle, in which the carousal had been; and Cassio had only gone forth for a short time to set the watch. On his return from the platform to the apartment he meets Roderigo, and the scuffle ensues. RITSON (p. 230): Rather, at peace, quiet, or, as Johnson elsewhere explains it, 'in friendship, amity, concord.' They had been on that very spot (the court or platform before the castle) ever since Othello left them, which can scarcely be called being in their quarters or at their lodging. And, indeed, they could not have left it without being guilty of another offence, as they were directed by Othello to keep the watch. HENLEY denies that the phrase ever meant in quiet, at peace; it is evident, he says, that the 'quarter' referred to was that apartment of the castle assigned to the officers on guard, where Othello, after giving Cassio his orders, had, a little before, left him; and where Iago, with his companions, immediately found him. PYE (p. 331): This word, in the military language of the present day at least, seems to have no very precise meaning; but the meaning on our station seems the leading signification, for the principal camp-guard of a regiment is called the quarter guard; but a regiment in quarters has no such guard.

Deuesting them for Bed : and then, but now : 205
 (As if some Planet had vnwitted men)
 Swords out, and tilting one at others breastes, [320 b]
 In opposition bloody. I cannot speake
 Any begining to this peeuissh oddes.
 And would, in Action glorious, I had lost 210
 Those legges, that brought me to a part of it.
Othe. How comes it (Michaell) you are thus forgot ?
Caf. I pray you pardon me, I cannot speake.
Othe. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be ciuill :
 The grautie, and stillnesse of your youth 215
 The world hath noted. And your name is great
 In mouthes of wisest Censure. What's the matter
 That you vnlace your reputation thus,
 And spend your rich opinion, for the name
 Of a night-brawler ? Giue me answer to it. 220
Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger,

205. Deuesting] Digesting Q.'95. Divesting Q.'81, Rowe ii +, Cap. Jen. Coll. Wh. i.

for Bed:] to bed, Qq, Cap.

then,] Om. Q₃.

206. men] them Coll. (MS).

207. Swords] Sword F₃ F₄, Rowe, Pope.

breastes] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob.

Han. Warb. breft Q₃. breast Q₄ Q₅ et cet.

208. cannot] can't Pope +.

211. Those] These Q₄, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Sing. Ktly.

212. comes] came Qq, Jen. Coll. Wh. i, Hal. Del.

are] were Qq, Jen. Coll. Wh. i, Hal.

214. wont to be] Ff, Rowe, Warb. Knt.

wont be Qq et cet.

217. mouthes] men Q₄.

220. to it] to't Qq, Cap. Jen. Sta.

209. oddes] STAUNTON: Headstrong or perverse quarrel.

212. are thus forgot] See ABBOTT, § 295, for other instances of the use of to be with intransitive verbs. Thus, 'I am declined,' III, iii, 309. In BOOTH's Acting Copy, 'you' is italicized. Cassio has staggered towards R. H. and rests against a column of the Castle.

213. FECHTER's Acting Copy: 'I pray you pardon me (Cassio speaks thickly, stops short, and then, in deep humiliation) I cannot speak!—'

214. wont to be] ABBOTT, § 349, following indirectly the text of the Qq, wont be, cites it as an instance of the omission of to of the infinitive, which, of course, it may be; but the presence of 'to' in the Ff shows that in the Qq it may be merely an instance of the absorption of the to in the t final of 'wont.'—ED.

215–217. BOOTH: Could it be possible, after this, to suppose that Montano was one of the 'flock of drunkards'?

218. vnlace] JOHNSON: Slacken, or loosen. Put in danger of dropping; or perhaps strip off its ornaments.

219. spend] JOHNSON: Throw away and squander a reputation so valuable as yours.

221. BOOTH: Montano is still seated, supported by gentlemen, one of whom staunches the wound.

Your Officer Iago, can informe you, 222
 While I spare speech which something now offends me.
 Of all that I do know, nor know I ought
 By me, that's said, or done amisse this night, 225
 Vnlesse selfe-charitie be sometimes a vice,
 And to defend our felues, it be a sinne
 When violence affailes vs.

Othe. Now by Heauen,
 My blood begins my fafer Guides to rule, 230
 And passion(hauing my best iudgement collid)
 Affaies to leade the way. If I once stir, 232

223. me.] me, Q₂Q₃. Om. Q₄. 231. collid] could Qq. choler'd
 224. ought] ought Theob. ii et seq. Rowe+. quell'd Cap. Coll. ii. cullid
 225. me.] me; Ff. me Q.'95 et seq. Bailey. said] sed Q₄. 232. If I once] Zouns, if I Q₄. If once 226. sometimes] sometime Qq, Cap. I Q₂Q₃.
 Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i.

223. something] See Ham. III, i, 173, and Lear, I, i, 20, for other instances of this adverbial use like somewhat.

226. selfe-charitie] JOHNSON: Care of one's self.

227. it] ABBOTT, § 404: From this passage we may see how unnecessary and redundant our modern 'it' is. This is (if the order of the words be disregarded) as good English as our modern 'Unless it be a sin to defend ourselves.' The fact is, this use of the modern 'it' is an irregularity only justified by the clearness which it promotes. 'It,' at the beginning of a sentence, calls attention to the real subject which is to follow. 'It is a sin, viz., to defend one's self.'

229. BOOTH: With restrained anger—not loud.

231. collid] STEEVENS: That is, passion having discoloured his judgement. To colly anciently signified to besmut, to blacken as with coal. MALONE: Cole in his Dict., 1679, renders 'collow'd by denigratus; to colly, denigro.' COLLIER (ed. ii): Quelled, i. e. subdued or conquered, is precisely the word wanted, and we find it in the (MS). It is to be remarked that if short-hand were employed in obtaining the copy of Othello for the publisher, the very same letters which spell quelled would also spell 'collid,' and even cool'd. SINGER (Sh. Vind., p. 283): To quell is never used by Shakespeare in any other sense than that of killing or exterminating. I pity the man who could for a moment think of displacing the effective, and now consecrated, word 'collid.' Its obvious meaning is darkened, obfuscated; and a more appropriate and expressive word could not have been used. DYCE (Strictures, &c., p. 199), after referring to the use of 'collid' in Mid. N. D. I, i, 145, and after citing with approval what Singer says of the uniform meaning of quell in Shakespeare, and after quoting what Collier says about short-hand spelling, goes on to say: Yet no one knows better than Mr Collier that the Othello of F₂, which has the reading 'collid,' was, beyond all doubt, printed from a transcript belonging to the theatre, and that in stage-copies of plays (whether intended for the use of the prompter or of the actors) short-hand was never employed. [Italics, Dyce's.] KEIGHTLEY (Exp. p. 302): Quelled is not so absurd as Singer thinks it. D'HUGUES: On s'étonne qu'Othello puisse trouver de si belles métaphores pour exprimer sa colère, au moment même où il commence à la ressentir. [See III, iii, 283.]

Or do but lift this Arme, the beft of you 233
 Shall linke in my rebuke. Giue me to know
 How this foule Rout began : Who fet it on, 235
 And he that is approu'd in this offence,
 Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,
 Shall loofe me. What in a Towne of warre,
 Yet wilde, the peoples hearts brim-full of feare,
 To Manage priuate, and domesticke Quarrell ? 240
 In night, and on the Court and Guard of fafetie ?
 'Tis monftrous : Iago, who began't ? 242

236. this] his Rowe ii, Pope, Han.
 237. twinn'd] twin'd Q₄.
 238. Shall] should Q₃.
 loofe] QqFf, Rowe i, Jen. Knt.
loosen Cap. lose Q.'95 et cet.
 me.] me ever. Lettsom.
 What in] Ff, Rowe i. what, in Qq, Rowe ii, Pope. What, and in Han.
What! in Cap. et seq. What! even in Huds. conj.
 of warre,] with war Daniel, Huds.
240. Quarrell] quarrels Qq, Jen.
 241. and guard of] of guard and Theob. Han. Johns. Cap. Mal. Var. Sing.
 Ktly, Coll. iii (MS), Huds.
 242. monftrous] monstrous Cap. Steev.
 '85, Ktly.
 Iago] Say, Iago Pope + .
 began't] began Q₄Q₅. degan Q₃. began it Mal. Steev. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh.
 i, Ktly.

236. approu'd] JOHNSON: He that is convicted by proof of having been engaged in this offence.

238. loose] JENNENS: That is, be loose from me, or disjoined. KNIGHT: The same word as lose, but differently applied. By the employment of lose we destroy the force of 'Though he had twinn'd with me.'

238. Towne of warre] ABBOTT, § 163: In Hen V: II, iv, 7, 'towns of war' means garrisoned towns, and so probably here, like our 'man of war.'

241. Court and Guard of fafetie] THEOBALD: Guard of safety, though couple with a word of synonymous construction, was never soldiers' language. I have ventured to make the conjunction and sign of the genitive case change places. So 'Court of Guard,' II, i, 251; 'look to the Guard,' II, ii, 16, and 'bear him to the Court of Guard,' Ant. & Cleo. IV, ix, 32. MALONE: A similar mistake occurs in 'all place of sense and duty,' line 191. 'Court of guard' is established as a technical term by the uniform usage of the poets of Shakespeare's time. The court of safety may, in a metaphorical sense, be understood; but who ever talked of the guard (i. e. the safety) of safety? STREVEVS: As a collocation of words, as seemingly perverse, occurs in Mid. N. D. III, i, 192, 'I shall desire you of more acquaintance,' I forbear to disturb the text. If Safety, like the Roman Salus, or Recovery in Lear, be personified, where is the impropriety of saying, under the guard of Safety? Thus, Plautus, in his Captivi - 'Neque jam servare Salus, si vult, me potest.' DYCE (ed. iii): Steevens defends the old reading not very satisfactorily. COWDEN-CLARKE: The text of the Ff means, in the very spot and guarding-place of safety.

242. monftrous] WALKER (Vers. 11) calls attention, as did MALONE before him, to the trisyllabic pronunciation here of this word; neither of them, however, noticed (nor did the CAMBRIDGE EDITORS, for that matter,) that CAPELL had long before so

Mon. If partially Affin'd, or league in office, 243
Thou dost deliuer more, or lesse then Truth,
Thou art no Souldier. 245

Iago. Touch me not so neere,
I had rather haue this tongue cut from my mouth,
Then it should do offence to Michael Cassio.
Yet I perfwade my selfe, to speake the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. This it is Generall: 250

Montano and my selfe being in speech,
There comes a Fellow, crying out for helpe,
And Cassio following him with determin'd Sword
To execute vpon him. Sir, this Gentleman,
Steppes in to Cassio, and entreats his pause: 255

My selfe, the crying Fellow did purfue,
Leaft by hisc lamour (as it so fell out)
The Towne might fall in fright. He, (swift of foote)
Out-ran my purpose: and I return'd then rather
For that I heard the clinke, and fall of Swords, 260

And Cassio high in oath: Which till to night
I nere might fay before When I came backe
(For this was briefe) I found them clofe together 263

- | | |
|---|---|
| 243. partially] partiality Qq. | 250. This] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sta. Thus |
| Affin'd] assign'd Q.'81, Q.'95. | Qq et cet. |
| league] QqFf, Rowe. leagu'd | it is] 'tis Pope +. |
| Pope et cet. | 252. comes] coms Q ₃ . |
| 244. dost] doest Q ₂ Q ₃ . | 253. him] Om. Pope +, Huds. |
| deliuer more,] deliuer, more Q ₁ . | 255. in to] into Q ₂ F ₄ Q ₃ F ₄ , Rowe i. |
| 245. no] mo Q ₃ . | 256. My selfe,] my selfe QqF ₄ et seq. |
| 247. I had] I'd Pope +. | 257. Leaft] Left QqFf et cet. |
| haue] ha Q ₁ . ha' Q ₂ Q ₃ . | 259. and] Om. Pope +. |
| cut from my] out from my Q ₁ . | then] F ₁ , Knt. the QqFf et cet. |
| out of my Q ₂ . out of his Q ₃ . | 261. oath] oaths Q ₂ . |
| 249. speake the] speake so the Ff, Rowe. | 262. fay] see Q ₂ . | printed it in his text: monsterous. Walker goes on to show that Drayton, 'according to his manner of marking a doubtful pronunciation by the spelling, writes monstruous.' 'There is also a third spelling, monstruous,' found in Surrey, and in the Faerie Queene, I, ii, line 366 (ed. Grosart). See also 'mistress,' IV, ii, 104.—ED.

243. Affin'd] STEEVENS: Affin'd is, bound by proximity of relationship; but here it means related by nearness of office. In I, i, 42, it is used in the former sense. STAUNTON: If, bound by partiality. BOOTH: Montano should be in total ignorance of the cause of the disturbance.

253. him] CAPELL: This crept into the line from the line beneath. DYCE and WALKER also suspect that it is an interpolation.

At blow, and thrust, euen as againe they were
 When you your selfe did part them. 265
 More of this matter cannot I report,
 But Men are Men : The best sometimes forget,
 Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
 As men in rage strike those that with them best,
 Yet surely Cassio, I beleue receiu'd 270
 From him that fled, some strange Indignitie,
 Which patience could not passe.
Othe. I know Iago. [321 a]
 Thy honestie, and loue doth mince this matter,
 Making it light to Cassio : Cassio, I loue thee, 275
 But neuer more be Officer of mine.

Enter Desdemona attended.

Looke if my gentle Loue be not rais'd vp :
 Ile make thee an example. 279

264. again] agen Qq.	268. wrong] woong Q ₃ .
265. When] Whn Q ₃ .	269. those] them Q ₃ .
266. cannot I] can I not Qq, Cap. Jen.	277. Enter...] Enter Desdemona with
Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Del.	others. Qq (after line 278) Q ₄ Q ₅ .
Ktly.	278. rais'd] rai/de Q ₄ .

274. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 255) : Honesty and love! Ay, and who but the reader of the play could think otherwise?

275. thee] ABBOTT, § 231 : Thou, in Shakespeare's time, was very much like 'du' now among the Germans, the pronoun of affection towards friends; good-humoured superiority to servants; and contempt or anger to strangers. It had, however, already fallen somewhat into disuse, and, being regarded as archaic, was naturally adopted in the higher poetic style and in the language of solemn prayer. . . . In almost all cases where thou and you appear at first sight indiscriminately used, further considerations show some change of thought, or some influence of euphony sufficient to account for the change of pronoun. [In a foot-note, Abbott says that the Elizabethan distinction between thou and you is remarkably illustrated in Early English, as detailed by Skeat in William of Palerne. The passage in SKEAT is as follows, and is the result of a tabulation of the best examples in that Romance (about A. D. 1350) and also in the Romance of Alisaunder (about A. D. 1340)] : 'Thou is the language of a lord to a servant, of an equal to an equal, and expresses also companionship, love, permission, defiance, scorn, threatening; whilst ye is the language of a servant to a lord, and of compliment, and further expresses honour, submission, entreaty'—Preface to William of Palerne, p. xlii.—ED.]

279. OTTLEY (p. 19) : Kean said these words, before preparing to go, solemnly and sadly, as if justifying and explaining a painful act of duty. And then his walk up the stage! so stately and grand, his cloak swaying gracefully with each well-measured step—who that saw it shall forget it?

Def. What is the matter (Deere?)

280

Othe. All's well, Sweeting:

Come away to bed. Sir for your hurts,

My selfe will be your Surgeon. Lead him off:

Iago, looke with care about the Towne,

And silence those whom this vil'd brawle distracted.

285

Come Desdemona, 'tis the Soldiers life,

To haue their Balmy slumbers wak'd with strife. Exit.

Iago. What are you hurt Lieutenant?

Caf. I, past all Surgery.

Iago. Marry Heauen forbid.

290

Caf. Reputation, Reputation, Reputation: Oh I haue

280. What is] Q₂F₂, Cap. Steev.'85,
Mal. Knt. What's Q₂Q₃F₂F₂ et cet.

(Deere?)] Ff. Dear? Rowe, Cap.

Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Wh. i,
Ktly. Om. Qq et cet.

281-283. All's...off] Lines end, bed...
Surgeon...off. Pope+, Jen. Steev.'85, Mal.
Coll. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Cam. Ktly, Del. Rlfe. bed...hurts...off Steev.'93, Var. Sing.

281. All's] Aall's Q₂. All is Pope+.
well] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. well.
Here Johns. well now Qq et cet.

282. Come away] Com away Q₂. Come, away F₂, Rowe, Pope, Theob. i, Han.
Come Theob. ii, Warb. Come, let's away
Cap.

283. Surgeon.] surgeon. [To Montano.

Johns. To Mon. who is led off. Steev.

283. Lead him off] Om. Huds.

[Exeunt some with Mon. Cap.

285. vil'd] vile QqFf.

287. Exit] Exit Moore, Desdemona, and attendants. (after line 288) Qq.

Scene XIII. Pope, Warb. Scene XIV.

Han. Johns. Jen.

289. I] Ay, Rowe. Om. Pope+.

290. Marry Heauen] Mary God Q₂.
Mary Heauen Q₂Q₃.

291-294. Four lines, ending my repu- tation...selfe...beastiall, my reputation...
my reputation. in Qq.

291. Reputation] Only twice, Qq, Cap.

Oh I] I Q₂, Cap.

291, 292. haue] ha Qq.

281. Sweeting] STEEVENS: This surfeiting vulgar term of fondness originates from the name of an apple distinguished only by its insipid sweetness.

283. Lead him off] MALONE: I am persuaded these words were originally a stage direction. In our old plays all the stage-directions were couched in imperative terms:—Play music.—Ring the Bell.—Lead him off. WHITE (ed. i): Such is my opinion, but for a different reason. If Othello had ordered the removal of Montano, he would have said, not 'Lead him off,' but 'Lead him away.' We speak of a man's being or having been led off, or on, in the sense of away, or onward; but when we direct a man to be taken from where we are, we say 'away,' unless we are upon a staging, or some place of that kind, which, for Shakespeare's purposes, Othello was not. The rhythm of this command, too, is not like that of Shakespeare's hemistichs. But as Qq and Ff agree, I do not venture to change it upon mere opinion. ROLFE: Malone may be right.

285. BOOTH: Iago goes off. Cassio braces himself for the sentence, but sinks to the ground at Othello's exit. At line 288, Iago hurriedly enters to Cassio. In Cassio's speech 'Reputation,' &c., don't preach; be not violent; avoid rant; yet be impassioned,—feel thoroughly disgusted with yourself, and you'll be natural. Walk about, but don't stamp or 'saw the air.'

loft my Reputation. I haue loft the immortall part of 292 myselfe, and what remaines is bestiall. My Reputation, Iago, my Reputation.

Iago. As I am an honest man I had thought you had 295 receiued some bodily wound; there is more sence in that then in Reputation. Reputation is an idle, and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and loft without deserving. You haue loft no Reputation at all, vnlesse you repute your selfe such a looser. What man, there are 300 more wayes to recouer the Generall againe. You are but now cast in his moode, (a punishment more in policie, then in malice) euen so as one would beate his offencelesse dogge, ro affright an Imperious Lyon. Sue to him againe, and he's yours. 305

292. part of] part fir of Qq, Jen. Steev.	Q ₃ .
Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.
293. my selfe] my false Q ₃ .	296. sence] offence Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal.
294. remaines] remains Q ₃ .	Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Huds.
Reputation.] reputation —Rowe	300. looser] lefer Qq.
+, Jen.	301. more] Ff, Rowe. Om. Qq et cet.
295. I had] Ff, Rowe+, Steev.'85,	again] agen Qq.
Knt. I Qq et cet.	304. ro] to .
296. receiued] receiv'd Q ₃ Q ₄ . recei'd	Imperious] impious Han. ii (mis- print).

296. bodily wound] GOULD (The Tragedian, p. 87): The simpler meaning is conveyed by the usual emphasis on 'bodily.' But this emphasis would oppose bodily to spiritual wounds, and Iago has no faith in the latter. J. B. Booth, with fine penetration, emphasized both these words, as if there were no other wounds to suffer from.

296. sence] KNIGHT: The sense of a wound is its sensibility.

298, 299. oft . . . deserving] BOOTH: With significant glance at Cassio. Do not smile, or sneer, or glower,—try to impress even the audience with your sincerity. 'Tis better, however, always to ignore the audience; if you can forget that you are a 'shew' you will be natural. The more sincere your manner, the more devilish your deceit. I think the 'light comedian' should play the villain's part, not the 'heavy man;' I mean the Shakespearian villains. Iago should appear to be what all but the audience believe he is. Even when alone, there is little need to remove the mask entirely. Shakespeare spares you that trouble.

299, 300. You . . . looser] DuBois (Wreath, p. 72) cites parallel passages from Menander in Plutarch: Οὐδὲν πέπονθας δεινόν, ἂν μὴ προσποιῇ—Thou hast suffered no wrong, unless thou dost fancy so. Also Epictetus, Enchirid., c. 31: Σὲ γὰρ ἄλλος οὐ βλάψει, ἂν μὴ σὺ θέλῃς. Τότε δὲ ἐσθὶ βεβλαμμένος, ὅταν ὑπολάβῃς βλάπτεσθαι—No one will hurt thee, unless thou art willing he should. For then only wilt thou be hurt, when thou dost think thyself hurt. Also Marcus Antoninus, B. 7, § 14: Ἐγὼ δὲ, ἐὰν μὴ ὑπολάβω ὅτι κακὸν τὸ συμβεβηκός, οὐπω βέβλαμμαι—Unless I myself think that which happens an evil, I am still unhurt.

302. cast] JOHNSON: Ejected in his anger. [See I, i, 164; II, ii, 31; V, ii, 400.]

Caf. I will rather sue to be despis'd, then to deceiue so good a Commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an Officer. Drunke ? And speake Parrat ? And squabble ? Swagger ? Swear ? And discourse Fustian with ones owne shadow ? Oh thou invisable spirit of 310 Wine, if thou hast no name to be knowne by, let vs call thee Diuell.

Iago. What was he that you follow'd with your Sword ? What had he done to you ?

Caf. I know not. 315

Iago. Is't possible ?

Caf. I remember a masse of things, but nothing distinctly : a Quarrell, but nothing wherefore. Oh, that men should put an Enemie in their mouthes, to steale away their Braines ? that we should with ioy, pleafance, 320
 reuell and applause, transforme our felues into Beasts.

307. slight] light Qq, Jen. Coll.

and so] and Qq.

308-310. Drunke ? ... shadow ?] Om.

Q.

308. speake Parrat ?] speake Parrat ?

F. Cap. speake, Parrot ? F. Rowe, Pope.

speake ? Parrot, Theob. speake ? parrot ?

Han. speake Parrot, Johns. Jen. speake

Parrot ? Warb. et cet.

310. invisable] invisidle Q₃. invincible

Theob. ii (misprint ?), Warb.

311. Wine, if thou] wine ; thou Q₃.

Wine ! if thou F. Rowe, Pope, Theob.

Han. Warb. Coll. Del. wine ; if thou Johns.

Jen.

311. knowne...us] konwen...us Q₃.

313, 314. What...Sword ?] One line as verse, Qq.

313. follow'd] followed Qq.

316. Is't] Is it Steev. Mal. Var. Sing.

Ktly.

318. Oh,] O Q₃ Q₄. O God, Q₃, Jen.

Coll. Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Huda.

Rlfe.

319, 320. their...their] there...there Q₃.

320. Brains ?] braines ; Qq.

320, 321. pleasance, reuell] Reuell, pleasure Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var.

Coll. Wh. i.

304. affright] As PURNELL says, this does not suit the comparison. STAUNTON suggests appease, which certainly accords better with the sense.—ED.

308. Parrat] WARBURTON: That is, to act foolishly and childishly. [In proof, Warburton cites a passage from Skelton, wherein it is true the two words 'speke' and 'Parrot' occur, but they occur as an address to the bird to speak, and not as in the present phrase. The very title of the piece is Speke, Parrot, and Warburton's quotation runs thus: 'These maidens . . . make swete my bowre, With, Speke, Parrot, I pray you, full curtesly they say,' vol. ii, p. 2, ed. Dyce. Cassio's phrase bears its clear meaning of senseless talk, but I have met no other instance of it. Parallel passages are of use only where there is obscurity. Here there is none. For Shakespeare's references to parrots and their ways, see HARTING, p. 272.—ED.] MOREL: On pourrait comparer l'expression familière du français, 'parler nègre.'

320. pleasance] MOREL: Marot chez nous disait encore au seizième siècle 'les plaisances mondaines,' et le mot nous est resté dans les expressions telles que, maison de plaisance, bateau de plaisance.

Iago. Why ? But you are now well enough : how 322 came you thus recovered ?

Caf. It hath pleas'd the diuell drunkennesse, to giue 325 place to the diuell wrath, one vnperfectnesse, shewes me another to make me frankly despise my selfe.

Iago. Come, you are too feure a Moraller. As the 330
Time, the Place, & the Condition of this Country stands
I could hartily wish this had not befallne : but since it is, as it is, mend it for your owne good.

Caf. I will aske him for my Place againe, he shall tell 335 me, I am a drunkard : had I as many mouthes as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a Foole, and presently a Beast. Oh strange ! Euery inordinate cup is vnblefs'd, and the Ingredient is a diuell.

Iago. Come, come : good wine, is a good famillar [321 b] 340
Creature, if it be well vs'd : exclaime no more against it.
And good Lieutenant, I thinke, you thinke I loue
you.

Cassio. I haue well approued it, Sir. I drunke ?

- | | |
|--|--|
| 322. Why ?] Why , QqF, et seq. | 335. inordinate] vnordinate Q ₁ . |
| 324. pleas'd] pleas'de Q ₁ . | 335, 336. Ingredient] ingredience Qq, |
| 328. & the] the Qq, Han. | Cap. |
| 329. not] not so Q ₁ Q ₂ , Jen. | 337. famillar] F. |
| 333. them] em Qq. | 341. approued] approou'd Q ₁ Q ₂ , ap- |
| 334. Foole] foule Q ₁ . | prov'd Q ₃ . |
| 334, 335. Oh strange !] Om. Qq, Pope +, | Sir. I] sir ,— I Qq, Sing. ii. Sir , |
| Jen. | I Ff. |

327. Moraller] For other instances of -er appended to nouns to signify the agent. see ABBOTT, § 443.

328. Time, the Place] MOREL: Iago prend ainsi plaisir à rappeler à Cassio les circonstances qui peuvent rendre sa faute plus criminelle et son remords plus cuisant.

335. Ingredient] In that excellent contribution to Shakespearian literature, just published, Studies in Shakespeare (alas ! alas ! that it should be posthumous !) GRANT WHITE suggests that the form ingredience should be retained in Macb. I, vii, 11, in IV, i, 34, and also in this present passage, on the ground that 'the idea is collective, not separative.' This ground is valid in both instances in Macb., but is less sure here, albeit the Qq have ingredience. Not only are the Ff uniform in giving 'Ingredient,' but the plural sound of ingredience would strike harshly before the singular verb.—ED.

337. famillar] MOREL: C'est le mot 'devil,' employé par Cassio, qui provoque cette ironique repartie.

339. BOOTH: In tones whose subtlety cannot be described.

Iago. You, or any man liuing, may be drunke at a time man. I tell you what you shall do : Our General's Wife, is now the Generall. I may say so, in this respect, for that he hath deuoted, and giuen vp himselfe to the Contemplation, marke : and deuotement of her parts and Graces. Confesse your selfe freely to her : Importune her helpe to put you in your place againe. She is of so free, so kinde, so apt, so blessed a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodnesse, not to do more then she is requested. This broken ioynt betweene you, and her husband, entreat her to splinter. And my Fortunes against any lay worth naming, this cracke of your Loue, shall grow stonger, then it was before.

Cassio. You aduise me well. 355

Iago. I protest in the sinceritie of Loue, and honest kindnesse.

Cassio. I thinke it freely : and betimes in the mor- 358

342, 343. a time] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Dyce,
Wh. i, Glo. Rlfe. some time Qq et cet.

343. man] Om. Q₁.

I tell] Ff, Rowe+. Ile tell Qq
et cet.

345. hath] has Qq.

346. marke: and] marke and Qq.
(mark & Q₃) Theob. ii, Warb. Cam.
mark: and F₄. —mark,—and Knt i, Sta.
—mark!—and Knt ii, Sing. Ktly. mark, and Rowe et cet.

deuotement] Q₁Q₂. devotement

FfQ₂, Rowe, Pope, Knt, Coll. i. denote- ment Theob. et cet.

348. her helpe] her, shee'll helpe Qq,
Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Del.

349. of so] so Qq.

350. she] that she Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del.

351. broken ioynt] braule Q₁.

354. stonger] stronger QqF₃F₄.

it was] twas Q₁. it'was Q₂Q₃.

356. honest] Om. Q₃.

342. at a time] This is the Scotch 'ae,' meaning one. Compare 'Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter'? Rom. & Jul. II, iv, 187; 'these foils have all a length,' Ham. V, ii, 232. See also ABBOTT, § 81.

346. marke] KNIGHT says that this is here used as an interjection; 'to make the matter still more ridiculous'! exclaims DYCE (Rem., p. 239), after condemning Knight's preference for 'devotement' of F₁.

346. deuotement] THEOBALD: I cannot persuade myself that our Poet would ever have said any one devoted himself to the deuotement of anything. The mistake certainly arose from a single letter being turned upside-down at press. The three words, Contemplation, mark, and denotement, are, indeed, in some degree tautological, but the practice is allowed for the sake of energy. MALONE notes the frequent occurrence of this accident in the Qq and Ff. Thus in Merry Wives, IV, vi, 39, 'denote her to the doctor;' Ham. I, ii, 83, 'That can deuote me truly,' where in both cases it should be denote. For other instances see his note on the passage in Merry Wives.

352. splinter] DYCE: To secure by splints

353. lay] RITSON: Any bet, any wager.

ning, I will befeech the vertuous Desdemona to vndertake for me : I am desperate of my Fortunes if they check me. 360

Iago. You are in the right : good night Lieutenant, I must to the Watch.

Cassio. Good night, honest Iago.

Exit Cassio.

Iago. And what's he then, 365
That faies I play the Villaine?

When this aduife is free I giue, and honest,
Proball to thinking, and indeed the courfe
To win the Moore againe.

For 'tis most easie 370

Th'inclyning Desdemona to subdue

In any honest Suite. She's fram'd as fruitfull 372

- | | |
|---|--|
| 359. I will] will I Qq, Jen. Mal. Steev.
beſeech] beſeech Q ₃ . | 368. Proball] Probable Rowe, Cap.
Steev.'85. Likely Pope+. Provable |
| 360. check me.] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Knt.
checke me here. Qq et cet. | Coleridge in quoting.
369, 370. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq. |
| 361. You...right] One line, Qq. | 369. again] agen Qq. |
| 364. Exit...] Exit Qq. | 371. Th'] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Sing. Wh. |
| Scene XIV. Pope i, Warb. Scene XV.
Han. Johns. Jen. Scene II. Pope ii (misprint). | Ktly, Dyce iii, Huds. The Qq et cet. |
| 365, 366. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq. | 371, 372. subdue...Suite. She's] sub
due,...suite, she's Q ₂ . subdue,...suite she's
Q ₃ Q ₅ . |

363. honest] BOOTH: Not too pronounced.

365. BOOTH: Pause, and with a smile of satisfaction, look after him.

365. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., 255): He is not, you see, an absolute fiend; or, at least, he wishes to think himself not so.

367. free] JOHNSON: This counsel has an appearance of honest openness, of frank goodwill. HENLEY: Rather gratis, not paid for, as his advice to Roderigo was. PYE (p. 333): His counsel has not the appearance only of honest openness and frank goodwill, but was really such as honest openness and frank goodwill would give. Henley's notion is completely absurd.

368. Proball] STEEVENS: There may be such a contraction of probable, but I have not met with it in any other book. Abbreviations as violent occur in the works of Churchyard. COLLIER: A colloquial contraction for probable. Corresponding contractions are 'miserable' for miserable in Painter's Palace of Pleasure, i, 151; and in B. Rich's Dialogue between Mercury and a Soldier, 1574, we have 'varial' for variable. SINGER: A contraction of probable or proveable. HALLIWELL: A word of very rare occurrence. I have met with it only once elsewhere, in Sampson's Vow Breaker, or the Faire Maid of Clifton, 1636: 'Didst thou not make me draw conveyances? Did not th'assurance of thy lands seeme proball?' WHITE (ed. ii): A word unknown elsewhere: but what cared Shakespeare for that! [For other somewhat similar contractions, see ABBOTT, § 461.]

371. inclyning] MALONE: Compliant

As the free Elements. And then for her 373
 To win the Moore, were to renounce his Baptisme,
 All Seales, and Simbols of redeemed sin : 375
 His Soule is so enfetter'd to her Loue,
 That she may make, vnmake, do what she list,
 Euen as her Appetite shall play the God,
 With his weake Function. How am I then a Villaine,
 To Counsell Caffio to this paralell course, 380
 Directly to his good? Diuinitie of hell,
 When diuels will the blackest sinnes put on,
 They do suggest at first with heauenly shewes,
 As I do now. For whiles this honest Foole
 Plies Desdemona, to repaire his Fortune, 385
 And she for him, pleades strongly to the Moore,
 Ile powre this pestilence into his eare :
 That she repeales him, for her bodies Lust
 And by how much she striues to do him good,
 She shall vndo her Credite with the Moore. 390
 So will I turne her vertue into pitch,
 And out of her owne goodnesse make the Net,
 That shall en-mashe them all.
 How now Rodorigo ? 394

374. were] were't Q₁Q₂. were't Q₃, Rowe
 et seq.

375. Simbols] symboles Q₃.

376. enfetter'd] infetter'd Q₁.

379. How am] Am Pope+.

381. Diuinitie of hell] 'Tis hell's diuinity: Pope, Han.

382. diuels] Devils F₁F₂.
the] their Q₁F₁, Rowe+, Jen.
 Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly,
 Del.

384. whiles] while Q₁F₁F₂, Rowe+,
 Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.
whilst Q₂Q₃.

385. Fortune] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Knt. fortunes Q₁ et cet.

388. for her] from her Johns.

393, 394. One line, Pope et seq.

393. en-mashe] enmesh Q₁Q₂. enmesh
 Q₃. enmashe F₁F₂, Rowe. them] em Q₁.

394. Rodorigo] Rod'rigo Pope, Han.

372. fruitefull] JOHNSON: Liberal, bountiful, as the elements, out of which all things are produced. [See III, iv, 46.]

379. Function] SCHMIDT (Lex.): The operation of the mental faculties. [Very, very doubtful. See Ham. II, ii, 529; Mach. I, iii, 140.—ED.]

380. paralell] JOHNSON: That is, level, and even with his design.

380. course] WALKER (Crit., i, 165): Perhaps dele comma after 'course.'

382. put on] That is, encourage, thrust forward. A parallel instance is in Mach.
 IV, iii, 239: 'the powers above put on their instruments.'

383. suggest] DYCE: To tempt, to incite, to seduce.

387. Booth: All this with a quiet chuckle and increasing intensity.

388. repeals] JOHNSON: That is, recalls him. COLLIER: Its etymological sense.

Enter Roderigo.

395

Roderigo. I do follow heere in the Chace, not like a Hound that hunts, but one that filles vp the Crie. My Money is almost spent; I haue bin to night exceedingly well Cudgell'd : And I thinke the issue will bee, I shall haue so much experience for my paines; [322 a] And so, with no money at all, and a little more Wit, re- 401 turne againe to Venice.

Iago. How poore are they that haue not Patience? What wound did euer heale but by degrees? Thou know'st we worke by Wit, and not by Witchcraft 405
And Wit depends on dilatory time : Dos't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee, And thou by that small hurt hath casheer'd Cassio: Though other things grow faire against the Sun, Yet Fruites that blossome first, will first be ripe : 410

395. Enter...] After line 393, Qq.	Var. Knt.
Scene XV. Pope, Warb. Scene XVI.	403. haue not] ha not Q ₁ .
Han. Johns. Jen.	405. know'st] knowst Qq.
396. do] Om. Pope, Han.	407. Dos't] Do'st Q ₁ . Do'st F ₃ F ₄ .
398. I haue] I ha Qq.	Rowe i. Does't Rowe ii et seq.
399. And] Om. Qq.	hath] has Qq.
400-402. paines ... Venice] paines, as that comes to, and no money at all, and with that wit returne to Venice. Q ₁ , Jen.	408. hath] Sing. Dyce iii. hast QqFf et cet.
paines, and so no money at all, and with a little more wit returne to Venice. Q ₂ Q ₃ .	409. grow] grew Q ₃ .
402. again] Om. Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal.	410. Yet] But Q ₁ .
	will...ripe] are not first ripe : Han.
	first] fire Q ₃ .

398. Crie] DYCE: A pack, properly 'the giving mouth of hounds.' 'A crie of Hounds have here a Deer in Chase.'—Sylvester's Du Bartas, The Magnificence, p. 213, ed. 1632.

408. BOOTH: Roderigo shows delight at this, and is anxious to learn the particulars, but Iago urges him to go; then with triumphant haste speaks the concluding lines.

410. ripe] JOHNSON: Of many different things, all planned with the same art and promoted with the same diligence, some must succeed sooner than others, by the order of nature. Everything cannot be done at once; we must proceed by the necessary gradation. We are not to despair of slow events, any more than of tardy fruits, while the causes are in regular progress and the fruits grow fair against the sun. MALONE: The blossoming, or fair appearance of things, to which Iago alludes, is the removal of Cassio. As their plan had already blossomed, so there was good ground for expecting that it would soon be ripe. Iago does not mean to compare their scheme to tardy fruits. DEIGHTON: Johnson says the meaning is that we are not to despair of slow events, any more than of tardy fruits, while the causes are in regular progress, and the fruits grow fair against the sun: but Iago does not say that the fruits grew fair against Content thy selfe, a-while. Introth 'tis Morning; 411

 Pleasure, and Action, make the houres seeme short.
 Retire thee, go where thou art Billited:
 Away, I say, thou shalt know more heereafter:
 Nay get thee gone. Exit Roderigo. 415
 Two things are to be done:
 My Wife must moue for Cassio to her Mistris:
 Ile set her on my selfe, a while, to draw the Moor apart,
 And bring him iumpe, when he may Cassio finde 419

411. a-while] awhile Sing.
Introth] F₂F₃. Introth F, Rowe +,
 Knt. Wh. bi' the maffe Q₂. by' th maffe Q₂Q₃. By th' mass Cap. Jen. Huds. By the mass Steev. et cet.

412. houres] time Jen.

413. Billited] bill ted Q₂.

415, 416. One line, Q₂, Mal. et seq.

415-418. Lines end gone...move...on—
...apart, Ktly.

415. Exit...] Om. Q₂.

416. Two] Some Q₂.

418. Two lines, the first ending on. Q₂, Theob. Warb. et seq.

her on] Ff, Rowe, Pope. her on.
 Q₂. her on— Ktly. her on: Theob. et cet.
on...draw] on to draw Pope. on;
so draw Han.

a while] FfQ₂Q₃, Rowe, Jen. Sing. awhile Q₂. the while Theob. Warb. et cet.
to draw] will draw Johns. Steev.

'85.

419. when] where Coll. MS.

the sun. On the contrary, he says 'though other things grow, &c., yet, &c. I believe the argument is this:—Iago compares Cassio to one tree, and himself and Roderigo to another or others. Cassio, he says, 'grew fair against the sun' while they were in the shade, i. e., Cassio had an advantage over them in his position in life; but notwithstanding this, they had 'blossomed first,' i. e., had by their successful tumbling him out of his lieutenancy, made better use of their time and opportunities; and arguing from this, it was likely that they would 'first grow ripe,' i. e., would ultimately beat him in the race by attaining their objects, while he would end in failure and disgrace. Johnson's interpretation quite misses the point, while Malone does not touch the first of the two lines, and fails to explain the blossoming first and getting ripe first, which are important words here. HUDSON: The meaning seems to be, 'though in the sunshine of good luck the other parts of our scheme are promising well, yet we must expect that the part which first meets with opportunity, or time of blossom, will soonest come to harvest, or catch success.'

411. Introth] MALONE: One of the numerous arbitrary alterations made by the Master of the Revels in the playhouse copies, from which a great part of the Folio was printed. WHITE (ed. i): The change seems to be due rather to a care for the rhythm than to the scruples of the Master of the Revels.

418. THEOBALD: This unreasonable long Alexandrine was certainly a blunder of the editors; a slight transposition and a change will regulate it. [In Text. Notes, see Theobald's division of the line, wherein he followed the Q₂.]

418. a while] JENNENS: Perhaps this means the same as the while, and may be a contraction for at the while.

418. to draw] STREVEVS: This is in keeping with the interrupted speech. Iago is still debating with himself the means to perplex Othello.

Soliciting his wife : I, that's the way :

420

Dull not Deuice, by coldnesse, and delay.

Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cassio, Musicians, and Clowne.

Cassio. Masters, play heere, I wil content your paines, Something that's briefe: and bid, goodmorrow General.

Clo. Why Masters, haue your Instruments bin in Naples, that they speake i'th' Nose thus ?

5

420. wife :] wife—Ktly.
421. not Deuice] not deuise Qq. not,
Deuice, Theob. Warb.
Exit.] Exeunt. Qq.
1. Actus...] Om. Q. Actus 3. Scena I.
Q. Q. Actus... Scena Prima. F.
Othello's Palace. Rowe.
2. Enter...] Enter Cassio, with Musicians and the Clowne, Q. Enter Cassio, with Musicians Q. Q.
3. Masters] Master Q.
4. bid, goodmorrow] F. bid good mor- row QqF. bid good morrow, F. Rowe,
Pope, Han. Coll. Dyce i, Wh. i, Sta. Rlf.
- bid, good morrow*, Theob. Warb. Ktly. bid, Good-morrow, Johns. Jen. Knt. bid—good morrow, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. bid, good morrow to the Coll. (MS). bid 'Good morrow, Glo. Cam. Del. Dyce iii, Wh. ii.
[They play, and enter the Clowne. Q. Q.
Music plays... Theob.
5. haue] ha Qq.
bin in] bin at Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.
6. speake] play Cap. (corrected in Ex-rata). squeak Coll. ii (MS), Sing. ii.
i'th'] i'the Q. i'th' Q. Q. it's F.

419. iump] Exactly; see Shakespeare passim.
419. when] COLLIER (ed. ii) Where of the (MS.) is probably wrong, since Iago is adverting more to time than to place.
2. THEOBALD (Nichols's Illus., ii, 593): The direction for this entrance does not seem entirely right. The scene should be before Othello's palace. Cassio should speak with the musicians; after his speech they should play their serenade; and then the Clown should enter, as from the house. [This scene and the following scene are generally omitted, I believe, on the modern stage.—ED.]
3. play heere] BRAND (Pop. Ant., ii, 176): The custom of awaking a couple the morning after the marriage with a concert of music, is of old standing. In the letter from Sir Dudley Carleton to Mr. Winwood, describing the nuptials of the Lady Susan with Sir Philip Herbert, it is stated that, 'they were lodged in the council chamber, where the King gave them a reveille matin before they were up.' CHAPPELL (Pop.
Music, &c., p. 61): Any song intended to arouse in the morning was formerly called a hunt's up. See Rom. & Jul. III, v, 34. Cotgrave defines 'Resveil: A Hunts-vp, or morning song for a new-married wife, the day after the marriage.' RITSON: Haut-boys are the wind-instruments here meant.
5. Naples] JOHNSON: A loathsome disease first appeared at the siege of Naples.
PARR (p. 36): There are few Clowns in Italy know this; but every clown there knows that Pulcinella is the Neapolitan mask, and that Pulcinella speaks through the nose.
He generally knows, too, that the man who plays the puppet puts into his mouth a reed similar to that which is placed in the orifice of the haut-boy. COWDEN-CLARKE: The Neapolitans have a singularly drawing nasal twang in the utterance of their dialect.

- Muf.* How Sir? how? 7
- Clo.* Are these I pray you, winde Instruments?
- Muf.* I marry are they fir.
- Clo.* Oh, thereby hangs a tale. 10
- Muf.* Whereby hangs a tale, fir?
- Clow.* Marry fir, by many a winde Instrument that I know. But Masters, heere's money for you : and the Generall fo likes your Mufick, that he desires you for loues sake to make no more noife with it. 15
- Muf.* Well Sir, we will not.
- Clo.* If you haue any Muficke that may not be heard, too't againe. But (as they fay) to heare Muficke, the Generall do's not greatly care.
- Muf.* We haue none fuch, fir. 20
- Clow.* Then put vp your Pipes in your bagge, for Ile away. Go, vanifh into ayre, away. Exit Mu.
- Caffio.* Dost thou heare me, mine honeft Friend?
- Clo.* No, I heare not your honeft Friend : 25
- I heare you.
- Caffio.* Prythee keepe vp thy Quillets, ther's a poore peece of Gold for thee : if the Gentlewoman that attends the Generall be stirring, tell her, there's one Caffio en- 28

7, 9, &c. Muf.] Boy. Qq.
 8. I pray you,] I pray, cald Q₂Q₃. I pray you, cald Q₂. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Del.
 10, 11. tale] tayle Qq. tail Q.'81, Q.'95.
 13. heere's] heer's Q₂. hee's F₂. her's Q₃.
 14, 15. for loues sake] of all loues Q₂. Johns. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly, Sta. Dyce iii, Coll. iii, Huds.
 15. no more] no FfQ₂. Rowe, Pope, Han.
 18. too't] to't Qq. Rowe et seq.

20. haue] ha Qq.
 21. put vp] put Qq.
for Ile] and hye Han. Warb. Jen.
 22. into ayre] Om. Q₂, Jen.
Exit Mu.] Om. Qq.
 23. heare me, mine] hear my Qq. hear, mine Theob. +, Coll. Wh. hear, my Cap. et cet.
 24, 25. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.
 26. ther's] there's Q₂F₂F₄.
 28. Generall] Generals wife Q₂. Generals wife Q₂Q₃. Rowe et seq.

14. for loues sake] KNIGHT: The Qto has the prettier phrase. [See ABBOTT, § 169, for other instances where of is used in appeals.]

18. too't] Is there a pun here? WHITE (ed. ii) says that 'in "the Generall" we have a punning allusion to the indifference of the general public to music,' and I think one pun is quite as likely, or as unlikely, as the other.—ED.

21. for Ile away] RITSON (p. 231): This must be wrong; possibly—fly away. [An unknown former owner of my copy of Jennens has here queried on the margin, 'fore all, away, which is both ingenious and plausible.—ED.]

26. Quillets] MALONE: Nice and frivolous distinctions. [See Ham. V, i, 94].

treats her a little fauour of Speech. Wilt thou do this?

Clo. She is stirring fir : if she will stirre hither, I shall feeme to notifie vnto her. 30
Exit Clo.

Enter Iago.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You haue not bin a-bed then?

Cassio. Why no : the day had broke before we parted. 35
I haue made bold (Iago) to fend in to your wife :
My fuite to her is, that she will to vertuous Desdemona
Procure me some accesse. [322 b]

Iago. Ile fend her to you presently :
And Ile deuise a meane to draw the Moore 40
Out of the way, that your conuerse and bufinesse
May be more free. Exit

Cassio. I humbly thanke you for't. I neuer knew
A Florentine more kinde, and honest. 44

29. her] of her Rowe +.
Speech.] speech— Qq.
30. fir :...hither,] sir,...hither. Jen.
31. seeme to] soon so Sing. ii (MS).
seem so to Coll. ii (MS).
Exit Clo.] Om. Q₄. (After Iago, line
33) Q₂Q₃.
33. In happy] Ff. Caf. Doe good my friend: In happy Qq, Steev. Mal. Var.
Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. Cas. Do,
my good friend [Enter Iago] In happy Rowe +, Cap. (subs.). Cas. Do, good my friend [To him Enter Iago] In happy
Jen. Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Del. Huds. Rlse,
Wh. ii.
34, 36. haue] ha Qq.
34. bin] been F₄.
a-bed] a bed QqF₃F₄.

35-37. Why...Desdemona] Lines end, parted...her.. Desdemona Qq. Ending, parted...wife;...her...Desdemona. Johns.
Ending, broke...Iago...her...Desdemona
Cap. et seq.
36. Iago] Om. Pope +. wife :] wife,— Qq.
37. to her] Om. Pope, Theob. Han.
Warb.
vertuous] Om. Pope, Theob. Han.
Warb.
39. to you] Om. Pope +.
42. Exit.] After for't, line 43, Cap. Ktly, Glo. Cam.
43. for't] for it Q₄.
43, 44. Lines end, for't...honest. Cap.
44. A Florentine] a man Cap.

30, 31. These lines are, of course, prose. In the Globe Edition they chance to divide at 'hither.' WHITE overlooked this, and, in printing his second edition from the Globe, has in his own text retained the division at 'hither' and printed as verse. 'To err is human,' and no divineness is needed to forgive so venial a slip as this.—ED.

31. to notifie vnto] DELIUS: A pedantic, affected phrase which the Clown purposely uses, and in such a way as to leave it uncertain that he himself understood it.

33. In happy time] A la bonne heure. See Rom. & Jul. III, v, 110; Ham. V, ii, 193, &c., &c.

38. accesse] For the accent, see ABBOTT, § 490.

43, 44. WALKER (Crit. i, 89) suggests in view of the very frequent interpolation of Enter Emilia.

45

Emil. Goodmorrow(good Lieutenant) I am forrie
 For your displeasure : but all will sure be well.
 The Generall and his wife are talking of it,
 And she speakes for you stoutly. The Moore replies,
 That he you hurt is of great Fame in Cyprus, 50
 And great Affinitie : and that in wholsome Wifedome
 He might not but refuse you. But he protests he loues you
 And needs no other Sutor, but his likings
 To bring you in againe.

Cassio. Yet I beseech you, 55
 If you thinke fit, or that it may be done,
 Giue me aduantage of some breefe Discourse
 With Desdemon alone. 58

47. sure] soone Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev.
 Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly.

51. wholsome] Om. Pope, Theob. Han.
 Warb.

52. but] bat Q₃.
refuse you] refuse Q₂Q₃ Cap.
he protests] Om. Han.

53, 54. likings To] Ff, Rowe, Pope,

Theob. Han. Warb. likings, To take the safest occasion by the front Qq et cet. (first occasion Johns. saf'st occasion Cap. Steev.
'93, Var. Knt, Sing. Dyce, Wh. Ktly, Sta.
Del.).

58. Desdemon] Ff, Rowe, Wh. i, Sta.
Del. Dyce iii. Desdemona Qq et cet.

as in the Folio, this division and reading: 'I humbly thank you for't | I ne'er knew Florentine more kind and honest.' 'Perhaps,' he adds, 'we should arrange rather,— "I humbly thank you for't; I ne'er knew Florentine | More kind and honest."' [See Capell's reading and division, in Textual Notes.]

43. humbly] DYCE (ed. iii): 'The word "humbly" is constantly used with "thank," "pray," "beseech," and the like: hence, I suppose, a transcriber inserted it here. Cassio was Iago's equal, or rather his superior, and would scarcely have used the word even in his present dejected state.'—W. N. LETTSOM. Here, I apprehend, 'humbly' is no more to be taken in its literal sense than is 'humble' now-a-days when some very courteous correspondent signs himself 'Your humble servant.'

44. Florentine] MALONE: In consequence of this line, a doubt has been entertained concerning the country of Iago. Cassio was undoubtedly a Florentine, as appears by I, i, 22, where he is expressly called one. That Iago was a Venetian is proved by what he says after having stabbed Roderigo, V, i, 112. All that Cassio means to say here is, 'I never experienced more honesty and kindness even in any one of my own countrymen than in this man.'

47. displeasure] STEEVENS: The displeasure you have incurred from Othello.

53. likings] WALKER (Crit. i, 250): Why the plural? In F, there is no stop after the word; perhaps s has usurped the place of the comma, as it has elsewhere [in the examples which Walker then proceeds to give].

58. Desdemon] This instance of the name thus spelled must have escaped KNIGHT's notice, or, I think, he would not have written, or at least would have modified, the following note, which he appends to III, iii, 64: 'In five passages in the Æmil. Pray you come in:

 I will bestow you where you shall haue time 60
 To speake your bosome freely.
Cassio. I am much bound to you.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.

Othe. These Letters giue (Iago) to the Pylot,
 And by him do my duties to the Senate:
 That done, I will be walking on the Workes, 5
 Repaire there to mee.
Iago. Well, my good Lord, Ile doo't.
Oth. This Fortification (Gentlemen) shall we see't?
Gent. Well waite vpon your Lordship. Exeunt 9

- | | |
|---|---|
| 59. Pray you] Pray Ff, Rowe. | 4. by him] bid him Cap. conj. (p. 28 δ). |
| 62. Om. Q. | Senate] State Qq, Cap. Stoev. Mal. |
| I am] I'm Pope, Theob. Han. | Var. Coll. Wh. i. |
| Warb. | 5. on the] to the Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| [Exeunt . QqF ₃ F ₄ . | Workes,] works ; Coll. Dyce, Glo. |
| 1. Scena...] Om. Qq, Rowe. | Cam. works ,—Knt, Sta. |
| 2. Enter ... Gentlemen] Enter ... other | 7. Well] Om. Pope+. |
| Gentlemen. Qq. | 9. Well] We Qq, Jen. Coll. Wh. i. Weel |
| 3. Pylot] Pilate Q ₁ Q ₂ . Pilot Q ₃ F ₃ F ₄ . | F ₄ . We'll F ₃ F ₄ et cct. |

Folio Desdemona is called Desdemon. The abbreviation was not a capricious one, nor was it introduced merely for the sake of rhythm. It is clearly used as an epithet [sic] of familiar tenderness. In the present instance [III, iii, 64] Othello playfully evades his wife's solicitations with a rarely-used term of endearment. In the next case, IV, ii, 50, it comes out of the depth of conflicting love and jealousy—"Ah! Desdemon, away, away, away!" In the next place where he employs it, V, ii, 29, it is used upon the last solemn occasion when he speaks to her, "Have you prayed to-night, Desdemon?" And, lastly, it is spoken by him when he has discovered the full extent of his guilt and misery, "O Desdemon! dead Desdemon, dead." The only other occasion on which it is employed is by her uncle Gratiano,—“Poor Desdemon!” Surely we have no warrant for rejecting such a marked peculiarity.’ WALKER (Crit. i, 230) suggests that Knight supposed the spelling in the present instance, the sixth, ‘to be an erratum’; but it is not; the verse requires, as Walker says, that we should read Desdemon, and assuredly there can be no thought of ‘familiar tenderness’ here, from Cassio. This alone is a serious, perhaps fatal, objection to Knight’s theory, which I regretfully relinquish; nor is the objection lessened when we find, as Walker points out, that a double form of proper names is by no means uncommon. There are half a dozen instances of ‘Helen’ for Helena in Mid. N. D., and again in All’s Well.—ED.

Scœna Tertia.Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia.

Des. Be thou assur'd (good Cassio) I will do
All my abilities in thy behalfe.

Emil. Good Madam do : 5
I warrant it grieues my Husband,
As if the cause were his.

Des. Oh that's an honest Fellow, Do not doubt Cassio
But I will haue my Lord, and you againe
As friendly as you were. 10

Cassio. Bounteous Madam,
What euer shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's neuer any thing but your true Seruant.

Des. I know't : I thanke you : you do loue my Lord :
You haue knowne him long, and be you well assur'd 15
He shall in strangeness stand no farther off,
Then in a politique distance.

Cassio. I, but Lady, 18

1. Scœna Tertia] Om. Qq. Scene II.
Rowe.

An Apartment. Rowe. Before the Castle. Cap. The Garden of the Castle. Dyce.

3. do] use Quincy (MS).

5, 6. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.

6. warrant] know Qq, Pope +, Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly.

7. cause] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Sta. Del. case Qq et cct.

8. Fellow,] fellow:— Qq. Fellow: F,
F, Rowe +. fellow. Johns. et seq.

Do not doubt] doubt not Pope +.

11. Bounteous] Bountious Q₁. Mou
bounteous Pope +, Cap.

14. I know't:] O fir, Qq, Cap. Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Huds.
I know't, Rowe, Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.
Knt, Dyce, Sta. I know't! Wh. i.

15. You haue] You've Pope +, Dyce iii,
Huds.

be you well] be Q₂.

16. strangeness] strangest Qq. is strangest Anon (ap. Cam. ed.).

farther] further Steev.'93, Var
Dyce, Glo. Del. Huds. Rlse, Wh. ii.

FECHTER's setting of the stage for this scene is noteworthy; some of its details have been since adopted by eminent actors, and the public has not given due credit to the originator. It is thus: A Room in the Castle. At the back, an arched opening, looking over the sea. Right and left, in front,—and facing the public,—two large doorways closed with tapestry. At the left, a divan, and table covered with papers, maps, instruments of navigation, &c. On the right a low chair and stool; around and about them, embroideries, music, musical instruments, &c. As the curtain rises, Desdemona, seated, winds off silk, which Emilia (sitting on the stool) holds to her; Cassio stands respectfully before Desdemona, who continues her work as she speaks.

16. strangeness] The Anonymous conjecture recorded by the CAMBRIDGE EDITORS seems singularly happy.—ED.

That policie may either last so long,
 Or feede vpon such nice and waterish diet, 20
 Or breede it selfe so out of Circumstances,
 That I being absent, and my place supply'd,
 My Generall will forget my Loue, and Seruice.

Des. Do not doubt that : before Emilia here,
 I giue thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee, [323 a]
 If I do vow a friendship, Ile performe it 26
 To the last Article. My Lord shall neuer rest,
 Ile watch him tame, and talke him out of patience ;
 His Bed shall seeme a Schoole, his Boord a Shrift,
 Ile intermingle euery thing he do's 30
 With Cassio's suite : Therefore be merry Cassio,
 For thy Solicitor shall rather dye, 32

- | | |
|--|---|
| 19. That] The Q. | 23. will] would Jen. |
| 20. waterish] watrish Q., Cap. | and] an Q. |
| 21. Circumstances] Ff, Rowe+. circumstance Qq et cet. | 24. Emilia] Emillia Qq. |
| 22. supply'd] supplied Qq. | 25. place.] place? Q. |
| | 27. shall neuer] shan't Han. |

19. That policie] JOHNSON: He may either of himself think it politic to keep me out of office so long, or he may be satisfied with such slight reasons, or so many accidents may make him think my re-admission at that time improper, that I may be quite forgotten.

24. doubt] WHITE (ed. ii): Do not imagine, fear, that.

25. warrant] COLERIDGE (p. 255): The over-zeal of innocence in Desdemona.

28. tame] JOHNSON: It is said that the ferocity of beasts, insuperable and irreclaimable by any other means, is subdued by keeping them from sleep. STEEVENS: It is to the management of hawks and other birds that Shakespeare alludes. So, in Cartwright's Lady Errant: 'we'll keep you, As they do hawks, watching until you leave Your wildness.' Again, in Monsieur D'Olive, 1606: 'your only way to deal with women and parrots, is to keep them waking.' HARTING (p. 45): A wild hawk was sometimes tamed by watching it night and day, to prevent its sleeping. So, in 'An approved treatise of Hawks and Hawking,' by Edmund Berk, Gent, 1619:—'I have heard of some who watched and kept their hawks awake seven nights and as many days, and then they would be wild, rammish, and disorderly.' PYE (p. 335): This strumpet-like resolution of Desdemona takes off much from the interest we should take in her fate. [In Pye's Preface, where he is pleased to speak favorably of Shakespeare (Pye was Poet Laureate, be it remembered), he observes that Shakespeare 'does not possess the power of Otway, and many inferior poets, in exciting pity.' Should not a list of those poets who are superior to Shakespeare in exciting pity include Pye? Is there anything in Shakespeare that excites more pity than this remark on Desdemona? Pye says that his Notes are the result of his 'perusal' of Shakespeare, which has been 'a favorite amusement in his hours of leisure.' With what force is not the truth of the infant hymn driven home to us: 'For Satan finds some mischief still For idle hands to do'!—ED.]

Then giue thy caufe away.

33

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Emil. Madam, heere comes my Lord.

34

Cassio. Madam, Ile take my leaue.

Des. Why stay, and heare me speake.

Cassio. Madam, not now : I am very ill at ease,
Vnfit for mine owne purpofes.

Des. Well, do your difcretion.

Exit Cassio.

40

Iago. Hah? I like not that.

Othel. What doft thou fay?

Iago. Nothing my Lord; or if—I know not what.

Othel. Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

44

33. thy caufe] thee caufe: Q₁.

Scene IV. Pope +, Jen.

33. 37. Lines end, comes...stay...speak
Steev.'93, Var. Knt, Sing.

34. Enter...] Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen Qq. ...at distance. Theob.
After line 40, Dyce, Wh. Glo. Sta. Huds.
Rlfe.

37. Why] Nay Q₂Q₄ Jen.

38. I am] I'm Pope Tracob. Han.
Warb. Dyce iii, Huds.

39. purpofes] purpose Qq, Coll. i, Wh.
i, Ktly.

40. Well] Closing line 39, Sing. Well, well, (closing line 39) Cap. Steev.'93, Var.

41. Hah?] Ha, Qq.

43. if—] if, Q₁. if—Q₂Q₃.

35 et seq. DELIUS: In short colloquies like this, Shakespeare is fond of using half Alexandrines, which are usually cut up by the Editors into blank verse. CAPELL's emendation and division of line 40 occurred independently to WALKER (Crit. ii, 147).

40. FECHTER: Othello and Iago appear at the back, in the gallery. Emilia draws the tapestry on the left, to give passage to Cassio. Iago (as by an involuntary movement) touches the arm of Othello, who raises his head at the moment when Cassio bows to Desdemona and goes out. BOOTH: Enter Othello and Iago. Desdemona and Emilia go with Cassio into the garden at back, and Cassio lingers just long enough to be seen by Othello and Iago. The women remain for a moment after his exit.

41. BOOTH: Don't growl this,—let it barely be heard by the audience.

44. FECHTER: Othello comes forward, opening dispatches and petitions, and followed by Iago. LEWES (On Actors, &c., p. 156): It is one of Fechter's new arrangements that Othello, when the tempter begins his diabolical insinuation, shall be seated at a table reading and signing papers. When I first heard of this bit of 'business' it struck me as admirable; and indeed I think so still; although the manner in which Fechter executes it is one of those lamentable examples in which the dramatic art is subordinated to serve theatrical effect. (Foot-note: Having now seen Salvini in Othello, I conclude that this 'business' was imitated from him,—but Fechter failed to imitate the expression of emotion which renders such business significant.) That Othello should be seated over his papers, and should reply to Iago's questions while continuing his examination and affixing his signature, is natural; but it is not natural,—that is, not true to the nature of Othello and the situation,—for him to be dead

Iago. Cassio my Lord? No sure, I cannot thinke it 45
That he would steale away so guilty-like,
Seeing your comming.
Oth. I do beleuee 'twas he.
Def. How now my Lord?
I haue bin talking with a Suitor heere, 50
A man that languishes in your displeasure.
Oth. Who is't you meane?
Def. Why your Lieutenant Cassio: Good my Lord,
If I haue any grace, or power to moue you,
His present reconciliation take. 55
For if he be not one, that truly loues you,
That erres in Ignorance, and not in Cunning,
I haue no iudgement in an honest face.
I prythee call him backe.
Oth. Went he hence now? 60
Def. I footh; so humbled,
That he hath left part of his greefe with mee
To suffer with him. Good Loue, call him backe. 63

45. Lord?] Lord?— Qq. F, F₂, Theob. Warb. In sooth Rowe, Pope, 46. steale] sneake Q₁. Han. I' sooth Johns. Jen. Ay, sooth Cap.
47. your] F₂, Knt. you QqF₂F₄, Rowe et cet.
et cet. humbled] humbl'd Cap. (corrected 48. do] Om. Pope+. in Errata).
48, 49. One line, Walker. 62. hath] has Qq.
53. Cassio:] Cassio, Qq. Cassio. Ff. greefe] grieves Qq.
60, 61. One line, Walker. 63. To suffer] I suffer Q₁, Mal. Steev.
61. I sooth] F₂. Yes faith Qq. I, Sooth Var. Sing. Ktly.

to the dreadful import of Iago's artful suggestions. [I do not know when Salvini first acted Othello, but Fechter, I believe, had acted Othello many times when his Acting Copy was printed in 1861.—ED.]

48. BOOTH: Exeunt Iago and Emilia. Their presence would distract attention; besides, it is proper for them to retire during an interview between their superiors.

49. FECHTER: Othello kisses Desdemona on the forehead.

55. take] WARBURTON: Cassio was to be reconciled to his General, not his General to him; therefore 'take' cannot be right. We should read make. JOHNSON: To take his reconciliation, may be to accept the submission which he makes in order to be reconciled.

57. Cunning] WARBURTON: Design or purpose simply. MALONE: Perhaps, rather, knowledge, the ancient sense of the word. It is opposed to ignorance.

60. FECHTER: Othello seats himself in Desdemona's chair and returns to his papers, as if to break the conversation.

61. humbled] WALKER (Crit. iii, 286): A trisyllable here.

Othel. Not now (sweet Desdemon) some other time.

Def. But shall't be shortly?

65

Oth. The sooner (Sweet) for you.

Def. Shall't be to night, at Supper?

Oth. No, not to night.

Def. To morrow Dinner then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home:

70

I meete the Captaines at the Cittadell.

Def. Why then to morrow night, on Tuesday morne,

On Tuesday noone, or night; on Wednesday Morne.

I prythee name the time, but let it not 74

64. Desdemon] F₂F₃Q₂. Knt, Sing.
Dyce, Wh. i, Sta. Hal. Del. Coll. iii, Huds.
Desdemona Q₁Q₃F₄. Rowe et cet.

66. The sooner] Sooner Pope, Han.

68. No, not] Not Pope+.

72. on] Ff, Rowe, Knt. or Qq et cet.

73. On Tuesday] Or Tuesday Pope+, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

noone] morne Qq.

73. night; on] night, or Qq, Pope+,
Jen. night; or Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing.
Ktly.

Wednesday] wednesday Q₃. wednes- day Q₂F₃F₄.

74. prythee] preethee Q₂. prethee Q₂Q₃
F₃F₄. praythee F₄. pray thee Cap. Steev.
Mal. Var.

64. Desdemon] See III, i, 58. BOOTH: He leads her to the couch—they sit.

67. to night] HERAUD (p. 278): I know not whether the poet had any design in it, but it may be, and perhaps profitably, remarked that the action of the Third Act takes place on a Sunday. . . . In the arrangements of the scene, the different persons engaged in it should appear as if coming from their devotions. In the next Act we find Othello derisively alluding to having seen the meretricious Emilia so engaged; and this event may have happened on this very Sunday, and probably had.

70. LEWES (p. 158): These preceding short, evasive sentences are subtly expressive of Othello's mind; but Fechter misrepresents them by making Othello free from all misgiving. He 'toys with her curls,' and treats her as a father might treat a child who was asking some favour which could not be granted yet, which called for no explicit refusal. If the scene stood alone, I should read it differently; but standing as it does between the two attempts of Iago to fill Othello's mind with suspicion, the meaning is plain enough. He has been made uneasy by Iago's remarks; very naturally, his bearing towards his wife reveals that uneasiness. A vague feeling, which he dares not shape into a suspicion, disturbs him. She conquers him at last by her winning ways; and he vows that he will deny her nothing. If this be the state of mind in which the great scene begins, it is obviously a serious mistake in Fechter to sit down to his papers, perfectly calm, free from all idea whatever of what Iago has suggested; and answering Iago's insidious questions as if he did not divine their import. So clearly does Othello divine their import that it is he, and not Iago, who expresses in words their meaning. It is one of the artifices of Iago to make his victim draw every conclusion from premises which are put before him, so that, in the event of detection, he can say, 'I said nothing, I made no accusation.' All he does is to lead the thoughts of Othello to the conclusion desired.

72, 73. On] KNIGHT: The repetition of 'on' is much more emphatic than or.

Exceed three dayes. Infaith hee's penitent : 75
 And yet his Trespasse, in our common reason
 (Saue that they fay the warres must make example)
 Out of her best, is not almost a fault
 T'encurre a priuate checke. When shall he come ?
 Tell me Othello. I wonder in my Soule 80
 What you would aske me, that I should deny,
 Or stand so mam'ring on ? What ? Michael Cassio,
 That came a woing wirh you ? and so many a time
 (When I haue spoke of you dispraifingly) 84

75. Infaith] Ifaith Qq. In faith Rowe et seq.

77. warres] war Cap.

77, 78. example]...best,] Ff. example...best,) Rowe ii, Pope, Han. Knt, Sta. examples...best] Qq et cet.

78. her] QqFf, Cap. Coll. i, Dyce i, Wh. i, Hal. Del. the Sing. ii, Huds. our Coll. iii (MS). their Rowe et cet.

almost] at most Anon (ap. Cam.).

79. T'encurre] T'incurre F₂F₃, T'in- cur F₄, Rowe+, Coll. Wh. i, Dyce iii, Huds. To incurre Qq et cet.

81. would] could Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del.

I should] I would Ff, Rowe+.

82. mam'ring] muttering Q₂, Pope Theob. Warb. mumming Johns. mammering or mamm'ring Cap. et cet.

83. so] Om. Pope+, Cap. Steev.'93.

84. dispraifingly] disparagingly Mrs Jameson.

78. her best] JOHNSON: The severity of military discipline must not spare the best men of their army when their punishment may afford a wholesome example. COLLIER (ed. i): A personification of 'the wars,' which Shakespeare often treats as a substantive in the singular. COLLIER (ed. ii): 'Her best' is a misprint for 'our best,' as appears by the (MS.) DYCE (ed. i): If we consider 'the wars' as used for war generally, the usual modern alteration, 'their best,' is unnecessary. DYCE (ed. iii): 'I must own I think "her" wrong. The is perhaps better than their or our.'—W. N. LETTSOM. [Would the difficulty be lessened by considering the s in 'Warres' that superfluous letter to which Walker, I, i, 31, calls attention, and of which, in this play, some eight instances are given?—ED.]

78. not almost] ABBOTT, § 29: 'Almost' frequently follows the word which it qualifies. Hence, in negative sentences 'not-almost,' where we should use 'almost not,' or, in one word, 'scarcely,' 'hardly.' Thus, here, in this present instance, it is equivalent to, 'Is not (I may almost say) fault enough to,' &c., or, 'is scarcely fault enough to,' &c. It was natural for the Elizabethans to dislike putting the qualifying 'almost' before the word qualified by it. But there was an ambiguity in their idiom. 'Not almost-a-fault' would mean 'not approaching to a fault'; 'not-almost a fault,' 'very nearly not a fault.' We have, therefore, done well in avoiding the ambiguity by disusing 'almost' in negative sentences.

82. mam'ring] HANMER (Gloss.): To hesitate, to stand in suspense. HALLIWELL cites from Lyly's Euphues [p. 299, ed. Arber]: 'I stoode in a great mamering, how I might behaue my selfe, least being too coye he might thinke mee proud, or vsing too much curtesie, he might iudge mee wanton.'

83. with you] See Note on I, ii, 64.

Hath tane your part, to haue so much to do 85

To bring him in? Trust me, I could do much.

Oth. Prythee no more : Let him come when he will :

I will deny thee nothing.

Def. Why, this is not a Boone :

'Tis as I should entreate you weare your Gloues, [323 b]

Or feede on nourishing dishes, or keepe you warme, 91

Or sue to you, to do a peculiar profit

To your owne person. Nay, when I haue a suite

Wherein I meane to touch your Loue indeed,

It shall be full of poize, and difficult waight, 95

And fearefull to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing.

Whereon, I do befeech thee, grant me this,

To leaue me but a little to my felfe.

Def. Shall I deny you? No : farewell my Lord. 100

Oth. Farewell my Desdemona, Ile come to thee strait.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 86. Trust me] Birlady Q ₁ . | 93. a suite] suit F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe+. |
| much.] Q ₁ F ₁ . much,— or much— | 95. poize] poise Q _q . |
| Q ₂ Q ₃ et cet. | difficult waight] difficulty Q ₂ , |
| 87. Prythee] Preethee Q ₁ . Prethee Q ₂ . | Pope+, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly, |
| Q ₃ F ₁ . Prithee Q ₁ 81. | Sta. |
| 88. [Re-enter Iago and Em. Booth. | waight] weight Q ₂ Q ₃ F ₃ F ₄ . |
| 90. Gloues] cloths Warb. | 101. Defdemona] Defdomona Q ₁ . Def- |
| 91. dishes] meats Pope+. | damona F ₁ . Desdemon Dyce iii. |
| 92. you,] you Cap. | Ile] I will Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. |
| a] Om. Pope+, Cap. Steev.'93, Var. | Sing. Ktly. |
| Dyce iii, Huds. | to thee] Om. Pope+. |

84. dispraisingly] BOOTH : Reprove her playfully. Throughout this colloquy gaze lovingly in her face, and seem to encourage her to coax by your teasing silence.

86. BOOTH : Here she begins to 'pout' at her failure to obtain his consent, and he, fearing that she has misconstrued his silence during her last appeal, stops her with a kiss.

91. dishes] WALKER (Vers. 267) : The extra syllable in the body of the line seems hardly allowable, where the pause is so slight; and yet 'disk' for 'dishes' appears much too harsh.

92. a] WALKER (Crit. i, 88) suggests that this is one of the many instances where a is interpolated in the Folio, and, if it can be dispensed with, it should be omitted here for the sake of rhythm. [See Text. Notes.]

95. poize] KNIGHT : In the sense before us 'poize' is balance, and Desdemona means to say that, when she really prefers a suit that shall task the love of Othello, it shall be one difficult to determine; and, when determined, hard to be undertaken. DYCE (Gloss.) : Weight, moment, importance. STAUNTON : Since 'poize' means weight, the line in F₁ is apparently an error, arising probably from the poet's having, in the first instance, written both poize and weight, uncertain which to adopt, and afterwards forgotten to cancel the discarded word.

Def. Emilia come ; be as your Fancies teach you : 102
What ere you be, I am obedient. Exit.

Oth. Excellent wretch : Perdition catch my Soule
But I do loue thee : and when I loue thee not, 105
Chaos is come againe.

102. come : be] Ff, Rowe +, Knt. come, be it Qq. come ; be it Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal.
Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. Come. Be
Johns. et cet.

Exeunt Def. and Em. Q₂Q₃.
Scene V. Pope +, Jen.

104. wretch :] wretch, Qq. wretch :
Rowe. wench! Theob. Han. Wh. ii.

103. Exit] Exit Defd. and Em. Q₂.

104. FECHTER : Othello follows her with his eyes, and sends her a last kiss.

104-106. BOOTH : With joyousness,—yet there should be an undertone of sadness, —as at their first embrace in Cyprus. Iago, at the back of the stage, watches him with a sneering smile.

104. wretch] THEOBALD : This word can scarce be admitted to be used unless in compassion or contempt. I make no question but that the Poet wrote wench, which was not then used in that low and vulgar acceptation as at present. See 'ill-starr'd wench,' V, ii, 335. UPTON (p. 289, n.) : Giraldo Cinthio calls Desdemona, in allusion to her name, la infelice Disdemona. And I make no question but Othello, in his rapturous admiration, with some allusion to her name, exclaims, 'Excellent wretch.'
HEATH (p. 561) : The poison of jealousy has already begun to work in Othello, infused by the artful hints and half sentences of Iago, and by the frank and pressing solicitations of Desdemona on behalf of Cassio. His assurance in her faith and virtue is already somewhat staggered, and he begins to consider it as a thing possible that she may be unworthy of his love. To this state of mind this exclamation is admirably well adapted, expressing the utmost fondness, and at the same time a distrust growing upon him. If the etymology of the name had been known to Shakespeare, as Upton suggests, he would not have spoiled it by changing it from Disdemona to Desdemona.
JOHNSON : The meaning of the word 'wretch' is not generally understood. It is now, in some parts of England, a term of the softest and fondest tenderness. It expresses the utmost degree of amiableness, joined with an idea which, perhaps, all tenderness includes, of feebleness, softness, and want of protection. Othello, considering Desdemona as excelling in beauty and virtue, soft and timorous by her sex, and by her situation absolutely in his power, calls her 'Excellent wretch!' It may be expressed :
'Dear, harmless, helpless excellence.' COLLIER : Such words of endearment are resorted to when those implying love, admiration, and delight seem inadequate. [One of Collier's best notes in this play.—ED.] HUDSON : As here used, 'wretch' was the strongest expression of endearment in the language. WHITE (ed. ii) : It is needless to point out that 'wretch' may be used as a term of fondest endearment; but not in connection with 'excellent.' The misprint [from wench to 'wretch'] was easy.

106. Chaos] JOHNSON : When my love is for a moment suspended by suspicion, I have nothing in my mind but discord, tumult, perturbation, and confusion. STEEVENS :
There is another meaning possible : 'When I cease to love thee, the world is at an end,' i. e., there remains nothing valuable or important. The first explanation may be more elegant; the second is perhaps more easy. There is the same thought in *V. &
A.*, l. 1019 : 'For he being dead, with him is beauty slain, And, beauty dead, black Chaos comes again.' [HUNTER (ii, 282) also cites this passage from V. & A. as one

Iago. My Noble Lord. 107
Oth. What doft thou fay, Iago?
Iago. Did Michael Caffio
When he woo'd my Lady, know of your loue? 110
Oth. He did, from firft to laft:
Why doft thou afke?
Iago. But for a fatisfaction of my Thought,
No further harme.
Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago? 115
Iago. I did not thinke he had bin acquainted with hir.
Oth. O yes, and went betweene vs very oft.
Iago. Indeed? 118

107. Lord.] QqFf. lord ,— Theob. et	113. Thought ,] thoughts . Q ₄ .
seq.	114. further] farther Pope ii.
109, 110. Did...Lady] One line, Qq,	116. he had] he'd Pope, Theob. Han.
Pope et seq.	Warb.
110. he] you QqFf et cet.	hir] it Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Jen. Wh.
woo'd] wooded Qq.	ii. her Qq et cet.
111, 112. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.	117. oft] often Q ₄ .
113. for a] for Q ₃ .

of the many in this play, more than in any other, which remind us of that poem and of R. of L.] MALONE: Compare the same thought in Wint. Tale, IV, iv, 490: 'It cannot fail but by The violation of my faith; and then Let nature crush the sides o' the earth together and mar the seeds within!' FRANZ HORN (i, 330): Othello refers to the chaos in his life before he knew Desdemona.

107. RYMER (p. 118): One might think after what we have seen, that there needs no great cunning, no great poetry and address to make the Moor jealous. Such impatience, such a rout for a handsome young fellow, the very morning after her marriage, must make him either to be jealous, or to take her for a Changeling below his jealousy. After this scene, it might strain the Poet's skill to reconcile the couple, and allay the jealousy. Iago now can only actum agere, and vex the audience with a nauseous repetition. Whence comes it then that this is the top scene, the scene that raises Othello above all other Tragedies on our Theatres? It is purely from the Action; from the Mops and the Mows, the Grimace, the Grins, and Gesticulation. [It is to be hoped that the reader comprehends the motive which prompts the occasional insertion of these criticisms by Rymer. He has read his Shakespeare to little purpose who does not appreciate the relief, amid tragic scenes, afforded by a dash of buffoonery.—ED.]

114. harme] BOOTH: With the merest shade of emphasis. FECHTER: Othello, at the table, throwing aside some of his papers and signing others.

116. hir] WHITE (ed. ii): Cassio's acquaintance or non-acquaintance with Desdemona had no necessary connection with his knowledge of Othello's love. [See Text Notes.]

118. BOOTH: Contract the brows, but do not frown,—rather look disappointed, and merely mutter in surprise, 'Indeed'!

Oth. Indeed? I indeed. Discern'st thou ought in that?
 Is he not honest? 120
Iago. Honest, my Lord?
Oth. Honest? I, Honest.
Iago. My Lord, for ought I know.
Oth. What do'st thou thinke?
Iago. Thinke, my Lord? 125
Oth. Thinke, my Lord? Alas, thou ecchos't me;

119. I indeed] Indeed Q₁. Ay, indeed Steev.'93, Var. Coll. Sing. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Rowe et seq. Om. Steev. conj. Del. Rlf.
 119, 123. ought] ought Theob. ii et seq. 126. Alas...me]; Separate line, Steev.'93, Var. Coll. Sing. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Del. Rlf.
 119. in that] of that Rowe, Pope, Han. Alas, thou ecchos't] Ff, Rowe, Knt. why dost thou ecchoe Q₂Q₃, Johns. Jen. why, by heav'n, thou eccho'st Pope+. By heav'n he ecchoes Q₁ et cet.
 122. Honest? I, Honest] Ay, honest Steev.'93.
 124-126. What...Lord?] One line,

121. Honest] BOOTH: Hesitatingly.

122. Honest?] STEEVENS: It appears from many instances that where words were to be repeated at all, our old, blundering printers continued the repetition beyond propriety. [See Text. Notes.] KNIGHT: This re-echo of Iago's echo is rejected by Steevens, because it violates the measure. He could only see two syllables beyond the ten, without any regard to the force and consistency of the passage.

123. BOOTH: With indifference. FECHTER marks this as a broken speech, by a dash after 'know—'

125. BOOTH: With embarrassment.

126. COLERIDGE (Note on Winter's Tale, p. 243): The idea of this delightful drama [The Winter's Tale] is a genuine jealousy of disposition, and it should be immediately followed by the perusal of Othello, which is the direct contrast of it in every particular. For jealousy is a vice of the mind, a culpable tendency of the temper, having certain well-known and well-defined effects and concomitants, all of which are visible in Leontes, and, I boldly say, not one of which marks its presence in Othello;—such as, first, an excitability by the most inadequate causes, and an eagerness to snatch at proofs; secondly, a grossness of conception, and a disposition to degrade the object of the passion by sensual fancies and images; thirdly, a sense of shame of his own feelings exhibited in a solitary moodiness of humour, and yet from the violence of the passion forced to utter itself, and therefore catching occasions to ease the mind by ambiguities, equivokes, by talking to those who cannot, and who are known not to be able to, understand what is said to them,—in short, by soliloquy in the form of dialogue, and hence a confused, broken, and fragmentary manner; fourthly, a dread of vulgar ridicule, as distinct from a high sense of honour or a mistaken sense of duty; and lastly, and immediately consequent on this, a spirit of selfish vindictiveness.

126. Alas] MALONE: One of the numerous alterations made in the Folio by the licenser. KNIGHT: There is, in this reading, a quiet expression of dread,—a solemn

As if there were some Monster in thy thought 127
 Too hideous to be shewne. Thou dost mean fomthing:
 I heard thee say euen now, thou lik'st not that,
 When Cassio left my wife. What didd'st not like? 130
 And when I told thee, he was of my Counsaile,
 Of my whole course of wooing; thou cried'st, Indeede?
 And didd'st contract, and purfe thy brow together,
 As if thou then hadd'st shut vp in thy Braine
 Some horrible Conceite. If thou do'st loue me, 135
 Shew me thy thought.

Iago. My Lord, you know I loue you.

Oth. I thinke thou do'st:

And for I know thou'rt full of Loue, and Honeftie,
 And weigh'st thy words before thou giu'st them breath, 140
 Therefore these stops of thine, fright me the more:
 For such things in a false disloyall Knaue
 Are trickes of Custome: but in a man that's iust,
 They're close dilations, working from the heart, 144

127. thy] Ff, Rowe +, Jen. Knt. his Q, et cet.

128. dost] didst Q.

129. euen] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Dyce, Glo.
 Cam. Rlse. but Qq et cet.

lik'st] *Qq*Ff, Rowe. lik'st Pope
 et cet.

132. Of my] Ff, Rowe. In my Qq et
 cet.

135. Conceite] counsell Q. conceits
 Rowe ii.

138. dost] doest Theob. ii, Warb.

139. And for] Qq, Rowe +, Cam. For
 Ff. And,—for or And, for Cap. et cet.

thou'rt] thou'rt F, F₄. thou art
Qq, Pope ii, Theob. Warb. Johns. Jen.

Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly.

139. Loue and] Om. Han.

140. weigh'st] weighe'st Qq.

giu'st them] giue em Q. giu'st
'em *Q*₂*Q*₃.

141. fright] affright Q.

142. false disloyall] false-disloyal Sta.

144. They're] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Dyce, Wh. i, Sta. Cam. Del. Huds. They are
Qq et cet.

close] cold Ff, Rowe, Theob. Warb.

Om. Han.

dilations] Ff₂*Q*₃, Rowe, Theob.

Warb. Johns. Jen. Sta. denotements Q.

Pope, Cap. Mal. Steev.'93, Var. Hal. dis- tillations Han. delations Steev.'73 et cet.

foreboding of evil. COLLIER: Tame and flat. HUDSON: It is not easy to choose between the three readings, but I am strongly inclined to prefer Q. ROLFE: The 'alas' was, of course, put in to fill the gap made by the omission of the oath.

128. BOOTH: Iago again pretends embarrassment.

137. BOOTH: Reproachfully. FECHTER: Taking his hand, across the table, and grasping it with feigned emotion.

144. dilations] UPTON (p. 291): From the Latin dilationes, delayings, pauses, & differendo. [This is one of the very many instances cited by Upton to prove that Shakespeare 'makes Latin words English, and uses them according to their original idiom.'] WARBURTON: These stops and breaks are cold dilations, or cold keeping back a secret, which men of phlegmatic constitutions, whose hearts are not swayed or

That Passion cannot rule. 145
Iago. For Michael Cassio,
 I dare be sworne, I thinke that he is honest. 147

147. be sworne] presume Q₂.

147. that he] he Q₃.

governed by their passions, can do; while more sanguine tempers reveal themselves at once, and without reserve. JOHNSON: The reading of the earlier Quarto was changed by the author not to 'dilations, but to delations; to occult and secret accusations, working involuntarily from the heart, which, though resolved to conceal the fault, cannot rule its passion of resentment. STEEVENS: I should willingly have adopted Dr Johnson's emendation, could I have discovered that the word delation was ever used in its Roman sense of accusation, during the time of Shakespeare. Bacon frequently employs it, but always to signify carriage or conveyance. MALONE: Delation is not found in any Dictionary that I have seen, nor has any passage been quoted in support of it. On the contrary, we find in Minshew the verb 'To delate,' not signifying to accuse, but thus interpreted: 'to speak at large of anything, vid. to dilate'; so that if even delations were the word of the old copy, it would mean no more than 'dilations.' No reasonable objection can be made to denotements, i. e., indications, or recoveries, not openly revealed, but involuntarily working from the heart, which cannot rule and suppress its feelings. Nothing is got by the change of the Folio to 'dilations,' which was undoubtedly used in the sense of dilatements, or large and full expositions. BOSWELL: In Todd's Johnson an authority is given for delations in the sense of accusations, from Wotten's Remains, p. 460, ed. 1651. KNIGHT: We have adopted Johnson's ingenious suggestion of delations, i. e., secret accusations. STAUNTON: 'Dilations' may be a contraction of distillations [see Text. N.], and the meaning of 'close dilations,' secret droppings. WHITE (ed. i): Delations, i. e., subtle, intimate confessions or informations. WHITE (ed. ii): Delations, i. e., revelations. [To me the interpretations, 'secret accusation,' and the others, are here barely intelligible. What has frightened Othello is these 'stops,' these pauses, of Iago, which he would have disregarded in a false knave, as a common trick, but in a man that's just, such 'stops,' such 'dilations' indicate something deeper, some horrible conceit which he hesitates to disclose, and which makes him weigh his words and protract the revelation. For 'dilation' Shakespeare had the classical and common Latin word meaning to delay, as Upton pointed out, and he had, besides, the very same word, exactly so spelled, in French. Cotgrave gives: 'Dilation: A deferring, delaying, prolonging, protraction.' I do not think this explanation pre-eminently happy. I have seen better explanations of difficult passages—and worse.—ED.]

145. Passion] STAUNTON: Unless this word is here employed in the unusual sense of prudence, caution, &c., we must understand Othello to mean,—working from a heart that cannot govern its emotions. [I prefer Warburton's interpretation in the preceding note.—ED.] HUDSON: It should be noted that in all this part of the dialogue the doubts started in Othello by the villain's artful insinuations have reference only to Cassio. There is not the least sign that the Moor's thoughts anywise touch his wife; and Iago seems perplexed that his suspicions have lighted elsewhere than he had intended. The circumstance is very material in reference to Othello's predispositions, or as regards the origin and nature of his jealousy.

147. sworne] DYCE (ed. ii, 1866): 'Should not this be written with a break, as if Iago were correcting himself? "I dare be sworn—I think," &c.'—W. N. LETTSON.

Oth. I thinke so too. 148
Iago. Men should be what they seeme,
Or those that be not, would they might seeme none. 150
Oth. Certaine, men should be what they seeme.
Iago. Why then I thinke Cassio's an honest man.
Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this ?
I prythee speake to me, as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminat, and giue thy worst of thoughts 155
The worst of words. [324 a]
Iago. Good my Lord pardon me,
Though I am bound to euery Acte of dutie,
I am not bound to that : All Slaues are free : 159

148. too] to Qq.	Ktly, Del.
149. what] that Q ₁ .	154. as to] to Q ₁ .
150. seeme none.] seeme , Q ₃ .	thy] my Rowe ii.
151. Certaine, men] Certain men , Q ₃ .	155. As...worst] One line, Han.
151, 152. Certaine...Why then] One line (reading that Cassio is in 152) Steev.	thy...thoughts] the...thought Q ₁ .
'93.	thy thoughts Q ₃ .
153. there's] ther's Q ₂ Q ₃ .	156. words] word Q ₁ .
this?] this , Qq.	158. Though I am] I am not Rowe ii.
154. prythee] pray thee Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i,	159. that: All] that, all Rowe +. that all Qq, Han. et seq.
	free] Ff. free to Qq et cet.

[Five years earlier, FECHTER had so printed the line, and had also put a dash after 'Cassio.'—ED.]

149. be] BOOTH: With the least possible suggestiveness in tone and look.

150. none] WARBURTON: There is no sense in this reading. I suppose Shakespeare wrote knaves. HEATH (p. 562): I am rather inclined to think that it should be: 'they might be known.' That is, I wish there were any certain way of distinguishing and detecting them. JOHNSON: I believe the meaning is, 'would they might no longer seem, or bear the shape of men.' JENNENS: The old reading is plain enough. Those that seem honest should be honest, or those that be not what they seem, i. e., honest, would they might seem none, i. e., have no seeming or appearance of honesty.

151. FECHTER: Rising, without leaving the table; and smiling as if in raillery.

152. BOOTH: As though you would dismiss an unpleasant topic.

158. Though I am] The misprint in Rowe's ed. ii (see Text. Notes) POPE, in his edition, prints at the foot of the page, as though it were a genuine reading of the old text, and a proof of the fidelity of his collation. In his Preface Pope says that he had discharged the 'dull duty of editor with more labour than he expected thanks;' apparently at times the dulness was very great and the labour very small.—ED.

159. free:] MALONE [See Text. N.]: I am not bound to do that which even slaves are not bound to do. STEEVENS: So, in Cymb. V, i, 7: 'Every good servant does not all commands: No bond but to do just ones.' ROLFE: We may say that 'free' is equivalent to not bound.

Vtter my Thoughts? Why fay, they are vild, and falce? 160
 As where's that Palace, whereinto foule things
 Sometimes intrude not? Who ha's that breast so pure,
 Wherein vncleanly Apprehensions
 Keepe Leetes, and Law-dayes, and in Sessions sit
 With meditations lawfull? 165

Oth. Thou do'st conspire against thy Friend (Iago)
 If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his eare
 A stranger to thy Thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you,
 Though I perchance am vicious in my guesse 170

160. Thoughts] thoughts: Q₂Q₃.
Why say,] Why, say Qq. Why say F₃F₄. Why, say, Theob.
they are] they're Pope+, Dyce iii,
 Huds.

vild] Ff, Rowe. vile Qq et cet.

161. As where's] As, where's F₄, Rowe i.

162. ha's] has QqF₃F₄.
that] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Coll. iii. a
 Qq et cet.

so] of Q₂.

163. Wherein] Ff. But some Qq et cet.

164. Sessions] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Knt,
 Sing. Ktly, Del. Session Qq et cet.

167. think'st...mak'st] thinkest...makest Qq.

169, 170. you, ...perchance] QqFf,
 Rowe, Pope, Cap. you, Cause Iperchance
 Han. you, Think I, perchance, Warb.
you, Though, I—perchance, Johns. *you,
 Though I, perchance* Theob. ii, Jen. Knt.
you,—Though I, perchance, Mal. Steev.
 '93 et seq.

170. guesse] ghesse Qq.

160. BOOTH: Don't speak this as though you held your thoughts to be really 'vile and false,' nor look so; be frank in appearance.

161, 162. MALONE: So, in R. of L., 854: 'But no perfection is so absolute, That some impurity doth not pollute.'

163. Wherein] Qu. a misprint for Where no?—ED.

164. Leetes] WARBURTON: A metaphor wretchedly forced and quaint. STEEVENS: 'Leets' and 'law-days' are synonymous terms: 'Leet,' says Jacob, Law Dict., 'is otherwise called a law-day.' They are there explained to be courts, or meetings of the hundred, 'to certify the King of the good manners, and government, of the inhabitants,' and to enquire of all offences that are not capital. MALONE: Who has so virtuous a breast that some uncharitable surmises and impure conceptions will not sometimes enter into it; hold a session there as in a regular court, and 'bench by the side' of authorized and lawful thoughts? We find the same imagery in the 30th Sonnet; 'When to the sessions of sweet silent thought.'

164. Sessions] DYCE (ed. iii): Session occurs in Shakespeare oftener than 'sessions.' [See WALKER (Crit. i, 233), Art. xxxviii: The final s frequently interpolated, and frequently omitted, in the first Folio.]

170. Though] THEOBALD, in a letter to Warburton (Nichols's Illust. ii, 593), writes: 'I own I cannot understand the reasoning of this passage.—"Though I, perchance, am vicious, &c., do not let your wisdom give you disturbance," &c. Hoc minime videtur Shakespearianum. I have conjectured "Think, I perchance," &c. [Theobald did not repeat this in his ed., but WARBURTON did in his, without alluding to Theobald, and complacently added that the sense thereby was made 'pertinent and perfect.'—ED.]

(As I confesse it is my Natures plague
To spy into Abuses, and of my ieaiousie Shapes faults that are not) that your wifedome
From one, that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice, nor build your selfe a trouble 175

172. Abuses] abuse Pope +.
of my] Ff, Rowe i, Pope ii, Knt,
Dyce i, Wh. i. oft my Qq et cet.

173. Shapes] Shape Knt, Dyce i, Wh. i.
that your wifedome] Ff, Rowe,
Knt, Sta. I intreate you then Q₂, Pope +, Jen. Mal. Steev.'93, Var. that your wife- dome yet Q₂Q₃ et cet.

174. imperfectly] improbably Jolins.
conceits] coniects Q₂. conject
Warb. Jen. Mal. Steev.'93, Var.

175. Would] You'd Q₂, Jen. Mal. Steev.
'93, Var. Will Q₃.
Would...build] Your wisdom would not build Pope +.

HEATH (p. 562): 'Vicious' doth not signify here, wrong or mistaken, but, apt to put the worst construction upon everything. The sense then is, 'I beseech you, though I for my own part am perhaps apt to see everything in the worst light, which is a fault in my nature that carries its own punishment with it, yet let me intreat you that my imperfect conjectures, with the loose and uncertain observations on which they are founded, may not be the means of raising disquiet in the breast of a person whose wisdom is so much superior to mine.' The abrupt and broken character of the sentence was purposely intended, as it represents the artful perplexity of fraud and circumvention practising on the credulity of an open, honest heart. STEEVENS: Iago seems desirous by his abruptness and ambiguity to inflame the jealousy of Othello, which he knew would be more effectually done in this manner than by any expression that bore a determinate meaning. The jealous Othello would fill up the pause in the speech, which Iago turns off at last to another purpose, and find a more certain cause of discontent, and a greater degree of torture in the doubtful consideration how it might have concluded, than he could have experienced had the whole of what he inquired after been reported to him with every circumstance of aggravation. We may suppose him imagining to himself that Iago mentally continued the thought thus, 'Though I—know more than I choose to speak of.' MALONE: The adversative 'though' does not appear very proper; but in an abrupt and studiously clouded sentence like the present, where more is meant than meets the ear, strict propriety may well be dispensed with. KNIGHT: The modern editors enter into a long discussion about abruptness, and obscurity, and regulation of the pointing, without taking the slightest notice of the perfectly clear reading of the Folio, which we give without the alteration of a point or letter. COWDEN-CLARKE: 'Though' is here used in the sense of 'inasmuch as' or 'since.' ROLFE: The reading of Q₂ for 'that your wisdom,' line 173, perhaps better suits the broken character of the sentence. Possibly, in revising the play Shakespeare made the change to the more logical form of the Folio, and overlooked the 'though,' which does not suit that form so well. HUDSON: Iago here feigns self-distrust, and confesses that he has the natural infirmity or plague of a suspicious and prying temper, that he may make Othello trust him the more strongly. So men often prate about, and even magnify, their own faults, in order to cheat others into a persuasion of their rectitude and candour.

174. imperfectly] CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: Johnson attributes the reading improbably to what he calls 'the old Quarto.' We have not found it in any copies.

174. conceits] MALONE: Conject of the Q₂ is to conjecture, a word used by other writers. HALLIWELL: 'Conceits' looks like a modernization by the compositor.

Out of his scattering, and vnfare obseruance: 176
 It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
 Nor for my Manhood, Honesty, and Wifedome,
 To let you know my thoughts.
Oth. What dost thou meane? 180
Iago. Good name in Man, & woman(deere my Lord)
 Is the immediate Jewell of their Soules;
 Who steales my purse, steales traff:
 'Tis something, nothing;
 'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has bin slaue to thoufands: 185
 But he that filches from me my good Name,
 Robs me of that, which not enriches him, 187

176. his] my Qq, Pope+, Jen.	my Lord ; Q ₂ .
178. and] Ff, Rowe+, Knt, Sta. or	182. their] our Qq.
Qq et cct.	183, 184. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.
180. What...meane] Zouns. Q ₁ .	183. steales my] stel es my Q ₃ .
181. woman...Lord)] woman's deere	187. enriches] inriches Qq.

177. BOOTH: Not mysteriously as though you really have anything definite in your thoughts.

181-188. BOOTH: Don't fire this directly at Othello, but trust to the 'whiff and wind' of it, for your effect on him, and on the audience too, although it may not gain applause from them as do the scowls and growls of the stage-villain.

181. and woman] GOULD (p. 88): J. B. Booth, isolating the words 'and woman' by a pause before and after, and completing the isolation by uttering them in an altered, clear, low tone, aims directly at Othello's heart, and plants in it the first surmise of his wife's infidelity.

184. STAUNTON: This is invariably printed 'something, nothing'; but something-nothing [as in Staunton's text] appears to have been one of those compound epithets to which our old writers were so partial, and of which the plays before us afford very many more examples than have ever been noted. The precise meaning of the phrase is not easy to determine; the only instance of its use we have met with is the following: 'Before this newes was stale came a taile of freshe sammon to countermand it with certain newes of a something nothing, and a priest that was neither dead nor alive, but suspended between both.'—A Watch Bayte to Spare Provender, &c., 1604. It appears, however, to have been nearly equivalent to the expression, neither here nor there.

185. THEOBALD cites several passages from Greek and Latin authors concerning the uncertainty of wealth, 'which,' he says, 'might have given our author a hint for this sentiment.' [Is it not strange that it seems never to have occurred to the earlier editors of Shakespeare, who certainly had, especially Theobald, a great reverence for their 'poet,' as they termed him, that Shakespeare might be trusted to have conceived, now and then, here and there, and once in a while, an original idea, with quite as much likelihood as Lucian, or Apollodorus, or Publius Syrus?—ED.]

187. not] WHITE (ed. i): Were it not that this quite unexceptionable reading is found in both Qq and Ff, I should be inclined to regard 'not' as a phonetic misprint of naught.

ACT III, SC. iii.]	THE MOORE OF VENICE	175
And makes me poore indeed.		188
Oth. Ile know thy Thoughts.
Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand,		190
Nor shall not, whil't 'tis in my custodie.
Oth. Ha?
Iago. Oh, beware my Lord, of iealoufie,
It is the greene-ey'd Monfter, which doth mocke		194
189. Ile] FfQ ₂ Q ₃ , Rowe+, Cap. Knt. By heauen I'le Q ₁ et cet.	193. Oh...iealoufie,] O beware iealoufie. Q ₁ .
Thoughts] thought Q ₂ , Cap. Steev.	194. It is the] It is a Q ₂ Q ₃ , Pope+, Jen. mocke] QqF ₂ , mock F ₃ F ₄ , make
Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.	Han. Johns. Cap. Mal. Var. Coll. Ktly, Huds. Wh. ii.
192. Oth. Ha?] Om. Q ₁ .

188. indeed] HUNTER (ii, 283): There are several passages in Wilson's Rhetorique which remind one of Shakespeare, so many that it might be affirmed to be a book which Shakespeare had at some period of his life not only read but studied. The resemblance of this present passage to the following in the chapter on Amplification is remarkable: 'The places of Logique help oft for amplification. As, where men have a wrong opinion, and think theft a greater fault than slander, one might prove the contrary as well by circumstances as by arguments. And first, he might shew that slander is theft, and every slanderer is a thief. For as well the slanderer as the thief do take away another man's possession against the owner's will. After that he might shew that a slanderer is worse than any thief, because a good name is better than all the goods in the world, and that the loss of money may be recovered, but the loss of a man's good name can not be called back again; and a thief may restore that again which he hath taken away, but a slanderer cannot give a man his good name again which he hath taken from him.'

189. BOOTH: Indignantly, not with rage.

190, 191. BOOTH: Respectfully, not defiantly.

192. BOOTH: With a tinge of anxiety.

193, &c. BOOTH: In a tone of solicitude.

194. mocke] In a letter to Warburton, dated 'March 31, 1730,' from his 'most affectionate and obliged friend and humble servant,' THEOBALD says: 'I am at a loss to form any idea to myself, how jealousy mocks its own food, or the cause on which it subsists. No passion whatever is more in earnest than jealousy, or more intent on the object which exercises it. But jealousy, we know, is generally mistaken in its object, and raises to itself uneasinesses from its own mistaken conceptions. What if we should then read, "which doth make," &c., i. e., jealous persons feed on the matter of their own suspicions.' Warburton's reply has not been preserved. The future bishop required the punctilious return of all his letters to 'his dearest friend,' and perhaps destroyed them, but it is reasonable to suppose that he failed to commend the emendation, and probably criticised it with such severity that Theobald did not venture to allude to it in his edition, nor did Warburton in his edition, where, instead, a note is found justifying 'mock' and condemning make, which in the mean time had appeared in Hanmer's text. Whether or not the emendation is original with Hanmer it is impossible to say. He rarely gives an authority for his changes. It is possible that he may have received it from Warburton, who may have passed over to him Theobald's letters. It was the use

[194. the greene-ey'd Monster, which doth mocke]

by Hanmer of Warburton's notes, without giving him credit, that drove Warburton to issue an edition of his own, in the Preface to which he thus meanly and haughtily refers to both Theobald and Hanmer: 'The one,' he says, 'was recommended to me as a poor man; the other as a poor critic; and to each of them, at different times, I communicated a great number of observations, which they managed, as they saw fit, to the relief of their several distresses.' The credit of this emendation (which Grant White asserts to be the 'surest ever made in Shakespeare,' and therefore well worth contending for) has been, I believe, generally accorded to Hanmer down to the appearance of the invaluable CAMBRIDGE EDITION, where for the first time it is rightly given as a conjecture of Theobald. Warburton's note in his edition is as follows: 'Mock,' i. e., loaths that which nourishes and sustains it. This being a miserable state, Iago bids him beware of it. The Oxford Editor [Hanmer] reads make, implying that its suspicions are unreal and groundless, which is the very contrary to what he would here make his General think, as appears from what follows, 'That cuckold lives in bliss,' &c. In a word, the villain is for fixing him jealous; and therefore bids him beware of jealousy, not that it was an unreasonable, but a miserable, state, and this plunges him into it, as we see by his reply, which is only 'Oh, misery!' GREY (ii, 318): That is, 'mock,' with an apostrophe for mamock, i. e., by continually ruminating or chewing, it makes mamocks of it, in a metaphorical sense. The verse will bear the whole word mamock, and will stand thus: 'which doth mamock The meat,' &c. [This note is so printed as to imply that it is due to 'Mr SMITH,' whom Grey, in his Preface, pronounced 'the most friendly and communicative man living;' surely, an enviable elevation above the vagueness of the patronymic.] HEATH: 'Mock' certainly never signifies to loath. Its common signification is, to disappoint, in which sense I think it is used here. The proper and immediate destination of food is to satisfy hunger; when this end is not attained by the use of it, the food may be metaphorically said to be mocked or disappointed. So the end proposed by that suspicious inquisitiveness, which is the natural food of jealousy, is certainty and satisfaction some way or other. But this end it very rarely attains, and those very doubts and suspicions are perpetually mocked, and disappointed of that satisfaction they are in such eager pursuit of. JOHNSON: I have received Hanmer's emendation; because to 'mock' does not signify to loath; and because, when Iago bids Othello 'beware of jealousy, the green-ey'd monster,' it is natural to tell why he should beware; and for caution he gives him two reasons, that jealousy often creates its own cause, and that, when the causes are real, jealousy is misery. FARMER: In this place, and some others, to mock seems the same with to mamock [vide GREY]. JENNENS: I am apt to think that Shakespeare had here the Crocodile in his eye, who, by its tears, is said to deceive and entice its prey. To 'mock' is used by our Author to signify to delude and deceive. But if this be the allusion, what is the meat that Jealousy feeds on? And the context seems to show that Shakespeare makes Love the food of Jealousy. 'That cuckold lives in bliss, who certain of his fate, loves not his wronger'; he feels not the pang of Jealousy, because he wants that which nourishes and supports it, viz.: Love. But how does Jealousy mock love? By pretending to be its friend, and by seeming to pity and condole with it, at the same time that it is its great enemy and destroyer. STEEVENS: If Shakespeare had written a green-ey'd monster, we might have supposed him to refer to some creature existing only in his particular imagination; but 'the green-ey'd monster' seems to have reference to an object as familiar to his readers as to himself. It is known that the tiger kind have green eyes, and always play with the victim to their hunger before they devour it. So, in R. of L. 554, 'yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally, While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse panteth.' Thus, a jealous husband, who discovers no certain cause why he may be divorced, continues to sport with the woman whom he suspects, and, on more certain evidence, determines to punish. There is no beast that can be literally said to make its own food, and therefore I am unwilling to receive Hanmer's emendation, especially as I flatter myself that a glimpse of meaning may be produced from the old reading. One of the ancient senses of the verb to mock is to amuse, to play with. Thus, in 'A Discourse of Gentlemen lying in London that were better keep House at Home in their Country,' 1593: 'A pretty toy to mock an ape withal,' i. e., a pretty toy to divert an ape, for an ape to divert himself with. The same phrase occurs in Marston, whose Ninth Satire is entitled 'Here's a Toy to mocke an Ape indeede,' i. e., afford an ape materials for sport, furnish him with a plaything. In Ant. & Cleo., 'mock' occurs again: 'tell him He mocks the pauses that he makes,' i. e., he plays wantonly with those intervals of time which he should improve to his own preservation. Should such an explanation be admissible, the advice given by Iago will amount to this: Beware, my lord, of yielding to a passion which, as yet, has no proofs to justify its excess. Think how the interval between suspicion and certainty must be filled. Though you doubt her fidelity, you cannot yet refuse her your bed, or drive her from your heart; but, like the capricious savage, must continue to sport with one whom you wait for an opportunity to destroy. A similar idea occurs in All's Well: 'so lust doth play With what it loaths.' Such is the only sense I am able to draw from the original text. What I have said may be liable to some objections, but I have nothing better to propose. That jealousy is a monster which often creates the suspicions on which it feeds may be well admitted, according to Hanmer's proposition; but is it the monster? (i. e., the well-known and conspicuous animal), or whence has it green eyes? Yellow is the colour which Shakespeare usually appropriates to jealousy. It must be acknowledged that he afterwards characterizes it as 'a monster, Begot upon itself, born on itself.' But yet 'what damned minutes tells he o'er,' &c. is the best illustration of my attempt to explain the passage. To produce Hanmer's meaning a change in the text is necessary. I am counsel for the old reading. M. MASON: It is so difficult, if not impossible, to extract any sense from this passage as it stands, even by the most forced construction of it, and the slight amendment proposed by Hanmer renders it so clear, elegant, and poetical, that I am surprised the editors should hesitate in adopting it, and still more surprised that they should reject it. As for Steevens's objection that the definite article is used, not the indefinite, he surely need not be told in the very last of these plays that Shakespeare did not regard such minute inaccuracies, which may be found in every play he wrote. When Steevens compares the jealous man, who continues to sport with the woman he suspects, and is determined to destroy, to the tiger who plays with the victim of his hunger, he forgets that the meat on which jealousy is supposed to feed is not the woman who is the object of it, but the several circumstances of suspicion which jealousy itself creates, and which cause and nourish it. So Emilia, III, iv, 183: 'They are not jealous ever for the cause, But jealous, for they are jealous; 'tis a monster Begot upon itself, born on itself.' This passage is a strong confirmation of Hanmer's reading. The same idea occurs in Massinger's Picture [I, i], where Matthias, speaking of the groundless jealousy he entertained of Sophia's possible inconstancy, says: 'but why should I nourish A fury here, and with imagin'd food, Holding no real ground on which to raise A building of suspicion.' Imagin'd food is food created by imagination; the food that jealousy makes and feeds on. HENLEY: Mason's objections to 'mock' and to Steevens's most happy illustration of it, originate entirely in his own misconception, and a jumble of figurative with literal expressions. To have been consistent with himself, he should have charged Steevens with maintaining that it was the property of a jealous husband, first to mock his wife, and afterwards to eat her. In Act V the word mocks occurs in a sense somewhat similar to that in the passage before us: 'villainy hath made mocks with love.' MALONE: I have not the smallest doubt that Shakespeare wrote make. The words make and mocke are often confounded in these plays. Mr Steevens, in his paraphrase on this passage, interprets the word mock by sport; but in what poet or prose writer, from Chaucer and Mandeville to this day, does the verb to mock signify to sport with? Besides, is it true, as a general position, that jealousy (as jealousy) sports or plays with the object of love (allowing this not very delicate interpretation of the words, the meat it feeds on, to be the true one)? The position certainly is not true. It is Love, not jealousy, that sports with the object of its passion; nor can those circumstances which create suspicion, and which are the meat it feeds on, with any propriety be called the food of Love, when the poet has clearly pointed them out as the food or cause of jealousy; giving it not only being, but nutriment. 'There is no beast,' it is urged, 'that can literally be said to make its own food.' It is, indeed, acknowledged that jealousy is a monster which often creates the suspicions on which it feeds, but is it, we are asked, 'the monster? (i. e., a well-known and conspicuous animal), and whence has it green eyes? Yellow is the color which Shakespeare appropriates to jealousy.' To this I answer that yellow is not the only colour which Shakespeare appropriates to jealousy, for we have in Mer. of Ven. III, ii, 110, 'shuddering fear, and green-ey'd jealousy'; and I suppose it will not be contended that he was there thinking of any of the tiger kind. If our poet had written only 'It is the green-ey'd monster; beware of it,' the other objection would hold good, and some particular monster must have been meant; but the words, 'It is the green-ey'd monster, which doth,' &c., in my apprehension have precisely the same meaning as if the poet had written, 'It is that green-ey'd monster, which,' or 'it is a green-ey'd monster.' When Othello says to Iago in a former passage, 'By heaven, he echoes me, as if there were some monster in his thought,' does any one imagine that any animal whatever was meant? The passage in a subsequent scene, to which Steevens has alluded, strongly supports the emendation which has been made: 'jealousy . . . 'tis a monster, Begot upon itself, born on itself.' It is, strictly speaking, as false that any monster can be begot, or born, on itself, as it is that any monster can make its own food; but, poetically, both are equally true of that monster, jealousy. Steevens seems to have been aware of this, and therefore has added the word literally: 'No monster can be literally said to make its own food.' It should always be remembered that Shakespeare's allusions scarcely ever answer precisely on both sides; nor had he ever any care upon this subject. Though he has introduced the word monster,—when he talked of its making its own food and being begot by itself, he was still thinking of jealousy only, careless whether there was any animal in the world that would correspond with this description. That by the words, the meat it feeds on, is meant, not Desdemona herself, as has been maintained, but pabulum zelotypice, may be likewise inferred from a preceding passage in which a kindred imagery is found: 'That policy may either last so long, Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet,' &c. And this obvious interpretation is still more strongly confirmed by Daniel's Rosamond, 1592, a poem which Shakespeare had diligently read, and has more than once imitated in Rom. & Jul.: 'O jealousy . . .

[194. the greene-ey'd Monster, which doth mocke]

[194. the greene-ey'd Monster, which doth mocke]

[194. the greene-ey'd Monster, which doth mocke]

Feeding vpon suspect that doth renue thee, Happy were louers if they neuer knew thee.' BECKET: I substitute muck, i. e., bedaub or make foul; and this is the true character of jealousy, it &c., &c. For the 'green-eyed monster' I read the agreinied, i. e., sportive, with a mixture of pleasure or satisfaction in what it is engaged in; in which sense the word is used by our earlier writers. The lines thus altered will be highly descriptive of jealousy. JACKSON: It may seem strange to my readers that a small domestic animal may have been the mighty green-eyed monster to which our ingenious Bard alludes—I mean the mouse; indeed, familiarly, it is often called a little monster; but its eyes are not to say green; however, a white mouse in Shakespeare's time would have been a very great curiosity, and if one had been produced with green eyes, it would have equally attracted the notice of the naturalist. Now, the mouse has a peculiar propensity, 'which doth muck the meat it feeds on.' The mouse, after it has glutted on a piece of nice meat, leaves as much defilement on the residue as it possibly can; and thus treats that with indecency and contempt which it doted on until its hunger was perfectly appeased, &c., &c. [Some years ago I announced the exhaustion of my patience with Andrew Becket and Zachary Jackson; both of whom at times have been praised by my betters. I know that only unfamiliarity with these two writers would impute to me this large omission as a fault; and as an attempt to hush even this source of hostile criticism, I have inserted the two foregoing notes. I feel that my vindication is complete. There is a third Commentator, the sight of whose volume starts a shudder. From him let me here add the last note that I will ever take from his pages, as follows: LORD CHEDWORTH: I think I have heard or read, though I cannot recollect where, of a sort of large dragon-fly, that voids a greenish foam from its mouth, and then gradually sucks it in again:—if there be such a creature, it would be sufficient to justify the expression, 'green-ey'd monster.' —ED.] MARTINUS SCRIBLERUS (Explanations, &c., p. 19): What if the poet meant to say that the meat mocked the monster, instead of the monster mocking the meat? This is an inverted construction, to be sure, but it is admissible and gives a very good meaning. Jealousy is certainly a monster which the meat it feeds on doth mock, that meat consisting of mere surmises and 'trifles light as air.' 'It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock—The meat it feeds on!' KNIGHT: One of the difficulties would be got over by adopting the indefinite article, 'a green-eyed monster,' of Q₂; this leaves us the license of imagining that Shakespeare had some chimera in his mind, to which he applied the epithet 'green-eyed.' We have no doubt that mock is the true word; and that it may be explained, which doth play with,—half receive, half reject,—the meat it feeds on. Farmer [sic] suggested that it was used for mammoth, which is not unlikely. COLLIER: Nothing could be much easier than for a compositor to mis-read make 'mocke.' The sense seems indisputably to require make. It was so altered by Southern in his copy of F₂, and such too is the emendation of the (MS.). SINGER: Jealousy is personified, and like another green-eyed creature of the feline race, sports with its prey, mammoths and mocks the meat it feeds on. COWDEN-CLARKE: 'Mock' bears the sense of 'disdain,' 'spurn,' 'tear wrathfully,' even while feeding on. . . . Jealousy, even while greedily devouring scraps of evidence, and stray tokens of supposed guilt, bitterly scorns them, and stands self-contemned for feeding on them. KEIGHTLEY (Exp., 303): Make appears to me indubitable; for this is the very thing which jealousy does—witness Ford and Leontes,—while I cannot see how jealousy, which is given to anything rather than mockery, should mock its food. HUDSON [reading mate]: That is, jealousy is a self-generated passion; that its causes are subjective,

The meate it feeds on. That Cuckold liues in bliffe, 195
 Who certaine of his Fate, loues not his wronger :
 But oh, what damned minutes tels he ore,
 Who dotes, yet doubts : Suspects, yet soundly loues? 198

195. The] That Q₁.

That] What Q₂.

196. Fate, loues not his] Om. Q₃.

198. soundly] Ff, Dyce i, Sta. Del.

fondly Knt, Sing. Wh. i, Coll. iii (MS) strongly Qq et cet.

or that it lives on what it imputes, not on what it finds. And so Emilia afterwards describes it. Iago is, in his way, a consummate metaphysician, and answers perfectly to Burke's description: 'Nothing can be conceived more hard than the heart of a thorough-bred metaphysician. It comes nearer to the cold malignity of a wicked spirit than to the frailty and passion of a man.' WHITE (ed. ii): Theobald's correction is the surest ever made in Shakespeare. Without it the passage is naught. [I have reserved Hunter and Staunton to the last, because both give what seems to me to be emphatically the true explanation, and one which occurred to me before I had read theirs. How many times the sigh is breathed: 'Pereant qui ante nos,' &c. The meat that jealousy feeds on is the victim of jealousy, the jealous man, who is mocked with trifles light as air. Substitute mind for 'meat,' and is not the meaning clear? Is it the mark of a monster to make his food? Then are cooks monsters,—and they some times are.—ED.] HUNTER (New Illust., ii, 284): Jealousy mocks the person who surrenders his mind to her influence, deluding him perpetually with some new show of suspicion, sporting herself with his agonized feelings, just as the feline tribe sport with the prey which they have got into their power. The cat is 'green-eyed.' STAUNTON: Strange that it should have occurred to no one that the meat the monster mocks (i. e., scoffs, jibes, or ridicules), while he feeds on it, may be his credulous victim,—that thrice-wretched mortal,—'who dotes, yet doubts; suspects, yet soundly loves.' [LUEBERS (p. 66) also gives the true explanation, and quotes as applicable to Theobald's make that clever definition of jealousy by Saphir, as clever as it is untranslatable: 'Eifersucht ist eine Leidenschaft, die mit Eifer sucht, was Leiden schafft.' My friend, Mr Edwin Booth, confesses his conversion to 'mock,' and suggests that Iago can indicate by touching his own breast that the victim of jealousy is the meat it feeds on.—ED.]

196. loues] JENNENS calls attention to the reading hates in Steevens's Reprint, which he 'finds in no other edition.' CAMBRIDGE EDITION: In the Devonshire copy of Q₁, which formerly belonged to Steevens, and which was the original of his reprint, the word 'loues' is partially obliterated by being changed with a pen to 'hates,' but being still obscure, 'hates' is written in the margin opposite in the same hand as the stage direction mentioned [in a previous note]. Capell's copy has distinctly 'loues,' and that this was originally the reading of the Devonshire copy is evident from the traces of the letters which still remain. [These marginal stage directions in the Devonshire Q₁, just alluded to, are, as the Cambridge Editors inform us, in a 17th century hand. 'More than one hand seems to have been employed, and there are other notes of a much later date in pencil.']

198. soundly] COLLIER (ed. ii): There is little or no doubt that this was a misprint for fondly. The (MS.) and Singer's (MS.) both have the same alteration. DYCE (Strictures, p. 199): The two MS. Correctors and Collier must have forgotten what King Henry says to the Princess Katharine, 'O fair Katharine, if you will love me

Oth. O miserie.

Iago. Poore, and Content, is rich, and rich enough, 200
But Riches fineleffe, is as poore as Winter,
To him that euer feares he shall be poore :
Good Heauen, the Soules of all my Tribe defend From Iealousie.

Oth. Why? why is this? 205
Think'st thou, I'd make a Life of Iealousie ;
To follow still the changes of the Moone
With fresh suspitions? No : to be once in doubt,
Is to be refolu'd : Exchange me for a Goat,
When I shall turne the businesse of my Soule 210

201. Riches...is as] rich...is Q₃.
fineleffe] endless Pope, Theob.

Han. Warb.

Winter] want Theob. conj. (withdrawn).

203. Heauen] God Q₄.

205. Why? why] Why, why Qq, Dyce,
Sta. Glo. Cam. Rife, Wh. ii.

205. this?] this, Iago? Cap.

206. Think'st] Thinkest Q₃.

I'd] I'de Qq.

208, 209. With...Is] One line, Han.

209. Is] is At once Han. Is—once
Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Is once Qq
et cet.

soundly with your French heart,' Hen. V. V, ii. WHITE (ed. i): I cannot hesitate, on looking at the whole line, to believe that 'soundly' is a misprint for fondly. True, Henry V says to Katharine [as quoted by Dyce], but the sentiment and the occasion of the two passages are entirely dissimilar.

199. O miserie] BOOTH: Spoken without reference to himself. (I claim the credit of curing Othello's 'Misery! misery! misery!' as formerly given by actors. I directed my father's attention to it when I was a boy, and he approved.)

201. finelesse] JOHNSON: Unbounded, endless, unnumbered treasures.

201. Winter] WARBURTON: Finely expressed; 'winter' producing no fruits.

204. BOOTH: A pause. Spoken slowly and with significance; watch him curiously to observe the effect of your poison, suggest the 'evil eye.' Othello now, for the first time, begins to be conscious of a doubt—which, however, he immediately shakes off, and turns, as though from a trance, to Iago with a clear front.

206. Think'st thou] HALLIWELL: There is nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and, therefore, men should remedy suspicion by procuring to know more, and not to keep their suspicions in smother.—Bacon's Essays [p. 528, ed. Arber].

209. resolu'd] C. P. MASON (Athenæum, 22 Apr. 1876): Schmidt explains this as, 'to be fixed in a determination.' I would suggest that it here means 'to be freed from uncertainty.' The gist of Othello's speech is that, if once he doubts, he will make that first occasion settle the whole question for ever, by having the doubt turned into a certainty, one way or the other. This relation between doubting and being resolved is repeated in lines 219, 220: Ile see before I doubt, &c.

209. WHITE (ed. i): A syllable is needed for the verse, and the omission of the once of the Qq seems doubtless accidental.

To such exufficate, and blow'd Surmises, 211
 Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me Iealous,
 To say my wife is faire, feeds well, loues company,
 Is free of Speech, Sings, Playes, and Dances :
 Where Vertue is, these are more vertuous. 215
 Nor from mine owne weake merites, will I draw

211. exufficate] QqF₂F₃, Rowe, Pope,
 Theob. exufficated F₄, exsuffolate Han.
 Warb. Johns. Jen. Steev.'85. exsufficate
 Cap. et cet.

blow'd] Knt, Sing. blowed Ff.
bloune Qq et cet.

212. thy] the Ff.

212. Iealous] iealous QqF₂F₃.

213. feeds well,] feeds, well, Q₃.

214. Dances] Ff, Knt, Sing. dances
well Qq et cet.

215. are more] are moſt Ff, Rowe+. make more Warb.

211. exufficate] HANMER defines his exsuffolate by 'whisper'd, buzz'd in the ears; from the Italian verb suffolare.' JOHNSON: The allusion is to a bubble. Do not think, says the Moor, that I shall change the noble designs that now employ my thoughts, to suspicions which, like bubbles blown into a wide extent, have only an empty show without solidity; or that, in consequence of such empty fears, I will close with thy inference against the virtue of my wife. MALONE: Whether our poet had any authority for the word exsufficate, which I think is used in the sense of swollen, and appears to have been formed from sufflatus, I am unable to ascertain. BOSWELL: This may be traced to the low Latin exsufflare, to spit down upon, an ancient form of exorcising, and, figuratively, to spit out in abhorrence and contempt. It may thus signify contemptible. See Du Cange, s. v. exsufflare. RICHARDSON (Dict. s. v.): Exsufflare, it is true, is explained by Du Cange (consequently) to signify contemnere, despuere, rejicere; arising from the custom in the Romish administration of baptism of renouncing the devil and all his works, exsufflando et despuendo, by blowing and spitting him away. Hence, also, the application of exsufflare, and exsufflatio (common words among early Latin ecclesiastical writers) to a species of exorcism. Exsufflation is used by Bacon in its ordinary sense. And 'exufficate' in Shakespeare is not improbably a misprint for exsufflate, i. e., efflate or efflated, puffed out, and consequently exaggerated, extravagant,—to which 'blow'd' is added, not so much for the sake of a second epithet, with a new meaning, as of giving emphasis to the first. COLLIER: The meaning of this word is more obvious than its etymology; and if we had any difficulty, it would be removed, perhaps, by the additional epithet 'blow'd.' It is one of the words, the origin of which must not be traced with too much lexicographical curiosity. DYCE (Gloss.): Exsufficate, swollen, puffed out. For my own part, I can see no reason to doubt that such was Shakespeare's word, and such the meaning he intended to convey. WHITE (ed. ii): That is, puffed out, thin and bubble-like, or, spat upon, according to its derivation, as to which, and as to his own exact meaning, I think that Shakespeare himself was not clear.

212. Iealous] WALKER (Vers. 154) calls attention to this uniform spelling, in this play, in the Folio.

214. Dances] WHITE (ed. i): The omission of well was doubtless accidental.

215. vertuous] JOHNSON: An action in itself indifferent grows virtuous by its end and application.

The smalleſt feare, or doubt of her reuolt, 217
 For ſhe had eyes, and choſe me. No Iago,
 Ile ſee before I doubt ; when I doubt, proue ;
 And on the prooſe, there is no more but this, 220
 Away at once with Loue, or lealouſie.

Ia. I am glad of this : For now I ſhall haue reaſon [324 b]
 To ſhew the Loue and Duty that I beare you
 With franker ſpirit. Therefore (as I am bound) Receiue it from me. I ſpeake not yet of prooſe : 225
 Looke to your wife, obſerue her well with Cafſio,
 Weare your eyes, thus : not lealious, nor Secure :
 I would not haue your free, and Noble Nature,
 Out of ſelfe-Bounty, be abus'd : Looke too't : 229

218. choſe] choſen Q ₃ Q ₃ .	Warb. Huds.
221. or] and Q'81, Q'95, Han.	225. of] for Q ₃ .
222. I am] I'm Pope, Theob. Han.	227. Weare] Were Q ₃ .
Warb. Dyce iii, Huds.	eyes] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sing. Ktly.
this] is Qq, Coll. Dyce, Wh. Glo.	ie Qq et cet.
Cam. Del. Huds. Rlf.	lealious] iealous QqF ₃ F ₄ .
224. I am] I'm Pope, Theob. Han.	229. too't] to't Q ₃ F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe et seq.

217. doubt . . . reuolt] See SCHMIDT (Lex.) for many other instances where the former means apprehension, suspicion; and the latter, faithlessness in love, inconstancy. GOULD (p. 103): This word, 'revolt,' was one of those strokes of genius in tone of which J. B. Booth furnished such numberless examples. It came with an access of emphasis, as if he felt, for an instant, how dreadful a thing her revolt might be, then dismisses the thought at once.

221. BOOTH: Touch your breast to signify that love is 'hearted' and your head at jealousy, to denote that it is a brain disease which 'follows still the changes of the moon.'

227. thus] BOOTH: With a side-glance to indicate a certain degree of watchful care.

227. nor Secure] ALGER (Life of Forrest, i, 145): Forrest represented Iago as a gay, dashing fellow on the outside, hiding his malice and treachery under the signs of a careless honesty and jovial good humour. One point, strictly original, he made, which powerfully affected Kean. Iago, while working insidiously on the suspicions of Othello, says to him [lines 226, 227]. All these words, except the last two, Forrest uttered in a frank, easy fashion; but suddenly, as if the intensity of his under-knowledge of evil had automatically broken through the good-natured part he was playing on the surface, and betrayed his secret in spite of his will, he spoke the words nor secure in a husky tone, sliding down from a high pitch and ending in a whispered horror. This fearful suggestiveness produced from Kean a reaction so truly artistic and tremendous that the whole house was electrified. As they met in the dressing-room, Kean said excitedly, 'In the name of God, boy, where did you get that?' Forrest replied, 'It is something of my own.' 'Well,' said he, while his auditor trembled with pleasure, 'everybody who speaks the part hereafter must do it just so.'

229. selfe-Bounty] WARBURTON: That is, inherent generosity. [Just as 'self-charity' in II, ii, 226, means charity to one's self, so here, it seems to me, 'self-bounty

I know our Country disposition well : 230

In Venice, they do let Heauen see the pranks

They dare not shew their Husbands.

Their best Conscience,

Is not to leaue't vndone, but kept vnknowne.

Oth. Dost thou say so? 235

Iago. She did deceiue her Father, marrying you,

And when she seem'd to shake, and feare your lookes,

She lou'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why go too then : 240

230. Country disposition] country-disposition Johns. country's disposition Steev. '85.

231. Heauen] God Q₁.

232, 233. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

232. not] Om. Q₁.

234. leaue't] leauē Q₁, Cap. Jen. Steev.

Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Dyce, Ktly.

234. kept] Ff, Rowe i. keepe Q₂, Cap.

Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Dyce,

Ktly. keepe't Q₂. keep't Q₃ et cct.

235. so f] so. Q₁.

240. Why] Om. Pope +, Cap.

too] to F₃F₄, Rowe et seq.

means a little more than 'inherent generosity'; rather, is it not that 'bounty,' where 'self' is concerned, which approaches what we should call 'self-forgetfulness'?—ED.]

231. Venice] JOHNSON: Here Iago seems to be a Venetian. HENLEY: There is nothing in any other part of the play, properly understood, to imply otherwise.

233, 234. BOOTH: Very confidentially.

235. FECHTER: With indignant menace. BOOTH: Let your tone express unbounded faith in Iago's knowledge of 'human dealings.'

236. FECHTER: With a look of the basilisk, darting the sting which he had kept for the last.

237. seem'd] JOHNSON: This and the following argument of Iago ought to be deeply impressed on every reader. Deceit and falsehood, whatever conveniences they may for a time promise or produce, are, in the sum of life, obstacles to happiness. Those who profit by the cheat distrust the deceiver, and the act by which kindness is sought puts an end to confidence. The same objection may be made, with a lower degree of strength, against the imprudent generosity of disproportionate marriages. When the first heat of passion is over, it is easily succeeded by suspicion, that the same violence of inclination which caused one irregularity may stimulate to another; and those who have shown that their passions are too powerful for their prudence, will, with very slight appearances against them, be censured as not very likely to restrain them by their virtue.

238. most] HUDSON: This is one of Iago's artfullest strokes. The instinctive shrinkings and tremblings of Desdemona's modest virgin love are ascribed to craft, and made to appear a most refined and elaborate course of deception. His deep science of human nature enables him to divine how she appeared.

239. FECHTER: Othello stops at once, as struck by a thunderbolt! His face changes by degrees, his eyes open as if a veil had been taken away! BOOTH: Hoarsely and with despairing look.

240. FECHTER: Placing himself behind him and speaking in his ear, as if better to

Shee that so young could giue out such a Seeming 241

To seele her Fathers eyes vp, clofe as Oake,

He thought 'twas Witchcraft.

But I am much too blame :

I humbly do befeech you of your pardon 245

For too much louing you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for euer.

Iago. I see this hath a little dafh'd your Spirits :

Oth. Not a iota, not a iota. 249

242. seele] seale QqF₃. seal F₄ Rowe +, Jen. Coll.

Oake,] oak—Rowe et seq.

243, 244. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.

243. Witchcraft.] Ff, Coll. Wh. i. witchcraft : Qq, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Sta. witchcraft—Rowe et cet.

244, 247. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds.

244. too blame] to blame F₄ Rowe et seq.

247. to thee] to to thee F₄. to you Rowe ii, Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.

instil his venom. [Although there is much, as I have said elsewhere, that is, to me, highly objectionable, not only in Fechter's style of acting, but even in his conception of character, yet in this instance he jumps with the very way in which it is barely possible that Burbadge spoke these lines while Shakespeare listened. See Appendix, where the ballad on The Tragedie of Othello the Moore is given, wherein it is said of Iago that 'He whisper'd at Othelloe's backe, His wife had chaungde her minde,' &c. —ED.]

242. seele] See notes on I, iii, 297. COLLIER : The ordinary word seal seems here only intended.

242. Oake] JOHNSON : There is little relation between eyes and oak. I would read owls. 'As blind as an owl' is a proverb. [This note is repeated in Johnson and Steevens's Variorum editions of 1773 and 1778, but in that of 1785, after Dr Johnson's death, Steevens omitted it,—presumably out of respect to his friend's memory.—ED.] STEEVENS : The 'oak' is, I believe, the most close-grained wood of general use in England. 'Close as oak' means close as the grain of oak. D. (N. & Qu., 1857, 2d, iv, 44) suggests that in connection with 'seel,' 'oak' should be kawke, 'an alteration which,' so he says, 'gives significancy to a simile which has otherwise no meaning at all.' STAUNTON and HARTING make the same conjecture.

243. FECHTER : Othello stands immovable as a statue. BOOTH : Othello should wince slightly at the recollection.

244. much too blame] See also line 328 in this same scene. This phrase 'too blame' is so common, not only in the Folio but in other Elizabethan authors, that ABBOTT, § 73, suggests that perhaps 'blame' was considered an adjective, and that 'too' may have been used as in Early English for 'excessively.' Even in modern editions, it seems to me, this 'too' should be retained.—ED.

245. of] See ABBOTT, § 174, for other instances where 'of' means 'concerning,' 'about.'

247. FECHTER : His eyes fixed—extending his hand to Iago, without looking at him. BOOTH : With great constraint.

249. OTTLEY (p. 22) : Kean gave these words with a plaintive, choking cry, which

- Iago.* Trust me, I feare it has: 250
 I hope you will confider what is spoke
 Comes from your Loue.
 But I do see y'are moou'd:
 I am to pray you, not to straine my speech
 To groffer issues, nor to larger reach, 255
 Then to Suspition.
Oth. I will not.
Iago. Should you do fo (my Lord)
 My speech should fall into such vilde successe,
 Which my Thoughts aym'd not. 260
Cassio's my worthy Friend:
 My Lord, I see y'are mou'd:
Oth. No, not much mou'd: 263

250. Trust me] I faith Q₁, Sta. Glo.
 Cam. Dyce iii, Rife, Huds. Wh. ii.
 252, 253. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.
 252. your Loue] my loue QqFf et cet.
 253. y'are] Ff, Wh. ii. you are Qq,
 Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing.
 Wh. i, Ktly. you're Rowe et cet.
 259. should] would Pope+, Jen. into such] into Q₁.
vilde] vild F₄, Rowe. vile Qq,
 Pope et seq.
successe] excess Pope ii.

260, 261. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.
 260. Which] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob.
 Han. Warb. Knt, Dyce i. As Qq et cet.
aym'd not] F₄. aim'd not F₃F₄, Knt, Dyce i. aim'd not at Rowe. aim not at Qq et cet.
 261. worthy] trusty Q₁.
Friend:] friend. Pope. friend—
 Glo.
 262. y'are] Ff, Wh. i. you are Qq,
 Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing.
 Ktly. you're Rowe et cet.

went to the heart. FECHTER: Crosses, and leans on the back of the low chair.
 BOOTH: With forced indifference and trembling voice.

250. BOOTH: Soothingly.

253. BOOTH: A smothered moan.

253. y'are] Both here and in 262, this contraction, it seems to me, should be used in modern editions in preference to the usual you're, or even to the you are of the Qq. See also Walker, line 450, post.—ED.

255. issues] WARBURTON: Conclusions.

255. reach] WALKER (Crit. ii, 167) cites this as only an apparent rhyme with 'speech' in the preceding line; 'Ea was pronounced nearly as a in male.'

259. successe] JOHNSON: If this be the right word, it seems to mean consequence or event, as successo is used in Italian. RICHARDSON (Dict. s. v.): 'Success' is that which is come to, arrived at, reached, or attained; whether good or bad. 'I haue bene longer in describing, the nature, the good or ill successe, of the quicke and hard witte, than perchance som will thinke, this place and matter doth require.'—Ascham, The Scholemaster [Book i, p. 35, ed. Arber].

261. FECHTER: Othello makes a step in advance, his hand on his poignard.
 BOOTH: Give this as a stiletto-stab in the back—at which Othello groans aloud.

263. FECHTER: Supporting himself by the chair, and then sinking down on it.

I do not thinke but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long liue she so;

265

And long liue you to thinke so.

Oth. And yet how Nature erring from it selfe.

Iago. I, there's the point:

As (to be bold with you)

Not to affect many propofed Matches

270

Of her owne Clime, Complexion, and Degree,

Where to we fee in all things, Nature tends:

Foh, one may fmel in fuch, a will moft ranke,

Foule difproportions, Thoughts vnnaturall.

But (pardon me) I do not in position

275

Distinctly fpeake of her, though I may feare

Her will, recoyling to her better iudgement,

May fal to match you with her Country formes,

278

264. I do] doe Q₃.

265, 266. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

267. it selfe] it selfe—F₂. it selfe—F₃.

F₄. itself—Warb. et seq.

268, 269. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

271. her] our Steev.'85.

272. Where to] Wherein Q₃.

273. Foh] Fie Qq. Foh / Rowe et seq.

273. one] we Qq.

moft] moft Q₃.

274. difproportions] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Knt, Sta. difproportion Qq et cet.

276. Distinctly] Definitely Q₃.

278. fal to match] fail to catch Wh. ii (misprint?).

266. think] BOOTH: Perhaps a slight emphasis on this, though I doubt its value.

267. BOOTH: Referring to his color. (My Father indicated this by a glance at his hand as it passed down before his eyes from his forehead, where it had been pressed). Iago seizes this with eagerness and interrupts him.

269. bold with you] BOOTH: My Father interpreted this as a covert reference to Brabantio's assertion before the Senate (I, iii, 113) that Desdemona was 'a maiden never bold,' an assertion which Othello, with his knowledge of Desdemona's share in their wooing, might somewhat modify; my Father, therefore, spoke the line not as an apologetic parenthesis addressed to Othello, as it is usually printed, but as though catching up and pursuing Othello's own train of thought, and thus insidiously summoning to Othello's memory secret occasions when Desdemona had shown a 'will most rank,' and had been 'bold' with him. I wish I could describe the white-lipped, icy smile, the piercing glance at Othello's half-averted face, and eager utterance, with which my Father said, 'Ay, there's the point; as to be bold with you.'

273. will] JOHNSON: That is, wilfulness. A 'rank will' is self-will overgrown and exuberant. RITSON (p. 235): To smell wilfulness and an overgrown self-will is a faculty peculiar to the learned critic. But with all imaginable deference to him, the expression means, inclinations or desires most foul, gross, and strong-scented.

274. BOOTH: Othello repels this by a look of indignation.

274. difproportions] See I, i, 31.

275. position] COLLIER: The (MS.) reads suspicion, but if this were the word we should be inclined to think that 'not' had also been misprinted for but, the meaning of Iago then being, 'I but speak of her distinctly in suspicion.'

And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell :

280

If more thou dost perceiue, let me know more :

Set on thy wife to obserue.

Leaue me Iago.

Iago. My Lord, I take my leaue.

Othel. Why did I marry ?

285

This honest Creature (doubtlesse)

Sees, and knowes more, much more then he vnfolde.

Iago. My Lord, I would I might intreat your Honor [325 a]

To scan this thing no farther : Leaue it to time,

Although 'tis fit that Cassio haue his Place ;

290

For sure he filles it vp with great Ability ;

Yet if you please, to him off a-while :

You shall by that perceiue him, and his meanes :

293

279. happily] haply so Pope+.
repent.] repent—Kity.

280, 281. Farewell, farewell: If more]
Farewell, If more (as one line) Qq.

281, 283. thou...Iago.] Two lines, ending on...Iago. Qq.

281, 282. One line, Rowe et seq.

283. [Going. Rowe et seq.

284, 285. One line, Qq, Cap. et seq.

288. Continued to Oth. Q₄.

Iago.] Om. Q₄.

[Returns. Cap.

289. To scan] Iag. To scan Q₄.

289. farther] Ff, Rowe+, Knt, Coll.
Sta. farther Qq et cet.

290. Although 'tis fit] Tho it be fit Q₄,
Jen. Var. Glo. Cam. Rlf. And though tis fit Q₄Q₅ Cap. Sing. And though it be fit Steev. Mal.

292. to him] to put him Ff, Rowe, Pope,
Han. to hold him Qq et cet.

off] of Q₄.

a-while] F₄. a while Q₄Q₅F₄F₅

Rowe+, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Kity. awhile Q₄ et cet.

279. happily] JENNENS: It is plain that haply or perchance is here meant. See, to the same effect, ABBOTT, § 42.

280. GÉRARD: Othello n'est pas sans amour-propre. Il se rend justice sur ses traits et son teint basané et il conviendra avec lui-même des désavantages de sa personne, mais ce qu'il s'avoue tout bas il est fâché de l'entendre de la bouche d'un autre, et, tranchant sur ce sujet, il congédie Iago. FECHTER: Dismissing Iago with a gesture, but stopping him as he goes to the door. BOOTH: Impatiently; unable to endure his presence any longer; line 282 he speaks as though overcome by shame at his own baseness in the suggestion; and at the close falls on a seat.

284. BOOTH: A quick, fiendish smile of triumph and a rapid clutch of the fingers, as though squeezing his very heart (Othello's face is buried in his hands), is quite legitimate here, but do it unobtrusively, as you vanish. FECHTER: Iago pretends to go, but stays on the threshold to watch Othello from the opening in the tapestry.

288. BOOTH: Othello assumes indifference for a while, but it leaves him at the mention of Cassio.

293. meanes] JOHNSON: You shall discover whether he thinks his best means, his most powerful interest is by the solicitation of your lady.

Note if your Lady straine his Entertainment
 With any strong, or vehement importunitie, 295
 Much will be seene in that : In the meane time,
 Let me be thought too busie in my feares,
 (As worthy cause I haue to feare I am)
 And hold her free, I do beseech your Honor.
Oth. Feare not my gouernment. 300
Iago. I once more take my leaue. Exit.
Oth. This Fellow's of exceeding honesty,
 And knowes all Quantities with a learn'd Spirit
 Of humane dealings. If I do proue her Haggard, 304

294. his] her Qq.	303. learn'd] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Wh.
295. importunitie] opportunity Var.'03,	learned Qq et cet.
'13, '21 (misprint).	303, 304. Spirit Of] Q ₁ Q ₂ Ff, Coll. Sta.
299. Honor.] Honor : Ff.	Wh. i. spirit, Of Q ₃ et cet.
301. Exit.] Om. Ff.	304. humane] humaine Q ₂ . human
Scene VI. Pope +, Jen.	Rowe et seq.
303. Quantities] Q ₂ Q ₃ Ff, Rowe. qual-	dealings] dealing Q ₁ .
ities Q ₄ et cet.	do] Om. Pope +.

294. Entertainment] JOHNSON: Press hard his re-admission to his pay and office. 'Entertainment' was the military term for admission of soldiers.

295. importunitie] WALKER (Vers. 201): The i in -ity is almost uniformly dropped in pronunciation. [See 'satiety,' II, i, 261.]

299. BOOTH: Imploringly.

300. gouernment] JOHNSON: Do not distrust my ability to contain my passion. GOULD (p. 104): J. B. BOOTH indicated this meaning of self-control by a gesture strangely original and fine—the forefinger of the lifted hand pointed vertically to the top of the head.

301. FECHTER: He retires humbly—looking on from the back with a triumphant smile. At the door raises his shoulders in contempt; and exit. BOOTH: Iago should be rapid in all his actions except at this point—do nothing, but go slowly off with a tender respect: Othello should watch Iago keenly till he is gone.

303, 304. JOHNSON: The construction is, He knows with a learned spirit all qualities of human dealings. WALKER (Crit. i, 160): Quære whether the comma ought not to be expunged after 'spirit'? 'And knows all qualities with a spirit learned of (i. e., in) human dealings. (I believe I am wrong as to this passage.) [See Text. Notes, where Walker is anticipated.] LETTSOM [Foot-note to Walker]: Notwithstanding Walker's hesitation, I prefer the construction which he has suggested. Quality here, as frequently elsewhere, seems to mean natural disposition. In this passage the poet has unconsciously described himself.

304. Haggard] HARTING (p. 57): A wild-caught and unreclaimed mature hawk, as distinguished from an 'eyess' or nestling. STEEVENS: From a passage in The White Devil, 1612, it appears that it was a term of reproach sometimes applied to a wanton: 'Is this your perch, you haggard? fly to th' stews'—[Webster's Works, vol. i, p. 120, ed. Dyce]. It had, however, a popular sense, and was used for wild by those who

Though that her Iesses were my deere heart-strings, 305
 I'd whistle her off, and let her downe the winde
 To prey at Fortune. Haply, for I am blacke,
 And haue not those soft parts of Conuerfation
 That Chamberers haue : Or for I am declin'd 309

306. I'd] I'de Qq.
downe] dewne Q₂Q₃.
 307. prey] pray Q₃.

307. Haply] Happily Qq.
I am] I'm Pope+.

thought not on the language of falconers. FECHTER: Rousing himself, and trembling with rage. BOOTH: All this passage should be spoken more with anguish than with anger.

305. Iesses] HARTING (p. 58): These were two narrow strips of leather, fastened one to each leg, the other ends being attached to a swivel, from which depended the 'leash.' When the hawk was flown, the swivel and leash were taken off, the jesses and bells remaining on the bird. Turbervile, in his Book of Falconrie, 1575, speaking of the trappings of a hawk, says: 'Shee must haue jesses of leather, the which must haue knottes at the ende, and they should be halfe a foote long, or there about; at the least a shaftmeete betweene the hoose of the jesse, and the knotte at the ende, whereby you tye the hauke.'

306. whistle] JOHNSON: The falconers always let fly the hawk against the wind; if she flies with the wind behind her, she seldom returns. If, therefore, a hawk was for any reason to be dismissed, she was 'let down the wind,' and from that time shifted for herself and 'preyed at fortune.' DYCE (Few Notes, p. 149): 'Ajeter un oiseau. To cast, or whistle off, a hawke; to let her goe, let her flie.'—Cotgrave. [It is needless to cite the numberless allusions throughout Shakespeare and Elizabethan authors to every the minutest department of Hawking. To WALKER (Vers. 68) I can simply refer; in his enthusiasm for scansion he would be willing (if I understand him) to pronounce 'whistle her' as two syllables.—ED.]

307. blacke] FECHTER: Paces the stage, and starts on seeing his face in a glass.

308. parts] REED: This seems to be here synonymous with arts, as in 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, speaking of singing and music: 'They are parts I love' [II, i, ed. Dyce]. MOREL: Le mot qui est resté courant dans la langue est commenté par Voltaire comme suit: 'Great parts,' de grandes parties. D'où cette manière de parler qui étonne aujourd'hui les Français peut-elle venir? D'eux-mêmes. Autrefois nous nous servions de ce mot de parties très communément dans ce sens-là. Clélie, Cassandre, nos autres anciens romans ne parlent que des parties de leurs héros et de leur héroïnes, et ces parties sont leur esprit. En effet, chacun de nous n'a que sa petite portion d'intelligence, de mémoire, de sagacité. Les Français ont laissé échapper de leurs dictionnaires une expression dont les Anglais se sont saisis. Les Anglais se sont enrichis plus d'une fois à nos dépens.—Dict. philosophique, s. v. 'Esprit.'

309. Chamberers] STEEVENS: That is, men of intrigue. So in the Countess of Pembroke's Antonius, 1590: 'Fall'n from a souldier to a chamberer.' HENLEY: See Romans, xiii, 13: 'Let us walk honestly as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness.' WRIGHT (Bible Word-Book): Latimer, in his remarks on Rom. xiii, 13, thus explains the word: 'St. Paul useth this word chambering; for when folks will be wanton, they get themselves in corners.'—Rev. p. 18.

Into the vale of yeares (yet that's not much) 310
 Shee's gone. I am abus'd, and my releefe
 Must be to loath her. Oh Curfe of Marriage!
 That we can call these delicate Creatures ours,
 And not their Appetites? I had rather be a Toad,
 And liue vpon the vapour of a Dungeon, 315
 Then keepe a corner in the thing I loue
 For others vses. Yet 'tis the plague to Great-ones, Prerogatiu'd are they lesse then the Base,
 'Tis destiny vnshunnable, like death:
 Euen then, this forked plague is Fated to vs, 320
 When we do quicken. Looke where she comes:

310. the vale] the valt Q₁. a vale Q₃.

311. abus'd] aduis'd Q₃.

releefe] releife Q₁Q₃.

312. Curfe] the curse Pope+.

315. of a] in a Q₁.

316. corner] cornet Q₃.

the thing] a thing Q₁.

317. uses] use Pope+.

317. plague to] Ff, Rowe. plague of Q₁ et cet.

Great-ones] Ff, Rowe, Pope. great ones Q₃. great ones Q₁Q₃, Theob. et seq.

318. Prerogatiu'd] Prerogatiu'd Q₃.

319. 'Tis] This Q₃.

321. Looke where /he] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Del. Desdemona Q₁Q₃ et cet.

SCHMIDT defines it, but I am afraid on insufficient grounds: a man conversant with the arts of peace, opposed to a soldier; the same as 'carpet-monger.'

312. Marriage] WALKER (Vers. 176): Pronounce dissolute.

314. Appetites] BOOTH: This word may bother the many, so touch your heart to signify, likings, or longings.

318. Prerogatiu'd] MALONE: Compare As You Like It, III, iii, 58, where Touchstone holds forth a contrary opinion. 'Shakespeare would have been more consistent if he had written: Prerogativ'd are they more than the base?' Othello would then have answered his own question: '(No:) 'Tis destiny unshunnable,' &c. STREEVENS soothingly remarks: 'Allowance must be made to the present state of Othello's mind: passion is seldom correct in its effusions.'

319. vnshunnable] MALONE: To be consistent, Othello must mean that it is destiny unshunnable by 'great ones,' not by all mankind.

320. forked plague] PERCY: That is, the horns of the cuckold. MALONE: See, in proof, Tro. & Cress. I, ii, 178; and Wint. Tale, I, ii, 186. One of Harrington's Epigrams contains the very expression: 'Actæon . . . Was plagu'd with horns; . . . Wherefore take heed, ye that are curious, prying, With some such forked plague you be not smitten,' &c.

321. comes] 'The burst of mixed passions with which Forrest uttered the first part of this speech was terrific. His voice then sank into tones the most touching, expressive of complaining regret. The conclusion seemed to have excited him to the utmost pitch of loathing and disgust, and, as he sees Desdemona advancing, he, for a few moments, gazed upon her with horror. The feeling gave way, and all his former tenderness seemed to return as he exclaimed, "If she be false," &c.'—Alger's Life of Forrest, i, 308.

Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

322

If she be false, Heaven mock'd it selfe:
 Ile not beleue't.

Des. How now, my deere Othello?
 Your dinner, and the generous Islanders
 By you inuited, do attend your presence.

325

Oth. I am too blame.

Des. Why do you speake so faintly?
 Are you not well?

330

Oth. I haue a paine vpon my Forehead, heere.

322. Enter...] After line 323, Qq, Dyce,
 Sta. Del.

323. false] fals Q₃.
Heauen mock'd] Ff. O then
heauen mocks Qq et cct.

324. beleue't] beleue it Qq, Jen. Steev.
 Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Del.

326. Islanders] Islander Qq.

328. too] to Qq, F₄F₄, et seq.

329, 330. One line, Qq, Cap. Steev.
 Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly.

329. Why...faintly] Why is your speech
so faint Qq, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll.
 Sing. Ktly.

331. heere] heare Q₃Q₃.

323, 324. COLERIDGE (p. 255): Divine! the effect of innocence and the better genius!

323. mock'd] MALONE: That is [see Text. Notes], renders its own labours fruitless, by forming so beautiful a creature as Desdemona, and suffering the elegance of her person to be disgraced and sullied by the impurity of her mind,—such, I think, is the meaning,—the construction, however, may be different. If she be false, Oh, then, even heaven itself cheats us with 'unreal mockery,' with false and specious appearances, intended only to deceive. STEEVENS: The first of the foregoing explanations is, I believe, the true one. If she be false, heaven disgraces itself by creating woman after its own image. To have made the resemblance perfect, she should have been good as well as beautiful. KNIGHT: By the reading of the Folio we may understand that, if Desdemona be false,—be not what she appears to be,—heaven, at her creation, instead of giving an image of itself, mocked itself,—gave a false image. The reading of the Qq is more forcible and natural.

324. BOOTH: I strike my forehead as if to kill the devilish thought. After Desdemona and Emilia have entered it is better for the latter to retire, for the reason given at line 48 of this scene. Moreover, it is better for her on her re-entrance to find the handkerchief than to steal it.

326. generous] STEEVENS: The islanders of rank, distinction. So, in Meas. for Meas. IV, vi, 13, 'The generous and gravest citizens.' See also Ham. I, iii, 74, 'select and generous.'

328. too blame] See supra, III, iii, 244.

331. Forehead] RYMER (p. 121): Michael Cassio came not from Venice in the ship with Desdemona, nor till this morning could be suspected of an opportunity with her. And 'tis now but dinner time; yet the Moor complains of his forehead. He might have set a guard on Cassio, or have lockt up Desdemona, or have observ'd their carriage a day or two longer. He is on other occasions phlegmatic enough: this is

Def. Why that's with watching, 'twill away againe. 332
 Let me but binde it hard, within this houre
 It will be well.

Oth. Your Napkin is too little : 335

332. Why] Faith Q₁, Mal. Steev.'93,
 Var. Coll. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Huds.
 Rife.

333. it hard] your head Q₁.

334. well.] well againe. Q₁, Jen.

335. [She drops her Handkerchief

'twill] it will Q₂Q₃. it will Q₃. Rowe.

very hasty. [Rymer's innuendo that in the pain upon his forehead Othello here covertly alludes to the forked plague is, I am afraid, only too correct. Delius, also, thus interprets it. Note the use of 'upon.' If this reference was understood by Shakespeare's auditors,—and it seems as though it were scarcely possible in those days to refer to the forehead other than as a groundwork for this plague,—then, in Desdemona's tender response they perceived a proof of her unconscious innocence which is otherwise lost on us.—ED.]

333. BOOTH: She kneels to do so,—he is sitting.

335. Napkin] WARNER (Letter to Garrick, p. 35): This word is still used to signify a Handkerchief in Scotland and in the North of England, especially about Sheffield in Yorkshire. We meet with it in that sense in the Proceedings in Scotland in the Douglass cause: 'Lady Jane never admitted any person to see her till she was fully dress'd . . . with a large Napkin on her breast.' ['Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne'—Lover's Complaint, 21.—ED.]

335. COLLIER (ed. i): We take this necessary stage direction ['Let's fall her Napkin'] from a MS. note, in a hand-writing of the time, in the Duke of Devonshire's Q₂. DYCE (Remarks, p. 239): The stage direction inserted by other modern editors is far better, viz. ['He puts the handkerchief from him, and it drops']. There can be no doubt that, while Othello pushes away the handkerchief, Desdemona lets it fall: Emilia (who is now on the stage) says presently: 'she let it drop by negligence; And I, &c. COLLIER (ed. ii): This stage direction ['The napkin falls to the ground'] and others ['Offering to bind his head, after line 333] are from the (MS.) [Where stage directions occur in the Qq or Ff they are to be reverently accepted, and they are also respectable in Rowe, as indications of stage tradition, but in other cases, where they are devised by editors, they are apt to be intrusive and are mostly superfluous. They belong more to the province of the actor than to that of the editor. We editors readily lose sight of the fact that we are, for the most part, mere drudges, humble diggers and delvers in forgotten fields, and from close poring over the words of a dramatic character we are apt to forget ourselves, and bound in imagination for one wild moment on the stage to dictate action to the player-folk themselves. Picture Dr Johnson in the rôle of Mercutio! Yet when Dr Johnson modified or inserted stage directions, be they ever so slight, as he has in Mercutio's speeches, did not his imagination, for an instant, play him that same fantastic trick? To editorial stage directions far more than to æsthetic illustrations the phrase 'sign-post criticisms' may be properly applied, as it seems to me. The stage directions of actors stand on a different footing. Here lies the actor's true province, and to his interpretations must be applied the supreme test of public judgement, wherein we, as a part of that public, have a right to give our voice. Here FECHTER decides that it is Othello who throws down the handkerchief, and does it in a rage; but BOOTH, with finer insight, lets Othello gently push the handkerchief aside and Desdemona drop it.—ED.]

Let it alone : Come, Ile go in with you. Exit. 336
Def. I am very sorry that you are not well.
Emil. I am glad I haue found this Napkin :
 This was her firſt remembrance from the Moore,
 My wayward Husband hath a hundred times 340
 Woo'd me to ſteale it. But ſhe ſo loues the Token,
 (For he coniur'd her, ſhe ſhould euer keepe it)
 That ſhe reſerues it euermore about her,
 To kiſſe, and talke too. Ile haue the worke tane out,
 And giu't Iago : what he will do with it 345
 Heauen knowes, not I :

336. Exit.] Ex. Oth. and Defd. (after napkin, line 338) Qq. Exeunt Ff. After line 337, Rowe et seq.

337. Om. Cap. (corrected Notes, ii, 148 b).

Scene VII. Pope+, Jen.

338. Napkin.] napkin here. Han.

341. Woo'd] Wooded Qq.

342. ſhould] would Var.'03, '13, '21, Sing. i.

344. talke too] talke to QqFf.
haue] ha Qq.

344, 345. Ile...he will] I will haue the work | Ta'en out, and give it to Iago, but | What he'll (reading What he'll...not I in lines 345, 346 as one line) Han.

345, 346. Lines end, Iago...I: Johns. Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Dyce, Del. Huds.

345. giu't] give it Steev. Mal.

he will] hee'll Qs, Pope+, Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. he'l QsQs.

346, 347. One line, Ktly.

336. Exit] BOOTH: Take time, gently push the handkerchief from her hand as she is in the act of binding it on your forehead. Pass her, while on her knees, with forced indifference, but turn lovingly, and holding your arms for her to enter them, say 'Come, I'll go in with thee.' Then with a long soulful look into her eyes, fold her tenderly to your heart and go slowly off. Keep time. Don't drawl in either speech or movement, yet be not abrupt nor rapid. Every movement, gesture, look, and tone should be in harmony.

338. FECHTER: Comes forward with caution, and seizes the handkerchief, which she has watched narrowly since Othello threw it down. BOOTH: Emilia, by chance, sees the handkerchief and picks it up.

339. remembrance] STAUNTON: That is, memorial, or forget-me-not.

344. tane out] JOHNSON: The meaning is not, to have the work picked out and leave the ground plain, but to have this work copied in another handkerchief. STEEVENS: So in Middleton's Women Beware Women, I, i, 'she intends To take out other works in a new sampler.' Again, in the Preface to Holland's Pliny: 'Thus Nicophanes (a famous painter in his time) gave his mind wholly to antique pictures, partly to exemplifie and take out their patternes.' BLACKSTONE: Her first thoughts are to have a copy made of it for her husband, and to restore the original to Desdemona. But the sudden coming in of Iago, in a surly humour, makes her alter her resolution, 'to please him. MALONE: This scheme of having the work copied was to render Emilia less unamiable. It is remarkable that when she perceives Othello's fury on the loss of this token, though she is represented as affectionate to her mistress, she never attempts to relieve her of her distress, which she might easily have done. Shakespeare fell into this incongruity by departing from Cinthio's novel.

I nothing, but to please his Fantafie. 347

Enter Iago.

Iago. How now? What do you heere alone?

Emil. Do not you chide: I haue a thing for you. 350

Iago. You haue a thing for me? [325 b]

It is a common thing——

Emil. Hah?

Iago. To haue a foolish wife.

Emil. Oh, is that all? What will you giue me now 355

For that fame Handkerchiefe.

Iago. What Handkerchiefe?

Emil. What Handkerchiefe?

Why that the Moore first gaue to Desdemona,

That which so often you did bid me steale. 360

Iago. Haft stolne it from her?

Emil. No: but she let it drop by negligence,

And to th'aduantage, I being heere, took't vp:

Looke, heere 'tis.

Iago. A good wench, giue it me. 365

347. nothing...his] nothing know, but for his Q., Johns.

348. Enter...] After line 345, Qq.

351, 352. One line, Qq, Cap. Steev. et seq.

351. You haue] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Steev.
'85. Om. Qq et cet.

352. thing—] thing. Q., thing: Cap.

354. wife] thing Q.

356, 357, 358. Handkerchiefe] hand- kercher Q.

361. stolne] stole Qq, Cap. Jen. stoln
F., stollen F., Rowe, Pope.

362. No: but she] Ff, Rowe+, Cap.
Jen. Steev.'85, Knt. No faith, she Qq
et cet.

363. th'] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Coll. Dyce
iii, Huds. the Qq et cet.

took't] tooke it Q., Steev.'85,

Mal.

364. 'tis] Ff, Rowe+. it is Qq, Han.
et cet.

349–352. WALKER (Crit. iii, 287): Arrange, perhaps,—How now! | What do you here alone? Emil. Do not you chide; | I have a thing for you. Iago. A thing for me? | It is a common thing.

350. chide] BOOTH: Note this. Iago's manner is brusque,—disappointed at not finding Othello here; he had come to drive the dagger deeper in his heart.

357. FECHTER: Earnestly. BOOTH: Indifferently. Up stage.

361. BOOTH: Turn quickly, with delighted expectancy.

362. No] COLLIER (ed. i): The Master of the Revels seems to have been capriciously scrupulous in this play; here, according to the Folio, 'faith' was erased as an oath, and this not for the first time. In line 332 the same thing occurs.

363. to th' advantage] JOHNSON: I, being *opportune*ly here, took it up.

365. BOOTH: Snatch at it eagerly.

Æmil. What will you do with't, that you haue bene 366 fo earneft to haue me filch it?

Iago. Why, what is that to you?

Æmil. If it be not for fome purpofe of import,
Giu't me againe. Poore Lady, ſhee'l run mad 370
When ſhe ſhall lacke it.

Iago. Be not acknowne on't:
I haue vſe for it. Go, leaue me. Exit Æmil.
I will in Caffio's Lodging loofe this Napkin,
And let him finde it. Trifles light as ayre, 375
Are to the iealious, confirmations ſtrong,
As proofes of holy Writ. This may do ſomething. 377

366, 367. What...ſo] What...So (As verſe) Q₁. (As verſe, the firſt line ending with it) Q₂Q₃. Proſe Ff, Rowe, Pope.
What...earneſt] One line, Theob.
et ſeq.

366. with't] with it Qq, Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

that] Om. F₃F₄, Rowe+.

you haue] you've Huds.

367. filch] ſetch Q₂. ſilch F₄, Rowe.

368. what is] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Steev.

'85. what's Qq et cet.

[Snatching it. Rowe.

369. If it] If't Q₂Q₃, Pope+, Cap. Jen.
Cam. Dyce iii, Huds.

for] Om. Coll. (MS).

370. Giu't me] Giue me't Q₂Q₃. Giue me't Q₄, Jen. Giue it me Steev. Mal. Var.

372, 373. One line, Qq, Jen. Be...for it One line, Cap. et ſeq. (except Ktly and Dyce iii).

372. not acknowne on't] F₄. not you knowne on't Q₂Q₃, Pope+, Cap. Jen. not you acknowne on't Q₄, Dyce iii, Coll. iii.
not you known of't Mal. Steev.'93, Var.
not acknowne on't F₃F₄ et cet. not you known in't Johns. conj.

373. for it.] for it.—Qq. for't Walker Go, leaue me] Separate line, Cap et ſeq. (except Ktly and Dyce iii).

Exit Æmil.] Exit Em. (after nap- kin, line 374) Qq.

374. loofe] loſe Qq.

376. iealious] iealous QqFf.

377. Writ.] Wright, Q₃.

368. Why] BOOTH: Pause mysteriouſly, 'Why —,' as if about to give her ſome wonderful reaſon. Then ſnatch it, with 'What's that to you?'

372. ackowne] STEEVENS: That is, do not acknowledge anything of the matter.
The word occurs in Golding's Ovid: 'Howbeit I durſt not be ſo bolde of hope ac-knowne to bee' [p. 91, Lib. vii, 632, 'nec me sperare fatebar']. Again in Puttenham's Arte of Poetrie [p. 260, ed. Arber]: 'ſo would I not haue a tranſlatour to be aſhamed to be acknowen of his tranſlation.' PORSON: Again in The Life of Ariosto, in Harrington's tranſlation of Orlando, ed. 1607: 'Some ſay, he was married to her privilie, but durſt not be acknowne of it.'

373. BOOTH: Many 'Iagos' kiſſ her, and coax her to leave him,—he is given rather to chiding than to caressing.

374. Napkin] BOOTH: Why may not Caſſio bind this about his wounded leg at cloſe of the next Act? 'Tis traditional, and reaſonable,—do it.

375, 376. HUNTER (ii, 281): Compare V. & A. 1023: 'Trifles unwitneſſed with eye or ear Thy coward heart with falſe bethinking grieues.'

The Moore already changes with my poyfon : 378
 Dangerous conceites, are in their Natures poyfons,
 Which at the first are scarce found to distaste : 380
 But with a little acte vpon the blood,
 Burne like the Mines of Sulphure. I did say so.

Enter Othello.

Looke where he comes : Not Poppy, nor Mandragora, 384

- | | |
|--|--|
| 378. Om. Q ₁ .
<poyfon] +.<="" ff,="" p="" poyfons="" rowe=""></poyfon]> | 383. Enter...] (After blood , line 381)
Q ₂ Q ₃ . Om. Q ₃ . After yesterday , line |
| 379. Om. Rowe ii.
Natures] nature Pope +. | 387, Knt, Sing. Dyce, Wh. Ktly, Sta.
Huds. |
| 380. distaste] distast Qq. | Scene VIII. Pope +, Jen. |
| 381. acte vpon] art, vpon Q ₁ . | 384. nor] Om. F ₄ . |
| 382. Mines] mindes Q ₁ . | |

378. my poyson] STAUNTON: The repetition of 'poison' here is so inelegant that we may well suspect the word in one line was caught by the compositor's eye from the other, but it is hard to say in which the corruption lies. WALKER (Crit. i, 287): I once thought that we should read 'with my practise;' but it would seem that the word required should be similar in termination, or general appearance, to 'poison'; for this line has dropt out, most probably from that cause, in Q₁. Therefore I conjecture potion.

382. I did say so] To BLACKSTONE this exclamation was most unmeaning in the mouth of such a speaker, at such a time; he therefore suggested that as Iago has the handkerchief in his hand there may be a reference to it, and that the phrase is 'Hide it!—so—so'; but he 'readily retracted' his emendation (though still thinking the phrase obscure) after reading the following note by STEEVENS: Iago first ruminates on the qualities of the passion which he is labouring to excite; and then proceeds to comment on its effects. 'Jealousy (says he), with the smallest operation on the blood, flames out with all the violence of sulphur,' &c. 'I did say so; Look where he comes—!' i. e., I knew that the least touch of such a passion would not permit the Moor to enjoy a moment of repose:—I have just said that jealousy is a restless commotion of the mind; and look where Othello approaches, to confirm the propriety and justice of my observation. HUDSON: The moment Iago's eye lights on Othello, he sees that his devilish insight of things was punctually prophetic of Othello's case; that his words are exactly verified in the inflamed looks of his victim. BOOTH's dramatic instinct clears any difficulty by a stage direction—'Othello groans.'

383. In a note on Tro. & Cress., DYCE, in his Remarks, p. 147, shows that these stage directions were not meant to be taken as the actual entrance of the actor, but that they were merely, as in the present case, to show that towards the end of a soliloquy the actor who spoke next was to prepare himself (or be summoned) to enter,—not that he was to come on the stage before the conclusion of the soliloquy. It is the same in IV, i, 116, where 'Enter Cassio' occurs four lines before Iago addresses him. [I suppose it was on this fact that Dyce founded his positive assertion (see note on II, ii, 231) that F₁ was printed from a stage transcript, and not from one where shorthand had been used. KNIGHT was the first to indicate Othello's entrance at the proper word, although Capell had 'Enter Othello, at a distance.'—ED.]

384. Mandragora] STAUNTON quotes from Holland's Pliny, Bk. xxv, ch. 13: 'This herbe Mandragoras, some writers cal Circeium; and two kinds there be of it:

- Nor all the drowfie Syrrups of the world 385
 Shall euer medicine thee to that sweete sleepe
 Which thou owd'ft yesterday.
Oth. Ha, ha, false to mee?
Iago. Why how now Generall? No more of that.
Oth. Auant, be gone: Thou haft set me on the Racke: 390
 I sweare 'tis better to be much abus'd,
 Then but to know't a little.
Iago. How now, my Lord?
Oth. What sence had I, in her stolne houres of Luft? 394

387. owd'ft] owedft Qq. Han. Warb.
 Johns. Jen. Glo. Cam. Huds. had'st Pope,
 Theob.

yesterday] yester-night Edwards
 (in jest).

388. Ha, ha,] Ha! Pope+, Cap.
false to mee?] false to me, to me?
 Q₁Q₂ Jen. false to me to me? Q₃. False?
To me! to me! Johns. false to me? to me?
 Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly.
 390. Thou hast] thou'st Pope+.

391. sweare] sware Q₃.
 392. know't] know Q₁, Rowe, Pope,
 Theob. Han. Warb.

393. now] Om. Pope+.
 394. sence] sence Q₂Q₃. sence F₁F₂, scent F₄, Rowe.
in her] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Knt. of her Qq et cet.
of Luft] or lust Theob. ii, Warb.
 Johns. [See Commentary.]

the white which is supposed the male; and the black which you must take for the female. . . . It may be used safely enough for to procure sleep, if there be good regard nad in the dose. . . . Also it is an ordinarie thing to drink it . . . before the cutting or cauterizing, pricking or launcing of any member to take away the sence and feeling of such extreme cures. And sufficient it is in some bodies to cast them into a sleep with the smel of Mandrage, against the time of such Chirurgery.' HUNTER (ii, 286): It may be suspected that when Shakespeare used the word, mandragora had but a traditional and historical claim to be reckoned among the 'drowsy syrups of the world.' BUCKNILL (p. 217): Shakespeare refers to this plant altogether six times, and it is noteworthy that on the two occasions where its real medicinal properties are mentioned, the Latin term mandragora is used; the vulgar appellation, mandrake, is employed when the vulgar superstition is alluded to. [See notes on 'mandrake' in Rom. & Jul IV, iii, 47.]

387-389. STEEVENS reads and divides: Which thou ow'dst yesterday. Oth. Ha' ha! false to me? | To me? Iago. Why, how now, general? no more of that. |

388. BOOTH: Mournfully. Iago addresses him as though not expecting him.

394. in] KNIGHT: Sence of is the modern use of the term knowledge of; 'sense in' is the more proper and peculiarly Shakespearian use, which implies the impression upon the senses, and not upon the understanding. The difference is the same as between a sensible man and a man sensible to pain.

394. of] At first sight, in Theobald's ed. ii, this looks like or, but closer scrutiny shows the r to be simply a battered, mutilated f; in one of my copies of this edition, the l of the following word is totally lost, and half of the u, presumably from the same accident that destroyed the upper half of this f. But Warburton, who had denounced Hammer for not comparing Pope's edition with Theobald's, falls here under his own

I saw't not, thought it not : it harm'd not me : 395
 I slept the next night well, fed well, was free, and merrie.
 I found not Cassio's kisses on her Lippes :
 He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolne,
 Let him not know't, and he's not robb'd at all.
Iago. I am sorry to heare this ? 400
Oth. I had beene happy, if the generall Campe,
 Pyoners and all, had tasted her sweet Body, 402

395. saw't] saw it F ₄ , Rowe, Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Del.	400. I am] I'm Huds. 402. Pyoners] QqF ₄ , Pioners Cap. Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Rife. Pioneers F ₃ F ₄ et cet.
396. fed well] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. Om. Qq et cet.
399. know't] know it Steev.

condemnation; he accepted the or, without comparing it with any edition, and incorporated it in his own text bare of comment. So likewise did Dr Johnson, who, while using Theobald's text to print from, sneered at him in his Preface, and raised a laugh against him by saying: 'I have sometimes adopted his restoration of a comma, without inserting the panegyric in which he celebrated himself for his achievement.' Sir, he who accepts a text to print from on the one hand, and vilifies his benefactor on the other, is, on this occasion, removed alike either from the claims of consideration or the requirements of respect.—ED.

394 et seq. STEEVENS calls attention to certain passages in Middleton's Witch resembling this and other passages in this scene, to which, apparently, he attached importance as indications that Shakespeare had followed Middleton, but MALONE afterwards showed that The Witch must have been produced after 1613. [See Macbeth, Appendix, p. 388.]

396. fed well] KNIGHT: The rejection of these words by the modern editors can be accounted for only by the fact that they would make any sacrifice of sense or poetry, and prefer the feeblest to the strongest expression, if they could prevent the intrusion of a line exceeding ten syllables. This sacrifice, for the sake of a tame and uniform rhythm, is even more ludicrous when they strive to make an heroic line out of the broken sentences of two or more speakers, as in line 122, where 'Honest' is omitted. COLLIER (ed. i): A strange corruption, for which it is difficult to account. COLLIER (ed. ii): An absurd insertion, as if Othello meant to say that he had fed well in the night, while he was 'free and merry,' a corruption of the verse for which, however, it is not difficult to account.

396. FECHTER: In a feverish agony of rage.

398. wanting] BOOTH: I prefer knowing, for surely Othello did 'want' Desdemona's love at all times and forever. [But 'wanting' is here used not in the sense of needing, but of missing,—and yet even in this sense it has a lack of tenderness.—ED.]

398, 399. HALLIWELL quotes Milton, ix, 756: 'For good unknown sure is not had; or had And yet unknown, is as not had at all.'

401. GOULD (p. 105): We may imagine the guileless hospitality of the gentle lady to her guests, maddening her husband, so that he leaves them abruptly, and re-enters on the scene to Iago.

402. Pyoners] GROSE: 'A soldier ought ever to retaine and keepe his arms in safetie and forth comming, for he is more to be detested than a coward, that will lose

So I had nothing knowne. Oh now, for euer 403
 Farewell the Tranquill minde ; farewell Content ;
 Farewell the plumed Troopes, and the bigge Warres, 405
 That makes Ambition, Vertue ! Oh farewell ;
 Farewell the neighing Steed, and the shrill Trumpe,
 The Spirit-stirring Drum, th'Eare-piercing Fife, 408

403. knowne] known Q₅.
 405. Troopes] F₂. Troops F₃ F₄, Rowe +, Cap. Knt, Sta. Wh. 1, Del. troope Qq et
 cet.

Warres] war Rowe ii +, Cap.

406. makes] Qq, Johns. Cap. Ktly.
make Ff et cet.
farewell :] farewell, QqFf, Rowe,
 Cam. farewell ! Pope et cet.
 408. th'] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Jen. Dyce
 iii, Huds. the Qq et cet.

or play away any part thereof, or refuse it for his ease, or to avoid paines ; wherefore such a one is to be dismissed with punishment, or to be made some abject pioner.'—Davies's Art of War and England Traynings, 1619. So, in The Lawes and Ordinances of War, established by the Earl of Essex, printed in 1640: 'If a trooper shall loose his horse or hackney, or a footman any part of his arms, by negligence or lewdnesse, by dice or cardes ; he or they shall remain in qualitie of pioners, or scavengers, till they be furnished with as good as were lost, at their own charge.' WALKER (Vers. p. 217) shows that the spelling pioner, from the flow of the verse, were there no other indication, should be retained. [See Ham. I, v, 163.]

404 et seq. MALONE quotes two passages, one from a 'very ancient drama entitled Common Conditions,' and another from a Farewell by Peele, which he intimates may have suggested these lines to Shakespeare. STEEVENS: I know not why we should suppose that Shakespeare borrowed so common a repetition as those diversified farewells from any preceding drama. A string of adieux is perhaps the most tempting of all repetitions, because it serves to introduce a train of imagery as well as to solemnify a speech or composition. Wolsey, like Othello, indulges himself in many farewells ; and the Valete, aprica montium cacumina ! Valete, opaca vallium cubilia ! &c., are common to poets of different ages and countries. I have now before me an ancient MS. English poem, in which sixteen succeeding verses begin with the word farewell, applied to a variety of objects and circumstances. BOOTH: Utter this, looking off,—towards Desdemona. My Father once said to me, 'No human voice could surpass, if equal, Edmund Kean's in his delivery of this passage.' Begin slowly, with suppressed emotion ; gradually increase the volume and intensity of voice,—never loud, nor let your tones be too tearful or tremulous,—it becomes monotonous.

405. plumed] DANIEL (Athenaeum, 14 Jan. 1871) calls attention to the change of this word to plumped, in a quotation of these two lines in Suckling's Goblins, 1696, and queries whether it be a misprint, or a misquotation, or the reading of some copy of Othello now lost. Its meaning, he adds, would be in serried ranks ; in proof, several illustrations are given from Hall's Chronicle, a book with which Shakespeare must have been familiar. TIFFIN (Athenaeum, 28 Jan. 1871) asserts that plumped is merely a misprint of the 1696 edition of The Goblins ; in the edition of 1658 it is correctly quoted 'plumed.'

408. Eare-piercing] WARBURTON: I would read fear'spersing, i. e. fear-dispersing ; whereupon EDWARDS (p. 34) suspects a misprint, and that Warburton intended to say, 'I would write ; for no man living can read such a cluster of consonants.

The Royall Banner, and all Qualitie,
 Pride, Pompe, and Circumstance of glorious Warre: 410
 And O you mortall Engines, whose rude throates
 Th'immortall Ioues dread Clamours, counterfet,
 Farewell : Othello's Occupation's gone. 413

410. Pride, Pompe] Prid. Pompe Q₃. The Qq et cet.
 411. you] ye Qq, Jen. 412. dread] great Qq.
 rude] wide Qq. Clamours] clamor Q₄.
 412. Th'] Ff, Rowe +, Jen. Dyce iii. counterfet] counterfeit QqFf.

408. Fife] WARTON: In mentioning the fife joined with the drum, Shakespeare, as usual, paints from the life; those instruments accompanying each other being used in his age by the English soldiery. The fife, however, as a martial instrument, was afterwards entirely discontinued among our troops for many years. It was first used within the memory of man, among our troops, by the British guards, by order of the Duke of Cumberland, when they were encamped at Maestricht, in the year 1747. They took it from the Allies, with whom they served. This instrument, accompanying the drum, is of considerable antiquity in the European armies, particularly the German. In a curious picture in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, painted 1525, representing the siege of Pavia by the French King, where the Emperor was taken prisoner, we see fifes and drums. In Rymer's Fœdera, in a diary of King Henry's siege of Bulloigne, 1544, mention is made of the drommes and viffleurs marching at the head of the King's army. The drum and fife were also much used at ancient festivals, shows, and processions. Gerard Leigh, in his Accidence of Armorie, printed in 1576, describing a Christmas magnificently celebrated at the Inner Temple, says, 'we entered the prince his hall, where anon we heard the noyse of drum and fife.' At a stately masque on Shrove-Sunday, 1510, in which King Henry VIII was an actor, Holinshed mentions the entry 'of a drum and fife appareled in white damaske and grene bonnettes'—Chron. III, 805, col. 2. KNIGHT: Among the French regiments the fife is not found, and is so completely unknown to the French in the present day, that M. Alfred de Vigny, in his translation of this passage of Othello, gives us only the drum. [It is to be feared that Knight drew a conclusion from insufficient premises. The instrument was known in France in the days of Shakespeare. Cotgrave gives 'Fifre: m. A Fife; a Flute, or little pipe accorded with a Drumme, or Taber,' and that it was never 'completely unknown' may be inferred, I think, from the fact that from LE TOURNEUR in 1776, down through LAROCHE, GUIZOT, HUGO, and CAYROU, to AICARD in 1882, the word 'fife' is translated 'fifre,' and DE VIGNY is the solitary exception where it is not found, the omission being presumably due to the exigencies of his rhythm.—ED.]

410. Circumstance] HUNTER (ii, 286): So singular a use of this word requires something to show that it was not without precedent. Take the following from Langley's Translation of Polydore Virgil, where we find that the Romans celebrated their dead 'with great pomp and circumstance'—Fol. 122, b. [Steevens, in his Preface, refers to the 'ambition in each little Hercules to set up pillars, ascertaining how far he had traveled through the dreary wilds of black letter.' There have been, however, very, very few contributions to Shakespearian literature more valuable, or more attractive, than Hunter's New Illustrations.—ED.] ROLFE: Shakespeare uses the singular and plural indifferently. See R. of L., 1262 and 1703.

413. GILES (p. 227) Othello does not here allude once to his real grief, or to his Iago. Is't possible my Lord?

Oth. Villaine, be sure thou proue my Loue a Whore; 415

414. Is't] Is it Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Sta. Ktly, Del. possible, my Lord! possible my Lord?] possible?— QqFf, Booth's Reprint et cet.
My Lord,— Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll.

recent happiness; but, with a terrible spring of the mind, he leaps the chasm of affliction into which he cannot dare to look, and alights on the other side, amidst the turmoils of his youth, amidst the noise and glories of his soldiership. This is the instinct of the mind to save itself from madness. The mind thus blots out the present from its view, and takes refuge in the past. Othello will not front his deadliest loss; he shrinks from it, to grasp with associations which restore him for an instant to the vigorous grandeur of his manhood; when that instant is over, his energies collapse; then comes the depressing sense that for him no more is either hope or action; and so he murmurs 'Othello's occupation's gone.' Othello, in this passage, reveals the casuistry with which the mind blinds itself to ruin; the sophistry in which it quibbles with despair; the maniac strength with which it wrestles against fate and fact. It is as when we fall asleep with a heavy trouble on the soul; the soul takes advantage of this silent hour to escape from its bondage; again it is on the sunny hills; the strength of youth comes back, with the gladness of love and the hopes of life; not once does the spectre of ill throw its shadow on the dream; the vision is bright while the eyes are shut; but no sooner do they open than the dismal reality is present, and it cannot be dismissed.

413. GOULD (p. 106): In the mere word 'farewell' his [J. B. Booth's] great heart seemed to burst as in one vast continuing sigh. The phrase, 'the tranquil mind,' immediately succeeding, came in clear brain-tones, with a certain involved suggestiveness of meaning almost impossible to define, but as if the tranquil mind had flown. The whole passage, with its successive images of glorious war filing and disappearing before the mind's eye, employed some of the grandest elements of voice, subdued to retrospective and mournful cadences. 'Othello's occupation's gone.' And he stood with a look in his large blue eyes,—the bronzed face lending them a strange sadness,—as if all happiness had gone after. Kean's manner in this scene was very different. At the close of the 'farewell' he raised both hands, clasped them, and so brought them down upon his head, with a most effective gesture of despair. But the action seems to us like transferring Othello into Edmund Kean. FECHTER: Othello falls back on his seat, quite humbled.

415. LEWES (p. 4): Kean's range of expression was very limited. His physical aptitudes were such as confined him to the strictly tragic passions; and for these he was magnificently endowed. Small and insignificant in figure, he could at times become impressively commanding by the lion-like power and grace of his bearing. I remember the last time I saw him play Othello, how puny he appeared beside Macready, until in the Third Act, when, roused by Iago's taunts and insinuations, he moved towards him with a gouty hobble, seized him by the throat, and, in a well-known explosion, 'Villain! be sure,' &c., he seemed to swell into a stature which made Macready appear small. On that very evening, when gout made it difficult for him to display his accustomed grace, when a drunken hoarseness had ruined that once matchless voice, such was the irresistible pathos,—manly, not tearful,—which vibrated in his tones and expressed itself in looks and gestures, that old men leaned their heads upon their arms and fairly sobbed. It was, one must confess, a patchy performance considered as a whole; some parts were miserably tricky, others misconceived, others gabbled over

Be sure of it : Giue me the Occular prooffe, 416
 Or by the worth of mine eternall Soule, [326 a]
 Thou had'st bin better haue bin borne a Dog
 Then answer my wak'd wrath.

Iago. Is't come to this ? 420

Oth. Make me to see't : or (at the least) so proue it,
 That the probation beare no Hindge, nor Loope,
 To hang a doubt on : Or woe vpon thy life.

Iago. My Noble Lord.

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me, 425
 Neuer pray more : Abandon all remorse
 On Horrors head, Horrors accumulate : ✓
 Do deeds to make Heauen weepe, all Earth amaz'd ; 428

416. Occular] ocular Q₂. ocular Q₃Q₄ Ff.

[Catching hold on him. Rowe.

417. mine] mans Q₂, Warb. Sta. Glo.
 Cam. Dyce iii, Huds. Rife, Wh. ii. my Q₂Q₃ Cap.

418. had'st bin] hadst Q'81. hadst much Quincy (MS).

419. Then] That Q₂.

420. Is't] Is it Steev. Mal. Var. Coll.
 W₂. i, Del.

421. see't] see it Steev. Mal. Var.

424. Lord.] QqFf, Rowe. lord—Pope
 et seq.

426. remorse] remorce. Q₂. remorce :
 Q₂. remorse : Q₃.

427. Horrors head] horror's head Han.
 Johns. et seq.

accumulate] accumilate Q₂.

in haste to reach the 'points'; but it was irradiated with such flashes that I would again risk broken ribs for the chance of a good place in the pit to see anything like it. BOOTH: As before, with smothered intensity, not loud, gradually increasing, till 'If thou dost slander her'—when the full force of Othello's wrath breaks forth in violent tones and he seizes Iago, who cowers.

415. Loue] MAGINN (p. 273): We may observe that he still, though his suspicions are so fiercely aroused, calls her his 'love.' It is for the last time before her death. After her guilt is, as he thinks, proved, he has no word of affection for her. She is a convicted culprit, to be sacrificed to his sense of justice.

417. mine] STEEVENS: An opposition may have been designed between man and 'dog.' [See Text. Notes. BOSWELL, in the Var. of '21, gives man's as the reading of a Quarto for 'my' in line 419. I think it is merely a misprint in the reference, and that the varia lectio refers to 'mine' in this present line, and not to the 'my.' It apparently puzzled Collier, or I should not have referred to it.—ED.]

418. have been] See Ham. V, i, 232, or ABBOTT, § 360.

426. remorse] MALONE: All tenderness of nature, all pity. [See post, line 532.] HUDSON: That is, apparently here, conscience; 'Cast off the restraints and regards of conscience altogether.' The sense of pity, however, is included and interfused with it. What an appalling disclosure this speech is, of Othello's excruciating agony of mind!

427. Horrors accumulate] WALKER (Crit. i, 253): Read horror. The corruption originated in the preceding 'horrors.' [See I, i, 31.]

428. weepe] STEEVENS: Compare Meas. for Meas. II, ii, 121: 'Plays such fantastic tricks before high Heaven As make the angels weep.'

For nothing canst thou to damnation adde,
Greater then that. 430

Iago. O Grace! O Heauen forgiue me!
Are you a Man? Haue you a Soule? or Senſe?
God buy you : take mine Office. Oh wretched Foole,
That lou'ſt to make thine Honesty, a Vice!
Oh monſtrous world! Take note, take note (O World) 435
To be direct and honeſt, is not ſafe.

I thanke you for this profit, and from hence
Ile loue no Friend, ſith Loue breeds ſuch offence.

Oth. Nay ſtay : thou ſhould'ſt be honeſt.

Iago. I ſhould be wiſe ; for Honesty's a Foole, 440
And looſes that it workes for.

Oth. By the World,
I thinke my Wife be honeſt, and thinke ſhe is not : 443

- | | |
|---|---|
| 429, 430. One line, Qq. | 435. world] world , Qq. |
| 431. forgiue] defend Qq, Pope +, Cap. | 438. sith] ſince Qq, Jen. Mal. Steev.'93, |
| Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Cam. Ktly. | Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Huds. |
| 433. buy] QqF ₃ F ₄ , by F ₄ , Jen. be | 439. ſtay :] ſlay , Qq. stay — Rowe +. |
| w Theob. Warb. Johns. by Sing. Dyce, | stay . Johns. Jen. Coll. Wh. Ktly, Del. |
| Wh. Huds. be wi ' Rowe et cet. | honeſt .] honest — Rowe +, Jen. |
| mine] my Q, Q ₃ . | 441. looſes] loſes Ff. |
| Office .] office ,— Qq. | that] what Pope +. |
| Oh] Om. Pope, Han. | 442–449. Om. Q ₄ . |
| 434. lou'ſt] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt, Wh. | 443. be] is F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe +, Cap. |
| ii. liueſt Qq et cet. | and] Om. Cap. |
| thine] thy Q'95. | |

430. BOOTH: I carry no weapon in this scene, but seeing Iago's dagger I clutch it in frenzy and am about to stab him, when the Christian overcomes the Moor, and throwing the dagger from me, I fall again upon the seat with a flood of tears. To this weeping Iago may allude in his next speech, where he says contemptuously, 'Are you a man?'

433. buy] See I, iii, 215. This spelling must not mislead us as to the pronunciation; 'buy' should not be pronounced like our present bye; the y is merely phonetic, and represents not ye but wi', and should be pronounced like it, as, indeed, it is indicated by Singer. See Text. Notes.—Ed.

434. lou'ſt] KNIGHT: Surely the man that loves to carry his honesty so far that it becomes a vice is what Iago means when he calls himself a fool.

438. sith] See Ham. II, ii, 6, where Marsh points out the distinction between sith and since, viz.: that sith belongs to logic and since to time, a distinction which the printers of Shakespeare's plays were not always careful to preserve.

439. BOOTH: Peremptorily, as to your subaltern, and Iago halts at the word of command.

443. be . . . is] ABBOTT, § 299: Be expresses more doubt than is after a verb of thinking. Very significant is this difference in this line of the doubtful Othello where is is the emphatic word and the line contains the extra dramatic syllable.

I thinke that thou art iust, and thinke thou art not :

Ile haue some prooffe. My name that was as fresh 445

As Dians Visage, is now begrim'd and blacke

As mine owne face. If there be Cords, or Kniues,

Poyson, or Fire, or suffocating streames,

Ile not indure it. Would I were fatisfied.

Iago. I see you are eaten vp with Passion : 450

I do repent me, that I put it to you.

You would be fatisfied ?

Oth. Would? Nay, and I will.

Iago. And may : but how ? How fatisfied, my Lord ?

Would you the super-vision grossely gape on ? 455

Behold her top'd ?

445. My] Ff, Rowe, Mal. Knt. her
Q₂ Q₃ et cet.

446. begrin'd] begrind Q₂. begrined
Q₃.

448. streames] steams Pope, Han.

450. I see] Ff, Rowe. I see sir, Qq et
cet.

452. fatisfied ?] fatisfied. Qq.

453. Would ?] Would, Qq, Rowe i.

and I] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Ktly. and Pope+. I Qq et cet.

454. how ?] now ? Rowe i.

455. you the super-vision] Ff, Rowe,
Knt, Coll. Ktly. you, the supervisor Q₂.
you, the supervision Q₂ Q₃. you be super- visor, Pope+. you, the supervisor, Cap.
et cet.

on ?] on, Qq. on— Dyce, Wh.
Glo. Sta.

456. top'd] Warb. topt Qq. topp'd
Ff, Rowe, Pope i, Knt, Sing. Glo. Ktly,
Cam. Wh. ii. tuppp'd Pope ii et cet.

445. My name] KNIGHT: There is probably not a more fatal corruption of the meaning of the poet [than her of Q₂] amongst the thousand corruptions for which his editors are answerable. It destroys the master-key to Othello's character. It is his intense feeling of honour that makes his wife's supposed fault so terrific to him. It is not that Desdemona's name is begrimed and black, but that his own name is degraded. This one thought, here for the first time exhibited, pervades all the rest of the play; and when we understand how the poison operates upon Othello's mind, we are quite prepared fully to believe him when he says, in conclusion,—'For naught I did in hate, but all in honour.' The thought that his own name is now tarnished drives him at once into a phrenzy. He has said, 'I'll have some proof'; but the moment that the idea of dishonour comes across his sensitive nature he bursts into uncontrolled fury: 'If there be cords, . . . I'll not endure it.' DYCE (Remarks, p. 240): The word 'own' in the phrase 'mine own face,' is alone sufficient to refute Knight's long and laborious defence of 'My.' Othello would not have said, 'MY name is now as black as mine own face.' Mr Knight's text of the present tragedy is, on the whole, as bad as his text of Hamlet; and a worse text of either play could hardly be produced. [These harsh expressions of opinion are apt to make one antagonistic and far from willing to accept them as decisive. In justice to Dyce it should be noted that when, a dozen years later, he became himself an editor of Shakespeare, his tone to his fellow-editors became much less supercilious and dogmatic.—ED.]

450. I see you are] WALKER (Crit. iii, 287) prefers this to the I see, sir of the Qq, and contracts 'you are' to y'are. See line 253 above.

Oth. Death, and damnation. Oh! 457
Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I thinke,
 To bring them to that Prospe^ct : Damne them then,
 If euer mortall eyes do see them boulster 460
 More then their owne. What then ? How then ?
 What shall I say? Where's Satisfaction ?
 It is impossible you should see this,
 Were they as prime as Goates, as hot as Monkeyes,
 As falt as Wolues in pride, and Fooles as grosse 465
 As Ignorance, made drunke. But yet , I say,
 If imputation, and strong circumstances,
 Which leade directly to the doore of Truth,
 Will giue you satisfaction, you might haue't. 469

457. damnation. Oh !] damnation— oh Qq.

459. bring them] bring em Qq, Rowe +,
 Cap. Jen. Steev.'85, Mal. bring Ff. bring it Coll. (MS).

Damne them] dam em Qq, Cap.
 Jen.

460. mortall] morall Q_s.
do see] did see Qq.

461. How then ?] how then, say you ?
 Cap.

462. What...satisfaction ?] Where's satis- faction ? What shall I say ? Cap.

469. you might] Ff, Rowe +, Jen.
 Steev.'85, Knt, Del. you may Qq et cet.
haue't] ha't Qq. have it Steev.
 Mal. Var. Coll. Del.

457. HAZLITT (Hawkins's Life of Kean, ii, 209) : Kean was great, as we expected,—surpassingly great. In the Third Act he let himself loose on the ocean of his passion, and drove on in darkness and in tempest, like an abandoned barque. The agony of his heart was the fiery Moorish agony, not cramped in within an actor's or a school-man's confines, but fierce, ungovernable, dangerous. You knew not what he would do next in the madness of his spirit,—he knew not himself what he should do. One of the finest instantaneous actions of Kean was his clutching his black hand slowly round his head as though his brain were turning, and then writhing round and standing in dull agony with his back to the audience,—what other performer would so have forgotten himself ?

461, 462. CAPELL indicates a quotation by Italics in his text, and thus prints these two lines : 'More than their own! What then ? how then, say you ? | Where's satisfaction ? What shall I say ?' Thereupon he has the following wellnigh unwedgeable note : What is spoke in another's person ought ever to be distinguish'd from what a speaker says in his own ; and this fitness is greatest in such a case as the present, where interrogations follow interrogations ; for want of such distinction, the two members of [line 462] (by what accident transpos'd, we know not ; but, probably, of the press) keep through all prior copies the perverse order that accident put them in, the latter member preceding : Was all other proof wanting that what is now the first member stands in it's due place, we might receive it from what the speaker concludes with, in which is mention of 'satisfaction' as a thing of Othello's asking : to which asking the insertion [of say you in line 461] is as favorable on the score of perspicuousness, as it is to the verse's numbers which are now first compleated.

Oth. Giue me a liuing reafon ſhe's difloyall. 470
Iago. I do not like the Office.
 But ſith I am entred in this caufe ſo farre
 (Prick'd too't by fooliſh Honeſty, and Loue)
 I will go on. I lay with Caffio lately,
 And being troubled with a raging tooth, 475
 I could not ſleepe. There are a kinde of men,
 So loofe of Soule, that in their ſleepes will mutter
 Their Affayres : one of this kinde is Caffio :
 In ſleepe I heard him ſay, ſweet Deſdemona,
 Let vs be wary, let vs hide our Loues, 480
 And then (Sir) would he gripe, and wring my hand :
 Cry, oh ſweet Creature : then kiſſe me hard,
 As if he pluckt vp kiſſes by the rootes, [326 b]
 That grew vpon my lippes, laid his Leg ore my Thigh,
 And figh, and kiſſe, and then cry curſed Fate, 485

470. reaſon] reaſon, that Qq, Jen. Mal.
 Var.

471. Iago.] Iogo. F.

472. ſith] ſince Theob. ii, Warb. Johns.
I am] I'm Pope +, Sta. Dyce iii,
 Huds.

in] into Qq, Jen.

473. too't] to't QqF₃F₄. to it Steev.
 Mal. Var.

474. one] one Q.

475-478. Ff, followed by Rowe, Han.
 Cap. Ktly. Lines end, ſleep...ſoule...affaire...Caffio. Qq. Ending, *tooth...ſleep
 ...ſoul...affairs...Caffio* Pope et cet.

476. could] could Q.

477. ſleepes] ſleep Q'81, Q'95.

478. Their] All their Han. Of their Cap.

480. wary] merry Q.

482. Cry, oh] Cry out, Qq.
then] Ff, Rowe, Knt. and then
 Qq et cet.

484-486. Ff, Rowe, Knt. Ending lines, leg...then...Moore. Qq et cet.

484. That] And Rowe ii, Pope, Han. laid] Ff. then layed or laied Qq.
lay Rowe, Knt. then lay Pope +. and lay Steev.'85. then lay'd Cap. et cet.

ore] Ff, Rowe. ouer Qq et cet.

485. ſigh...kiſſe...cry] Ff, Rowe +, Steev.'85. Knt. ſigh'd...kiſſed...cried Qq
 et cet.

470. liuing] MALONE: A reaſon founded on fact and experience, not on ſurmiſe and conjecture.

477. ſleepes] See Ham. IV, vii, 30. The uſe of this plural form is ſo common that the s can ſcarcely be regarded as an interpolation under Walker's Art. xxxviii (Crit. i, 233; ſee I, i, 31); it is rather a genuine plural, like 'loves,' Ham. I, i, 173, 'conſents,' 'wills,' 'ſights,' &c.

481. BOOTH: Holds Othello's hand, which Othello draws with diſguſt from his graſp.

482. WALKER (Crit. ii, 20), in a liſt of many inſtances where creature is pronounced as a triſyllable, cites this line, but doubts whether the common reading, which adopts and then of the Qq, is not preferable; in this caſe creature would be a diſſyllable. LETTSOM (in a foot-note to Walker) thinks the Qq far ſuperior, in which, however, the

- That gaue thee to the Moore. 486
Oth. O monstrous ! monstrous !
Iago. Nay, this was but his Dreame.
Oth. But this denoted a fore-gone conclusion,
 'Tis a shrew'd doubt, though it be but a Dreame. 490
Iago. And this may helpe to thicken other proofes,
 That do demonstrate thinly.
Oth. Ile teare her all to peeces.
Iago. Nay yet be wife ; yet we see nothing done,
 She may be honest yet : Tell me but this, 495
 Haue you not sometimes seene a Handkerchiefe
 Spotted with Strawberries, in your wiues hand ?
Oth. I gaue her such a one : 'twas my first gift. 498

487. O monstrous] O monstrous Q₃. 490. shrew'd] shrew'd Qq. shrewde F₄.
 488. Nay] Om. Pope, Han. 494. Nay yet] Ff, Rowe. Nay, but
 489. denoted] denoted Q₁. Qq et cet.
 fore-gone] fore-gon Q₂Q₃. 496, 499. Handkerchiefe] handkercher 490-492. 'Tis...thinly] Given to Iago Q₁.
 by Q₄, Warb. 497, 500. wiues] wife's Rowe et seq.

then would be better away, for cry and kiss are most closely connected, and this then may have crept in from the then two lines below.

489. conclusion] MALONE: An experiment, or trial. See Ant. & Cleo. V, ii, 358. 'She hath pursued conclusions infinite Of easy ways to die.' [See Ham. III, iv, 195.] DELIUS finds here an allusion to the 'conclusion' in II, i, 295.

490. JOHNSON: I think this line is more naturally spoken by Othello, who, by dwell so long upon the proof, encouraged Iago to enforce it.

490. doubt] Suspicion. See line 217 of this scene.

493. FECHTER: Othello crosses with the fierceness of a tiger, and with action as if destroying Desdemona's work. BOOTH: Here you may let the savage have vent,—but for a moment only; when Othello next speaks he is tame again and speaks sadly. Iago has caught and held him as he was about to rush off to 'tear her all to pieces.' Do not stoop to the old stage-trick of displaying Desdemona's handkerchief, as if by accident, while Othello's back is turned.

494. we see] Warburton: An oblique and secret mock at Othello's saying, 'Give me ocular proof.' HUDSON: Iago is exulting in his intellectual mastery, as shown in the success of his lies. Truth prevails by her own might; lies by the skill of the liar; hence, gaining his ends by falsehood is to Iago just the sweetest thing in the world.

497. spotted] Halliwell: Mr Fairholt sends me the following curious note: 'The ladies of the Shakespearian era were great adepts in the use of the needle; the designs they made use of were consequently conventional like those worked by our grandmothers in the school sampler. Flowers and fruits were depicted in a sort of heraldic fashion, and repeated mechanically over the surface to be ornamented.' 'The habit of wearing curiously wrought handkerchiefs, which prevailed in our author's day, was derived from the East, where it was customary for both sexes to carry them.'—Not.

Iago. I know not that : but such a Handkerchiefe
(I am fure it was your wiues) did I to day 500
See Cassio wipe his Beard with.

Oth. If it be that.

Iago. If it be that, or any, it was hers.
It speakes against her with the other proofes.

Othel. O that the Slaue had forty thoufand liues : 505
One is too poore, too weake for my reuenge.
Now do I fee 'tis true. Looke heere Iago,
All my fond loue thus do I blow to Heauen. 'Tis gone.
Arife blacke vengeance, from the hollow hell, 509

500. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds.

502. If it] If't Qq, Cap. Jen.

that.] that—Rowe et seq.

503. any, it was hers.] any, it was hers,
Qq. any, if'twas hers, Ff, Rowe +, Cap.
Jen. Steev.'85, Knt. any that was hers,
Mal. et cet.

507. do I] I doe Q₂Q₃.

true] time Q₂, Warb.

508. Heauen. 'Tis] heauen,—tis Qq.
heauen : 'Tis Pope et seq.

'Tis gone] Separate line, Pope et seq. (except Coll. Wh. i, Ktly).

508, 509. 'Tis...hell] One line, Ktly.

509. the hollow hell] thy hollow cell Qq,
Johns. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing.
Glo. Ktly, Cam. Wh. ii. th' unhallow'd cell Warb.

503. it was hers] MALONE: For the emendation that in place of 'it,' I am answerable. The mistake probably arose from yt only being written in the manuscript. STEEVENS: I prefer Mr Malone's correction to that of F₂, though the latter gives sense where it was certainly wanting. KNIGHT prefers F₂ [as does also the present ED.].

505. forty thousand] ELZE (Note on Ham. V, i, 257) calls attention to Shakespeare's fondness for this number as an expression of indefiniteness. BOOTH: Whether this refers to Cassio or Desdemona I'm uncertain. He would prepare swift means of death for her and tear her all to pieces, yet 'slave' seems very inappropriate to apply to a woman. I think he has Cassio in mind, and his reference to him in the Fifth Act, 'Had all his hairs been lives,' seems to give an additional warrant. [Assuredly, it was Cassio. I doubt if Othello even heard what Iago had just said.—ED.]

507. true] WARBURTON upholds Q₂ as an 'allusion to what Othello had said before, line 221: "Away at once with love or jealousy." This time has now come.'

508. fond love] BOOTH: Although the savage blood is up, let a wave of humanity sweep over his heart at these words. Breathe out 'Tis gone' with a sigh of agony which seems to exhale love to heaven.

509. the hollow hell] WARBURTON: 'Hollow' as applied to 'hell' is a poor unmeaning epithet. It is corrupt, and should be read unhallow'd cell, i. e. the infernal regions. STEEVENS: The same phrase occurs in Jasper Heywood's translation of Seneca's Thyestes, 1560: 'Where most prodigious vgly thinges the hollowe hell doth hyde.' HOLT WHITE: Again in Paradise Lost, i, 314: 'He call'd so loud, that all the hollow deep Of hell resounded.' MALONE: Also, line 542 of the same book: 'the universal host up sent A shout that tore hell's concave.' KNIGHT: It seems perfectly incredible that Johnson, Steevens, and Malone should have rejected the magnificent reading 'hollow hell'; if it had failed to impress them by its power, the imitations of it by Milton should have rendered it sacred. But let us only mark the opposition

Yeeld vp (O Loue)thy Crowne, and hearted Throne 510
To tyrannous Hate. Swell bofome with thy fraught,
For 'tis of Aspicks tongues.

Iago. Yet be content.

Oth. Oh blood, blood, blood.

Iago. Patience I fay : your minde may change. 515

Oth. Neuer Iago. Like to the Ponticke Sea,

- | | |
|--|--|
| 510. hearted] harted Q ₁ . parted Warb. | blood Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. |
| 511. bofome] boosome Q ₃ . | Sing. Ktly. |
| 512. Aspicks] Aspects Q ₁ . | 514. blood.] blood —Rowe+. |
| [he kneeles. Q ₂ Q ₃ . | 515. minde may] Fl, Rowe, Pope, Han. |
| 513. Yet] Pray Qq, Cap. Steev. Mal. | Knt. mind perhaps may Qq et cct. |
| Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly. | 516-523. Iago...Heauen] Om. Q ₂ . |
| [he kneeles. Q ₁ . | 516. Two lines, Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 514. blood, blood, blood.] blood, Iago, | Like to] Like Pope, Han. Warb. | of the two lines: 'All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven. Arise, black vengeance, from the hollow hell.'

510. hearted] JOHNSON: The heart on which thou wast enthroned. MALONE: So, Twelfth Night, II, iv, 21: 'It gives an echo to the very seat Where Love is throned.'

511. Swell] WARBURTON: Because the fraught is of poison.

513. BOOTH: Iago affects remorse for having 'put this to him,' &c.

514. FECHTER: He rushes about as if seeking his prey.

515. FECHTER: Exciting him. BOOTH: Eagerly, as if to clinch the nail he has driven home.

516. Ponticke Sea] POPE: This simile is omitted in the first edition; I think it should be so, as an unnatural excursion in this place. STEEVENS: Every reader will, I durst say, abide by Mr Pope's censure on this passage. When Shakespeare grew acquainted with such particulars of knowledge, he made a display of them as soon as opportunity offered. He found this in Holland's Pliny, Bk. ii, chap. 97, 1601: 'And the sea Pontus euermore floweth and runneth out into Propontis, but the sea neuer retireth backe againe within Pontus.' Edwards, in his MS. notes, conceives this simile to allude to Sir Philip Sidney's device, which was the Caspian Sea, with this motto, Sine reflexu. KNIGHT: It is delightful to see how Shakespeare's knowledge impresses itself, even in technicalities, upon practical men whose minds are not clouded by the low pedantry of such critics as Steevens. A gentleman, who writes to us as 'a sailor,' begs us to notice this passage as exhibiting a proof of the poet's knowledge 'of the continual flow of the tide through the Gut of Gibraltar.' HUNTER (ii, 279): Few persons will doubt that Steevens's quotation from Holland's Pliny was substantial and good, a valuable contribution to the illustration of the play; Knight's correspondent's in the highest degree vain and ridiculous. SWINBURNE (p. 183): In their version of Othello, remarkably enough, the 'player-editors,' contrary to their wont, have added to the treasure-house of their text one of the most precious jewels that ever the prodigal afterthought of a great poet bestowed upon the rapture of his readers. Some of these, by way of thanksgiving, have complained with a touch of petulance that it was out of place and superfluous in the setting; nay, that it was incongruous with all the circumstances,—out of tone and out of harmony and out of keeping with character and tune

Whofe Icie Current, and compulsiue courfe, 517
 Neu'r keepes retyring ebbe, but keepes due on
 To the Proponticke, and the Hellepont:
 Euen so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace 520
 Shall neu'r looke backe, neu'r ebbe to humble Loue,
 Till that a capeable, and wide Reuenge
 Swallow them vp. Now by yond Marble Heauen, 523

518. Neu'r] Né'r Q₂Q₃. Neu'r F₄.

Né're F₃F₄. Né'er Rowe et seq.

keepes] Ff, Knt. knows Coll. Wh.

i. feels Q₂Q₃ et cet.

521. neu'r] né're Q₂Q₃F₃F₄.

522. capeable] capable Ff.

523. by yond] be yond Q₃. by yond
 Cap.

and time. In other lips, indeed, than Othello's, at the crowning minute of culminant agony, the rush of imaginative reminiscence which brings back upon his eyes and ears the lightning foam and tideless thunder of the Pontic sea might seem a thing less natural than sublime. But Othello has the passion of a poet closed in, as it were, and shut up behind the passion of a hero. For all his practical readiness of martial eye and ruling hand in action, he is also in his season 'of imagination all compact.' Therefore it is that in the face and teeth of all devils akin to Iago that hell could send forth to hiss at her election, we feel and recognize the spotless exaltation, the sublime and sunbright purity, of Desdemona's inevitable and invulnerable love. When once we likewise have seen Othello's visage in his mind, we see, too, how much more of greatness is in this mind than in another hero's. For such an one, even a boy may well think how thankfully and joyfully he would lay down his life. Other friends we have of Shakespeare's giving whom we love deeply and well, if hardly with such love as could weep for them all the tears of the body and all the blood of the heart; but there is none we love like Othello.

517. Icie] SINGER (ed. ii): This is a palpable misprint for jesty.

518. keepes . . . keepes] MALONE: Many similar repetitions in the same line, due to the compositor's mistakes, may be found in F₄. See Ham. II, ii, 52; Tb. III, iii, 14. KNIGHT: The repetition would not be objectionable if in the first instance it gave us a clear meaning,—the same meaning as in the second instance,—but it is not so. And yet feels does not seem to be the right word. COLLIER (ed. ii): Southern altered it to knows in his F₄, and it is knows in the (MS). WHITE (ed. i) 'cannot but regard feels as a mere sophistication,' but in his ed. ii he silently adopts it. WALKER (Crit. i, 314): Feels is wrong; brooks would be better, though not, I think, the true word. KEIGHTLEY (Exp. 303): I doubt much if the original word was not makes, which I have given, corresponding with 'keeps' in not personifying.

523. marble] In that delightful book, The Plain Speaker (p. 483, Bohn's ed.), HAZLITT discerns, with an insight keen and poetic, a meaning here which at first sight is so taking that I cannot but regret that a closer scrutiny will hardly justify it, or at most accept it only as one of those interpretations which it is the prerogative of a fine critic to find where he will. Hazlitt says: 'when Othello swears "By yon marble heaven," the epithet is suggested by the hardness of his heart from the sense of injury; the texture of the outward object is borrowed from that of the thoughts; and that noble simile, "Like the Propontic," &c., seems only an echo of the sounding tide of passion, and to roll from the same source, the heart.' If this passage in Othello were the only

In the due reuerence of a Sacred vow,
I heere engage my words.

525

Iago. Do not rise yet :

Witnesse you euer-burning Lights aboue,
You Elements, that clip vs round about,
Witnesse that heere Iago doth giue vp
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,

530

524. of] to Q₃.

[He kneels. Rowe et seq.

Witnesse your F₄, Rowe. Witness, ye Johns

528. You] Ye Johns.

525. engage] ingage Q_q.

[Iago kneels. Q₃.

words.] words—Ff, Rowe +, Jen.

530. execution] excellency Q₃.

526. [Iago kneels. Q₃, Rowe et seq.

hands] hand Q_q, Cap.

527. Witnesse you] Witnesse the Q₃Q₄.

instance in Shakespeare where 'marble' is applied to the 'heavens,' this fine interpretation might stand without question. But it is used elsewhere in passages where it cannot have a subjective meaning, and it is these passages and others, which, I think, should determine its meaning here. In Timon's wild address to the earth (IV, iii, 191) he bids it 'Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face Hath to the marbled mansion all above Never presented;' again, twice in Cymb. (V, iv) where Sicilius first invokes Jupiter to 'Peep through thy marble mansion,' and then when Jupiter retires, he exclaims, 'The marble pavement closes.' In these three instances 'marbled' is, it seems to me, purely objective, and is not a quality projected by the emotions of the speaker; it is suggestive of all the imposing pomp of masonry with cloud-capt towers and glistening domes. Furthermore, Marston uses the same phrase, as Steevens and Malone pointed out, in Solyman and Perseda, 1599: 'Now by the marble face of the welkin,' &c., and in Antonio and Mellida, 1602: 'And pleas'd the marble heavens,' &c. Lastly, Milton (Par. Lost, iii, 564) describes how Satan 'into the world's first region throws His flight precipitant, and winds with ease Through the pure marble air his oblique way.' We are safe in ascribing a classic origin to many a Miltonic phrase, and it was Upton (p. 25) who, in vindicating Paradise Lost from the strictures of Bishop Burnet, shows that 'marble' is used by Milton 'in its thoroughly classic sense from μαρμαίρω, to sparkle, to glow, or, as in the "æquor marmoreum" of Vergil, the sea shining or resplendent like marble.' This, then, is the meaning in which, I think, it was always used by Shakespeare, of course without a thought, or perhaps even knowledge, of its classic origin. 'Marble' refers, I think, to color, aglow with lacing streaks, and not to texture or to substance.—ED. SCHMIDT (Lex. s. v.) queries whether 'marble' is applied to the heavens on account of their eternity.

523. BOOTH: Kneels. Both hands above the head, with upturned palms and fingers towards the back. I used this gesture impulsively, in England first, and it was spoken of as suggestive of the Orient. Iago watches Othello keenly—sidewise—during his next speech; while Othello seems absorbed and with upturned eyes.

528. clip] DYCE: That is, embrace. PURNELL: Originally, 'to hold tight'; and then, as the shears press down on the cloth in the act of cutting, the later meaning superseded the earlier.

530. execution] MALONE: That is, employment, exercise. STEEVENS: So in The & Cress. V, vii, 6, 'In fellest manner execute your arms.'

To wrong'd Othello's Service. Let him command, 531
 And to obey shall be in me remorse,
 What bloody business euer.

Oth. I greet thy loue,
 Not with vaine thanks, but with acceptance bounteous, 535
 And will vpon the instant put thee too't.
 Within these three dayes let me heare thee fay, 537

532. And to obey] And to obey , Qq.	Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly. work
Warb. Johns. Not to obey Pope. Nor to	soe'er Coll. Huds.
obey Theob. Han. And not to obey Jen.	533. euer .] ever —Knt.
be in me remorse] be remorse Q.	[Rising. Cap.
be in me. Remord Warb. be in me no re-	536. thee] the Q.
remorse Upton, Cap.	too't] to't QqF ₃ F ₄ .
533. business euer] workes so euer Qq.

532. And to obey] THEOBALD changed POPE'S Not to Nor, 'that is, let your commands be ever so bloody, remorse and compassion shall not restrain me from obeying them.' UPTON (p. 200): A negative particle has slipped out here, we must read 'And to obey shall be in me no remorse.' JOHNSON: Iago devotes himself to wronged Othello, and says, 'Let him command whatever bloody business, and in me it shall be an act, not of cruelty, but of tenderness, to obey him; not of malice to others, but of tenderness to him.' STEEVENS: 'Remorse' is used for pity in Surrey's translation of the Fourth Æneid: 'Sister, I crave thou have remorse of me.' Again, in King Edward III. 1599: 'But for yourselves, look you for no remorse,' and in many more instances, but I shall content myself to observe that the sentiment of Iago bears no small resemblance to that of Arrivagus in Cymb. IV, ii, 168: 'I'd let a parish of such Cloten's blood, And praise myself for charity.' REED quotes MASON as saying that Shakespeare seldom, if ever, uses the word in any other sense. [It is the only sense given by DYCE (Gloss.)]. TOLLET: That is, let him command any bloody business, and to obey him shall be in me an act of pity and compassion for wrong'd Othello. FARMER: I read, 'let him command And to obey shall be in me remorse What bloody business ever —' 'And' for if is sufficiently common; and Othello's impatience breaks off the sentence, I think, with additional beauty. KNIGHT: It is quite clear that Othello interrupts the conclusion of Iago's speech. At the moment when he has said that 'obedience to Othello shall stand in the place of remorse (mercy)—What bloody business ever' (Othello may command), Othello, jumping at his meaning, at once sets him upon the murder of Cassio. SINGER (ed. ii): 'To remord—to prey upon continually and repeatedly; and hence Iago's prefigured remorse; a feeling that will continually prey upon his mind—Mordax—Edax-cara.' [This Latin I do not understand.—ED.] I owe this admirable solution of a difficult passage to the kindness of Dr Richardson. HUDSON: 'Remorse' for conscience, simply. Iago has said before, 'I hold it very stuff o' the conscience to do no contrived murder.' So the meaning here is, 'Let him command whatever bloody work he may, to perform it shall be with me a matter of conscience.' This explanation is Joseph Crosby's. WHITE (ed. ii): 'Remorse,' a doubtful reading, or else a very forced use of the word in the sense of pity, for Othello. BULLOCH (p. 250): I would read, '— shall be in mere remorse What bloody business severs.' That is the ordinary pity experienced at the separation of soul and body in others. [See III. iii, 426.]

That Cassio's not aliue. 538
Iago. My Friend is dead:
 'Tis done at your Request. 540
 But let her liue.
Oth. Damne her lewde Minx:
 O damne her, damne her.
 Come go with me a-part, I will withdraw
 To furnish me with some swift meanes of death 545
 For the faire Diuell.
 Now art thou my Lieutenant.
Iago. I am your owne for euer. Exeunt. 548

539, 540. One line, Cap. Steev. et seq.	542, 543. Damne] Dam Qq.
540, 541. One line, Qq, Rowe+, Jen.	542. Minx] minks Qq.
540. at your] as you Qq, Cap. Jen.	543. O...her.] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Knt,
541, 543. As one line, Steev.'93 et seq.	Ktly. O dam her. Qq et cet.
542, 543. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.	546, 547. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.
	546. Diuell] denill Q ₂ Q ₃ . Deuil F ₃ F ₄ .

538. BOOTH: Iago is shocked, of course, and slightly shudders as he rises to his feet. Line 541 he speaks beseechingly.

539. THEOBALD: In like manner Jonson in his Cataline [III, iii] expresses the impetuosity of Cethegus for the death of Cicero, 'He shall die. Shall was too slowly said; he's dying, that Is yet too slow; he's dead.' But this is a copy from Seneca's Hercules Furens [v. 644]: 'Si novi Herculem Lycus Creonti debitas poenas dabit. Lentum est, dabit; dat; hoc quoque lentum est; dedit.'

542. Minx] PURNELL: Possibly short for minikin.

543. BOOTH: Take a liberty here and 'damn her' four times; the first savagely, the second time less so, melt with the third, and choke with tears at the fourth; the merest pause—then recover and 'Come, go with me,' &c. Iago shows deep grief till 'Now art thou my lieutenant,' then, quickly kneeling, he kisses Othello's hand, and his face reveals his triumph. FECHTER's Othello returns as he is going out, and, striking Iago on the shoulder, with a savage smile of triumph says, 'Now art thou my lieutenant.'

545. death] RYMER (p. 92): Othello is made a Venetian General. We see nothing done by him, nor related concerning him, that comports with the condition of a General, or, indeed, of a Man, unless the killing himself, to avoid a death the Law was about to inflict on him. When his jealousy had wrought him up to a resolution of 's taking revenge for the suppos'd injury, He sets Iago to the fighting part, to kill Cassio; And he chuses himself to murder the silly Woman his Wife, that was like to make no resistance.

548. BOOTH: To portray Iago properly you must seem to be what all the characters think, and say, you are, not what the spectators know you to be; try to win even them by your sincerity. Don't act the villain, don't look it or speak it (by scowling and growling, I mean), but think it all the time. Be genial, sometimes jovial, always gentlemanly. Quick in motion as in thought; lithe and sinuous as a snake. A certain bluntness (which my temperament does not afford) should be added to preserve the military flavour of the character; in this particular I fail utterly, my Iago lacks the soldierly quality. My consolation is that we know him more as a courtier than as a soldier.

Scæna Quarta.

[327 a.]

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Des. Do you know Sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lyes?

Clow. I dare not say he lies any where. 5

Des. Why man?

Clow. He's a Soldier, and for me to say a Souldier lyes, 'tis stabbing.

Des. Go too : where lodges he?

Clow. To tell you where he lodges, is to tel you where I lye. 10

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Clow. I know not where he lodges, and for mee to de- uife a lodging, and say he lies heere, or he lies there, were to lye in mine owne throat. 15

Des. Can you enquire him out? and be edified by re- port?

Clow. I will Catechize the world for him, that is, make Questions, and by them answer. 19

1. Scæna Quarta.] Om. Qq, Rowe.
Scene IX. Pope+, Jen.

Another Apartment in the Palace.
Theob. Before the Castle. Dyce.

2. Enter...] Enter Desdemona, Emi- la and the Clowne. Qq (Desdemona Q₂Q₃).

3. Lieutenant] the Lieutenant Qq, Jen.
Coll. Wh. i.

7. Clow.] Om. Q₂.
He's] Ff, Rowe+, Dyce, Glo. Cam.

Huds. Rife, Wh. ii. He is Qq et cet. me] Ff, Rowe+, Steev. Mal. Var.

Knt, Sing. Ktly. one Qq et cet.
8. 'tis] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. is Qq et cet.

9. too:] to, Q₂Q₃. to Q₃. to: Ff. to't Knt.

10, 11, 12. Om. Q₂.

14. lies...there] lies there Qq.

15. mine own] my Q₂. my own Cap.
Mal. Steev.'93, Var. Sing. Ktly.

16. enquire] inquire Q₂.

and be] and Q₂.

by] to Coll. (MS).

18. Catechize] cathechize Qq.

19. and...answer] Separate line, Qq.
by them] make them Q₂, Jen. Steev.

'85. bid them Theob.+ , Cap.

3-24. These lines are, I believe, invariably omitted on the stage. FECHTER continues the scene, that is, it is still III, i. BOOTH at line 25 begins IV, i.

2. Clown] DOUCE (ii, 272): He appears but twice in the play, and was certainly intended to be an allowed, or domestic, fool in the service of Othello and Desdemona.

4. lyes] Shakespeare was not above sharing the weakness of his contemporaries in making puns on this word. See also Ham. V, i, 116.

15. throat] JOHN HUNTER: This meant, to utter a wilful lie. 'To lie in the teeth' was less intentional, and gave less offence.

19. by them] WARBURTON: The Clown was to go seek for one; he says he will ask for him, and by his own questions make answer. Without doubt we should read—

Def. Seeke him, bidde him come hither : tell him, I haue moou'd my Lord on his behalfe, and hope all will be well. 20

Clo. To do this is within the compasse of mans Wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it. Exit Clo.

Def. Where should I loofe the Handkerchiefe, Æ- milia? 25

Emil. I know not Madam.

Def. Beleeue me, I had rather haue lost my purse
Full of Cruzadoes. And but my Noble Moore
Is true of minde, and made of no such basenessse, 30

- | | |
|--|---|
| 21. moon'd] moued Qq.
on] in Qq, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var.
Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. | 24. Exit Clo.] Exit Qq.
25. loofe] lofe Q'81 et seq.
the] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Knt,
Wh. i. that Qq et cct. |
| 23. of mans Wit] of a man Q ₁ . | 25, 62, 68, 105, &c. Handkerchiefe] |
| 24. I will] I'le or Ile Qq.
doing it] doing of it Qq, Rowe+,
Jen. Steev.'85, Mal. doing Rife. | handkercher Q ₁ . Handkerchiffe F.
28. haue lost] loofe Qq. lofe Q'81. | and bid them answer; i. e., the world; those whom he questions. HENLEY: His design was to propose such questions as might elicit the information sought for from him, and, therefore, by his questions he might be enabled to answer. MALONE: That is, and by them, when answered, form my own answer to you. ROLFE states it clearly: By them be enabled to answer, or get the information to use in my answer.

24. the doing it] For a full exposition of verbals, followed by an object, see ABBOTT, § 93, or Macb. I, iv, 8.

25. should I loose] ABBOTT, § 325: 'Should,' in a direct question about the past, seems to increase the emphasis of the interrogation, since a doubt about the past (time having been given for investigation) implies more perplexity than a doubt about the future.

25. the] WHITE (ed. i): That of the Qq has a loss of significance. To Desdemona this handkerchief was at any time the handkerchief, and now more so than ever.

27. HUDSON: Objection has been made to the conduct of Emilia in this scene as inconsistent with the spirit she afterwards shows. I can discover no such inconsistency. Want of principle and strength of attachment are often thus seen united. Emilia loves her mistress deeply, but she has no moral repugnance to theft and falsehood, apprehends no fatal consequences from the Moor's passion, and has no soul to conceive the agony her mistress must suffer by the charge of infidelity; and it is but natural that when the result comes she should be the more spirited for the very remembrance of her own guilty part in the process. BOOTH: Emilia speaks with slight embarrassment.

28. rather] Cited by WALKER (Vers. 108) as an instance of its contraction into a monosyllable. See also, to the same purpose, ABBOTT, § 466.

29. Cruzadoes] GREY: A Portuguese coin, in value three shillings. JOHNSON: So called from the cross stamped on it. FECHTER: Desdemona turns over her work and materials to find the handkerchief.

As icalious Creatures are, it were enough 31

To put him to ill-thinking.

Æmil. Is he not icalious?

Def. Who, he? I thinke the Sun where he was borne,
Drew all such humors from him. 35

Æmil. Looke where he comes.

Enter Othello.

Def. I will not leaue him now, till Cassio be Call'd to him. How is't with you, my Lord?

Oth. Well my good Lady. Oh hardnes to dissemble! 40
How do you, Desdemona?

Def. Well, my good Lord.

Oth. Giue me your hand.

This hand is moist, my Lady.

Def. It hath felt no age, nor knowne no forrow. 45

Oth. This argues fruitfulnessse, and liberall heart:
Hot, hot, and moyft. This hand of yours requires 47

31, 33. icalious] iealous Q₁Q₂. jealous
F₁. jealous Q₁F₃F₄.

37. Enter...] After him line 35, Qq.
After sorrow line 45, F₃. After Lord?
line 39, F₄, Rowe +, Steev. Mal. Var. Knt,
Sing. Ktly. After him line 39, Jen. Dyce,
Sta. Glo. Cam. Del. Rlfe, Huds. Wh. ii.

38, 39. Lines end, now...Lord? Qq,
Cap. Ending, Cassio...Lord? Steev.'93,
Var. et seq. Prose, Mal.

38. till] Let Q₁.

39. is't] is it Qq, Pope, Theob. Han.
Warb. Jen. Steev.'85.

Scene X. Pope +, Jen.

40. Oh...dissemble] As Aside, Han.
Johns. et seq.

42. Def.] Let F₁.

good] Om. Pope +.

43, 44. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

45. It hath] Ff, Rowe ii. It yet hath
Rowe i +, Jen. Steev.'85, Dyce, Glo. Rlfe, Huds. Wh. ii. It yet has Qq et cet.

47. Hot, hot] Not hot Q₁.

moyft.] Ff, Johns. Jen. Ktly. moist
Qq. moist—Rowe +. moist: Cap. et cet.

35. RYMER (p. 126): By this manner of speech one wou'd gather the couple had been yolk'd together a competent while, what might she say more, had they been man and wife seven years?

39. to him] FECHTER: Exit Emilia R. at the moment when Othello appears at the terrace. He observes them an instant; then comes down, straight to where Desdemona has been deranging her work and materials, looking at them with mistrust; when he speaks he represses his anger. BOOTH: Othello addresses Desdemona as he passes her, then he suddenly changes his tone and manner from indifference to sadness.

42. FECHTER: Coaxing by placing her hands, clasped, on the shoulders of Othello, who releases himself from her caress and takes her hand.

45. BOOTH: At the word 'sorrow' he looks anxiously into her eyes, and with a sigh proceeds.

46. fruitfulnessse] DELIUS: That is, liberal, bountiful, as 'fruitful' is used in II, ii, 372.

47. moyst] BUCKNILL (Med Knowledge of Sh. p. 273): This appears to express

A sequefter from Liberty : Fasting, and Prayer, 48
 Much Castigation, Exercife deuout,
 For heere's a yong, and sweating Diuell heere 50
 That commonly rebels : 'Tis a good hand,
 A franke one. 52

48. Prayer] praying Qq, Jen. Coll. i,
 Wh. i.

49. deuout] devoted Q₃.

50. heere's] there's Daniel.

50. yong] yrong Warb.

sweating] sweatie Q₃.

52. franke one] very frank one Han.
frank one too Cap. Ktly.

an old opinion that 'a moist palm indicates a hot liver,' one, however, which Primrose considered a vulgar error, and to the refutation of which he devoted a chapter. BOOTH : Examining its lines as in palmistry.

49. Exercise] MALONE: This was the term for religious duties. 'Henry VII,' says Bacon, 'had the fortune of a true Christian as well as of a great king, in living exercised, and dying repentant.'

49, etc. GOULD: As he uttered these words, J. B. Booth held up the innocent hand between his two in momentary, but fervent, attitude of prayer. Then, still holding her hand in one of his and pointing with the other, and looking keenly, but without unkindness, into her palm, he adds, with heightening and ringing accent: 'For here's,' &c. The three words, 'That commonly rebels,' in changed tone, and with the voice sustained at the close, and given in such a manner that the attentive listener supplemented the meaning—'and I fear must do so in your case.' So, at the first performance. On the second, a fine variation—'For here's a young and sweating—devil here,' with the same searching intensity; then a kindly doubt seems to rise in his mind, and he gives her the benefit of it in saying—'That commonly (slight pause) rebels.'

51, etc. WALKER (iii, 288): Arrange, perhaps,—'Tis a good hand, a frank one. | Desd. You may indeed say so; for 'twas that hand | That gave away my heart.' [I record this note, like many another of Walker, simply because I lack the moral courage to omit it. When Walker spends his time and ours in cutting up verses, and fragments of verses spoken by different characters, into lines, what else is it but scanning by the eye and for the eye? If the words do not flow musically, cutting them into lines will not make them musical. If they do flow musically, the lines will take care of themselves. Is it to be imagined that Shakespeare ever followed any guide but his ear? What does the ear know of lines? recurrent or uncurrent rhythm is all that ever it can note.—ED.]

51, 52. hand, . . . one.] As questions in FECHTER's copy.

52. KIGHTLEY (Exp. 304): I have given in my edition 'A frank one too,' but no addition was necessary. I made an error for the sake of metre, and, I think, weakened the passage. [And was anticipated by Capell, after all.—ED.]

52. BOADEN (Life of Kemble, i, 259): During this speech of Othello, Mrs Siddons's face had a beauty of expression that offered one of the most striking and varying pictures ever contemplated. The surprise, arising to astonishment, a sort of doubt if she heard aright, and that being admitted, what it could mean; a hope that it would end in nothing so unusual from him as an offensive meaning; and the slight relief upon Othello's adding—'Tis a good hand, a frank one'; all this commentary was quite as legible as the text.

Def. You may (indeed) say so : 53
 For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.
Oth. A liberal hand. The hearts of old, gave hands : 55
 But our new Heraldry is hands, not hearts.

55. hand] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Ktly. hand, Qq. hand: Cap. et cet.

55. hearts ... hands] hands ... hearts
 Han. Warb. Cap.

53. You] ABBOTT, §483: Emphasized pronouns sometimes dispense with the unaccented syllable. Here you is emphatic. 'A fránk | one. Yô | u máy | indéed | say só.

55, 56. In these lines Warburton discerned a satirical allusion to the creation of baronets by James the First, and founded on it the date of the composition of the play. For his arguments in this regard and Malone's reply to them, see Appendix, Date of the Composition. Warburton also asserted that 'it is evident that line 55 should be read: "The hands of old gave hearts"; otherwise it would be no reply to "For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart." Not so, says her husband, "The hands of old indeed gave hearts; but the custom now is to give hands without hearts."' JOHNSON: Of emendation there is no need. She says that her hand gave away her heart. He goes on with his suspicion, and the hand which he had before called frank, he now terms liberal; then proceeds to remark that the hand was formerly given by the heart; but now it neither gives it, nor is given by it. STEEVENS: The phrase 'our new heraldry' is only figurative, without the least reference to James's creation of baronets. The absurdity of making Othello so familiar with British heraldry, the utter want of consistency as well as policy in any sneer of Shakespeare at the badge of honours instituted by a Prince whom, on all other occasions, he was solicitous to flatter, and at whose court this very piece was acted in 1613, most strongly incline me to question the propriety of Warburton's historical explanation. MALONE: The hearts of old, says Othello, dictated the union of hands, which formerly were joined with the hearts of the parties in them; but in our modern marriages, hands alone are united, without hearts. Such is the plain meaning of the words. I do not, however, undertake to maintain that the poet, when he used the word 'heraldry,' had not the new order of baronets in his thoughts, without intending any satirical allusion. KNIGHT: We do not think that Shakespeare would have gone out of his way to introduce a covert sarcasm at a passing event, offensive as it must have been if understood, and perfectly useless if not understood. The obvious meaning of the words, without any allusion, is plain enough; and 'our new heraldry,' if it be any more than a figurative expression, may be easily referred to the practice of quartering or joining the arms of husband and wife. DYCE (Remarks, p. 241): The reader will probably recollect with dismay the immense mass of annotation which this passage has called forth in consequence of Warburton's ridiculous idea that the poet alluded here to the new order of baronets created by King James. I have only to observe: first,—that the word 'heraldry' (which the commentators are surprised at finding here) was evidently suggested to Shakespeare by the words in the preceding line, 'gave hands' (to 'give arms' being a heraldic term); secondly, that Warner, in his Albion's England, p. 282, ed. 1596, has, 'My hand shall neuer giue my heart, my heart shall giue my hand.' WHITE (ed. i and ed. ii) adopts Warburton's idea. In his ed. ii he says: 'This seems to be the new heraldry Othello speaks of; but in that case, the passage was probably added after the first production of the play.'

Des. I cannot speake of this : 57
 Come, now your promise.
Oth. What promise, Chucke?
Des. I haue sent to bid Cassio come speake with you. 60
Oth. I haue a falt and forry Rhewme offends me :
 Lend me thy Handkerchiefe.
Des. Heere my Lord. [327 b]
Oth. That which I gaue you.
Des. I haue it not about me. 65
Oth. Not?
Des. No indeed, my Lord.
Oth. That's a fault : That Handkerchiefe
 Did an Ægyptian to my Mother giue : 69

57, 58. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

58. Come, now] Ff, Rowe +, Jen. Come, come, Q₁. Come now Q₂Q₃, Han. Mal.

Steev.'93, Var. Come now, Cap. et cet.

60. I haue] I've Pope, Theob. Warb.

Johns. Dyce iii, Huds.

61. sorry] sullen Qq, Steev. Mal. Var.

Coll. Sing. Ktly.

Rhewme] rhume Qq. rheum Rowe.

66. Not ?] Not. Qq.

66-68. Not ?...fault :] As one line, Steev.'93, Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Dyce, Wh. Sta. Glo. Rlfe.

67. No indeed,] No faith Q₁.

68. That's] Ff, Rowe +, Jen. Sing. Cam. That's Qq. That is Cap. et cet.

That Handkerchiefe] Separate line, Steev.'93, Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Dyce, Wh. Sta. Glo. Del. Rlfe.

69. Ægyptian] Ægyptian F₂.

61. sorry] JOHNSON'S interpretation of sullen of the Qq is 'a rheum obstinately troublesome.' COLLIER (ed. ii) : Perhaps the word is sudden, to which it is altered in the (MS.). FECHTER : Stretching out his hand, without looking at her.

64. BOOTH : Quickly—hoping to see the one he gave her.

68. Handkerchiefe] THEOBALD : Cinthio Giraldi only says it was the Moor's gift upon his wedding to Desdemona ; that it was most curiously wrought after the Moorish fashion, and very dear both to him and his wife, 'il qual pannicello era lavorato alla moresca sottilissimamente, & era carissimo alla Donna & parimente al Moro.' BOOTH : All this description of the Handkerchief should be told with an air of intense and earnest mystery. Desdemona should listen in wonder and speak like a frightened child. [This description, with its witchcraft, is among those passages which KNIGHT (Biography, p. 438) cites to prove that Shakespeare probably visited Scotland in the autumn of 1601. I cannot see that the inference can be drawn from anything stronger than that in the information against Isobell Straquhan for witchcraft it is averred that she made a charm out of a bent penny, a clout, and a piece of red wax, wherewith the face being stroked, love and marriage would follow.—ED.]

68, etc. RYMER (p. 135) : So much ado, so much stress, so much passion and repetition about an Handkerchief! Why was not this call'd the Tragedy of the Handkerchief? . . . The Wardrobe of obsolete Romances, one might think, were a fitter place for this Handkerchief than that it, at this time of day, be worn on the stage, to raise everywhere all this clutter and turmoil.

69. Ægyptian] HUNTER (ii, 284) : By this, Shakespeare may mean either an

She was a Charmer, and could almost read 70
 The thoughts of people. She told her, while she kept it,
 'T would make her Amiable, and subdue my Father
 Intirely to her loue : But if she lost it,
 Or made a Guift of it, my Fathers eye
 Should hold her loathed, and his Spirits should hunt 75
 After new Fancies. She dying, gaue it me,
 And bid me (when my Fate would haue me Wiu'd)
 To giue it her. I did so ; and take heede on't,
 Make it a Darling, like your precious eye :
 To loose't, or giue't away, were such perdition, 80
 As nothing else could match.
Def. Is't possible ?
Oth. 'Tis true : There's Magicke in the web of it :
 A Sybill that had numbred in the world
 The Sun to course, two hundred compasses, 85

72. and subdue] subdue Ff, Rowe+.

73. Repeated at the top of the next page in Q₄.

Intirely] Q₄Q₅Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Steev.'85. Intierly Q₃. Entirely Cap.

74. Guift] gift QqF₃F₄.

75. loathed] lothely Q₂. loathly Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Sta. Ktly.

his] her Jen. (misprint?).

Spirits] spirit Q'81, Wh. i.

should] Om. Pope+.

77. Wiu'd] Ff, Rowe+, Wh. Del. wiue Q₃, Cap. et cet.

78. on't] of't Mal. Steev.'93, Var.

80. loose't] F₃, Rowe ii, Pope. loofe Q₁Q₂. lofe Q₃, Jen. Steev.'93, Var. Coll. Wh. i, Sing. loos't F₃F₄, Rowe i. lose't Theob. et cet.

perdition] prediction Q₃.

82. Is't] Is it Steev. Mal. Var.

84. had] hath Han. ii.

numbred] numbered Q₃.

85. The...course] The Sun to make Q₃, Mal. Steev.'93, Var. Of the sun's course Han.

Ægyptian properly so called, or a Gypsy or Bohemian, as the same people are called in many parts of the continent. Presents of this kind from Gypsies proper occur in Italian Poetry; thus Ariosto: 'About her neck a jewel rich she ware, A cross all set with stones in gold well tried; This relick late a Boem pilgrim bare, And gave her father other things beside,' &c. But the mention of 'mummy,' and other points in the passage, seem to guide us to the true Egyptians, neighbours of the Moors. ELZE (Sk. Jahrbuch, xi, 299) calls attention to Maudlin's description of her 'browder'd belt,' which 'A Gypsan lady, and a right beldame Wrought by moonlight,' in Jonson's Sad Shepherd, II, i. Elze finds a noteworthy similarity therein with this passage in Othello.

77. Wiu'd] It is not necessary to adopt the Qq here. 'Wiu'd' is in the same construction as 'loathed,' line 75.—ED.

85. to course] JOHNSON: The expression is not very infrequent; we say, I counted the clock to strike four; so she number'd the sun to course, to run, two hundred compasses, two hundred annual circuits.

In her Prophetticke furie fow'd the Worke : 86
 The Wormes were hallowed, that did breede the Silke,
 And it was dyde in Mummey, which the Skilfull
 Conferu'd of Maidens hearts.

Def. Indeed ? Is't true ? 90

Oth. Most veritable, therefore looke too't well.

Def. Then would to Heauen, that I had neuer seene't? 92

86. fow'd] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. fowed
 Qq. sew'd Johns.

87. hallow'd] hollowed Q₃. hallow'd
 Cap. et seq.

88. dyde] died Qq. dyede F₃. di'd F₃F₄.
Mummey] Mommy Q₃. which] with Q₂Q₃, Jen.

89. Conferu'd] Conferues Q₂, Jen. Con- cerue Q₂. Conferue Q₃.

90. Indeed ?] Ifaith Q₂. Indeed, Q₂Q₃.

90. Is't] is it Steev.'85, Mal.

91. too't] to't QqF₃F₄. to it Steev.'85,
 Mal.

92. to Heauen] to God Qq, Jen. Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Rife, Huds. Wh. ii. the Heaven Ff.

seene't ?] seene it. Qq, Jen. Steev.
 Mal. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. seene't. Ff. seem't ! Rowe et cet.

86. Prophetticke furie] HUNTER (ii, 285): There is something more classical in this expression than is, perhaps, anywhere else to be found in these plays; but the phrase may have presented itself to Shakespeare in the writings of Sylvester, where it often occurs.

88. Mummey] STEEVENS: The balsamic liquor running from mummies was formerly celebrated for its anti-epileptic virtues. This fanciful medicine still holds a place in the principal shops where drugs are sold. DYCE: A preparation for magical purposes, made from dead bodies. Steevens's note seems irrelevant. [I doubt if the word conveyed, of necessity, any reference to Egyptian mummies; that reference was perhaps restricted to mumia. Falstaff refers to himself as being turned by drowning into a 'mountain of mummy,' and we have 'Witches' mummy' in Mach. IV, i, 23, which see with the notes. In Johnson's Dict. s. v. there is a full account of the medicinal preparation, from Dr Hill's Materia Medica, and in Latham's Johnson a passage is given from Sir T. Herbert's Travels, &c. 1677, which shows that that traveler not only did not associate 'mummy' with Egypt, but not even with dead bodies:—'In or near this place is a precious liquor or mummy growing; . . . a moist, redolent gum it is, sovereign against poisons.' Steevens cites from The Microcosmos of John Davies of Hereford (1603, p. 77, ed. Grosart): 'That's Mummey made of the meere Hart of Love.' That Davies was well read in Shakespeare's Sonnets is felt throughout the Microcosm, but the date of the latter is rather too early to permit the supposition that it had been influenced by Othello.—ED.]

92. MRS. JAMESON (ii, 38): Desdemona, whose soft credulity, whose turn for the marvellous, whose susceptible imagination had first directed her thoughts and affections to Othello, is precisely the woman to be frightened out of her senses by such a tale as this, and betrayed by her fears into a momentary tergiversation. It is most natural in such a being, and shows us that even in the sweetest natures there can be no completeness and consistency without moral energy. There is an incident in the original tale which could not well be transferred to the drama, but which is very effective, and adds, I think, to the circumstantial horrors of the story. Desdemona does not accidentally drop the handkerchief; it is stolen from her by Iago's little child, an infant of three years

- Oth.* Ha? wherefore? 93
Def. Why do you speake so startingly and rash?
Oth. Is't lost? Is't gon? Speak, is't out o'th'way? 95
Def. Blesse vs.
Oth. Say you?
Def. It is not lost: but what and if it were?
Oth. How?
Def. I say it is not lost. 100
Oth. Fetcht, let me see't.
Def. Why fo I can: but I will not now:
This is a tricke to put me from my fuite,
Pray you let Cassio be receiu'd againe.
Oth. Fetch me the Handkerchiefe, 105
My minde mif-giues.

94. startingly] startingly F₃F₄.
rash] rashly Q₂.
95. Is't...Is't] Is it...Is it Steev.'85.
is't out] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sta. is it out Qq et cet.
oth'] o'th' Qq. oth' F₃, of the Steev.
96. Blesse] Q₂Q₃Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt.
Heauen blesse Q₂ et cet.
98. and if] QqFf, Rowe, Pope, Theob.
i, Jen. Knt. an if Theob. ii et cet.
99. How?] Ha. Qq. Ha! Pope+,
Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.
101. Fetcht] F₃. Fetcht F₃. Fetch it
Steev.'85, Mal. Fetch't QqF, et cet
101. see't] see it Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal.
Var. Knt, Cam.
102. can:] Ff. can fir, Qq et cet.
104. Pray you] I pray Qq, Cap. Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i, Sing. Ktly,
Del.
105, 106. One line, Qq et seq.
105. the] that Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal.
Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Del.
106. mif-giues.] misgives—Rowe,
Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. misgives me—
Ktly.

old, whom he trains or bribes to the theft. The love of Desdemona for this child, her little playfellow,—the pretty description of her taking it in her arms and caressing it, while it profits by its situation to steal the handkerchief from her bosom, are well imagined, and beautifully told; and the circumstance of Iago employing his own innocent child as the instrument of his infernal villainy adds a deeper, and, in truth, an unnecessary touch of the fiend, to his fiendish character. [It is so common among the critics to accuse Desdemona of telling a falsehood here, that gratitude is due to Mrs Jameson for the milder term 'tergiversation.' Although Desdemona herself says, 'where should I lose the handkerchief?' she did not believe it to be actually lost, irrecoverably gone; it was merely mislaid, and a further search would reward her with discovery. If she had not been terrified she might have told all this to Othello (and we should not have had the tragedy, which would be a relief), but, as it is, I think in her soul she believed she was telling the truth.—ED.]

94. startingly and rash] WALKER (Crit. i, 220) cites this, among others, as an instance of the termination -ly attached to one adjective and affecting others. See also ABBOTT, § 397, or SCHMIDT, p. 1419.

105–115. BOOTH: This little 'bit' is difficult to act without being tame, or too violent. I have never hit it. [At line 114, FECHTER actually directs Othello to seize Desdemona violently, and raise his hand as if to strike her!—ED.]

Def. Come, come : you'l neuer meete a more suffi- 107 ent man.

Oth. The Handkerchiefe.

Def. A man that all his time 110
Hath founded his good Fortunes on your loue ;
Shar'd dangers with you.

Oth. The Handkerchiefe.

Def. Infooth, you are too blame.

Oth. Away. Exit Othello. 115

107. Come, come :] Separate line, Cap.
Steev. et seq.

Come...neuer] Come, you'll ne'er
Pope+.

109, 113. Handkerchiefe.] handker- chief! Dyce, Sta. Glo. Ktly, Cam. Coll.
iii, Rlfe, Huds. Wh. ii. Handkerchief—
Rowe et cet.

109, 110. Handkerchiefe. Def. A man] handker- chercher. Def. I pray talke me of Cas-sio. Oth. The handkercher. Def. A man
Q., Johns. Jen. et seq.

111. founded his] founded Q₅.

112–115. Shar'd....Away.] Two lines, first ending sooth, Ktly.

112. you.] you : Cap. Steev. Mal. Var.
Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Del. you—Steev.
'73, Dyce, Sta. Glo. Ktly, Cam. Rlfe, Huds. Wh. ii.

114. Infooth] Ifaith Q₁. Separate line, Steev.'93.

too] to Q₃F₄.

115. Away.] Zouns. Q₁.

109, 110. It is easy to see how the printer came to omit the sentences given in the Q₁.—ED.

109. When De Vigny makes his dashing attack on the French Classic School, ridiculing its horror at the word mouchoir, which, under the hands of the fastidious Ducis, becomes a 'bandeau de diamants, que l'héroïne (as De Vigny says) voulut garder même au lit de peur d'être vue en négligé,' our hearts and admiration go entirely with him, and an almost instinctive contempt arises for any one who can find in such a word, as 'handkerchief,' at such a time, anything unworthy of this tragic scene. But will not the curl of our lips at Ducis straighten, and even some fellow-feeling for him spring up, if we imagine the word as it is in the Q_{to}, uttered by Othello with passionate vehemence? As this word sounds to us, so must mouchoir, on the stage, have sounded to Ducis.—ED.

110. A man] BODENSTEDT (Sk. Jahrbuch, ii, 263): With the same recklessness and self-will with which Desdemona, out of love to Othello, had exposed herself to the anger of her Father, she now defies the anger of her husband out of friendship to Cassio.

115. Away] FIELDING: Nothing can be more provoking to the human temper, nor more dangerous to that cardinal virtue, Patience, than solicitations of extraordinary offices of kindness in behalf of those very persons with whom we are highly incensed. For this reason Shakespeare hath artfully introduced his Desdemona soliciting favours for Cassio of her husband, as the means of inflaming not only his jealousy, but his rage, to the highest pitch of madness; and we find the unfortunate Moor less able to command his passion on this occasion than even when he beheld his valued present to his wife in the hands of his supposed rival. In fact, we regard these efforts as insults to our understanding; and to such the pride of man is with great difficulty brought to submit.—Tom Jones, ix, 3, quoted by HALLIWELL.

Emil. Is not this man iealous? 116

Des. I neu'r faw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this Handkerchikfe,
I am most vnhappy in the losse of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a yeare or two shewes vs a man : 120

They are all but Stomackes, and we all but Food,
They eate vs hungerly, and when they are full
They belch vs.

Enter Iago, and Cassio.

Looke you, Cassio and my Husband. 125

Scene XI. Pope +, Jen.	119. the losse of it.] the losse. Q.
116. iealous] iealous or jealous Qq	121. They are] They're Dyce iii, Huds.
F ₃ F ₄ .	are all] are Rowe ii, Pope, Han.
117. neu'r] ne're Q ₁ . ne're Q ₂ Q ₃ . never	122. they are] they're Pope +, Dyce iii,
F ₃ F ₄ Rowe. ne'er Pope et cet.	Huds.
118. Sure] Sir Q ₃ .	123, 125. One line, Qq et seq.
there's] ther's Q ₂ Q ₃ .	124. Enter...] Ff, Rowe, Coll. Wh. i.
Handkerchikfe] F ₁ .	After line 119 Qq. After line 125 Pope
119. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds.	et cet. Enter Cassio and Iago. Dyce.

120. RYMER (p. 126): As if for the first year or two Othello had not been jealous? This Third Act begins in the morning, at noon she drops the Handkerchief, after dinner she misses it, and then follows all this outrage and horrible clutter about it. If we believe a small Damosel, in the last scene of this Act, this day is effectually seven days. Our Poet is at this plunge, that whether this Act contains the compass of one day, of seven days, or of seven years, or of all together, the repugnance and the absurdity would be the same. For Othello, all the while, has nothing to say or to do, but what loudly proclaim him jealous; her friend and confident Emilia again and again rounds her in the ear that the Man is jealous; yet this Venetian dame is neither to see, nor to hear; nor to have any sense or understanding, nor to strike any other note but Cassio, Cassio. STREVEENS: This line has no reference to the duration of the action, or to the length of time that Desdemona had been married. What Emilia says is a sort of proverbial remark, of general application, where a definite time is put for an indefinite. Besides, this 'year or two' may refer to the beginning of the acquaintance and intimacy between the couple. PYE (p. 342): Emilia's saying, 'it is not a year or two shews us a man,' may be well supposed to insinuate, how then should a month or two, or even a day or two?

121. WHITE (ed. ii): Emilia means, They are nought but stomachs, and we nought but food. The obscurity results from an inversion of, They are but all stomach, and we but all food. [There may be an inversion here, but I do not think that it is the inversion which White points out. 'All' does not qualify 'stomachs,' or 'food,' but 'They' and 'we.' The meaning is that they, every one of them, are merely stomachs for which we, every one of us, are merely food. When White represents Shakespeare as making man revert to the Gasteropods or to the Amoebas, his admiration and exaltation of our demi-god go one step farther than mine. 'We know what we are, but we know not what we may be,' as Ophelia says, so that I may even yet be brought to believe that Shakespeare anticipated Darwin,—but not from this passage.—ED.]

125. BOOTH: As if glad to change the subject.

Iago. There is no other way : 'tis she must doo't: 126
And loe the happinesse : go, and importune her.

Des. How now (good Cassio) what's the newes with [328 a] you?

Cassio. Madam, my former suite. I do beseech you, 130
That by your vertuous meanes, I may againe
Exist, and be a member of his loue,
Whom I, with all the Office of my heart
Intirely honour, I would not be delayd.
If my offence, be of such mortall kinde, 135
That nor my Seruice past, nor present Sorrowes,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransome me into his loue againe,
But to know so, must be my benefit :
So shall I cloath me in a forc'd content, 140
And shut my selfe vp in some other course

126. doo't] doe it Qq. do't F₃F₄, Rowe
et seq.

131. I may againe] I doe beseech you :
Q₃.

133. Office] duty Q₁, Johns. Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

134. delayd] delayed Q₂Q₃. delayde Q₃.

136. nor my] neither Q₁, Johns. Steev.
Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly. not my Q₂Q₃Ff,

Rowe +, Jen.

136. Sorrowes] sorrow Walker.

140. cloath] cloth Q₂, Cap. cloathe F₄, clothe Johns.

141. shut...in] shoote...in Q₂, Johns.
Jen. shoot myself upon Cap. Rann. shupe myself upon Rann conj. suit...in and shoot myself forth in Anon. conj. ap.
Cam.

127. happinesse] HUDSON: That is, good hap, or lucky chance; referring to the timely and opportune meeting with Desdemona. MOREL: C'est bien l'équivalent du français: 'Quel bonheur'!

127. importune] ROLFE: For the accent, see also Rom. & Jul. I, i, 138; and Ham. I, iii, 110.

131. vertuous] MOREL: 'Vertuous,' puissant, nous rappelle le sens primitif du français vertu 'Vertu me done [donne-moi force] vers cele gent haie (Roland à Roncevaux, cité par Littré).

133. Office] SINGER: 'Office' and duty of the Qq are synonymous. Thus Baret — 'Dutie, office, dutie of behaviour in honestie and reason: officium.'

136. Sorrowes] Another instance, according to WALKER (Crit. i, 246), of the interpolated s; see I, i, 31.

141. shut] STREEVENS: That is, I will put on a constrained appearance of being contented and shut myself up in a different course of life, no longer to depend on my own efforts, but to wait for relief from the accidental hand of charity. See the same expression, 'shut up In measureless content,' Mach. II, i, 16. MASON prefers shoot, that is, to push suddenly, or forward. 'Cassio means that he will push forward into some other line of life and seek his fortune.' COLLIER (ed. ii): We formerly suggested that 'And set myself upon some,' &c., may have been the true lection; but the (MS.) tells us to put it, 'And shift myself upon some other course.'

To Fortunes Almes. 142

Def. Alas (thrice-gentle Cassio)
My Aduocation is not now in Tune;
My Lord, is not my Lord; nor should I know him, 145
Were he in Fauour, as in Humour alter'd.
So helpe me euery spirit sanctified,
As I haue spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blanke of his displeasure
For my free speech. You must awhile be patient: 150
What I can do, I will: and more I will Then for my selfe, I dare. Let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my Lord angry?

Æmil. He went hence but now:
And certainly in strange vnquietnesse. 155

Iago. Can he be angry? I haue seene the Cannon
When it hath blowne his Rankes into the Ayre,
And like the Diuell from his very Arme
Puff't his owne Brother: And is he angry?
Something of moment then: I will go meet him, 160
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry. Exit

Def. I prythee do so. Something sure of State,
Either from Venice, or some vnatch'd practise
Made demonstrable heere in Cyprus, to him,
Hath pudled his cleare Spirit: and in such cases, 165

142. Almes] arms Pope.	Cap.
143. thrice-gentle] thrice gentile Q ₃ .	Scene XII. Pope+, Jen.
146. alter'd] altred Q ₁ Q ₂ . alt'r'd Q ₃ .	163. or some] of some Johns.
149. stood] stooop Q ₃ .	164. demonstrable heere] here demon-
159. is he] Ff, Rowe, Sing. Wh. i. can	strable Pope+, Jen.
he be Qq et cet.	heere] her Han. ii (misprint?).
161. Exit.] Om. Qq. After so line 162,	165. pudled] pull'd Q ₃ .

142. Almes] MALONE: That is, waiting patiently for whatever bounty or chance may bestow upon me. See 'at fortune's alms,' Lear, I, i, 277.

146. Fauour] JOHNSON: That is, in look, in countenance. See I, iii, 371.

149. blanke] JOHNSON: Within the shot of his anger. STREEVENS: The white mark at which the shot or arrows were aimed.—[Note on Ham. IV, i, 42.]

153. Booth: With surprise.

159. Brother] MALONE: Something is suppressed here. Iago means to say 'and his own brother puffed from his side,—and meanwhile have seen him cool and unruffled.' BOOTH: What is apparently omitted here, my Father, following, I presume, old stage traditions, always supplied by adding 'yet he stood unmoved.'

163. vnatch'd practise] JOHNSON: Some treason that has not taken effect.

165. pudled] ROLFE: Muddled, disturbed, or the Yankee 'riled.'

Mens Natures wrangle with inferiour things, 166
 Though great ones are their obieſt. 'Tis euen fo.
 For let our finger ake, and it endues
 Our other healthfull members, euen to a ſenſe
 Of paine. Nay, we muſt thinke men are not Gods, 170
 Nor of them looke for ſuch obſeruancie
 As fits the Bridall. Befhrew me much Emilia,
 I was (vnhandſome Warriour, as I am)
 Arraigning his vnkindneſſe with my foule :
 But now I finde, I had ſuborn'd the Witneſſe, 175

167-170. Though... Gods] Lines end, object,...ake,... members,... thinke,... gods,
 Qq, Cap.

167. Though] Tho Q₁Q₄. The Q₃. their] the Qq.

168. endues] endures Q₃. induces Ktly conj.

169. euen to a] Ff, Rowe, Steev.'85,
 Knt, Sta. with a Pope+. Euen to that
 Qq et cet.

171. Nor] Not Q₃.

171. obſeruancie] obſeruances Qq, Mal.
 Steev.'93, Var. Coll. Sing. Glo. Ktly, Wh.
 ii. obſeruance Ff. obſervance always
 Rowe+, Jen.

172. fits] fit Mal. Steev.'93, Var. Coll.
 Sing. Wh. Glo. Ktly.

173. Warrior] wrangler Han. Warb.

174, 175. Arraigning...vnkindneſſe...
ſuborn'd] Arraigning...vnkindneſſe...
ſubborne Q₃.

167-170. WALKER (Crit. iii, 288) proposed, for the ſake of ocular ſcanſion, a diuiſion of theſe lines that happens to be the ſame as that of the Qq (which was pointed out by LETTSOM), and alſo of Capell (which was not pointed out by Lettsom).

168. endues] JOHNSON: I believe it ſhould be, rather, ſubdues our other healthful members to a ſenſe of pain. MALONE: The meaning is, this ſenſation ſo gets poſſeſſion of, and is ſo infused into, the other members, as to make them all participate of the ſame pain. DYCE (Gloss.), after quoting this paraphraſe of Malone, adds,—‘rightly perhaps.’

171. obſeruancie] HUDSON: That is, watchful, tender, and devout attention. So in As You Like It, V, ii, 102, where Silvius deſcribes ‘what ’tis to love’: ‘It is to be . . . All adoration, duty, and obſervance, All humbleneſſe, all patience,’ &c. ROLFE: Not uſed by Shakeſpeare elſewhere.

172. As fits] ROLFE: Another ſuggeſtion of ‘long time.’

172. the Bridall] DELIUS: Uſed as a noun by Shakeſpeare only here.

173. Warrior] JOHNSON: Evidently, unfair assailant. COWDEN-CLARKE: A lovely reminiſcence of her huſband’s having called her ‘my fair warrior’ in the joy of his firſt meeting, on arrival.

174, 176. Arraigning . . . falſely] HEARD (Sh. as a Lawyer, p. 76, ed. ii): This is clearly a reference to the crime of ſubornation of perjury, which is an offence at common law, and conſiſts in the procuring another to take ſuch a falſe oath as conſtitutes perjury in the principal, or perſon taking it.

175. Witneſſe] WALKER (Vers. 244 and 246) gives this, among many others, as an inſtance of a plural, but which, becauſe it already ends in s, lacks that additional plural ſound. In many of theſe examples Walker would end the word with an apoſtrophe, to indicate that although it is the ſingular both in ſpelling and in pronunciation,

And he's Indited falsely. 176

Æmil. Pray heauen it bee

State matters, as you thinke, and no Conception,

Nor no Iealious Toy, concerning you.

Def. Alas the day, I neuer gaue him cause. 180

Æmil. But Iealious foules will not be answer'd fo ;

They are not euer ielialous for the cause,

But ielialous, for they're ielialous. It is a Monster

Begot vpon it selfe, borne on it selfe.

Def. Heauen keepe the Monster from Othello's mind. 185

Æmil. Lady, Amen.

Def. I will go seeke him. Cassio, walke heere about :

If I doe finde him fit, Ile moue your suite,

And seeke to effect it to my vttermoſt. Exit

Caf. I humbly thanke your Ladyship. 190

Enter Bianca.

Bian. 'Saeue you (Friend Cassio.) 192

176. Indited] indicted Coll. et seq. (except Del.).

177-179. Lines end, thinke...toy...you.

Qq, Cap. et seq.

178. State matters] State-matters F₄.

State-matter Pope.

no] on Steev.'93 (misprint).

179. Nor no] Nor Rowe+.

179, 181, 183, 212. Iealious] F₁F₂.

182. iealious] F₁.

the cause] a cause Pope+.

183. they're] Ff, Rowe+, Knt, Sta.

Dyce iii, Huds. they are Qq et cet.

It is] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sta. It's

Pope+. tis Qq et cet.

184. vpon] unto Q₃.

185. the] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt. that Qq et cet.

Othello's] Othell's F₂.

187. heere about] F₂. here about Qq,

Jen. Ktly. hereabout F₃F₄ et cet.

187-IV, ii.] Om. Booth.

189. to effect] t'effect Pope+, Dyce iii, Huds.

vttermoſt] utmoſt Q₃.

Exit.] Exeunt Def. and Emillia (opposite to lines 189, 190) Qq. Ex. Desdem. and Æmil. at one door; Cassio, at the other. Theob.

Scene XIII. Pope+, Jen. Changes to the street before the Palace. Theob.

191. Enter...] After line 192, Q₁. Re-enter Cassio meeting Bianca. Theob.

yet it is, in reality, a plural. In this present passage, however, if I understand Walker aright, he would have the full plural form, witnesses, because it seems 'more natural.' But I do not think it would be correct. The word here is singular, not plural. There was but one 'Witness,' viz.: this solitary instance of discord in her advocacy, and this it was that had been 'suborned,' by falsely interpreting, as a lack of observance, that which was in truth due to 'something of state.'—ED.

179, etc. Iealious] WHITE (ed. ii): It is worth while to remark that this word was pronounced jelyus in Shakespeare's time. It is almost invariably spelled jealous, as here five times within five lines. [See WALKER's note on III, iii, 212, where he is more cautious than White, and restricts the peculiarity of this spelling to the First Folio. It

- Cassio*. What make you from home? [328 b]
 How is't with you, my most faire Bianca?
 Indeed (sweet Loue) I was comming to your house. 195
Bian. And I was going to your Lodging, Cassio.
 What? keepe a weeke away? Seuen dayes, and Nights?
 Eight score eight houres? And Louers absent howres
 More tedious then the Diall, eight score times?
 Oh weary reck'ning. 200
Cassio. Pardon me, Bianca:
 I haue this while with leaden thoughts beene preft,
 But I shall in a more continue time
 Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca
 Take me this worke out. 205
Bianca. Oh Cassio, whence came this?
 This is some Token from a newer Friend,
 To the felt-Absence: now I feele a Cause: 208

193. make] makes F₄, Rowe+, Var. Huds.

194. is't] is it Qq, Rowe et seq.

195. Indeed] Q₂Q₃Ff, Rowe+, Knt. Ifaith Q₁ et cet.

comming] going Q₃.

house] lodging Cap. (misprint?)

198. Louers] Qq. Loves Ff, Rowe. lovers Pope, Han. lovers Theob. et cet.

200. Oh] No Q₁.

reck'ning] reckoning Q₁Q₂, Jen. et seq. reckning Q₃.

202. leaden] laden Q₁.

203. continue time] conuenient time Q₃, Pope+, Cap. Jen. Coll. iii. continue: of time, Q₃.

204. Giving her Desdemona's handkerchief. Rowe et seq.

206. Oh] Om. Han.

207. a] Om. Johns. (misprint).

207, 208. Friend, ... now] Ff. friend, To the felt absence, now Q₁. friend To the felt absence, now Q₂Q₃. friend; To the felt absence, now Rowe, Jen. friend. Of thy felt absence, now Pope+. friend. To the felt absence now Cap. et cet. (subs.).

is almost uniformly Jealous in the Qq. See Textual Notes in this scene, lines 31, 33, and 116.—ED.]

193. make] COLLIER (eds. i and ii): A Saxon idiom, which Malone destroyed by printing makes. [See Text. Notes.]

195. I was] WALKER (Crit. ii, 202) cites this instance, with others, as a proof that I was, from its position in the line, must have been pronounced as one syllable, in whatever manner the contraction was effected. See also Ham. IV, v, 14.

197. weeke] HUDSON: It would seem by this that seven days at least have elapsed since Cassio was cashiered; perhaps much more, as the 'leaden thoughts' may have been kept off for some time by the thoughts of Desdemona's promise of intercession, and brought on again by the unexpected delay.

203. continue] JOHNSON: That is, less interrupted, time which I can call more my own.

204. score] DELIUS finds here a punning allusion to Bianca's 'eight score.'

205. Take . . . out] See 'coppied' line 219, and III, iii, 344.

Is't come to this? Well, well.

Cassio. Go too, woman: 210

Throw your vilde geffes in the Diuels teeth,
From whence you haue them. You are iealous now,
That this is from some Mistris, some remembrance;
No, in good troth Bianca.

Bian. Why, who's is it? 215

Cassio. I know not neither:

I found it in my Chamber,
I like the worke well; Ere it be demanded
(As like enough it will) I would haue it coppied:
Take it, and doo't, and leaue me for this time. 220

Bian. Leaue you? Wherefore?

Cassio. I do attend heere on the Generall,
And thinke it no addition nor my wifh
To haue him fee me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I ptay you? 225

Cassio. Not that I loue you not.

Bian. But that you do not loue me.

I pray you bring me on the way a little,
And fay, if I shall see you foone at night? 229

209. Is't] Is it Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i.

Well, well.] Om. Q₁. Well, well, well—Ktly.

210. Go too, woman:] Go to woman, Qq. Well, go to, woman; Han. Woman, go to! Cap. Steev.'93.

211. vilde geffes] vile gheffes Q₁Q₂. vile guesfes Q₃.

212. them] 'em Cap.

214. in good troth] by my faith Q₂, Cam. in good truth Johns.

215. who's] whose Q₂Q₃F₃F₄.

216, 217. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

216. neither:] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt, Dyce, Sta. Del. sweete, Qq et cet.

219. I would] Ff, Rowe. I'de Qq et cet.

223. nor my] nor do I] Quincy (MS).

224. him] h m F₃.

225, 226. Om. Q₁.

225. ptay] F₁.

227. But...me] Nor that you love me. Han.

229. night f] night. Qq.

221. Wherefore] WALKER (Vers. 112): With the stronger accent on the latter syllable.

223. addition] ROLFE: That is, credit.

224. woman'd] ABBOTT, § 294: That is, accompanied by a woman.

229. soone at] WHITE (ed. i, note on Merry Wives, I, iv, 8): This phrase was used with a meaning which it is not very easy to express. It may, perhaps, be taken to signify surely, or without let or hindrance, which is, probably, the radical meaning of 'soon.' See Richardson's Dict. Marston has two instances of it,—'O wee will mount in triumph: soone at night Ile set his head up.'—Antonio and Melida, Part I,

Cassio. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you, 230
For I attend heere : But Ile see you soone.
Bian. 'Tis very good : I must be circumstanc'd.
Exeunt omnes. 233

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Iago. Will you thinke so?
Oth. Thinke so, Iago?
Iago. What, to kisse in priuate? 5
Oth. An vnauthoriz'd kisse?

233. Exeunt...]	Exeunt. Qq.	Qq.
1. Actus...]	Actus. 4. Q ₁ . Actus 4.	3-52. Om. Fechter.
Scena 1. Q ₂ Q ₃ (Scena Q ₃).		3-5. Will... What] One line, Cap. et seq.
A Room of State. Rowe. A Court before the Palace. Theob. An open place, before the Castle. Steev.		4. Iago f] Iago . Qq.
2. Enter...]	Enter Iago and Othello .	6. kisse f] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. kisse . Qq, Johns. et cet.

Act III. 'Gentlemen, as yet I can but thanke you; but I must bee trusted for my ordinarie soone at night.'—What You Will, V, i. DYCE (Gloss.): About. SCHMIDT: This very night, so early as to-day in the evening.

231. soone] Cassio here uses this word in the sense of nightfall, an acceptation to which ARROWSMITH (p. 7) first, as far as I know, called attention by the following quotation from Gil's Logonomia Anglica, ed. 1619:—'Quickly cito, sooner citior aut citius, soonest citissimus aut citissime, nam 'soon' hodie apud plurimos significat ad primam vesperam, olim cito.' Whether or not this acceptation of 'soon' lies perdu in the preceding phrase, 'soon at night,' I do not feel competent to say, but I suspect that it does.—ED.

232. 'Tis very good] DEIGHTON: Said with bitterness.

232. circumstanc'd] MASON: I must give way to circumstances.

3-6. WALKER (Crit. iii, 288): Arrange, perhaps,—Will you think so? | Think so, Iago? What, to kiss in private? | An unauthoriz'd kiss. LETTSOM [in a foot-note]: Walker, intentionally or otherwise, has placed a full stop after kiss. So the Qq, I believe, and Dyce; the F, has a note of interrogation. [See Text. Notes.] Are these short speeches properly distributed? Iago seems to have been pretending that, if Othello had caught Cassio kissing Desdemona, that would have been no proof of guilt in the lady and her friend; from this Othello seems to have dissented. Qw.,—'Thinks so, Iago! what, to kiss in private! | An unauthoriz'd kiss!' DEIGHTON is inclined to think that lines 3 and 5 should be also given to Othello, and that Iago first speaks at line 7.

6. vnauthoriz'd] For the accent, 'unauthoriz'd,' see WALKER (Vers. Art. xxxvii, p. 194) or ABBOTT, § 491.

Iago. Or to be naked with her Friend in bed, 7
An houre, or more, not meaning any harme ?

Oth. Naked in bed (Iago) and not meane harme ?
It is hypocrisie against the Diuell : 10

They that meane vertuously, and yet do so,
The Diuell their vertue tempts, and they tempt Heauen.

Iago. If they do nothing, 'tis a Veniall flip :
But if I giue my wife a Handkerchiefe.

Oth. What then ? 15

Iago. Why then 'tis hers (my Lord) and being hers,
She may (I thinke) bestow't on any man.

Oth. She is Protectresse of her honor too :
May she giue that ? 19

- | | |
|--|---|
| 7. Friend] Friends Ff. | Sing. Sta. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. So they Qq |
| 7, 9. in bed] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt, | et cet. |
| Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Coll. iii, Wh. ii. | 14. But if I] But I F F ₄ . |
| abed Qq et cet. | 14, 22. Handkerchiefe.] handkercher. |
| 8. harme ?] harme. Q ₃ . | Q ₃ . Handkerchiffe. F ₃ . handkerchief — |
| 12. tempts, and] tempts not ; Warb. | Rowe et seq. |
| Han. | 18. Protectresse] proprietor Warb. conj. |
| 13. If they] Ff, Rowe+, Knt, Coll. | Han. propertied Warb. proprietress Cap. |
| | too.] to , Q ₄ . |

7 and 9. naked] DYCE, in both his Second and his Third Edition, prints these words with an accent, thus: 'nakèd.' I wish I knew why; especially since a similar forethought for heedless readers of this word is not extended by Dyce elsewhere; after having learned to lean on our accented è's, we are liable to read, in his edition, that Emilia wishes rascals to be lashed 'nak'd through the world,' and that Othello threatens Gratiano that he will assault him 'nak'd as he was.'—ED.

10. Diuell] JOHNSON: This means, hypocrisy to cheat the devil. As common hypocrites cheat men by seeming good, and yet living wickedly, these men would cheat the devil, by giving him flattering hopes, and at last avoiding the crime which he thinks them ready to commit. RYMER (p. 128): At this gross rate of trifling, our General and his Auncient March on most heroically; till the jealous Booby has his Brains turn'd; and falls in a Trance. Would any imagine this to be the Language of Venetians, of Souldiers, and mighty Captains? no Bartholomew Droll cou'd subseist upon such trash. [According to ALLIBONE (Dict.), Pope considered Rymer, 'on the whole, one of the best critics we ever had'; Dryden and Sir Walter Scott quote him with respect; Dr Johnson was disgusted at his 'ferocity'; Sergeant Talfourd praises his acuteness at the expense of his judgement, and Lord Macaulay deems him 'the worst critic that ever lived.'—ED.]

12. Heauen] HENLEY; The true key to the explanation of this passage may be found in St. Matthew, iv, 7. The poet's idea is, that the devil tempts their virtues by stirring up their passions, and they tempt heaven by placing themselves in such a situation as makes it scarcely possible to avoid falling, by the gratification of them.

Iago. Her honor is an Effence that's not seene, [329 a]
They haue it very oft, that haue it not. 21
But for the Handkerchiefe.

Othe. By heauen, I would most gladly haue forgot it :
Thou saidst (oh, it comes ore my memorie,
As doth the Rauen o're the infectious house : 25
Boading to all) he had my Handkerchiefe.

Iago. I : what of that ?

Othe. That's not so good now.

Iag. What if I had said, I had seene him do you wrong?
Or heard him say (as Knaues be such abroad, 30
Who hauing by their owne importunate fuit,
Or voluntary dotage of some Mistris, 32

25. infectious] Ff, Rowe, Cap. Knt, Sta.
Del. infected Qq et cet.

26. all] he] Ff. all.) He Qq. all, he Rowe. ill—he Pope ii, Theob. Warb. all,
—he Han. et cet.

Handkerchiefe] hankercher Q₁.
hankerchief Warb.

27–29. I... What] As one line, Dyce,
Glo. Cam. Huds. Rife, Wh. ii.

29. had said, I had] said, I had Pope,
Theob. Warb. Johns. said, I had Han.

30. heard] heare F₂. hear F₃ F₄.

say (as] say? as Han.

32. Or] Or by the Q₁.

23. forgot] DE VIGNY: Il est bien beau, à mon avis, qu'Othello ait oublié cette circonstance, légère en apparence, et qu'il faut lui rappeler souvent. Cela diminuera beaucoup le reproche que l'on fait à Shakespeare d'avoir construit toute l'intrigue sur un fondement aussi peu solide que le mouchoir perdu.

25. Rauen] HARTING (p. 99): Go where we will over the face of the wide world, the hoarse croak of the raven is still to be heard. He was seen perched on the bare rocks, looking over the dreary snows of the highest points visited in Arctic expeditions. Under the burning sun of the equator he enjoys his feast of carrion. He was discovered in the islands of the Pacific by Captain Cook; and in the lowest Antarctic regions travellers have found him pursuing his cautious predatory life, just as in England. From the earliest times, with his deep and solemn voice he has always commanded attention, and in his croakings the superstitious have found something unearthly and ominous. By the Romans he was consecrated to Apollo and regarded as a prophet of good or of evil. Through a long course of centuries this character has clung to him; and even at this day there are many who believe that the raven's croak predicts a death. No wonder then that Shakespeare has used this widespread belief, and has introduced the raven into many of the solemn passages of his Plays. MALONE quotes these fine lines of Marlowe, Jew of Malta, II, i, 1: 'Thus, like the sad presaging raven, that tolls The sick man's passport in her hollow beak, And in the shadow of the silent night Doth shake contagion from her sable wings.'

27. PURNELL: Iago would attach no importance to that. Othello says that that is unlike his usual wisdom.

28, 29. That's . . . wrong] WALKER (Crit. iii, 288): Arrange, perhaps,—That's not so good now. What if I had said | I had seen him do you wrong? |

Conuinc'd or supply'd them, cannot chuse 33
But they must blab.)

Oth. Hath he said any thing? 35

Iago. He hath (my Lord) but be you well assur'd,
No more then he'll vn-fweare.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. Why, that he did : I know not what he did.

Othe. What? What? 40

Iago. Lye.

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her? On her : what you will.

Othe. Lye with her? lye on her? We say lye on her, when they be-lye-her. Lye with her : that's fullsome : 45
Handkerchiefe : Confessions : Handkerchiefe. To con-

33. Conuinc'd or] Coniured or Q₂. Conjured or Q₃. convinc'd or Theob. Han.
Warb. Johns. Cap. convinc'd her and Ktly.

supply'd] Ff, Wh. suppled Theob.
Han. Warb. Johns. suppl'd Cap. supplied
Qq et cet.

cannot] they cannot Theob. Warb.
Johns. then cannot Han. straight cannot
Cap.

34. blab.] blab. Q₁, Rowe, Pope, Han.
Steev.'85, Del. blab. Cap. blab—Jen.
Mal. et seq.

39. Why] Q₂ Q₃ Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Steev.
85, Knt. Faith Q₂ et cet.

he...did.] *he did I know not what ;
he did.* Rann.

he did : I] Ff. he did—I Qq et cet.

40. What? What?] But what? Q₂, Jen.
What? Q₂ Q₃.

41. Lye.] Lye—Rowe et seq.

43. her? On her :] her, on her, Qq.
her? on her—Rowe, Pope. her ; on her— Theob. Warb. Johns. her! on her—Han.
her, on her—Jen. her ;—on her ;—Knt,
Sta. her, on her ; Cap. et cet.
will.] will—Rowe+, Jen.

44, 45. We...be-lye-her] Om. Pope,
Theob. Han. Warb.

45. be-lye-her.] bely her ; Qq, Cap.
be-lye her F₃ F₄.

her : that's] her, Zouns, that's Q₂.
her! Zouns, that's Jen. Cam.

46. Handkerchiefe : Confessions : Hand-kerchiefe.] handkerchers, Confession, hankerchers. Q₂. handkerchiefs, confession, handkerchiefs Q₂ Q₃. handkerchief—confessions—handkerchief—handkerchief—
Theob. Warb. Johns.

46–52. To confesse...diuell] Om. Q₂.

46–48. To confesse...confesse] Om. Pope,
Han.

33. Conuinc'd or supply'd] THEOBALD : I read 'convinced or supplied,' and the meaning is, there are some such long-tongued knaves in the world, who, if they through the force of importunity extort a favour from their mistress, or if through her own fondness they make her pliant to their desires, cannot help boasting of their success. To convince, here, is not, as in the common acceptation, to make sensible of the truth of anything by reasons and arguments; but to 'overcome, get the better of,' &c. JENNENS : I see no reason for this alteration; Iago is here describing two sorts of gallants; one who by their importunities have convinced, or overcome, their mistresses; the other, who, when their mistresses voluntarily doated on them, have supplied them with the effects of love. STEEVENS : 'Supplied' is certainly the true reading. See Meas. for Meas. V, i, 212.

44–52. Here, as in Lear, IV, vi, 127, the highest passion of all, as ABBOTT (§ 511) says, is expressed in prose Compare lines 198 et seq. of this Scene.

fesse, and be hang'd for his labour. Firft, to be hang'd, 47 and then to confesse : I tremble at it. Nature would not inueft her felfe in fuch shadowing paffion, without fome Iuftruction. It is not words that shakes me thus, (piffh) 50

47. and be hang'd] and be hanged Q₂.
 Var. Knt. Coll. Dyce, Sta.

48. then to confesse:] then—to confess!
 Theob. Warb. Johns.

49. shadowing] shuddering Coll. (MS). passion] Om. Pope, Theob. Han.

Warb.

50. Iuftruction] F₁. induction Warb.

Han. Cap.

not] no Rowe ii.

shakes] QqFf, Cap. Cam. Del. shake
 Rowe et cet.

46–52. To . . . diuell] POPE: No hint of this trash in the first edition. MALONE: See Marlowe's Jew of Malta, IV, i: 'Blame not us, but the proverb,—Confess and be hanged.' HALLIWELL: Again in Shirley's Love Tricks [IV, vi]: Ruf. Did you hear him confess it? Bub. Here's right confess and be hanged now.' WALKER (Crit. iii, 289): In the confusion of Othello's mind, 'handkerchief,' from the sound and its coming in connection with 'confessions,' suggests the idea of hanging.

50. Instruction] WARBURTON: The starts and broken reflections in this speech have something very terrible, and show the mind of the speaker to be in inexpressible agonies. But the words we are upon have a sublime in them that can never be enough admired. The ridiculous blunder of writing 'instruction' for induction (for so it should be read) has, indeed, sunk it into arrant nonsense. Othello is just going to fall into a swoon; and, as is common for people in that circumstance, feels an unusual mist and darkness, accompanied with horror, coming upon him. This, with vast sublimity of thought, is compared to the season of the sun's eclipse, at which time the earth becomes shadowed by the induction or bringing over of the moon between it and the sun. This being the allusion, the reasoning stands thus, My nature could never be thus overshadowed, and falling, as it were, into dissolution for no cause. There must be an induction of something; there must be a real cause. My jealousy cannot be merely imaginary. Ideas, words only, could not shake me thus, and raise all this disorder. My jealousy must be grounded, therefore, on matter of fact. This word is used in this sense in Rich. III.: IV, iv, 5. JOHNSON: This is a noble conjecture, and, whether right or wrong, does honour to its author. Yet I am in doubt whether there is any necessity of emendation. There has always prevailed in the world an opinion that, when any great calamity happens at a distance, notice is given of it to the sufferer by some dejection or perturbation of mind, of which he discovers no external cause. This is ascribed to that general communication of one part of the universe with another, which is called sympathy and antipathy; or to the secret monition, instruction, and influence of a Superior Being, which superintends the order of nature and of life. Othello says, Nature could not invest herself in such shadowing passion without instruction. It is not words that shake me thus. This passion which spreads its clouds over me is the effect of some agency, more than the operation of words; it is one of those notices which men have of unseen calamities. HEATH (p. 569): Othello feels all his faculties failing him on the sudden, and a cloudy or misty darkness creeping very fast upon him. This circumstance suggests to him the thought that his very nature, which sympathizes with him in his present agony, must have received some secret mysterious instruction, intimation, or instinctive knowledge of the reality of that calamity which so deeply oppresses him, otherwise she would never have spontaneously invested

Nofes, Eares, and Lippes : is't possible. Confesse? Handkerchiefe ? O diuell. Falls in a Traunce. 51

Iago. Worke on,
My Medicine workes. Thus credulous Fooles are caught,
And many worthy, and chaff Dames euen thus, 55
(All guiltlesse) meete reproach : what hoa ? My Lord ?
My Lord, I say : Othello.

Enter Cassio.

How now Cassio ?

Cas. What's the matter ? 60

51. possible.] possible ? Q₂Q₃. possible !
Rowe.

51, 52. Confesse ? Handkerchiefe ?] Confess !—Handkerchief !— Rowe.

52. Falls...] He fals downe. Q₂. Falles
...trance. Q₂Q₃F₄.

53–59. Prose, Qq.

53, 54. One line, Cap.

on, My Medicine workes.] Ff,

Rowe, Pope, Han. on my medicine, worke:
Qq. on, My medicine, work ! Theob. et cet.

55, 56. Dames...guiltlesse] dames, euen
thus all guiltlesse, Q₂.

57. Othello.] Othello,— Qq, Theob.
Johns.

58. Enter...] After line 59, Qq.

Scene II. Pope+, Jen.

60. What's ?] What is Steev. 93, Var.

herself in that horrid darkness which he now felt overwhelming him. SIR J. REYNOLDS : Othello alludes only to Cassio's dream, which had been invented and told him by Iago. When many confused and very interesting ideas pour in upon the mind all at once, and with such rapidity that it has not time to shape or digest them, if it does not relieve itself by tears (which we know it often does, whether for joy or grief) it produces stupefaction and fainting. Othello, in broken sentences and single words, all of which have a reference to the cause of his jealousy, shows that all the proofs are present at once to his mind, which so overpowers it that he falls into a trance, the natural consequence. MALONE : Induction, in Shakespeare's time, meant introduction or prelude, and at no time signified bringing over, as Warburton interprets it.

50. that shakes] See I, iii, 312.

51. Lippes] STEEVENS : Othello is imagining to himself the familiarities which he supposes to have passed between Cassio and his wife. If this be not the meaning, we must suppose he is meditating a cruel punishment for the guilty lovers.

53. FECHTER here begins his Act IV. Othello and Iago discovered. Othello is stretched, unconscious, on the divan. Iago behind, contemplating him with a diabolical sneer.

54. workes] An interpolated s, according to WALKER. See I, i, 31.

57–200. SALVINI justifies his omission of this portion of the scene on the ground that it is not in accord with Othello's character. 'Is it to be imagined,' he asks, 'that a man of the Moor's haughty and violent temper could command himself during the recital of his dishonour from the lips of his wronger? Would you not suppose that he would spring like a tiger on Cassio and tear him to pieces? To be sure, Cassio would gain enough time to clear up the misunderstanding, and the Tragedy would fall through. Hence, either this scene must be retained to the injury of Othello's character, or it must be omitted.' The gap in the story Salvini considers as filled by Othello's assertion in the last scene, that he had seen the Handkerchief in Cassio's hand.

- Iago.* My Lord is falne into an Epilepsie, 61
This is his second Fit : he had one yesterday.
Caf. Rub him about the Temples.
Iago. The Lethargie must haue his quyet courfe :
If not, he foames at mouth : and by and by 65
Breakes out to sauage madnesse. Looke, he stirres :
Do you withdraw your selfe a little while,
He will recouer straight : when he is gone,
I would on great occasion, speake with you.
How is it Generall ? Haue you not hurt your head ? 70
Othe. Dost thou mocke me ?
Iago. I mocke you not, by Heauen:
Would you would beare your Fortune like a Man.
Othe. A Horned man's a Monster, and a Beast.
Iago. Ther's many a Beast then in a populous Citty, 75
And many a ciuill Monster.
Othe. Did he confesse it ?
Iago. Good Sir, be a man :
Thinke euery bearded fellow that's but yoak'd 79

61. falne] QqFf, Rowe, Pope. fell
Theob. Warb. fallen Steev. Mal. Var.
Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. fall'n Han.
et cet.

62. is his] is the F, Rowe+.

64. Iago. The] Iag. No, forbear, The Qq (forbare, Q₃) Pope et seq.

haue his] haue Q₃.

65. at] at' Ed. conj.

66. he stirres] he stirres Q₃.

68, 69. gone...speake] gon...spake Q₃.

69. [Exit Cassio. Rowe et seq.

70. head ?] hand ? Ff (hand; F₄)

71. Dost thou] Dost Q₃, Cap. me ?] me ? Exit Caf. Q₂Q₃.

72. you not, by] Ff, Rowe+. you no
by Q₃. you ? no by Q₁Q₂ et cet.
Heauen :] heauen ; I mock you not.

Cap.

73. Fortune] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.
Cap. Knt, Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam. Del. Coll.
iii, Wh. ii. fortunes Qq et cet.

like] life F₃.

77. confesse it ?] confesse ? Qq.

79. euery] ever Q₃.

61. Epilepsie] BUCKNILL (Med. Knowledge of Sh. p. 274): This designation appears a mere falsehood. It is to be observed, however, that Shakespeare's knowledge of epilepsy here goes farther than in Jul. Cæs. I, ii, 256, since he describes the maniacal excitement which so often follows the fit. When Cassio has been persuaded to withdraw, Iago applies to the patient himself the truthful and correct designation of his morbid state.

62. yesterday] COWDEN-CLARKE: Iago is so solid a liar that this cannot be taken literally; but it aids to give the effect of long dramatic time.

64. WHITE (ed. i): The words [supplied by the Qq, see Text. Notes,] were omitted from the Folio, accidentally we may be sure.

71. mocke] JOHN HUNTER: As if Iago had meant the hurt done to the head when one is made a horned monster.

May draw with you. There's Millions now aliue, 80
 That nightly lye in those vnproper beds,
 Which they dare sweare peculiar. Your case is better.
 Oh, 'tis the spight of hell, the Fiends Arch-mock,
 To lip a wanton in a secure Cowch;
 And to suppose her chafft. No, let me know, [329 b]
 And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be. 86
Oth. Oh, thou art wife : 'tis certaine.
Iago. Stand you a while apart,
 Confine your selfe but in a patient List,
 Whil'ft you were heere, o're-whelmed with your grieve 90
 (A passion most resulting such a man)

80. you. There's] you, there's Qq.
There's Millions] Millions are Pope+.

now] now F₂.

81. lye] lyes Q₂.

82. peculiar] prculiar F₂, peculior Q₂.
case] cause Ff, Rowe.

83. Oh, 'tis] O this Q₃. Oh, it is Han.

82-88. Lines end, case...hell,...in,... chafft....am...wife....apart, Han. (reading you now line 88).

85. let me] let not me Q₃.

87. 'tis] that's Cap. (Corrected in Errata).

88. Stand you] Stand you now Han.

89. Lift,] lift : Qq. list. Rowe.

90. heere, o're-whelmed] here ere while,
mad Q₂, Steev. Mal. Rann. Var.

91. resulting] Ff, Rowe. vnfitting Q₂. vnfitting Q₂Q₃, Pope, Han. Cap. Coll.
 Dyce iii. unsuiting Theob. et cet.

81. vnproper] DYCE: Not peculiar to an individual, common. ROLFE: Shakespeare uses it only here; improper, that is, not becoming, only in *Lea*r, V, iii, 222.

82. peculiar] WHITE (ed. ii): Equivalent to belonging to one; that is, to each one of them (the millions) respectively.

83. spight] SCHMIDT (Lex. s. v.): Vexation, mortification. ROLFE: It rather seems to be malice. The 'spite of hell' is explained by 'the fiend's arch-mock.' The man is not mortified, for he does not know his disgrace.

84. secure] MALONE: In a couch on which he is lulled into a false security. So, 'though Page be a secure fool,' &c., Merry Wives, II, i, 241. [For other instances of the accent on the first syllable, see WALKER (Vers. 292) or ABBOTT, § 492.]

85-87. WALKER (Crit. iii, 289) proposes an arrangement, 'if the reading be right,' of these lines, wherein he was anticipated by Hanmer. See Text. Notes.

86. she] STEEVENS: Redundancy of metre, without improvement of sense, inclines one to consider this word as an intruder. Iago is merely stating an imaginary case as his own. 'When I know what I am, I know what the result of that conviction shall be.' To whom, indeed, could the pronoun 'she' grammatically refer?

89. List] COLLINS: That is, barrier, bound. Keep your temper, says Iago, within the bounds of patience.

90. o're-whelmed] KNIGHT: These words, in the Qq, afford one evidence, amongst many, that both his texts were printed from a manuscript.

91. resulting] COLLIER (ed. ii): That vnfitting was the word usually recited on the stage we may infer, perhaps, from its having been thus altered in the (MS.).

Cassio came hither. I shifted him away, 92
 And layd good scuses vpon your Extasie,
 Bad him anon returne : and heere speake with me,
 The which he promis'd. Do but encaue your felfe, 95
 And marke the Fleeres, the Gybes, and notable Scornes
 That dwell in euery Region of his face.
 For I will make him tell the Tale anew;
 Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
 He hath, and is againe to cope your wife. 100
 I say, but marke his gesture : marry Patience,
 Or I shall say y'are all in all in Spleene,
 And nothing of a man.

Othe. Do'tt thou heare, Iago,
 I will be found most cunning in my Patience : 105
 But (do'tt thou heare) most bloody.

Iago. That's not amisse,
 But yet keepe time in all : will you withdraw ?
 Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
 A Hufwife, that by felling her desires 110
 Buys her felfe Bread, and Cloath. It is a Creature

- | | |
|---|---|
| 92. hither.] hither , Qq. | 102. y'are] Ff, Rowe, Wh. Dyce iii, |
| 93. layd] layed Qq. laid Ff. | Huds. you're Pope, Han. you are Qq |
| scuses vpon] scuse , vpon Q ₄ . scuses | et cet. |
| on Ff, Rowe + scuse vpon Q ₂ Q ₃ et cet. | all in all] all-in-all Sta. Huds. |
| 94. Bad] Bid Q ₄ . Bade Johns, Steev. | in Spleene] a spleen Johns. conj. |
| et seq. | Cap. one spleen Lettsom conj. Huds. |
| returne.] retire , Qq. | 104. thou] Om. Cap. |
| heere speake] her speake Q ₃ . | 107. Iago.] sago . F ₃ . |
| 95. Do but] but Qq, Coll. Wh. i. | 108. But yet] But Q ₃ . |
| encaue] incaue Qq. | [Othello withdraws. Rowe. Othel- |
| 96. Fleeres] leeres Q ₁ . geeres Q ₂ Q ₃ . | lo conceals himself. Cap. |
| Gybes] fibes Q ₃ . | 109. Bianca.] Bianca ? Q ₃ . |
| 98. Tale] rale Q ₃ . | 111. Cloath] cloathes Qq. cloth F ₃ F ₄ , |
| 100. hath] has Qq. | Rowe+. clothes Steev.'93 et seq. |
| 101. gesture : marry] ieasture , mary | It is a Creature] Om. Q ₃ . |
| Qq. | |

93. scuses] WALKER (Crit. i, 239) cites this in the same article referred to at I, i, 31, adding 'it is possible that Shakespeare may have written 'scuses on.' Neither Walker nor his Editor noticed that this is the reading of all the Ff but the First. For the dropped prefix, see ABBOTT, § 460.

102. in Spleene] STEEVENS: We still say, such a one is in wrath, is the dumps, &c. The sense, therefore, is plain. DYCE (ed. iii): Lettsom suggests 'one spleen.'

110. Huswife] WHITE (ed. ii): Pronunciation, husif; sense, hussy.

111. It is] ROLFE: Used contemptuously, as in Rom. & Jul. IV, ii, 14.

That dotes on Cassio, (as 'tis the Strumpets plague 112
To be-guile many, and be be-guil'd by one)
He, when he heares of her, cannot refraine
From the exceſſe of Laughter. Heere he comes. 115

Enter Cassio.

As he ſhall ſmile, Othello ſhall go mad :
And his vnbookiſh Ielouſie muſt conſerue 118

113. be-guile ... be-guil'd] beguile ...
beguil'd QqF₃F₄.
114. refraine] Ff, Rowe, Sta. refraine
Qq et cet.

116. Enter...] After line 113, Qq. After wrong line 120, Dyce, Sta. Wh.
Scene III. Pope+, Jen.
118. conſerue] conſter Qq. conſtrue
Rowe et seq.

116. See note, III, iii, 383.

118. vnbookiſh] WHITER (p. 112), after citing many instances where Shakespeare has used the imagery of a book in connection with love, ends with the celebrated description of Cressida (Tro. & Cress. IV, v, 54) wherein Ulysses speaks of 'unclasping the tables of their thoughts To every ticklish reader;' and the same metaphor, Whiter is persuaded, Iago uses here. 'The "unbookish" jealousy of Othello,' says Whiter, 'is that which confounds his knowledge in the Books of LOVE, and blinds his discernment respecting the language of LOVERS. It will cause him to mistake the artless smiles and gestures of Cassio for the significant expressions of amorous parley. Whether our Poet intended to comprehend the whole of this meaning, I am not able to decide: I am convinced, however, that this remote epithet "unbookish," as applied to jealousy, was suggested to his mind by the above very singular imagery of the Lover and the Book.' WALKER (Crit. iii, 289) noticed what had escaped Whiter, that 'unbookish' is connected with 'construe,' but when he adds that 'it is explained by it,' he does not take me wholly with him. 'Unbookish' is certainly used here in an unusual sense; it is as though there were Books of Jealousy, like Saviolo's Practise of Honorable Quarrels, which should guide Othello, but did not. WARBURTON's explanation, followed by Dyce and others, that it is equivalent to ignorant, is scarcely sufficient. The use of 'bookish' in the first scene of this play, in its manifest meaning (where Iago talks of the 'bookish Theoric'), shows that more is meant by 'unbookish' than mere lack of knowledge or of skill. Until a better can be given, Whiter's explanation seems the nearest, viz.: that Shakespeare having so frequently compared love and lovers to books, here, by the association of ideas, makes Othello's misconstruction of Cassio's smiles due to Othello's lack of learning in the books of love.—ED.

118. conserue] This is a mere misprint, of one letter, for construe, which is spelled in the Qq as it was probably pronounced. It is spelled conster in the Ff Twelfth Night, II, i, 54; thus also in F₁F₂F₃, Tam. of Shr. III, i, 30 and 40; constered in Qq Merry Wives, I, iii, 42; consture in Love's Lab. V, ii, 341; consters in R. of L. 324, and conster in Pass. Pil. 14, 8; construe in all other instances, viz.: Two Gent. I, ii, 56; Ff Merry Wives, I, iii, 42; Ff Love's Lab. V, ii, 341; Jul. Cas. I, ii, 44; I, iii, 34; II, i, 307; 2 Hen. IV. IV, i, 103. Collier, in all honesty doubtless, says that F₁ has conserve, which shows how necessary it is to have the ipsissima litera of the original text in sight, where the u's are not converted to v's. DYCE (Remarks, p. 54, note on the

- Poore Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaiours
Quite in the wrong. How do you Lieutenant? 120
Cas. The worser, that you giue me the addition,
Whose want euen killes me.
Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't :
Now, if this Suit lay in Bianca's dowre,
How quickly should you speed? 125
Cas. Alas poore Caitiffe.
Oth. Looke how he laughes already.
Iago. I neuer knew woman loue man so.
Cas. Alas poore Rogue, I thinke indeed she loues me.
Oth. Now he denies it faintly : and laughes it out. 130
Iago. Do you heare Cassio ?
Oth. Now he importunes him
To tell it o're : go too, well said, well said.
Iago. She giues it out, that you shall marry her.
Do you intend it? 135
Cas. Ha, ha, ha.
Oth. Do ye triumph, Romaine ? do you triumph? 137

119. Poore] Owr Theob. conj. (withdrawn).
behaiours] Ff, Rowe. behaviour
Qq et cet.
120. you] Ff, Rowe. you now Qq et
cet.

Lieutenant] Leutenant Qq.

121. worser] worfe Q₃.

giue] gave Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.

123. on't] of't Mal. Steev.'93, Var.

124. [Speaking lower. Rowe.

dowre] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sta. Del. power Qq et cet.

126. Caitiffe] catine Qq.

127, 130, 132, 137, 141, 145, 149, 154,
158, 176. As Aside, Theob. Warb. et seq.

128. woman] Ff, Knt, Coll. Dyce i, Sta.
Wh. Glo. Del. Rife. a woman Qq et cet.

129. indeed] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Steev.
'85, Knt. ifaiith Q₁ et cet.

130. it out] out Pope +.

132, 133. Now...o're] One line, Qq.

132. importunes] in portunes Q₃.

133. it o're] it on Q₂ Q₃. it out Q₃.

go too] go to Qq Ff.

well said, well said] well said Qq.

137. Do ye] Ff, Rowe, Pope. Doe you
Qq et cet.

Mer. of Ven. II, ii) says that the form misconster is common in our early writers, and gives several instances.—ED.

119. behaiours] See I, i, 31, or WALKER (Crit. i, 241).

124. dowre] KNIGHT: Dower in the sense of gift. COLLIER: The letter d having been turned in the Folio, 'power' there became dower. DELIUS thinks that 'dower' accords better with what Iago afterwards insinuates, viz.: 'she gives it out that you shall marry her.'

133. well said] See II, i, 192.

137. Romaine] WARBURTON: Never was a more ridiculous blunder than the word 'Roman.' Shakespeare wrote rogue, which, being obscurely written, the editors mistook for Rome, and so made Roman of it. JOHNSON: Othello calls him 'Roman'

- Caf.* I marry. What? A customer; prythee beare 138
Some Charitie to my wit, do not thinke it
So vnwholefome. Ha, ha, ha. 140
Oth. So, so, so, so: they laugh, that winnes.
Iago. Why the cry goes, that you marry her.
Caf. Prythee fay true.
Iago. I am a very Villaine else.
Oth. Haue you scoar'd me? Well. 145

138-140. I...ha.] Two lines, ending wis...ha. Q₂. Three lines, ending Custom- er...wis...ha. Q₂Q₃, Walker. Prose, Pope
et seq.

138. I marry.] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.
Knt. I marry her? Qq et cet.

What? A Customer? Om. Q₂.

prythee? I prythee Qq, Jen. Steev.

Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Cam.
Del.

141. So, so, so, so] So, so F₂F₃, Rowe +.
they laugh] laugh Q₂, Cap.
winnes] Ff. wins Q₂Q₃, Cap.

wines Q₂, win F₂, Rowe et cet.

142. Why] FfQ₂Q₃, Rowe +, Cap.
Steev.'85, Knt. Faith Q₂ et cet.

that you] F₂, Knt. you shall
Q₂. that you shall Q₂Q₃F₂F₃, Rowe et
cet.

marry] merry Q₂.

144. very] Om. Han.

145. Haue...me?] Om. Coll. (MS).

Haue] Ha Qq.

scoar'd me? Well.] scor'd me well.

Q₂. scoar'd me; well. Ff. scor'd me? Well.
Theob. ii et seq.

ironically. 'Triumph,' which was a Roman ceremony, brought Roman into his thoughts. 'What!' says he, 'you are now triumphing as great as a Roman?' COLLIER (ed. ii): The (MS.) informs us that for 'Roman' we ought to substitute d'er me. This may be so, and the reason for 'Roman,' in reference to 'triumph,' is not obvious; but as the change is somewhat violent, and in no respect compulsory, we do not make it. PURNELL: Shakespeare had been studying for the Roman plays about this time.

138. customer] JOHNSON: A common woman, one that invites custom. WHITE (ed. ii): Both Iago and Cassio are led by the occasion to make out Bianca worse, or at least lower in condition, than she was. WISE, in his Glossary appended to his Shakespeare and his Birthplace, gives this word as in use in this sense among the peasantry of Warwickshire at this day.

139. Charitie] WALKER (Vers. 201): The i in -ity is almost uniformly dropped in pronunciation. See also III, iii, 295.

141. winnes] See I, iii, 312.

145. scoar'd] JOHNSON: Have you made my reckoning? have you settled the term of my life? STEEVENS: To score originally meant no more than to cut a notch upon a tally, or to mark out a form by indenting it on any substance. But it was soon figuratively used for setting a brand or mark of disgrace on any one, and it is employed in this sense here. COLLIER (ed. ii): In view of the reading of the Qq, we cannot be by any means sure that 'scored' is the true lection; possibly some other word ought to be substituted. The sense usually attached to the phrase has been: Have you marked me like a beast, which you have made me, by giving me horns. STAUNTON: That is, branded, unless the word is a misprint. DELIUS: Othello applies to Desdemona Iago's words, 'you shall marry her,' and asks, 'Have you made out my reckoning? Are you finished with me?' it is not until Othello is out of the way that a marriage with her is possible. HUDSON: I am not clear as to the meaning of this. To score was to

- Caf.* This is the Monkeys owne giuing out: 146
 She is perfwaded I will marry her
 Out of her owne loue & flattery, not out of my promise.
Oth. Iago becomes me : now he begins the story. [330 a] Cassio. She was heere euen now : she haunts me in e- 150 uery place. I was the other day talking on the Sea-banke with certaine Venetians, and thither comes the Bauble, and falls me thus about my neck.
Oth. Crying oh deere Cassio, as it were: his iesture imports it. 155
Cassio. So hangs, and lolls, and weepes vpon me :
 So shakes, and pulls me. Ha, ha, ha.
Oth. Now he tells how she pluckt him to my Chamber : oh, I see that nose of yours, but not that dogge, I shall throw it to. 160
Cassio. Well, I must leaue her companie.
Iago. Before me : looke where she comes. 162

- 146-148. Prose, Qq, Pope et seq.
 146. Monkeys] monkies QqF₃F₄.
 149. becomes] becoms F₃. beckon's F₃.
beckons QqF₄ et cet.
 151. the other] tother Qq, Jen.
 152. thither] theither Q₃.
comes the] comes this Qq, Jen. Var.
 Coll. i, Wh. i.
 153. and...thus] by this hand she fals
thus Q₃, Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. fals me
thus Q₃. and, by this hand, she falls me thus Coll. Wh. Del. Glo. Cam. Rlf. neck.] FfQq, Jen. neck—Rowe. neck : Cap.
 154. iesture] gesture Q₃Q₃Ff.
 156, 157. Prose, Qq, Pope et seq.
 156. lolls] iolls Q₃. jolls Q₃.
 157. shakes] Ff, Rowe +, Knt. hals Q₃. hales Q₃Q₃ et cet.
pulls] pu Q₃. puls Q₃.
 158-160. Two lines, ending chamber...
to. Qq. Three, ending chamber...dog...
to. Ktly.
 159. oh, I] I Qq.
but not] but now Ff.
 160. throw it] throw't Qq, Jen.
 162, 164. Iago, Caf.] Om. Q₃Q₃.

cut notches in a stick, and accounts were formerly kept by scoring the items thus in what were called tally-sticks. In All's Well, IV, iii, we have the line, 'After he scores, he never pays the score'; and the context there shows the meaning to be, that when he has sworn a woman into granting his wish, he never keeps his oaths; or what the Poet elsewhere calls 'beguiling virgins with the brokens seals of perjury.' So, in the text, the meaning may be, 'Have you run up an account against me, which I must pay? very well, I'll see you paid.' Or it may be, 'Have you squared the account with me for cashiering you?'

159. nose . . . dogge] DEIGHTON (p. 62): I see your nose, which I shall soon tear from your face and fling to the first dog that comes in my way.

162. Before me] SCHMIDT interprets this as equivalent to 'by my soul,' and refers to Twelfth Night, II, iii, 194. PURNELL considers it as a euphemism for 'before God,' and refers to Cor. I, i, 124.

Enter Bianca.

163

Caf. 'Tis such another Fitchew: marry a perfum'd one? What do you meane by this haunting of me?

165

Bian. Let the diuell, and his dam haunt you: what did you meane by that same Handkerchiefe, you gaue me euen now? I was a fine Foole to take it: I must take out the worke? A likely piece of worke, that you should finde it in your Chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some Minxes token, & I must take out the worke? There, giue it your Hobbey-horse, wherefoeuer you had it, Ile take out no worke on't.

170

Cassio. How now, my sweete Bianca?

How now? How now?

175

Othe. By Heauen, that should be my Handkerchiefe.

Bian. If you'le come to supper to night you may, if you will not, come when you are next prepar'd for. Exit Iago. After her: after her.

Caf. I must, shee'l rayle in the streets else.

180

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cassio. Yes, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you: for I would ver-ry faine speake with you.

Caf. Prythee come: will you?

185

163. Enter...] After line 161, Qq. After line 164, Dyce.

Scene IV. Pope +, Jen.

164. Caf.] Om. Q₂.

Fitchew] ficho Q₂.

164, 165. one? What] one, what Q₂. one: What Q₂Q₃F₃F₄.

167, 176, 190. Handkerchiefe] handkercher Q₂. Handkerchiffe or Hankerchiffe F₃.

169. the worke] the whole worke Q₂, Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

170. know not] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Knt, Coll. Sta. Wh. i, Del. not know Qq et cet.

171. worke?] worke; Qq, Han. work! Knt, Sing. Sta.

172. it your] it the Qq, Jen.

174, 175. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.

177. If...if] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Sing. Ktly. An...an Qq et cet.

180. I must] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Steev. '85, Knt. Faith I must Q₂ et cet.

in the i' the Qq, Cap. Jen.

streets] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Sta. Wh. i. streete Q₂. street Q₂Q₃ et cet.

181. Will...there?] You sup there. Q₂Q₃. You sup there? Johns.

182. Yes,] FfQ₂Q₃, Rowe +, Cap. Jen. Steev.'85, Knt, Dyce iii, Huds. Faith Q₂ et cet.

185. Prythee] Preethee Q₂. Prethee Q₂Q₃. Prethee F₃. Prithes F₄.

164. such another] See SCHMIDT (s. v. another), for other instances of this kindly contemptuous phrase, to which Schmidt gives as equivalent the German 'auch so eine.

164. Fitchew] DYCE (Gloss.): A polecat, and the cant term for a strumpet. [The Qq give what was probably the pronunciation. Cotgrave has Fissau.—ED.]

172. Hobbey-horse] DYCE (Gloss.): An abandoned woman.

- Iago.* Go too : say no more. 186
Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago.
Iago. Did you perceive how he laugh'd at his vice?
Oth. Oh, Iago.
Iago. And did you see the Handkerchiefe? 190
Oth. Was that mine?
Iago. Yours by this hand : and to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife : she gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.
Oth. I would have him nine yeeres a killing : 195
A fine woman, a faire woman, a sweete woman?
Iago. Nay, you must forget that.
Othello. I, let her rot and perish, and be damn'd to night, for she shall not live. No, my heart is turn'd to stone : I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Oh, the world 200 hath not a sweeter Creature : she might live by an Emperours side, and command him Taskes. 202

186. too : say] to, say Q₁. to say Q₂Q₃. to ; say Ff.

more.] more. Exit Cassio. Qq. more. Exit. Ff.

Scene V. Pope+, Jen.

[Coming hastily from his concealment. Cap. Advancing. Coll.

187. murder] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt,
Wh. i, Rlf. murder Qq, Johns. et cet.

Iago.] Iago? QqF₃F₄, Rowe et
seq.

188. laugh'd] laughed Qq.

189. Iago.] Iago. Q₂.

192-194. Om. Qq.

195, 196. Prose, Qq, Cap. Jen. Coll. et seq.

196. woman ?] woman. Qq. woman !—
Rowe et seq.

197. forget that.] forget. Q₁. forget that Q₂Q₃.

198. I,] And Qq. Ay, Rowe et seq.
damn'd] dam'd Qq.

200. stone] a stone Q₂Q₃.

201. hath] has Qq.

192-194. JENNENS: The omission of this speech in Q₁ evidently appears to be a blunder of the compositors; for Othello's speech, 'Was that mine?' concludes the page; and the catchword to the next page is Iag., which shows that this speech of Iago was in the MS.; otherwise the catchwords would have been 'I would.'

195. a killing] See ABBOTT, § 24, for instances of a- before verbal nouns where it represents on; as here, 'nine years on, or in the act of killing.'

198-202. This speech is assuredly metric prose. In moments of wild passion the least restraints of verse, even to Shakespeare it seems, are choking, yet the phrases will fall rhythmically. I cannot find that any one has ever attempted to cut it up into lines, and yet WALKER (Crit. ii, 23) says that 'creature,' in line 201, is 'probably a dissyllable' where the innuendo is that it occurs in verse. To my ear 'creature' is better.—ED.

200. stone . . . hand] STEEVENS: This thought, as often as it occurs to Shakespeare, is sure to be received, and as often counteracts his pathos. See Ant. & Clea IV, ix, 16.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way. 203
Othe. Hang her, I do but say what she is : so delicate with her Needle : an admirable Musitian. Oh she will 205 sing the Sauagenesse out of a Beare : of so high and plenteous wit, and inuention ?
Iago. She's the worfe for all this.
Othe. Oh, a thousand, a thousand times :
And then of so gentle a condition ? 210
Iago. I too gentle.
Othe. Nay that's certaine :
But yet the pitty of it, Iago : oh Iago, the pitty of it
Iago. [330 b]
Iago. If you are so fond ouer her iniquitie : giue her 215 pattent to offend, for if it touch not you, it comes neere no body.
Oth. I will chop her into Messes : Cuckold me ?
Iago. Oh, 'tis foule in her. 219

204. do but] do not Q₂Q₃.
206. high and] high a Ff, Rowe.
206, 207. plenteous] plentious Q₂F₃.
plentions Q₃.
207. inuention] inuention. Qq. in- vention!—Rowe.
209, 210. Prose, Qq, Cap. et seq.
209. Oh, a] A Qq.
thousand, a thousand] Ff,
Rowe+, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Del.
thousand-thousand Sta. Dyce iii, Huds.
thousand thousand Qq et cet.
210. a condition] a condition. Q₂Q₃.
Jen. a condition, Q₃. condition! Pope+.
a condition! Cap. et seq.
212–214. One line, Qq. Prose, Cap. et seq.
212. Nay] I Q₂.
213, 214. oh Iago, ... Iago.] the pitty. Q₂.
oh the pitty. Q₂Q₃, Jen.
215. you are] you be Qq, Cap. Jen.
216. touch] touches Qq, Cap.
218. Messes :] messes—Q₂. messes,— Q₂Q₃. messes. Johns. me] me! Qq.

203. your way] DEIGHTON (p. 63): That is, it won't do for you to let your thoughts dwell upon her many excellences, or you will be unmanned.

206. MALONE: So in V. & A. 1096: 'when he hath sung The tiger would be tame.'

210. condition] See II, i, 282.

212. MRS JAMESON (ii, 35): Desdemona displays at times a transient energy, arising from the power of affection, but gentleness gives the prevailing tone to her character,—gentleness in its excess,—gentleness verging on passiveness,—gentleness which not only cannot resent, but cannot resist. Here in this passage the exceeding softness of Desdemona's temper is turned against her by Iago, so that it suddenly strikes Othello in a new point of view, as the inability to resist temptation; but to us, who perceive the character as a whole, this extreme gentleness of nature is yet delineated with such exceeding refinement that the effect never approaches to feebleness. It is true that once her extreme timidity leads her, in a moment of confusion and terror, to prevaricate about the fatal handkerchief.

216. pattent] See CHALMERS, on Date of Composition, in Appendix.

Oth. With mine Officer?

220

Iago. That's fouler.

Othe. Get me some poyson, Iago, this night. Ile not expostulate with her : leaft her body and beautie vnprouide my mind againe : this night Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poyson, strangle her in her bed,
Euen the bed she hath contaminated. 225

Oth. Good, good :
The Iustice of it pleases : very good.

Iago. And for Cassio, let me be his vndertaker :

You shall heare more by midnight. 230

Enter Lodouico, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Othe. Excellent good : What Trumpet is that fame?

Iago. I warrant something from Venice,
'Tis Lodouico, this, comes from the Duke.
See, your wife's with him. 235

220. Officer F] Officer. Qq. officer!
Rowe.

222. night. Ile] night Ile Qq.

223. beautie] her beauty F, F, Rowe+.

224. againc:] agen, Qq.

225, 226. Prose, Qq, Cap. Steev. et seq.

225. her in] here in Q.

226. Euen] Euen in Pope+.

227, 228. One line, Qq; or prose, Cap.
et seq.

228. pleases: very] pleases very Q. pleases, very Q₂ Q₃.

229, 230. Prose, Qq, Cap. Steev. Mal.
Var. Dyce, Sta. Glo. Cam.

230. midnight.] midnight. A Trumpet.
Qq.

230. [A trumpet within. Theob. After good. line 232, Dyce.

Scene VI. Pope. After line 233, Han.
After line 235, Warb. Johns. Jen.

231. Enter...] After Lodouico line 234,
Cap. After line 235, Steev.

232. Two lines, Qq.

233-235. I...him.] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Knt. Something from Venice sure, (sure ;
Q₂. sure Q₃) tis Lodouico, Come from the Duke, and see your wife is with him. Qq et cet. (subs.). I warrant you 'tis some- thing come from Venice. Oh ! it is Lodouico from the Duke. And see your wife is with him. Han.

234. this, comes] F, Knt. this comes
F, F, Rowe, Pope.

222-229. WALKER (Crit. i, 11) thus divides these lines: 'I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body | And beauty unprovide my mind again: | This night, Iago. | Do't not with poison, strangle her in her bed, | Even the bed she hath contaminated. | Good, good: | The justice of it pleases; very good. | And, | For Cassio, let me be his undertaker.' | But the latter part is very doubtful. DYCE (Rem. 241) anticipated Walker as regards 225, 226. 'This speech,' says Dyce, '(printed by all the modern editors as prose) is, I suspect, two lines of blank verse.'

223. vnprouide] ROLFE: Used by Shakespeare only here.

233-235. According to WALKER (Vers. 65), 'warrant' is a monosyllable, and (Crit. i, 223) something is pronounced something. [The lines in the Qq are smoother.—Ed.]

Lodo. Saue you worthy Generall. 236
Othe. With all my heart Sir.
Lod. The Duke, and the Senators of Venice greet you.
Othe. I kisse the Instrumēt of their pleasures.
Def. And what's the newes, good cozen Lodouico? 240
Iago. I am very glad to see you Signior:
Welcome to Cyprus.
Lod. I thanke you : how do's Lieutenant Cassio?
Iago. Liues Sir,
Def. Cozen, there's falne betweene him, & my Lord, 245
An vnkind breach : but you shall make all well.
Othe. Are you fure of that?
Def. My Lord?
Othe. This faile you not to do, as you will——
Lod. He did not call : he's bufie in the paper, 250
Is there deuision 'twixt my Lord, and Cassio?
Def. A most vnhappy one : I would do much
T'attone|them for the loue I beare to Cassio. 253

236. Saue you] God save the Q., Jen.
God save you Mal.

238. the Senators] Ff, Rowe, Pope,
Theob. Warb. Johns. Senators Qq, Han.
Cap. et seq.

[Gives him a letter. Rowe.

239. pleasures] good pleasures Han.
Cap.

[Opens and peruses it. Cap.

241, 242. One line, Q., Cap. I... Wel- come One line, Ktly.

241. very] Om. Cap.

241. Signior :] Seignior :— Q₂ Q₂.

243. you] you, sir Cap.

244. Sir,] sir. Q₂, Ff.

247. [Aside. Theob. Warb.

248. Lord f] Lord. Qq.

249. [Reads. Theob. et seq.

will—] will.— Q₂ Q₂.

251. 'twixt my] betweene thy Q₂. 'twixt thy Cap. Steev. Mal. Var.

253. T'attone] Ff, Rowe +, Wh. i, Dyce
iii, Huds. To attone Qq et cet.

237. MALONE: This does not relate to what Lodovico has just said, but is spoken by Othello while he salutes him. STEEVENS: I know not how the meaning of this speech can be ascertained, unless by reference to the salutation of Lodovico. The distracted Othello, considering his own happiness at an end in this world, readily catches at the idea of future felicity suggested by the words: 'Save you, general!' In his reply, therefore, he must be supposed to welcome the pious wish expressed in his behalf. In Meas. for Meas. II, ii, 157, two replies of Angelo, equally equivocal, are derived from similar premises: 'Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe! Ang. Amen!' Again, at the conclusion of the same scene: 'Isab. 'Save your honour! Ang. From thee: even from thy virtue!' If it be urged that 'save you' only means preserve you in this world, my sense of the passage will not be much weakened: as our protection, even 'here, upon this bank and shoal of time,' depends on the Almighty.

253. attone] JOHNSON: Make them one; reconcile them HENLEY: The verb is formed by the coalescence of the words at one.

Oth. Fire, and brimstone.
Def. My Lord. 255
Oth. Are you wise?
Def. What is he angrie?
Lod. May be thLetter mou'd him.
For as I thinke, they do command him home,
Deputing Cassio in his Gouvernment. 260
Def. Trust me, I am glad on't.
Othe. Indeed?
Def. My Lord?
Othe. I am glad to see you mad.
Def. Why, fweete Othello? 265
Othe. Diuell.

254. brimstone] Brimstone QqF, F₄.
255. Lord.] Lord! Pope.
258. May be] 'May be, Theob.
261. Trust me] By my troth Q₂, Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly, Cam.
I am] I'm Steev.'93.
262. Indeed?] Indeed. Qq. Indeed! Rowe.
263. Lord?] Lord. Qq. Lord! Rowe.
265. Why] How Qq, Jen. Mal. Steev
Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly.
Othello?] Othello—Glo.
266. [Striking her. Theob.

256. Oth.] FECHTER gives this speech to Iago, directing him to seize the arm of Othello across the table and stop him violently. Othello, 'rising furiously,' had just uttered line 254. [Much as I dislike the Porte St. Martin, or Bowery, style of Fechter's Othello, I must confess that here his suggestion strikes me as worthy of consideration. There is no small degree of propriety in representing the cool Iago as recalling Othello to his senses; and even if Iago's attempt be obtrusive or unmilitary, it is, perhaps, a less dramatic fault than what might seem the anticlimax of a sedate expostulation, addressed to Desdemona after the furious explosion, 'Fire and brimstone.'—ED.]

259. THEOBALD: Othello is but just arrived at Cyprus; the Senate could hardly yet have heard of the Ottoman fleet being scattered by the tempest; and Othello is at once remanded home, without any imputation suggested on his conduct, or any hint of his being employed in a more urgent Commission. Tis true, the deputation of Cassio in his room seems designed to heighten the Moor's resentment; but some probable reason should have been assigned for his recall. As to what Iago says afterwards, that Othello is to go to Mauritania, this is only a lie of his own invention to carry his point with Roderigo. LLOYD: The news that Othello is superseded recalls the impressions of the judicial deliberations of the Venetian Senate in the First Act, and seems to complete the proof of the infallible instincts of the statesmen.

264. COWDEN-CLARKE: We cannot help thinking that the author probably wrote, 'I am mad to see you glad.' But we have not ventured to alter the text; because Othello's reply, as it stands, allows the meaning to be understood of 'I am glad to see you unwise,' in reference to his having asked, 'Are you wise?'

265. Othello?] DANIEL (p. 79): This speech should be marked as exclamatory. It is one of the innumerable instances where the printers use the '?' for the '!'

266. That THEOBALD added the proper stage direction here there can be, unfortu-

Def. I haue not deferu'd this. 267

Lod. My Lord, this would not be beleeu'd in Venice,
Though I should sweare I saw't. 'Tis very much,
Make her amends : she weepes. 270

Othe. Oh diuell, diuell :
If that the Earth could teeme with womans teares,
Each drop she falls, would proue a Crocodile :
Out of my sight.

Def. I will not stay to offend you. 275

Lod. Truly obedient Lady :

I do beseech your Lordship call her backe.

Othe. Miftris. [331 a]

Def. My Lord.

Othe. What would you with her, Sir? 280

Lod. Who I, my Lord?

Othe. I, you did wish, that I would make her turne :
Sir, she can turne, and turne : and yet go on
And turne againe. And she can weepe, Sir, weepe.
And she's obedient : as you say obedient. 285
Very obedient : proceed you in your teares.

269. saw't] saw it Steev. Mal. Var.	275. to offend] t'offend Pope +, Dyce
Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del.	iii, Huds.
much] much ; Theob. much .	[Going. Rowe.
Johns.	276. Truly] Fl, Rowe. Truly an Qq
272. womans] womens Qq.	et cet.
273. Crocodile] crocodile Qq.	282. I,] I / Rowe, Pope. Ay , Theob.
	285. she's] she is Q ₃ .

nately, no doubt. This blow is the ineffaceable blot in Othello's history which leaves, upon me at least, a more painful impression than even the smothering. This, is simply the rage of a coward; that, is an act of supposed justice. FECHTER strikes with the letter which he holds; this is a shade better than the backhanded blow which SALVINI delivers full on those sweet lips, and which makes your own lips grow white as death, at the sight.—ED.

272. teeme] JOHNSON: If women's tears could impregnate the earth. By the doctrine of equivocal generation, new animals were supposed producible by new combinations of matter. See Bacon, vol. iii, p. 70, ed. 1740. MALONE: 'It is written,' says Bullokar, 'that the crocodile will weepe ouer a man's head when he hath deuoured the body, and then will eate vp the head two. Wherefore in Latine there is a proverbe, Crocodili Lachryma, crocodiles teares, to signifie such teares as are fained, and spent onely with intent to deceiue or doe harme.'—Expositor, 1621.

273. falls] For other instances of intransitive verbs used transitively, see ABBOTT, § 291.

286. teares.] WARNER suggests an interrogation-mark: 'What! will you still continue to be a hypocrite by a display of this well-painted passion?'

Concerning this Sir, (oh well-painted passion) 287
 I am commanded home : get you away :
 Ile send for you anon. Sir I obey the Mandate,
 And will returne to Venice. Hence, auant : 290
Cassio shall haue my Place. And Sir, to night
 I do entreat, that we may sup together.
 You are welcome Sir to Cyprus.
 Goates, and Monkeys. Exit.
Lod. Is this the Noble Moore, whom our full Senate 295
 Call all in all sufficient ? Is this the Nature Whom Passion could not shake ? Whose solid vertue
 The shot of Accident, nor dart of Chance 298

288. home :] here :—Q₁. home :—Q₂
 Q₂. home—Rowe.
 289. anon.] anon :—Q₁Q₂. anone :—
 Q₃. anon—Rowe.
Mandate] mandat Qq.
 290. Venice.] Venice :—Qq.
auant :] auant, Qq. auant!—
 Rowe.
 [Exit Desd. Rowe.
 293, 294. One line, Qq, Cap. et seq.
 293. You are] You're Cap.
Cyprus.] Cypres,—Qq.

Scene VII. Pope+, Jen.
 296. all in all] QqFf, Rowe, Jen. Glo.
 Cam. Rlf, Wh. ii. all-in-all Pope et cet.
Is this the] This the noble Qq, Jen.
 Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly. this the Pope+, Cap. Coll. ii, Cam.
 297. Whom] Which Pope+.
 298. Accident] accidents Jen.
nor] or Han.
Chance] Change Warb. conj
 Theob.

290. FECHTER : Othello, finding in the dispatch the name of 'Cassio,' which he mutters, tears it violently, and turns in his rage to Desdemona, who shrinks affrighted.

291. Place] STEEVENS : Perhaps this is addressed to Desdemona, who had just expressed her joy on hearing Cassio was deputed in the room of her husband.

294. MALONE : Iago, in III, iii, 464, alludes to 'goates' and 'monkeyes' where he says that ocular proof of Cassio's and Desdemona's guilt was impossible. These words, we may suppose, still ring in Othello's ears. STEEVENS : A reference to a distant scene but ill agrees with the infuriation of Othello's mind. His fancy, haunted by still growing images of lewdness, would scarce have expressed his feelings in recollected phraseology. BOSWELL : They were words which he was not likely to have forgotten. FECHTER : Aside,—and as if comprising the whole world in a bitter sarcasm. As he goes out he casts a last infuriated glance at Desdemona's door.

296. Is this the] DYCE (Rem. 242) : The word noble in the Qq was undoubtedly inserted by a mistake of the compositor, his eye having caught it from the preceding line.

298. THEOBALD : I cannot see, for my heart, the difference betwixt the shot of accident and dart of chance. The words, and things they imply, are purely synonymous ; but that the Poet intended two different things seems plain from the discretive adverb. Chance may afflict a man in some circumstances ; but other distresses are to be accounted for from a different cause. I am persuaded our Author wrote : 'nor dart of change.' In several other places he industriously puts these two words in opposition to each other. HEATH (p. 569) : There is no occasion for Theobald's alteration.

Could neither graze, nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

300

Lod. Are his wits safe? Is he not light of Braine?

Iago. He's that he is: I may not breath my cenfure.

What he might be: if what he might, he is not,

I would to heauen he were.

Lod. What? Strike his wife?

305

Iago. 'Faith that was not so well: yet would I knew

That stroke would proue the worst.

Lod. Is it his vfe?

Or did the Letters, worke vpon his blood,

And new create his fault?

310

Iago. Alas, alas:

It is not honestie in me to speake

312

- | | |
|--|---|
| 299. graze] raze Warb. Theob. Han. | be ,— or be , Rowe et cet. |
| 300. chang'd] changed Qq. | 303. if what] FfQ ₂ Q ₃ , Rowe+, Jen. |
| 301. light of] of light Ff, Rowe, Pope. | Sing. Wh. Ktly, Glo. Cam. Huds. Rlfe. |
| 302. He's] He is Steev. Mal. Var. Knt. | if as Q ₂ . if, what Cap. et cet. |
| He's — Sta. | 305. What? ... wife?] What, ... wife. |
| that] what Pope+. | Qq. What, ... wife? Ff. What, ... wife! |
| breath] F ₂ Q ₂ Q ₃ , Rowe, Cap. | Rowe ii et seq. |
| breathe Q ₂ F ₃ F ₄ , Pope et cet. | 308. Is it] It is Q ₃ . |
| cenfure .] cenfure , Qq. censure | 310. new create] new-creates Pope et |
| Jen. Cam. Wh. ii. censure : Coll. iii. | seq. |
| 303. be.] Ff, Jen. Cam. Wh. ii. be , Qq. | his] Ff, Rowe, Knt. this Qq et cet. |

'Accident' is commonly used to denote personal calamities; 'chance,' to distinguish those in which we are involved in consequence of more general revolutions of fortune.

299. graze] WARBURTON: 'Tis no commendation to the most solid virtue to be free from the attacks of fortune, but that it is so impenetrable as to suffer no impression. Now, to 'graze' signifies only to touch the superficies of anything. That is the attack of fortune; and by that virtue is try'd, but not discredited. We ought certainly, therefore, to read raze, i. e., neither lightly touch upon nor pierce into. The ignorant transcribers being acquainted with the phrase of a bullet grazing, and 'shot' being mention'd in the line before, they corrupted the true word. JOHNSON: To 'graze' is not merely to touch superficially, but to strike not directly, not so as to bury the body of the thing striking in the matter struck. Theobald trifles, as is usual. 'Accident' and 'chance' may admit a subtle distinction; 'accident' may be considered as the act, and 'chance' as the power or agency of Fortune; as, It was by chance that this accident befel me. At least, if we suppose all corrupt that is inaccurate, there will be no end of emendation. MALONE: I do not see the least ground for supposing any corruption. As 'pierce' relates to 'the dart of chance,' so 'graze' is referred to 'the shot of accident.

302, 303. That the punctuation of these lines is puzzling may be inferred from the fact that the Cambridge Editors, in 1866, did not follow their own punctuation of 1864. I do not think that the F₂ can be much improved.—ED.

306, 307. yet . . . worst] PURNELL: Probably this is an aside.

What I haue feene, and knowne. You fhall obferue him, 313
 And his owne courfes will deonte him fo,
 That I may faue my fpeech : do but go after 315
 And marke how he continues.

Lod. I am forry that I am deceiu'd in him. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Emilia.

Othe. You haue feene nothing then? 3

313. him] Om. Q₂Q₃.

1. Scena...] Scene VIII. Pope +, Jen.

314. deonte] denote QqFf.

An Apartment. Rowe. A room in the 315. after] after him Q₂Q₃, Jen.

Castle. Mal.

317. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds.

3. then ?] then. Qq.

that I am] that I was Han.

317. FECHTER: They go out as following Othello; who, as soon as they are out of sight, appears from the tapestry on the left, bringing forward Emilia, and speaks as continuing to interrogate. [Of course the Scene continues. Here begins BOOTH's Second Scene, Act Fourth.] LLOYD: When this Scene, in which the fainting Othello appears as the suffering and passive instrument of Iago, is left out in representation, the best acting in the world, or to be in the world, will not preserve the Scene in the bed-chamber from having, to well-ordered sympathies, all the shockingness of a contrived, cold-blooded murder.

Scena Secunda] MALONE: There are great difficulties in ascertaining the place of this Scene. Near the close of it, Iago says to Desdemona, 'Go in, and weep not,' which would lead us to place it in the court before Othello's castle. These words may, indeed, be explained to mean, 'Go into the supper-room' (though I do not think that the meaning); but immediately afterwards Roderigo enters and converses with Iago, which decisively ascertains the scene not to be in Othello's house; for Roderigo, who had given the first intelligence to Brabantio of his daughter's flight, and had shortly afterwards drawn his sword on Othello and his partisans, certainly would not take the liberty of walking into his house at pleasure. On the other hand, what Othello says early in the scene to Emilia, line 35, 'shut the door,' and his subsequent address to her as he goes out, as decisively point out a room in Othello's castle as the place of the Scene, and compel us to place the several interlocutors there, however inconsistent with Roderigo's entry and Iago's address to Desdemona. The truth is, that our poet and his audience, in this instance as in many others, were content, from want of scenery, to consider the very same spot, at one and the same time, as the outside and inside of a house. COWDEN-CLARKE: But if it be remembered that a portion of the mansion is used as a guard-room, it would be natural enough that Roderigo should seek Iago there, and, not finding him, should pursue his search in some of the apartments adjacent; moreover, it should be remembered that Roderigo is partially disguised, and therefore not likely to be recognized as the man who gave Brabantio intelligence of Othello's having married Desdemona.

3-5. WALKER (Crit. iii, 289): Arrange, perhaps,—'You have seen nothing then? Nor ever heard, | Nor ever did suspect. Yes, you have seen | Cassio and she together.' BOOTH: Othello should look her steadily in the eyes while questioning her with incredulous tones.

- Emil.* Nor euer heard : nor euer did suspect.
Othe. Yes, you haue seene Cassio, and she together. 5
Emi. But then I saw no harme : and then I heard,
Each syllable that breath made vp betweene them.
Othe. What? Did they neuer whisper?
Emil. Neuer my Lord.
Othe. Nor send you out o'th'way? 10
Emil. Neuer.
Othe. To fetch her Fan, her Gloues, her Mask, nor no-
Emil. Neuer my Lord. (thing?)
Othe. That's strange.
Emil. I durst (my Lord) to wager, she is honest: 15
Lay downe my Soule at stake : If you thinke other,
Remoue your thought. It doth abuse your bosome:
If any wretch haue put this in your head ,
Let Heauen requit it with the Serpents curse, 19

- | | |
|--|--|
| 5 Yes,] Yes, and Qq. | her gloues Qq. |
| 6 she] her Pope +, Coll. Wh. i, Ktly. | 12, 13. nothing?] nothing. Q_a. nothing, |
| 7 them] 'em Qq, Jen. | Q ₃ . |
| 8. What?] Ff, Rowe+. What! Coll. | 18. wretch] wretch Q₃. |
| Wh. i, Ktly. What, Qq et cet. | haue] ha Qq. hath F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe+, |
| 10. Nor] Never Q ₃ . | Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly. |
| 11. Neuer] Never, my lord. Ktly. | 19. Heauen] heavens Q ₃ . |
| 12. her Gloues, her Mask] her mask, | requit] requite Q ₃ Ff. require Q _a Q ₃ . |

5. she] See ABBOTT, § 211, and to the instances there given of this use of 'she' for her, add: 'the earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she,' Rom. & Jul. I, ii, 14. SCHMIDT also gives, 'she that was thy Lucrece,' R. of L. 1682; 'I will detest myself also as well as she,' Meas. for Meas. II, i, 76; 'She should this Angelo have married,' Jb. III, i, 221; 'but she I can hook to me,' Wint. Tale, II, iii, 6; 'for she that scorned at me, now scorned of me,' Rich. III. IV, iv, 102. WHITE (ed. ii): Mere carelessness; not the 'grammar' of Shakespeare's time.

12. Fan] HALLIWELL quotes from Fairholt that the most ordinary fan used by Venetian ladies was the flag or vane-shaped fan, moving round an upright handle.

12. nor] ELZE (Notes, &c. p. 189): Although this line, as far as my knowledge goes, has never been queried, yet I cannot but think it faulty; I feel certain that Shakespeare wrote, 'her mask, her nothing.' Compare Cor. II, ii, 81: 'To hear my nothings monster'd,' although it seems doubtful whether nothing is to be understood in the same sense in these two passages. Wint. Tale, I, ii, 295: 'nor nothing have these nothings, If this be nothing.'

15. durst . . . to] For other instances of the insertion and omission of to before the infinitive, see ABBOTT, § 349.

15-22. BOOTH: During this Othello is a little moved. He takes a chair from behind the arras and sits. ✓

16. other] For this adverbial use, equivalent to otherwise, see ABBOTT, § 12, p. 24.

For if she be not honest, chaste, and true, [331 b]
 There's no man happy. The purest of their Wives 21
 Is foule as Slander.

Othe. Bid her come hither : go. Exit Emilia.
 She saies enough : yet she's a simple Baud
 That cannot say as much. This is a subtile Whore : 25
 A Cloffet Lockeand Key of Villanous Secrets,
 And yet she'le kneele, and pray : I haue seene her do't.

Enter Desdemona, and Emilia.

Des. My Lord, what is your will ?
Othe. Pray you Chucke come hither. 30
Des. What is your pleasure ?
Oth. Let me see your eyes : looke in my face.
Des. What horrible Fancie's this ?
Othe. Some of your Function Mistris :
 Leaue Procreants alone, and shut the doore : 35
 Cough, or cry hem ; if any body come :
 Your Mystery, your Mystery : May dispatch. Exit Emi. 37

- | | |
|---|--|
| 21. their Wives] her Sex Q ₂ , Jen. | Scene IX. Pope +, Jen. |
| 23. Exit...] After Slander line 22, Qq. | 30. Pray you] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Sta. |
| 25. Whore] one Han. | Pray Qq et cet. |
| 26. Cloffet Lockeand Key] cloffet, locke | 32. eyes : looke] eyes—looke Qq, Jen. |
| and key , Qq. cloffet-lock and key Rowe, | eyes. Look Johns. |
| Pope. closet-lock-and-key Mal. Steev.'93, | 32, 33. looke...this f] As one line, Cap. |
| Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Dyce, Sta. Wh. i, | Steev. et seq. |
| Ktly, Del. Huds. | 34. [To Emilia . Han. Johns. et seq. |
| 27. I haue] I ha Qq. I've Pope +, | 36. Cough] Coffe Qq. |
| Dyce iii, Huds. | 37. May] nay QqFf. |
| 28. Enter...and] Reenter...with Cap. | Exit...] Om. Q ₂ Q ₃ . |

27. pray] HERAUD (p. 279) : Emilia's supposed hypocrisy embitters Othello both against her and her calumniated mistress. Perhaps, too, the poet intended his free-thoughted and noble Moor to entertain a customary protest against superstitious ceremonies ; and here we have a glimpse vouchsafed of his religious tendency. It is in this furtive manner that Shakespeare always alludes to the theological aspects of his theme. Never will he altogether neglect them ; but nowhere will he thoroughly unveil them. Both political and religious prudence are evidently observed by Shakespeare in the treatment of all his subjects. The spirit of the time compelled him to this reticence. [See HERAUD, III, iii, 67.]

32. BOOTH : She looks up, but, frightened by his piercing glare, drops her eyes again.

37. COWDEN-CLARKE : Othello taunts Emilia with having made a traffic in connivance at stolen meetings between Cassio and Desdemona, and now bids her give a specimen of her proficiency in her avocation. HUDSON : As in mere wantonness of self-torture, Othello here fondles the most agonizing conceptions, and seeks a morbid

Def. Vpon my knee, what doth your speech import? 38
 I vnderstand a Fury in your words.
Othe. Why ? What art thou ? 40
Def. Your wife my Lord : your true and loyall wife.
Othello. Come sweare it : damne thy selfe, leaft being like one of Heauen, the diuells themfelues should feare to ceaze thee. Therefore be double damn'd : sweare thou art honest. 45
Def. Heauen doth truely know it.
Othe. Heauen truely knowes, that thou art false as hell.
Def. To whom my Lord ?
 With whom ? How am I false ?
Othe. Ah Desdemona, away, away, away. 50
Def. Alas the heauy day : why do you weepe ?
 Am I the motiue of these teares my Lord ?
 If happily you my Father do suspect,
 An Instrument of this your calling backe, 54

38. knee] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. knees Qq
 et cet.

doth] does Qq.

39. words.] Ff, Rowe. words, But not the words. (As a separate line) Qq et cet.
 (your words Pope+).

40. Why ?] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Why, Qq
 et cet.

41, 42. your true...selfe] As one line,
 Cap. Steev. Mal. and...selfe as one line,
 Steev.'93, Var. Coll. Sing. Dyce, Wh. Glo.
 Ktly, Rlife.

42-45. Come...honest] Verse, lines ending selfe...themselues...damn'd...honest Qq, Cap. et seq. Three lines, ending one... thee...honest Rowe+, Jen.

42. least] Left Q₂Q₃. Om. Ff, Rowe.

44. ceaze] cease Qq. ceise F₃. seise F₄.
 47. Dividing the line at knowes Rowe+.

48, 49. One line, Qq, or prose, Cap. et seq.

50. Ah Desdemona.] Ff, Rowe, Pope,
 Knt, Dyce, Sta. Del. Huds. Ah, Desdemona! Theob. Han. Warb. Johns. Jen.
O Desdemona Wh. i, Coll. iii. O Desdemona, Qq et cet.

[Sits. Booth.

51. heauy] heavenly Q₃.

52. motiue] occasion Qq, Jen. Steev.
 Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly.

these] those Qq, Jen.

[Kneels beside him. Booth.

53. happely] F₃F₄. happily F₄, Rowe.
haply Qq et cet.

relief in thinking of Emilia as doing the office or mystery of a procuress. A masterstroke of delineation.

38. RYMER (p. 130): Here follows another storm of horror and outrage against the poor Chicken, his Wife. Some Drayman or drunken Tinker might possibly treat his drab at this sort of rate, and mean no harm by it; but for his excellency, a My Lord General, to Serenade a Senator's Daughter with such a volley of scoundrel filthy Language, is sure the most absurd Maggot that ever bred from any Poets addle brain.

43. Heauen] COWDEN-CLARKE: These few words serve to paint Desdemona's look of angelic purity, as well as the impression it creates, even on her husband's jaundiced sight.

50. Desdemona] See III, i, 58.

Lay not your blame on me : if you haue loft him, 55
I haue loft him too.

Othe. Had it pleas'd Heauen,
To try me with Affliction, had they rain'd
All kind of Sores, and Shames on my bare-head:
Steep'd me in pouertie to the very lippes, 60
Giuen to Captiuitie, me, and my vtmost hopes,
I should haue found in some place of my Soule
A drop of patience. But alas, to make me
The fixed Figure for the time of Scorne,
To point his slow, and mouing finger at. 65

55. you haue] you've Pope.
55, 56. loft...loft] left...left Q₁.
56. I] Why I Qq, Rowe et seq.
57. Heauen] heavens Johns. Ktly.
58. they] Ff, Johns. Dyce, Glo. Cam.
Ktly, Del. Rlfe, Wh. ii. it Han. he Qq
et cet.
rain'd] ram'd Q₁.
59. kin i] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Steev.'85.
kindes Q₁ Q₂, kinds Q₃ et cet.
on] no Q₂.
bare-head] bare head QqF₄.
61. Giuen] Give Q₂.
vtmost] Om. Qq, Pope, Theob.
Han. Warb.
62. place] part Qq, Cap. Mal. Steev.'93,
Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly. 63. drop] prop Theob. conj. withdrawn.
64. The fixed Figure] Ff, Knt, Dyce i, Sta. Del. A fixed figure, Qq et cet.
for...of] of...for Hunter, Sta. time] hand Rowe+, Cap. Jen. Coll.
ii.
65. slow, and mouing] Ff, Rowe, Pope,
Theob. Han. Knt, Dyce i, Sta. Del. cold
unmoving Cartwright. slow unmouing
Qq et cet.
finger] fingers Q₁.
at.] at— Rowe+, Knt, Sing. Dyce i, Sta. Del. Ktly. at; Coll. Wh. i. at!
Glo. Cam. Dyce iii, Huds. Rlfe, Wh. ii.
at—ah, ah, Qq, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var.
(O/O in separate line, Cap. Steev. Mal.
Var.).

57 et seq. BOOTH: With all the pathos you are capable of.

58. they] WALKER (Crit. ii, 110) shows that 'Heaven' is used as plural, by instances not alone from Shakespeare, but from Massinger, Beaumont and Fletcher, Shirley, Ford, and others. See Ham. III, iv, 173, 175.

64, 65. STEEVENS: We call the hour in which we are to die, 'the hour of death,'—the time when we are to be judged, 'the day of judgement,'—the instant when we suffer calamity, 'the moment of evil'; and why may we not distinguish the time which brings contempt along with it by the title of 'the time of scorn'? Othello takes his idea from a clock. 'To make me (says he) a fixed figure (on the dial of the world) for the hour of scorn to point and make a full stop at!' By 'slow unmoving finger' our poet could have meant only 'so slow that its motion was imperceptible.' Thus, in Ant. & Cleo. III, iii, 22, the messenger, describing the gait of the demure Octavia, says, 'she creeps; Her motion and her station are as one,' i. e., she moved so slowly that she appeared as if she stood still. MALONE: Might not Shakespeare have written 'for the scorn of time,' &c., i. e., the marked object for the contempt of all ages and all time? So in Ham. III, i, 70, 'the whips and scorns of time.' However, in support of the old copies it may be observed that 'scorn' is personified in the 88th Sonnet: 'And place my merit in the eye of scorn.' The epithet unmoving may likewise derive some support from the 104th Sonnet, in which this very thought is expressed: 'Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial-hand, Steal from his figure, and no pace perceiv'd; So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand, Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceiv'd.' In the clocks of the last age there was, I think, in the middle of the dial-plate, a figure of Time, which, I believe, was in our poet's thoughts when he wrote the passage in the text. The finger of the dial was the technical phrase. So in Albovine, by D'Avenant, 1629: 'Even as the slow finger of the dial Doth in its motion circular remove To distant figures.' The reading of F., 'and moving,' certainly agrees with the image presented, and its counterpart, better than unmoving, which can be applied to a clock only by license of poetry (not appearing to move), and as applied to 'scorn' has but little force, to say nothing of the superfluous epithet 'slow'; there needs no ghost to tell us that that which is unmoving is 'slow.' 'Slow' implies some sort of motion, however little it may be, and therefore appears to me to favour the reading of F., M. MASON: Perhaps we should read, 'slowly moving finger at.' HUNTER (ii, 287): I have little doubt that the particles 'of' and 'for' have changed places; and that, on the whole, the true reading is, 'The fixed figure of the time, for Scorn To point his slow and moving finger at.' It is of the nature of that feeling which leads a person to suppose himself an object of scorn and derision, to think of himself also as an object of universal attention. Thus, Othello represents to himself that he shall be 'the fixed figure of the time,' the one object of public attention, every passer-by pointing at him the finger of scorn. KNIGHT: There is certainly the most extraordinary confusion in Malone's interpretation; if the figure of Time be in the middle, the dial-hand points from it, and not at it, and there is nothing more remarkable in one numeral of a clock than in another. But why are we to have the notion of a clock at all? There is nothing whatever in the passage to warrant us in believing that the poet meant such a metaphor. By the 'fixed figure' we understand, literally, a living man exposed to public shame; or an effigy exhibited to a multitude, as Butler has it, 'To punish in effigie criminals.' By 'the time' we receive the same idea as in Ham. III, i, 70, where 'time' is used distinctly to express the times, the age; and it is used in the same way by Ben Jonson: 'Oh, how I hate the monstrosousness of time!' In the expression before us, then, the 'time of scorn' is the age of scorn. The 'slow finger' is the pausing finger, pointing at the fixed figure; but while it points it moves in mockery. Shakespeare was probably thinking of the Digitus Monstrari of the ancients, and it may be, also, of the finger gesticulations of the Italians. COLLIER (ed. ii) reads, with his (MS.), 'hand of scorn' and 'slowly moving finger'; but returns to the Qq in ed. iii. WHITE (ed. i); 'Unmoving' may mean either that the finger of scorn does not move from its object, or that it moves so slowly that its motion is not perceived. So in Lyly's Euphues: 'You were ignorant of the practices, thinking the Diall stands still, because you cannot perceive it to move.'—Sig. E e, ed. 1597. 'The tongue of a Louer should be like a poynt in a Dial, which though it goe none can see it going.'—ib. Sig. Y, 3, b. I was once in favour of Hunter's transposition. But 'the time of scorn' is a phrase like 'the day of sorrow,' 'the hour of joy,' 'the age of progress.' BAILEY (ii, 112) makes 'the passage run' thus: 'A fixed figure for the time, in scorn, To point his slow and mocking finger at, —' and then adds: 'These epithets greatly enhance the expression of Othello's horror of the ridicule of the world.' KEIGHTLEY (Exp. 305): I see no need of changing the text of the Qto. 'The Time of scorn' is the scornful age or world, a frequent sense of 'time'; and we should print, 'To point his slow—unmoving finger at,' the latter term being a correction of the former. DELIUS: 'Slow

[64, 65. time of Scorne . . . slow, and mouing finger.]

Yet could I beare that too, well, very well : 66
 But there where I haue garnerd vp my heart,
 Where either I must liue, or beare no life,
 The Fountaine from the which my currant runnes,
 Or else dries vp : to be discarded thence, 70
 Or keepe it as a Cesterne, for foule Toades
 To knot and gender in. Turne thy complexion there : 72

67. there where] there : where Q₂. there, where Q₂ Q₃.

71. Toades] Taodes Q₃.

69. Fountainne] foundation Q₃.

72. in.] in : Qq.

71. Cesterne] ceftern F₃. Ciftern F₄. there :] there, Qq. thence Warb.

there ! Steev. Mal. Var. Sing.

and moving,' according to Shakespeare's use of the copula, forms one idea [like 'by night and negligence,' I, i, 83]. MASSEY (The Secret Drama, &c. p. 257): Othello cannot mean that he is made into a clock or a dial, but the laughing-stock of the time. R. H. LEGIS (N. & Qn. 5th, vi, 25), having appropriated Hunter's emendation, and changed 'slow' to low, asserts 'the image' to be 'absolutely correct in both sense and artistic rectitude.' BULLOCH (p. 252) assumes that Othello 'had in view the scurrilous writers of pithy lampoons, those vile scoffing wits who ridiculed misfortune and enjoyed the degradation of others,' and therefore thus emended: 'A fixed figure for the rhymers' scorn, To point his foul unmoving finger at.' COWDEN-CLARKE: We take the 'time of scorn' to be an impersonation of the scornful spirit of the epoch, and alluding to the image of Time which many ancient clocks bore. To our minds the combination 'slow, unmoving,' serves exactly to describe the hand of a dial, with its onward-stealing yet apparently still finger; so that, in every way, the idea of the clock is presented to the imagination by this passage. JOHN HUNTER: 'For the time of scorn' is for scorn's opportunity. HUDSON: 'The time of scorn' means, I think, the age of scorn, that is, the whole period during which scorn may be said to live. The 'fixed figure' is simply the speaker himself. As to slow unmoving, the sense of it can be better felt than expressed; we can see the sneer darting from the inexorable finger, ever slowly moving with the object, never moving from it. ROLFE: That Shakespeare should be supposed to have written 'slow and moving,' shows what a poet may suffer at the hands of a prosaic critic. The mistake in the Folio was doubtless one of the ear in transcribing the MS. [I am afraid that this may be classed among those readings to which Steevens elsewhere refers as having hitherto disunited the opinions of the learned, and which 'will continue to disunite them as long as England and Shakespeare have a name.'—ED.]

67. garner'd] JOHNSON: The 'garner' and the 'fountain' are improperly conjoined. ROLFE: But a succession of metaphors is not a fault, like the mixing of them. DELIUS: The word is finely chosen; to 'garner' is to store that on which life depends.

67-70. This passage Salvini adduces as proof that Othello was not jealous, but that his love was of a purely poetic nature, untainted with passion.

72-74. JOHNSON: At such an object do thou, Patience, thyself change colour; at this do thou, even thou, rosy cherub as thou art, look grim as hell. The old editions and the new have it: 'I here look grim as hell.' I was written for ay, and not since corrected. [It was hard, very hard, for Dr Johnson to be just to Theobald, 'poor piddling Tibbald.' The foregoing note is substantially the same as Theobald's, and for

Patience, thou young and Rose-lip'd Cherubin, 73
I heere looke grim as hell.

Def. I hope my Noble Lord esteemes me honest. 75

Othe. Oh I, as Sommer Flyes are in the Shambles,
That quicken euen with blowing. Oh thou weed:
Who art so louely faire, and smell'ft so sweete,
That the Sense akes at thee,
Would thou had'ft neuer bin borne. 80

Def. Alas, what ignorant sin haue I committed?

- | | |
|--|---|
| 73. thou] thy Qq. | Heath. |
| 74. I heere] I here QqF ₃ F ₄ , Rowe,
Pope, Warb. Ay, there Theob. There,
there Han. Ay, here Johns. Jen. Ay, there,
Cap. et seq. | 78. Who...faire,] Why...faire? Qq,
Warb. Jen.
and smell'ft] Thou smell'ft Qq,
Warb. Jen. |
| 75. my Noble] my Ff. | 79, 80. That...borne.] One line, Cap.
Steev. et seq. |
| 76. Sommer Flyes] summers flies Qq.
Summer-flies Rowe, Pope, Han.
Shambles] shamples Q ₃ . | 79. akes] askes F ₃ , asks F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe i.
80. thou had'ft] thad'ft F ₃ , thow'dst
F ₄ , Rowe. |
| 77-79. Oh...thee] Two lines, ending
faire...thee Qq, Warb. Jen. | neuer] Ff, Rowe. ne're Qq. ne'er
Pope et cet. |
| 77. thou weed :] thou blacke weede , Qq,
Jen. thou bale weed Warb. thou base weed | bin] been F ₃ F ₄ . | over thirty years, when Dr Johnson wrote, Theobald's text had read Ay for I. To S. T. P. (N. & Qu. 5th, vi, 405), Dr Johnson's interpretation seems very forced and inapplicable. The suggestion is then ventured that 'possibly the words were meant as addressed to Desdemona, who first blushes at Othello's gross accusations. He then bursts out in admiration of her beauty; and then when she looks gravely indignant, challenges her to "look grim as hell."' S. T. P. demands no verbal change, but apparently finds the passage cured by an heroic exhibition of exclamation-marks.—ED.]

73. Cherubin] It is not to be supposed that either Shakespeare, or his contemporaries, knew or cared that this is a Chaldee Plural. Cotgrave translates 'Cherubin, a cherubin,' and it is probably through the French that the word was introduced into English.—ED.

76. Sommer Flyes] These words might serve, in F₄, as an approximate test, among the various copies, of priority in printing. The CAMBRIDGE EDITION notes between them a hyphen. In one of my copies of F₄, this hyphen is distinct and unmistakable; in the second, it is quite faint; in the third, it has vanished, leaving behind a warning to all not to lean too confidently on the punctuation of the old texts.—ED.

79, 80. WALKER (Crit. iii, 289) reduces these two lines to the rhythmical standard by omitting 'That' and contracting 'thou hadst': 'The sense aches at thee,—Would th' hadst ne'er been born!' [See Text. N.]

79. akes] Thus the verb is uniformly spelled throughout the Folio; one of the instances, we have had before in this play, III, iv, 168; the noun is spelled ache, and its plural is dissyllabic, from which it is reasonable to infer that the singular was pronounced aatch. There 's an oversight in Ellis's Early Eng. Pronunciation, p. 930, where this present line is cited as an instance of a 'Monosyllabic Plural.'—ED.

Oth. Was this faire Paper? This most goodly Booke 82
 Made to write Whore upon? What committed Committed? Oh thou publicke Committer. [332 a]
 I should make very Forges of my cheekes. 85
 That would to Cynders burne vp Modestie.
 Did I but speake thy deedes. What committed?
 Heauen stoppes the Nose at it, and the Moone winks:
 The bandy winde that kisses all it meetes.
 Is hush'd within the hollow Myne of Earth 90

82. Paper f] paper, Q₂. 87. I iust] iust / F, F₂, Rowe, Pope,
 83. open f] on f— Q₂, Jca. Theob. Warr. Johns. decid.] decid.] Jca. Steev. 85.
What] What, Q₂, what, what What] What, what Theob. Ham.
 Theob. Warr. Ham. Johns. Cap. What Warr. Johns. Cap. What in Kity.
 in Kity. 84-87. Om. Q₂ committed] F₂, committed Q₂.
 87. Did] should Cap. (Corrected in 90. hallow] hallow Q₂.
 Emsta).

82, 83. STEEVENS: Massinger has imitated this in The Emperor of the East, IV, v. GIFFORD, in a note (p. 321) to this passage in Massinger, observes that there are several other short passages in that same scene copied from Othello. ROLFE: For the metaphor, compare King John, II, i, 485; Rom. & Jul. I, iii, 87; III, ii, 83; R. of L. 615, 1253, &c.

83. committed] MALONE: This word, in Shakespeare's time, besides its general signification, seems to have been applied particularly to unlawful acts of love. [Might not this have been due to its use in the Seventh Commandment?—ED.] KNIGHT: Othello, indignant at Desdemona's question, with a mocking fury repeats it four times,—'what committed?' The commentators have changed it into an interjectional phrase, telling us that 'committed' had a peculiar signification. The plain and natural interpretation seems the true one. DEIGHTON agrees with Knight; 'Othello repeats interrogatively, over and over again, the last word of Desdemona's speech, which is here used in its ordinary sense.'

84. BOOTH: Not too violently,—more of indignation than anger.

85. my] WHITE (ed. i): I suspect that Shakespeare wrote thy. The misprint is common. Othello has already, when with Iago, spoken Desdemona's imputed deeds very plainly; and would Shakespeare have forgotten that Othello's cheeks were too dark to show a blush? or, still more, would he have referred the blush in such a case to the countenance of the man when the woman was present? In Tit. And. IV, ii, Aaron the Moor speaks of Chiron's 'beauty' as a 'treacherous hue, that will betray with blushing,' whereas his own blackamoor child is a 'lad fram'd of another leer.' DYCE (ed. iii): But, as LETTSON observes, 'Othello is speaking not of blushes, but of heat.' WHITE (ed. ii): A doubtful reading. Shakespeare surely may have written 'thy cheeks.' Not only was it Desdemona's part to flush, but Othello's cheek was black.

89. bauty] MALONE: So in Mer. of Ven. II, vi, 16. HALLIWELL: The wind is more elegantly alluded to in Hen. V. as the 'chartered libertine.' ROLFE: So, Mid. N. D. II, i, 129.

And will not hear't. What committed?

91

Def. By Heauen you do me wrong.

Othe. Are not you a Strumpet?

Def. No, as I am a Christian.

If to preferue this vessell for my Lord,

95

From any other foule vnlawfull touch

Be not to be a Strumpet, I am none.

Othe. What, not a Whore?

Def. No, as I shall be sau'd.

Othe. Is't possible?

100

Def. Oh Heauen forgieue vs.

Othe. I cry you mercy then.

I tooke you for that cunning Whore of Venice,

That married with Othello. You Mistris,

Enter Emilia.

105

That haue the office opposite to Saint Peter,

And keepes the gate of hell. You, you : I you.

107

91. hear't.] hear't.—Qq. hear of it Ktly. hear it Steev. et seq.

What committed?] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Knt. what committed,—impudent strumpet! Qq. Committed?—impudent strumpet! Han. Committed! what committed! Impudent strumpet! Cap. What sin committed! Impudent strumpet! Ktly. What committed?—Impudent strumpet! Theob. et cet.

Reading Impudent strumpet as if of line 92, Cap. Coll. et seq.

96. other] hated Q₂, Jen. Wh. i.

99. sau'd.] saued. Enter Emilia Q₂. saued. Q₂Q₃.

100. Is't] Is it Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i, Del.

101. forgiue vs] forgiueneffe Q₂.

102. mercy then.] mercy, Q₂.

103. Venice,] Venice, Enter Emilia. Q₂Q₃.

104. Othello. You] Othello. [Raising his voice] You Glo. Cam. Wh. ii.

Scene X. Pope+, Jen.

You Mistris,] Come you, mistress, Han. You, mistress, there! Cap. You, misteress, Ktly.

105. Enter...] After you. line 107, Knt, Coll. iii. After hell line 107, Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Del.

106. Saint Peter] S. Peter Qq. Saint Peter's Ktly.

107. keepes] QqF₂. keeps F₂F₄. keep Rowe et cet.

gate of] gates in Qq.

hell.] hell, Q₂. hell; Q₂Q₃.

You, you : I you.] I, you, you, you :

Q₂. you, you, I, you Q₂Q₃. you, you! As you! Rowe et seq.

95. vessel] UPTON (p. 219): Thus, in 1 Thess. iv, 4: 'To possess his vessel in sanctification.'

104. Mistris] WALKER (Vers. 48): That is, 'mist(e)ress.' [See Keightley, Text. N., and II, ii, 242.]

106. opposite] HUDSON: The opposition is between Emilia, as keeper of the gate of Hell, and Saint Peter, as keeper of the gate of Heaven. The sense, therefore, requires that the special emphasis, if there be any, should be laid on 'opposite.'

107. BOOTH: Desdemona sinks to the floor, whence Emilia, at line 111, raises her.

We haue done our course : there's money for your paines : 108
I pray you turne the key, and keepe our counsaile. Exit.

Emil. Alas, what do's this Gentleman conceiue? 110
How do you Madam? how do you my good Lady?

Def. Faith, halfe a sleepe.

Emi. Good Madam,
What's the matter with my Lord?

Def. With who? 115

Emil. Why, with my Lord, Madam?

Def. Who is thy Lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet Lady.

Def. I haue none : do not talke to me, Emilia,
I cannot weepe : nor answeres haue I none, 120
But what should go by water. Prythee to night,
Lay on my bed my wedding sheetes, remember,
And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Heere's a change indeed. Exit.

Def. 'Tis meete I should be vs'd fo : very meete. 125
How haue I bin behau'd, that he might sticke
The small'st opinion on my least misvse? 127

- | | |
|--|---|
| 108. We haue] We ha Qq. We've Dyce | 122. my wedding] our wedding Q ₂ , Jen. |
| iii. | 124. Heere's] Here is Qq, Cap. Jen. |
| 113, 114. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq. | Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Ktly. |
| 115. who] whom FF, Rowe+, Jen. Coll. | 125. vs'd] v/de Q ₂ Q ₃ . used Q ₃ . |
| Ktly. whom , Emilia ? Han. | very meete.] very well ; Q ₃ . |
| 116. Why ,] Om. Cap. Steev.'85. | 127. small'st] smallest Q ₂ , Rowe i, Jen. |
| 117, 118. Om. Q ₂ . | on] of Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. |
| 119. I haue] I ha Qq. | least misvse?] greatest abuse Q ₂ , |
| 120. answeres] F ₂ . answers F ₃ F ₄ . | Jen. great'st abuse Steev. Mal. Rann. Var. |
| Rowe. answer Qq et cet. | Sta. Dyce iii, Huds. least misdeed Coll. |
| 121. Prythee] Pray Pope+. | (MS). |

108. paines] HUDSON quotes WHITE: Othello, who in his relations towards women is one of the most delicate and sensitive of men, in the bitterness of his soul pays his wife's own maid as he leaves the former's bed-chamber; not either to reward or to offend Emilia, but that he may torment his own soul by carrying out his supposition to its most revolting consequences. FECHTER: He throws a purse on the table and exit. BOOTH: Don't use a purse, it is absurd, and 'tis not likely that Iago would pass it by; he confesses himself a thief in his dealings with Roderigo, and he would never leave a purse of money unheeded on the floor. This purse once tempted me so annoyingly that I picked it up, and very properly was reproved for it,—but I could not help it.

121. water] HUDSON: That is, be expressed by tears. Surely a conceit quite out of place. Laertes, in Ham. IV, iv, vents a similar one on learning that his sister is drowned.

127. misvse] SINGER: 'On' must be understood to signify of. The sense appears

Enter Iago, and Emilia. 128

Iago. What is your pleasure Madam?
How is't with you? 130

Def. I cannot tell : those that do teach yong Babes
Do it with gentle meanes, and easie taskes.
He might haue chid me so : for in good faith
I am a Child to chiding.

Iago. What is the matter Lady? 135

Emil. Alas(Iago) my Lord hath so bewhor'd her,
Throwne such dispight, and heauy termes vpon her
That true hearts cannot beare it.

Def. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name,(faire Lady?) 140

Def. Such as she said my Lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her whore : a Begger in his drinke :
Could not haue laid such termes vpon his Callet. 143

Scene XI. Pope+, Jen.	138. That] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. As Qq
129, 130. One line, Pope et seq.	et cet.
130. is't] is it Steev. Mal. Var. Coll.	beare it] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. beare
Wh. i.	Qq et cet.
131. yong] young Qq. your Ff, Rowe,	141. said] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Knt, Sta.
Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.	fayes Qq et cet.
133. haue] ha Qq.	143. laid] layed Q ₂ Q ₃ . laied Q ₃ .
134. to] at Q ₂ , Jen.	such] worse Cap. conj.
135. What is] What's F ₄ , Rowe, Pope,	Callet] callat Coll. Dyce, Sta. Wh.
Theob. Warb. Johns. Steev.'93, Var. Coll.	Glo. Cam. Del. Rlfe.
Sing. Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Ktly, Del.

to be : 'How have I behaved that he can attach the smallest notion of the least misconduct?' HUDSON [adopting Q₂]: A very harsh and awkward expression, but meaning, 'What have I been doing, that upon my worst act he should fasten the slightest imputation of crime?' We cannot take 'on' here as equivalent to of, for the connection is 'stick on' and not 'opinion on'; so that 'least' of F₄ does not give the right sense. ['How have I been behaved that he could find the smallest possible fault with my smallest possible misdeed?'] a paraphrase which is substantially the same as Cowden-Clarke's.—ED.]

136-138. COWDEN-CLARKE: This shows that Emilia, among her other objectionable characteristics, is a listener,—a mean listener at doors.

139. that name] MRS JAMESON (ii, 42): A stroke of consummate delicacy, surprising, when we remember the latitude of expression prevailing in Shakespeare's time, and which he allowed his other women generally. So completely did Shakespeare enter into the angelic refinement of the character.

143. Callet] GIFFORD (Note in Jonson's Volpone, IV, i, p. 277): Callet, callat, or calot is used by all our old writers for a strumpet of the basest kind. It is derived, as Urry observes, from calote, Fr., a sort of cap once worn by country-girls; and, like a

- Iago.* Why did he so?
Def. I do not know : I am fure I am none such. 145
Iago. Do not weepe, do not weepe : alas the day.
Emil. Hath she forooke so many Noble Matches?
 Her Father? And her Country? And her Friends?
 To be call'd Whore? Would it not make one weepe? [332 b]
Def. It is my wretched Fortune. 150
Iago. Beshrew him for't:
 How comes this Tricke vpon him?
Def. Nay, Heauen doth know.
Emi. I will be hang'd, if some eternall Villaine,
 Some bufie and infinuating Rogue, 155
 Some cogging, cozening Slaue, to get some Office,

145. I am fure] I'm sure Pope +, Dyce
 iii. 148. And her Friends] all her friends
 Q.
 147. Hath] Has Qq, Cap. Mal. Steev.
 '93, Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Ktly. 151, 152. One line, Qq, Rowe +, Jen.
 151. for't] for it Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal.
 Var. Coll. Wh. i.

hundred other terms of this nature, from designating poverty or meanness, finally came, by no unnatural progress, to denote depravity and vice. DYCE (Gloss.) cites Cotgrave: 'Goguenelle, A fained title, or tearme, for a wench; like our Gixie, Callet, Minx, &c.' WEDGWOOD (s. v. ed. ii): Probably an unmeasured use of the tongue is the leading idea. NK. to callet, to rail, or scold; calleting, pert, saucy, gossiping. [I do not find it in SKELAT.—ED.]

150. Othello echoes this with 'Who can control his fate?' V, ii, 328.—ED.

154. FECHTER: Suspiciously eyeing Iago. COWDEN-CLARKE: Emilia, by no means, here refers to her husband, but to some one who, as she thinks, has misled both Iago and Othello. She has before told the Moor, 'If any wretch have put this in your head, let Heaven requite it with the serpent's curse.' Her suspicion never for an instant falls on her own husband. [Witness her incredulity, in the last Scene, when Othello tells her it was 'her husband' who first told him Desdemona was false to wedlock.—ED.] BOOTH: This is spoken without intended reference to Iago.

154. eternall] WALKER (Crit. i, 62) cites this passage and Ham. I, v, 21; V, ii, 352, and Jul. Cas. IV, ii, 160, as instances of the inaccurate use by Shakespeare of 'eternal' for infernal. See also, to the same effect, ABBOTT, Introduction, p. 16. [Walker's instances from Hamlet may be well chosen; in 'this eternal blazon,' and in 'what feast is toward in thine eternal cell,' Shakespeare may have used the word inaccurately; it is also possible that the error is the printer's. But here in Othello and in Jul. Cas. ('There was a Brutus once, that would have brook'd Th' eternal devil,' &c.) the supposition of inaccuracy is, I think, far from probable. Walker himself says that the phrase 'eternal villain' seems to be still in use among the common people, and anticipates the thought which rises in every American mind, when he adds: 'I need scarcely notice the Yankee 'tarnal.' When needs must, nowadays, we speak of our friends as 'everlasting fools'; I think, therefore, that here Emilia means what she says.—ED.]

156. Slaue] WALKER (Crit. ii, 307): Does 'slave' here mean anything more than Haue not deuised this Slander : I will be hang'd else.

157

Iago. Fie, there is no such man : it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, Heauen pardon him.

Emil. A halter pardon him :

160

And hell gnaw his bones.

Why should he call her Whore ?

Who keeps her companie ?

What Place ? What Time ?

What Forme ? What liklyhood ?

165

The Moore's abus'd by some most villanous Knaue,

Some base notorious Knaue, some scuruy Fellow.

Oh Heauens, that such companions thou'd'st vnfold,

And put in euery honest hand a whip

To lash the Rascalls naked through the world,

170

Euen from the East to th'West.

Iago. Speake within doore.

Emil. Oh fie vpon them: some such Squire he was

That turn'd your wit, the feamy-side without,

174

157. Haue] Has Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Steev.'85.

deuise'd] deuise Q₁Q₂. devised Q₃.

I will] Ff, Rowe, Knt. I'll Q₁. Ile Q₂Q₃. I'll Pope et cet.

158. Fie] Separate line, Dyce iii.

159. there be] there are Q₂Q₃.

160-165. Three lines, Qq, Rowe et seq.

166. most villanous] outrageous Q₂.

168. Oh Heauens] Ff, Rowe i. O heauen Qq et cet.

companions] companion Han. Cap.

168. thou'd'st] thoudst Q₁Q₂. shouldst Q₃.

170. Rascalls] rascall QqFf, Rowe+, Cap. Mal. Steev.'93, Var. Sing. Coll. iii.

171. Euen] Ev'n Pope+.

to th'] Ff, Rowe+, Wh. i. to th Q₂Q₃. to the Q₁ et cet.

172. doore] dores Qq, Jen.

173. them] him Qq, Han. Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing.

Squire] Squire F₂, Rowe+, Jen.

173-175. some...Moore] Aside to Iago Sta.

174. seamy-side] seamy side QqF₃F₄.

villain, abandoned wretch ? This use of 'slave' (compare the Italian cattivo, whence our cattiff) is frequent in old plays.

158. WALKER (Ver. 272): Arrange and write, perhaps,—'Fie | There's no such man, it is impossible.' [DYCE (ed. iii) adopted this.] BOOTH: Wait until the effect of her speech is past. FECHTER: Iago has not even frowned, but looks at her with cold self-possession.

167. notorious] JOHNSON: For gross, not in its proper meaning for known.

168. companions] MALONE: Used as a word of contempt, in the same sense as fellow is at this day.

172. JOHNSON: Do not clamour so as to be heard beyond the house. BOOTH: Goes to her and speaks low.

174. seamy-side] JOHNSON: That is, inside out. STEEVENS: Compare II, ii, 69: 'Whom Love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out.'

And made you to suspect me with the Moore. 175

Iago. You are a Foole : go too.

Def. Alas Iago,

What shall I do to win my Lord againe ?

Good Friend, go to him : for by this light of Heauen,

I know not how I lost him. Heere I kneele : 180

If ere my will did trespassse 'gainst his Loue,

Either in discourse of thought, or actuall deed,

Or that mine Eyes, mine Eares, or any Sence 183

- | | |
|---|---|
| 176. [Aside to Emilia. Sta.
too] to QqFf. | 180. Two lines, Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 177. Alas] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt,
Dyce, Sta. Wh. i, Coll. iii. O good Qq et
cet. | 180-193. Heere...me] Om. Q ₂ .
180. [kneeling. Rowe+, Cap. Jen.
182. Either] Or Pope+. |
| 179. for] Om. Pope+. | of thought] or thought Q ₂ Q ₃ ,
Pope+, Jen. Steev.'85, Huds. |

176. BOOTH : Angrily, but sotto voce.

181. BOOTH : Iago replaces chair behind the arras.

182. discourse of thought] This phrase is no easier of comprehension than the similar phrase in Ham. I, ii, 150, to which MALONE refers : 'discourse of reason.' The precise meaning which our ancestors attached to 'discourse' it is now very difficult to determine, as Gifford says in a note, cited in this edition, on the passage in Hamlet. Johnson, in his Dict., defines it as 'the act of the understanding, by which it passes from premises to consequences,' which is little else than a paraphrase of his own illustration from Glanville, which reads : 'The third act of the mind is that which connects propositions, and deduceth conclusions from them ; and this the schools call discourse ; and we shall not miscall it, if we name it reason.' But that it was not mere 'reason,' as Shakespeare used it, is clear from the phrase 'discourse of reason,' nor that it was merely 'the reasoning faculty,' as some have defined it, as is shown by this phrase in Othello, 'the discourse of thought.' May it not be that in the few instances where Shakespeare uses it in reference to the operations of the mind (I speak with great hesitation) that its Latin origin was uppermost in his thought, vaguely, perhaps, but still operative, especially if, as is not unlikely, he pronounced the word 'discoorse,' Hibernic? This would lead to SINGER's paraphrase, discursive range, which, although somewhat tautological, is, perhaps, as satisfactory as any that has been yet proposed. Why may we not omit the discursive, and say that 'discourse when applied to the mind means the range?' Thus, 'a beast that wants the range of reason' ; 'he that made us with so large a range, looking before and after.' This, too, will explain what Guildenstern says to Hamlet (III, ii, 320), 'put your discourse into some frame,' i. e., 'restrict the range of your fancies.' And here, too, in Othello, Desdemona says, 'either in range of thought, or actual deed.'—ED. STEEVENS gives a note, signed 'C,' to the effect that the Qq are right, and that Desdemona refers to the three ways of committing sin, mentioned in the Catholic Catechisms [and in our Liturgy, adds Steevens], viz. : in thought, word, and deed. VERPLANCK and HUDSON prefer the Qq. The former says : 'The on of the Qq appears to me more probable in itself, because more impressive, and more in unison with the particularity of Desdemona's asseveration of innocence in every possible manner.'

Delighted them : or any other Forme.

Or that I do not yet, and euer did,

185

And euer will, (though he do shake me off

To beggerly diuorcement) Loue him deerely,

Comfort forfwear me. Vnkindnesse may do much,

And his vnkindnesse may defeat my life,

But neuer taynt my Loue. I cannot say Whore,

190

It do's abhorre me now I speake the word,

To do the Act, that might the addition earne,

Not the worlds Masse of vanitie could make me.

Iago. I pray you be content : 'tis but his humour :

The businesse of the State do's him offence.

195

Des. If 'twere no other.

Iago. It is but so, I warrant,

Hearke how thefe Instruments fummon to supper :

The Messengers of Venice staies the meate,

199

184. them : or] Ff. them on Rowe+.
them in Q₂Q₃ et cet.

Forme.] forme; Q₂Q₃. form :

F₃F₄.

188. forfwear me.] for sware me Q₃.

190. cannot] can't Pope+, Cap.

191. do's] doth Q₂Q₃.

192. the addition] it addition Q₂Q₃,
Pope+, Jen. Dyce iii.

195. offence.] Ff, Rowe. offence, And he does chide with you Qq et cet.

196. 'twere] 'ware Q₃.

other.] QqFf, Rowe. other! Knt,
Sta. Wh. i. other—Pope et cet.

197. It is] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Steev. Mal.
Var. Knt, Sing. Sta. Ktly. Tis Qq et cet. warrant,] warrant you, Qq, Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

[Trumpets. Rowe.

198. summon] summon you Qq, Jen.

199. The...meate] And the great Mes- sengers of Venice stay, Q₂, Johns. Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. The meate, great
Messengers of Venice stay; Q₂Q₃.

Messengers] Messenger Ff, Rowe,
Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. Cap.

staies the meate] stays the meat
F₃F₄, Ktly. stay the meat Knt et seq.

191. abhorre] ROLFE: It is abhorrent to me, it fills me with horror; the only instance of this sense in Shakespeare. ['Here hung those lippes . . . now they abhorre me,' Ham. Q₂, line 1946.—ED.]

193. vanitie] WHITE (ed. ii): Splendor, finery, as in 'Vanity Fair.'

194. BOOTH: Iago assists Desdemona to rise.

195, 196. In the line here regained from the Qq, many editors, following STEEVENS and MALONE, note that 'chide with' is the phraseology of the time, and adduce examples.

199. KNIGHT: Steevens calls the reading of the Folio 'poor,' but its precision and familiarity make it more dramatic and characteristic. WHITE (ed. ii): 'Stay the meat,' that is, for the meat. In some parts of England a visitor is still invited to 'stay dinner.' Vice-regal persons and grandees had, and in some courts still have, all their movements announced by trumpets. [Either 'Messengers' is wrongly in the Plural or 'staies' is wrongly in the Singular, and at first sight the 'extravagant and erring's might be thought to come under WALKER'S Article (cited at I, i, 31), but I am inclined to think that 'staies' is in the Singular by attraction with 'Venice.'—ED.]

Go in, and weepe not : all things shall be well. 200

Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.

Enter Rodorigo.

How now Rodorigo?

Rod. I do not finde

That thou deal'st iustly with me. 205

Iago. What in the contrarie?

Rodori. Euery day thou dafts me with some deuise Iago, and rather, as it seemes to me now, keep'st from me all conueniencie, then suppliest me with the leaft aduantage of hope : I will indeed no longer endure it. Nor 210 am I yet perwaded to put vp in peace, what already I haue foolishly suffred.

Iago. Will you heare me Rodorigo? 213

Rodori. I haue heard too much : and your words and [333 a]

- | | |
|---|--|
| 200. well] will Q ₃ . | 207. deuise] device Ff. |
| 201. Exeunt...] Exit women. Qq. | 208. me now,] me, thou Q ₁ . |
| Scene XII. Pope+, Jen. Scene III. | keep'st] keepest Q ₁ . ked'st Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| Booth. Scene II. Fechter. | 209. then] thou F ₄ . that Warb. than |
| 204, 205. One line, Qq, Pope et seq. | Rowe. |
| 205. deal'st] dealt Qq. dealest Dyce, | 212. suffred] suffered Q ₁ . suffered Q ₂ |
| Glo. Cam. Rlfe. | Q ₃ . suffer'd F ₃ F ₄ . |
| 207-212. Euery...suffred] Six lines, | 214, 215. Two lines, the first ending |
| verse, ending Iago...from me,...least...it | words , Q ₁ . Three, ending much...per- |
| ...already...sufferd . Q ₁ . | formance...together Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 207. dafts] Knt. dofft Qq. dafts Ff. | 214. I] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Johns. |
| dofft Q'81. doff't Rowe+, Jen. Cap. | Knt. Sir, I Q₂Q₃ Cap. Faith I Q₁ et cet. |
| daff't Coll. Sta. Wh. Del. Huds. daffest | and your] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt. |
| Dyce, Glo. Cam. Rlfe. doff't Han. et | for your Qq et cet. |
| cet. | |

200. BOOTH: Sometimes the scene ends here, in which case, exit Iago with an angry glance at Emilia.

203. BOOTH: They run against each other,—Iago somewhat embarrassed. Rodorigo refuses his proffered hand, and while the former is speaking 207 et seq. Iago is somewhat nervous.

207. Euery day] COWDEN-CLARKE: Effect of 'long time' given; though they have been in Cyprus, according to 'short time,' but one day.

207. dafts] An instance, under WALKER'S Article (Crit. ii, 128), on the substitution of s for st in the second person singular of the verb. See II, ii, 201.

209. aduantage of hope] COLLIER (ed. ii): Ought we not to read, 'the least hope of advantage'? [If Collier can thus ask, should he not have been contented with merely converting 'the time of scorn,' line 64 of this scene, into 'the scorn of time,' and not have changed it to the 'hand of scorn'? The two phrases are parallel, if we choose to make them so; but it is not necessary. 'Advantage of hope' is the Performances are no kin together.

215

Iago. You charge me most vniustly.

Rodo. With naught but truth : I haue wasted my felfe out of my meanes. The Iewels you haue had from me to deliuer Desdemona, would halfe haue corrupted a Votarist. You haue told me she hath receiu'd them, and return'd me expectations and comforts of sodaine respect, and acquaintance, but I finde none.

220

, Iago. Well, go too : very well.

Rod. Very well, go too : I cannot go too, (man) nor tis not very well. Nay I think it is scuruy : and begin to finde my felfe fopt in it.

225

Iago. Very well.

Rodor. I tell you, 'tis not very well : I will make my felfe knowne to Desdemona. If she will returne me my Iewels, I will giue ouer my Suit, and repent my vnlawfull sollicitation. If not, assure your felfe, I will seeke satisfaction of you.

230

Iago. You haue said now.

233

- | | |
|--|--|
| 215. Performances] performance Qq. | 223. very well] very good Q ₁ . |
| 217. With...truth] Om. Q ₁ . | 224, 225. nor tis] it is Q ₁ . |
| 218. out of my] out of Qq, Cap. | 225. Nay I think it is] by this hand, |
| 219. deliuer] Ff, Rowe. deliuer to Qq | I say tis very Q ₁ , Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. |
| et cet. | Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Cam. Ktly, Del. (all |
| 220. hath] has Qq, Mal. Steev. Var. | read it is except Jen. Cam.). I say t'is |
| Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. | very Q ₁ Q ₃ . |
| them] em Qq. | 226. fopt] QqFf. fof'd Rowe +, Cap. |
| 221. expectations] expectation Qq. | Jen. fobb'd Steev. Mal. Wh. fopped Dyce, |
| comforts] comforst Q ₃ . | Cam. Del. fobbed Var. et cet. |
| 222. acquaintance] acquittance Q ₁ , | 228. I tell you, 'tis] I say it is Qq, Jen. |
| Theob. Han. Warb. Cap. Jen. Mal. Steev. | 231. I will] I'll Q ₁ . Ile Q ₁ Q ₃ . |
| '93, Var. Sing. acquittance Q ₃ . | 233. now.] now —Theob. Warb. Johns. | advantage to be derived from hope; it was because Iago doffed him with devices that he had no hope, and had lost even that advantage.—ED.

214, 215. COLLIER: Here we meet with an extraordinary variation in copies of F₂; that belonging to the Duke of Devonshire has the following at the top of the page: 'I have heard too much: And hell graw his bones Performances.' CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: The mistake was discovered and corrected in other copies. This accounts for the 'and' which the corrected copies still retain instead of 'for.'

223. BOOTH: With nonchalance, walking up and down, both here and at 227, but Roderigo's threat to make himself known to Desdemona arrests Iago, and he instantly plans the removal of Roderigo as well as Cassio.

229. knowne] Can this refer to anything else but his disguise? his favour, defeated with an usurp'd beard?—ED.

Rodo. I : and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing. 235

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee: and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than euer before: giue me thy hand Rodorigo. Thou hast taken against me a most iust exception: but yet I protest I haue dealt most directly in thy Affaire. 240

Rod. It hath not appeer'd.

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appeer'd: and your suspection is not without wit and iudgement. But Rodorigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I haue greater reason to beleue now than euer (I meane purpose, Courage, and Valour) this night flew it. If thou the next night following enioy not Desdemona, take me from this world with Treachery, and deuise Engines for my life. 245 250

Rod. Well: what is it? Is it within, reason and compasse?

Iago. Sir, there is especiall Commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? Why then Othello and Desdemona 255
returne againe to Venice.

234. and said] and I haue said Q₂,
Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i,
Ktly, Del.

234, 235. intendment] entendment Qq.

237. instant] time Q₂.

do] do I Rowe+.

239, 240. exception] conception Qq.

240. but yet] but Rowe ii+.

241. Affaire] affaires Q₂.

242. appeer'd] appeared Qq.

245. in thee] within thee Qq, Cap. Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly,
Del.

248. enioy] enioyest Qq, Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i, Del.

250. for] from Q₂.

251. what is it?] Om. Qq.

within,] within QqFf.

253-264. Sir...braines] Eleven lines, ending: Venice...place...Desdemona...
Venice...him...linger'd...so (Q₂. deter- minate Q₂Q₃)...Cassio...him?...place... braines Qq.

253. especiall] a special Mal. conj
Commission] command Q₂.

238. giue . . . hand] BOOTH: Roderigo does not, but Iago wheedles, and gets his hand laughingly.

243-250. BOOTH: This, very earnestly.

250. Engines] RITSON: This seems to mean, to contrive racks, tortures, &c. DYCE (Gloss.): Does it not rather signify 'contrive artful means to destroy my life?' ('An Engine [device], Artificium, Ingenium.'—Coles's Lat. and Eng. Dict.) [See Lear, I, iv, 262].

256. BOOTH: Roderigo is elated at the thought of Desdemona's return to Venice, Iago. Oh no : he goes into Mauritania and taketh away with him the faire Desdemona, vnlesse his abode be lingred heere by some accident. Wherein none can be so determinate, as the remouing of Cassio. 260

Rod. How do you meane remouing him ?

Iago. Why, by making him vncapable of Othello's place : knocking out his braines.

Rod. And that you would haue me to do. 265

Iago. I : if you dare do your felse a profit, and a right. He sups to night with a Harlotry : and thither will I go to him. He knowes not yet of his Honourable Fortune, if you will watch his going thence (which I will fashion to fall out betweene twelue and one) you may take him at your pleasure. I will be neere to second your Attempt, and he shall fall betweene vs. Come, stand not amaz'd at it, but go along with me : I will shew you such a necessitie in his death, that you shall thinke your felse bound to put it on him. It is now high supper time : and the night growes to waft.
About it. 270

Rod. I will heare further reason for this.

Iago. And you shalbe satisfi'd.

Exeunt. 279

257. taketh] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Jen.

Steev.85, Knt. takes Qq et cet.

259, 260. Wherein] whereof Cap. conj.
(p. 35 b).

262. him] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt, Sta. of him Qq et cet.

263. by making] making Cap. conj.
(p. 35 b).

uncapable] incapable Warb. Johns.

265. do.] FfQq, Rowe, Cap. do? Pope
et seq.

266. if] and if Qq.

266. and a] and Qq.

267. Harlotry] harlot Q., Pope+, Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var.

268. him. He] him;—he Q., Q., him— he Q.

276. high] nigh Mason.

waft] waſte F., waist Mal. conj.

277. [Enter Othello, Desdemona, Lodouico, Emillia, and Attendants Q.

279. shalbe] shall; be Sta.

satisfi'd] satisfied Qq.

Exeunt.] Ex. Iag. and Rod. Q.

his home as well as hers; and is correspondingly disappointed when Iago says it is to Mauritania. The 'removing of Cassio' Iago speaks slowly, and mysteriously.

259. Mauritania] THEOBALD: This is only a Lie, of Iago's own invention, to carry a point with Roderigo. [See Othello's Color, in Appendix.]

266. BOOTH: Utter all this rapidly,—don't give Roderigo a chance to think.

267. Harlotry] See Rom. & Jul. IV, ii, 14.

276. high] STEEVENS: That is, full complete time.

276. waſt] MALONE: The night is wasting apace. [See Ham. I, ii, 198: 'the dead vast,' where Malone makes the same conjecture as here. See Text. Notes.—ED.]

Scena Tertia.

[333 b]

Enter Othello, Lodouico, Desdemona, Emilia, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you Sir, trouble your selfe no further.

Oth. Oh pardon me : 'twill do me good to walke. 5

Lodouic. Madam, good night : I humbly thanke your Ladyship.

Des. Your Honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walke Sir ? Oh Desdemona.

Des. My Lord. 10

Othello. Get you to bed on th' instant, I will be re-turn'd forthwith : dismisfe your Attendant there : look't be done. Exit.

Des. I will my Lord

Æm. How goes it now ? He lookes gentler then he did. 15

Des. He faies he will returne incontinent,
And hath commanded me to go to bed,
And bid me to dismisfe you. 18

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1. Scena...] Scene XIII. Pope +, Jen. | Cap. |
| A Room in the Castle. Cap. | 11. bed...instant,] bed, o' the instant Qq. |
| 4. I do beseech] 'Beseech Cap. | on th'] Ff, Rowe +, Wh. o' the Qq. |
| 5. pardon me] pardon F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe, | Cap. Jen. on the Steev. et cet. |
| Pope, Han. | 11, 12. return'd forthwith :] return'd, |
| 'twill] it shall Qq. | forthwith, Q ₂ . return'd, forthwith Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 6. Madam] Madame Q ₂ . | 12. dismisfe] dispatch Qq. |
| 9. Dividing the line at Sir ? Cap. Steev. | there :] there, — Qq. |
| '93 et seq. (except Huds.). | look't] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. Dyce, |
| Sir ? Oth] Ff, Pope +, Knt, Ktly. | Wh. i, Huds. looke it or look, it Qq et cet. |
| sir :—O Qq, Rowe. sir ?—O, Jen. | 13. Exit.] Exeunt Qq. |
| Huds. sir ?—O, — Cap. et cet. | 17. And] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Sta. He |
| Desdemona.] Desdemona /— Rowe | Qq et cet. |
| + . Desdemona, — Cap. et seq. | 18. bid] Ff, Rowe +. bad Q ₂ , Cap. |
| [Ex. Lod, &c. Han. Stepping back. | Jen. bade Q ₂ Q ₃ et cet. |

279. shalbe] Note STAUNTON'S ingenious punctuation, which is likely to give an editor pause.—ED.

5. walke] COWDEN-CLARKE: This shows the restlessness of the body, with fever of the mind.

9. walke] SCHMIDT: That is, withdraw; as in Lear, IV, vii, 83.

15. HAZLITT (p. 51): In this short speech of Emilia's there occurs one of those side-intimations of the fluctuations of passion which we seldom meet with but in Shakespeare. After Othello has resolved upon the death of his wife and bids her dismiss her attendant for the night, Emilia says 'he looks gentler than he did.' Shakespeare has here put into half a line what some authors would have spur out into ten set speeches.

Æmi. Dismiss me?

Def. It was his bidding : therefore good Æmilia,
Giue me my nightly wearing, and adieu.
We must not now displease him.

Æmil. I, would you had neuer seene him.

Def. So would not I : my loue doth so approue him,
That euen his stubbornesse, his checks, his frownes,
(Prythee vn-pin me) haue grace and fauour.

Æmi. I haue laid those Sheetes you bad me on the bed.

Def. All's one : good Father, how foolish are our minds?
If I do die before, prythee shrow'd me
In one of these same Sheetes.

Æmil. Come, come : you talke.

Def. My Mother had a Maid call'd Barbarie,

- | | |
|---|--|
| 19. Dismiss] To dismiss Ktly. | 28. one : good Father,] Ff. one , good |
| 23. I, would] Would Q ₃ Q ₅ . Ay, would | father ; Q ₃ Q ₅ . one : good Father / Rowe +, |
| Knt. I would Q ₁ Ff et cet. | Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt. Coll. i, |
| 25. checks] checks Jen. (misprint?). | Sing. Wh. i, Del. one good faith : Q ₂ . |
| his frownes] and frownes Qq, Pope | one . Good faith, Dyce, Coll. ii, Sta. Glo. |
| ii, Theob. Warb. Johns. Cap. Jen. Steev. | Ktly, Cam. Coll. iii, Huds. Rlf, Wh. ii. |
| Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. | minds] Ff, Rowe +. minds ; Q ₂ |
| 26. and] and F ₂ . | Q ₃ . minds ! Han. et cet. |
| faueur .] faueur in them . Qq, Rowe | 29. before ,] before thee , QqFf et cet. |
| et seq. | shrow'd] shroud QqFf. |
| [beginning to undress. Cap. | 30. these] Ff, Rowe +. these Qq et cet. |
| 27. I haue] I've Dyce iii, Huds. | 31. talke .] talk — Ktly. |
| laid] laied Q ₂ Q ₅ . | 32, 39. Barbarie] Barbary Qq. Barbara |
| these] these Q ₂ . | Ff et cet. (line 39, Barbarie F ₁). |
| bad] bade Q ₂ . | |

26. WALKER (Crit. i, 92) : Whence in them? it is not in the Folio. Qu., 'have a grace and fauour.' LETTSOM (Foot-note to Walker) : The words 'in them' appear in Q₁. The Folio reading, as emended by Walker, is such as Shakespeare might well have written ; on the other hand, the additional words do not look either like a sophistication or a printer's blunder.

29. CORNHILL MAGAZINE (Oct. 1866) : This presentiment of Desdemona does not bear the same tests as that of Romeo [see note ad loc. V, i, 1], nor Hamlet [V, ii, 207]. She had no reason to apprehend a violent death, but she had enough to apprehend from Othello's anger. He had struck her and called her the vilest names. Naturally, these unkindnesses would throw her into a deep state of depression. 'A sort of gain-giving' would naturally trouble her and exclude every chance of a real presentiment, the essence of which is, that it shall be spontaneous, at a time when you have no reason to look for it, when you are not under the influence of any fear or anxiety from known causes, and when, perhaps, you have some difficulty in its interpretation.

31. talke] For other instances where this means to talk idly, to prattle, see SCHMIDT.

32. Maid] See LE TOURNEUR, in Appendix, 'Othello's Colour.'

32. Barbarie] KNIGHT : Barbarie is a pretty word, and we would not willingly

She was in loue : and he she lou'd prou'd mad, 33
 And did forsake her. She had a Song of Willough,
 An old thing 'twas : but it exprefs'd her Fortune, 35
 And she dy'd finging it. That Song to night,
 Will not go from my mind : I haue much to do,
 But to go hang my head all at one side
 And sing it like poore Brabarie : prythee dispatch.
Emi. Shall I go fetch your Night-gowne ? 40
Def. No, vn-pin me here,
 This Lodouico is a proper man.
Emi. A very handsome man.
Def. He speakes well. 44

33, 34. and...her.] and he, she lov'd, forsook her, And she prov'd mad: Warb.	37. I haue] I've Pope+, Dyce iii, Huds.
34. had] has Q ₁ .	to do] ado Pope+. to-do Huds.
34, &c. Willough] willow QqF ₄ .	38, 39. Prose, Q ₁ Q ₂ .
35. old] odd Quincy (MS).	38. But] Not Theob. conj. (with drawn), Han. Cap.
36. dy'd] died Qq.	at one] on one Han. o' one Cap Steev.'85.
37. Two lines, Q ₁ Q ₂ .	40. go] Om. Cap.
go] grow Rowe i.	44. He] And he Cap. Steev.'93, Var.
mind:] mind —Q ₁ .
37–58. I haue...next.] Om. Q ₁ .

change it; but it would appear like an affectation of singularity to retain it. WALKER (Crit. iii, 290): The form is not yet obsolete among the common people. [It is still frequently so pronounced in New England. I doubt if any New England old lady who can sing 'Barbara Allen,' would pronounce it otherwise than 'Barbarie Allen.'—ED.]

33. mad] JOHNSON: I believe that 'mad' only signifies wild, frantic, uncertain RITSON: Here it ought to mean inconstant. KEIGHTLEY: For 'mad,' which is certainly wrong. Theobald read bad, and I think he was right. 'Proved bad' answers to our present turned out bad. Regarding bad as rather low and trivial, I read in my Edition false, as that is the term in the ballad. I thought 'mad' might have been suggested by 'maid' in the preceding line. [Theobald proposed bad in a letter to Warburton (Nichols, Illustr. ii, 599), but did not allude to it in his edition, where the text is 'mad.' Capell reads bad; no one else.—ED.] COWDEN-CLARKE: We see no reason to suppose it used in any other sense than insane.

37, 38. JOHNSON: This is, perhaps, the only insertion made in the latter editions which has improved the play. The rest seem to have been added for the sake of amplification, or of ornament. When the imagination had subsided, and the mind was no longer agitated by the horror of the action, it became at leisure to look round for specious additions. This addition is natural. Desdemona can at first hardly forbear to sing the song; she endeavors to change her train of thoughts, but her imagination at last prevails, and she sings it.

37. to do] For instances where this is equivalent to ado, see SCHMIDT, s. v. δ, or Ham. II, ii, 338. But, as ROLFE well observes, in this present passage it 'may have no more than its ordinary meaning: I have to do much, that is, make a great effort.'

38. But] For instances of 'but' signifying prevention, see ABBOTT, § 122.

Æmil. I know a Lady in Venice would haue walk'd barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip. 45

Def. The poore Soule fat finging, by a Sicamour tree. 47

45. I...walk'd] One line, as verse, Cap. Ktly.

would] who would Steev.'93, Var.

46. barefoot] barefooted Q₄, Q'81, Dyce iii.

for] fore Q₅.

46. nether] neither Q₂F₂F₃, Theob. 1.

47. Def.] Desdemona sings Q₂Q₃. Singing. Rowe.

finging] Ff, Rowe+, Steev.'85,

Knt. finghing Q₃, finghing Q₄ Cap. et cet.

47. COLLIER (ed. i) referred to a ballad, 'of which some of the stanzas ended with "For all the grene wyllow is my garland," by old John Heywood, preserved in MS. in B. H. Bright's library.' [This ballad is printed in The Shakespeare Society's Papers, vol. i, p. 44; it has nothing in common with Desdemona's song except the refrain. WARTON (Hist. Eng. Poetry, iii, 287, note) mentions a song, called The Willow-Garland, attributed to Edwards, and which he thinks is the same, that is licensed to T. Colwell in 1564 (22 July,—Arber's Transcript, i, 270), beginning, 'I am not the fyrst that hath taken in hande, The wearynge of the willowe garlande.' PERCY (Reliques, 1765, vol. i, p. 175) gives a black-letter ballad from the Pepys Collection thus entitled, 'A Lovers complaint, being forsaken of his love. To a pleasant tune.' The stanzas which correspond to those of Shakespeare are as follows:]

A poore soule fat finging under a sicamore tree,

O willow, willow, willow!

With his hand on his bosom, his head on his knee;

O willow, willow, willow!

O willow, willow, willow!

Sing, O the greene willow shall be my garland.

* * * * *

The cold streams ran by him, his eyes wept apace,

O willow, &c.

The salt tears fell from him, which drowned his face;

O willow, &c.

Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

The mute birds fate by him, made tame by his mones;

O willow, &c.

The salt tears fell from him, which softned the stones.

O willow, &c.

Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

Let nobody blame me, her scornes I do prove;

O willow, &c.

She was borne to be fair; I, to die for her love;

O willow, &c.

Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

This ballad, Collier says, is obviously a comparatively modern re-impression (about the year 1640 or 1650) of a much older production. CHAPPELL (i, 206): The song, which Desdemona sings, is contained in a MS. volume, with accompaniment for the lute, in the British Museum (Addit. MSS. 15,117). Mr Halliwell considers the transcript to have been made about the year 1633; Mr Oliphant (who catalogued the Musical MSS.) dates it about 1600; but the manuscript undoubtedly contains songs of an earlier time, such as,—‘O death! rock me asleep, Bring me to quiet rest,’ &c., attributed to Anne Boleyn, and which Sir John Hawkins found in a MS. of the reign of Henry VIII. [‘The music is older than 1600. It is found in Thomas Dallis’s MS. “Lute Book,” with the title, “All a greane willow.” Dallis taught music at Cambridge; and his book, dated 1583, is now in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin.’—Shakspeare’s Songs, p. 50, New Sh. Soc. 1884. In this same excellent publication of The New Shakspeare Society ten compositions of this song are enumerated. ZELTER’s composition is given in Voss’s Othello, Jena, 1806; in Le Tourneur the composition by MARTINI is given; and for Ducis’s Romance du Saule the music was composed by GRÉTRY. Of course the song is also to be found in the Opera of Otello by ROSSINI. The music here given is from Chappell’s Popular Music of the Olden Time, i, 207; however lovely the melody, its charm is heightened by the knowledge that its plaintive notes once ‘sighed along’ the traverses of the Globe Theatre.—ED.]

[Sing Willough, Willough, Willough.]

Rather slow and smoothly. Ritard.

mf The poor soul sat sigh-ing by a si - ca-more tree. Sing willow, willow, willow! With his hand in his bosom, and his head upon his knee; Oh! willow, willow, willow, willow, Oh!

A tempo.

f willow, willow, willow, willow, Shall be my gar - land: Sing all a green wil - low, cres.

wil-low, willow, wil-low. Ah me! the green wil - low must be my gar - land.

Sing all a greene Willough: 48
Her hand on her bosome her head on her knee,
Sing Willough, Willough, Willough. 50
The fresh Streames ran by her, and murmur'd her moanes
Sing Willough, &c.
Her salt teares fell from her, and softned the stoncs,
Sing Willough, &c. (Lay by these)
Willough, Willough. (Prythee high thee: he'le come anon) 55
Sing all a greene Willough must be my Garland.
Let no body blame him, his scorne I approue.
(Nay that's not next. Harke, who is't that knocks?)
Æmil. It's the wind.
Def. I call'd my Loue false Loue: but what said he then? 60
Sing Willough, &c.
If I court mo women, you'le couch with mo men. 62

52, 61. Willough, &c.] willow, willow, willow; Q₂Q₃, Cap. Jen. Coll. Dyce, Sta. Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Huds. Rife.

53. Her salt] The salt Cap. (corrected in Errata).

and] which Q₂Q₃, Jen.

54. Sing Willough, &c.] Ff. sing willow, &c. Q₂ Rowe +, Jen. Steev.'85. sing-willow &c. Q₃. Om. Cap. et cet.

(Lay by these)] Rowe i, Johns. Jen. (Lady by these) Ff, Rowe ii. Om. Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. Separate line, no parenthesis, Cap. et cet.

[giving her her Jewels. Cap. Jen.

55. Willough, Willough.] willow, willow. QqFf, Rowe, Pope, Han. Jen. Willow, willow, &c. Theob. Warb. Johns. Sing willow, willow, willow. Cap. et cet.

(Prythee...anon)] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob. i, Han. Jen. Separate line, Q₂Q₃, Theob. ii, Warb. Johns. Separate line, no parenthesis, Cap. et cet.

high] hie Q₂Q₃.

57. Marked as Second Stanza, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Ktly, Coll. iii. approue.] approue: Q₂Q₃, approve, — Cap. et seq.

58. Nay...next.] In parenthesis, Jen. Harke.] Hark! hark! Cap.

who is't that] who's that Qq. who is it that Theob. ii, Warb. Johns. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del.

59. It's] It is Q₂, Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sta. Wh. i, Del. T'is Q₂Q₃.

60-62. Def. I...men.] Om. Q₁.

60. false Loue] false, Q₂Q₃.

62. mo women] no women F₃F₄. more women Rowe +, Jen. Steev.'85, Dyce iii. moe women Glo. Ktly, Cam. Del. Rife, Wh. ii.

couch] touch Upton.

mo men] more men Rowe +, Jen. Steev.'85, Dyce iii. moe men Glo. Ktly, Cam. Del. Rife, Wh. ii.

54. Lay by these] After this Aside, nearly every modern editor, even Keightley (for whose punctuation I have much respect), puts a colon or a semicolon, as though the sentence were incomplete. Almost the same can be said of the punctuation after 'anon' in the next line; a few editors do put a full stop there. Let the record of the punctuation of these lines at least, be red-lettered for Isaac Jaggard.—ED.

58. knocks] W. N. (Memorials of Sh. p. 364): What gives a finishing stroke to the terror of this midnight scene is the rustling of the wind, which the affrighted imagination of Desdemona supposes to be one knocking at the door. This circumstance.

So get thee gone, good night : mine eyes do itch : [334 a]
Doth that boade weeping ?

Emil. 'Tis neyther heere, nor there' 65

Des. I haue heard it said so. O these Men, these men !
Do'st thou in conscience thinke (tell me Emilia)
That there be women do abuse their husbands
In such grosse kinde ?

Emil. There be some such, no question. 70

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world ?

Emil. Why, would not you ?

Des. No, by this Heauenly light.

Emil. Nor I neither, by this Heauenly light:

I might doo't as well i'th'darke. 75

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for al the world ?

Emil. The world's a huge thing :

It is a great price, for a small vice.

Des. Introth, I thinke thou would'st not.

Emil. Introth I thinke I should, and vndoo't when 80
I had done. Marry, I would not doe such a thing for a ioynt Ring, nor for meafures of Lawne, nor for Gownes, 82

63. So] Now Q₁.

63, 64. mine...weeping] One line, Q₁.

64. Doth] does Qq, Cap.

66-70. Om. Q₁.

69. kinde] kindes Q₂Q₃.

71. deed] thing Q₂Q₃, Cap.

74, 75. Prose, Han. Cam. Del. Dyce iii.

Nor...might, as one line, Ktly.

74. Nor] No, nor Cap.

75. doo't as well] doe it as well Q₁. as well doe it Q₂Q₃.

i'th'] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Wh. in the Qq. i'th' the Cap. et cet.

76. Would'st] Would Q₁.

deed] thing Q₂, Jen.

77-78. Prose, Han. Jen. Knt. The... Qq.

price, as one line, Qq, Cap. Steev. Mal.
Var. Coll. et seq.

77. world's] world is Qq, Johns. Cap.
Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. 1,
Ktly, Del.

78. It is] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Dyce, Glo.
Cam. Rlfe, Wh. ii. 'Tis Cap. et cet.

79. Introth] Good troth Q₂, Mal. Steev.
'93, Var. Sing. Ktly.

80. Introth] By my troth Q₂, Mal.
Steev.'93, Var. Sing. Ktly.

vndoo't] unsweat's Han.

81. dome.] dome it, Qq.

82. ioynt Ring] join'd-ring Wh. i.

nor for meafures] or for meafur:

which would have been overlooked as trifling by an inferior writer, has a most sublime effect in the hands of Shakespeare.

62. mo] WALKER (Crit. iii, 290): Why write 'mo' [in modern editions]? This, indeed, is the spelling of F₁, but F₂ has 'mo' or 'moe' in numberless places where no one has thought it necessary so to read, unless the rhyme demanded it.

71-94. COLLIER (ed. ii): These lines are struck out with a pen in the (MS.), as if not acted in the time of the old annotator.

78. DYCE (ed. iii): A quotation evidently. [Printed by Dyce as a distich.]

82. ioynt Ring] STEEVENS: These rings will be best described by a passage in Petticoats, nor Caps, nor any petty exhibition. But for 83 all the whole world : why, who would not make her husbanda Cuckold, to make him a Monarch? I should ven- 85

ture Purgatory for't.

Def. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong
For the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i'th'world ;
and hauing the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in 90 your owne world, and you might quickly make it right.

Def. I do not thinke there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen : and as many to'th'vantage, as would store the world they plaid for.
But I do thinke it is their Husbands faults 95
If Wiues do fall : (Say, that they slacke their duties,
And powre our Treasures into forraigne laps;
Or else breake out in peeuisht lealoufies,
Throwing restraint vpon vs : Or say they strike vs,
Or scant our former hauing in despight) 100
Why we haue galles : and though we haue some Grace,

- | | |
|---|--|
| 83. Petticoats] or Petticotes Q ₁ . | i' th Q ₂ Q ₃ . i' the Q ₄ et cet. |
| nor Caps] or Caps Q ₂ Q ₃ . | 91. right] wright Q ₄ . |
| petty] such Q ₁ . | 93. to'th'] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Wh. to the |
| 84. all the] the Q ₂ , Cap. | Q ₄ et cet. |
| world :] world? Q ₁ . world! Han. | 93, 94. As verse, Theob. Warb. Cap. |
| world ,— Cap. et seq. | Mal. Yes...many one line, Steev.'93, Var. |
| why ,] vs pitty , Q ₁ . | Coll. Sing. |
| 85. Cuckold] cuckole Q ₁ . | 94. plaid] played Q ₄ . |
| 86. for't] for it Q ₂ , Jen. | 95-112. Om. Q ₄ . |
| 87, 88. Prose, Jen. Steev.'93, Var. Knt, | 97. powre] poure Q ₂ . power Q ₃ . pour |
| Coll. Sing. Ktly, Huds. | F ₃ F ₄ . |
| 87. a wrong] wrong Q ₂ Q ₃ . | our] out Rlf. |
| 89. i'th'] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Jen. Wh. | 99. upon] on Rowe ii+. |

Dryden's Don Sebastian : ' — a curious artist wrought them, With joints so close as not to be perceiv'd ; Yet are they both each other's counterpart : Her part had Juan inscrib'd, and his had Zayda, (You know those names are theirs) and, in the midst, A heart divided in two halves was plac'd. Now if the rivets of these rings inclos'd, Fit not each other, I have forg'd this lye : But if they join, you must forever part.'

83. exhibition] DYCE (Gloss.) : An allowance, a pension. See Lear, I, ii, 25.

89. wrong i' th' world] WHITE (ed. ii) : That is, a wrong in the world's eye, a conventional wrong. Emilia is quibbling. PURNELL : It is only wrong if it becomes known to the world ; now, if one is to gain the world for it, the world is at your command, and therefore it is no matter.

93. vantage] STEEVENS : That is, to boot, over and above.

100. hauing] JOHNSON : Our former allowance of expense.

101. Grace] In a theological sense.—ED.

Yet haue we some Reuenge. Let Husbands know, 102
 Their wiues haue sense like them : They see, and smell,
 And haue their Palats both for sweet, and fowre,
 As Husbands haue. What is it that they do, 105
 When they change vs for others ? Is it Sport?
 I thinke it is : and doth Affection breed it ?
 I thinke it doth. Is't Frailty that thus erres ?
 It is so too. And haue not we Affections ?
 Desires for Sport? and Frailty, as men haue ? 110
 Then let them vse vs well : else let them know,
 The illes we do, their illes instruct vs so.

Def. Good night, good night :
 Heauen me such vses fend,
 Not to picke bad, from bad ; but by bad, mend. Exeunt 115

108. Is't] It's Var. (misprint).

Steev. Coll. ii. 100 Rowe i.

110. Sport] sports Warb. Johns.

113, 114. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

111. them...them] em...em Q₂Q₃.

114. Heauen] God Q₂.

112. The illes] The ill Q₂.

vses] v/sage Q₂, Johns. Cap. Steev.

so.] to. Ff, Rowe ii+, Cap. Jen.

Mal. Var.

103. sense] MALONE and DYCE: That is, sensual appetite. [As Hamlet uses it in his interview with his mother.]

114, 115. HUNTER (ii, 288): Shakespeare having remarked in King John, 'How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds Makes ill deeds done,' we may probably take these words of Desdemona as, beside their purpose in the drama itself, intended as a hint and warning to the audience not to be infected by the fearful instance, about to be presented, of the higher paroxysms of passion. We have noticed similar cautions on other occasions.

114. vses] JOHNSON: Usage is an old word for custom, and, I think, better than 'uses.' COLLIER (ed. ii): We may almost suspect that neither 'uses' nor usage is correct; perhaps 'uses' ought to be issues, i. e., results; in Tim. I, i, 23, we have seen 'issues' misprinted uses. STAUNTON: It may be doubted whether either 'uses' or usage is the poet's word. ['Uses,' it seems to me, is emphatically right. It is merely a repetition of Emilia's own word. Emilia has threatened that if 'husbands do not "use us well," it will be their fault if we follow their example.' Desdemona prays that she may receive such 'uses' that, instead of imitating the bad by bad, she may be able even to mend and become better thereby. The noble, self-forgetting music in which Æmilia dies, goes far to drive away the shadow that envelops her theft of the handkerchief, for which, in the retrospect, we are ready to make every excuse. But no excuses can be suggested for her here. Her insidious references to Lodovico, and her allusion to Othello's blow, while Desdemona's lips are still bruised from it, stone our hearts, and we can see in her here only the dark foil to Desdemona's snow-white purity.—ED.]

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Iago, and Rodorigo.

Iago. Heere, stand behinde this Barke,
 Straight will he come :
 Weare thy good Rapier bare, and put it home : 5
 Quicke, quicke, feare nothing ; Ile be at thy Elbow,
 It makes vs, or it marres vs, thinke on that,
 And fixe most firme thy Resolution.
Rod. Be neere at hand, I may miscarry in't. [334 b]
Iago. Heere, at thy hand : Be bold, & take thy stand. 10
Rod. I haue no great deuotion to the deed,
 And yet he hath giuen me satisfying Reasons :
 'Tis but a man gone. Forth my Sword : he dies.
Iago. I haue rub'd this yong Quat almost to the sence, 14

1. Actus...] Actus. 5. Q₁. Actus 5.

Scena 1. Q₁ Q₂.

The Street. Rowe. A Street before the Palace. Theob.

3, 4. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

3. Barke] F₂. Bulke Qq. Bark F₃ F₄.

balk Sing. Wh. i. bulk Rowe et cet.

7. on] of Qq.

8. moft] more Q₂ Q₃.

10. Be bold] Behold Ff, Rowe.

10. stand] sword Q₁, Pope, Theob.
 Han. Warb. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var.

[Retires to a little distance. Cap.

11. deed] dead Q₁.

12. And] Om. Pope+.

hath] has Qq, Cap. Mal. Steev.'93,

Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Del.

13. [Stands apart. Theob.

14. I haue] I've Pope+, Dyce iii.

Quat] gnat Q₁, Pope, Warb. knot
 Theob. quab Han.

3. Barke] KNIGHT: We prefer the more intelligible reading bulk, although we have little doubt that 'bark' was correctly used by Shakespeare in this instance as a projecting part of the fortification,—a buttress. SINGER: I feel assured that balk was intended, and not bulk. Palsgrave renders that word by pouste, and Huloet defines it, 'the chief beame or pillar of a house.'

8. Resolution] WHITE (ed. ii): Five syllables.

14. Quat] JOHNSON: Hanmer reads quab, a gudgeon; not that a gudgeon can be rubbed to much sense, but that a man grossly deceived is often called a gudgeon. Upton reads quail, which he proves, by much learning, to be a very cholerick bird. Theobald would introduce knot, a small bird of that name. A 'quat' in the midland counties is a pimple, which by rubbing is made to smart, or is rubbed to sence. Rodorigo is called a 'quat' by the same mode of speech as a low fellow is now termed in low language a scab. [Dr Johnson forgot that Shakespeare uses this word too.—ED.] To rub to the sence is to rub to the quick. STEEVENS cites several instances of the use of 'quat' in Dekker and others, but more to the purpose is it that WISE (p. 156) gives it in his Glossary of Warwickshire Words, as in use at this day, in the same sense as here.

And he growes angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio, 15
 Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
 Euery way makes my gaine. Liue Rodorigo,
 He calles me to a restitution large
 Of Gold, and Iewels, that I bob'd from him,
 As Guifts to Desdemona. 20
 It must not be : If Cassio do remaine,
 He hath a dayly beauty in his life,
 That makes me vgly : and besides, the Moore
 May vnfold me to him : there stand I in much perill :
 No, he must dye. But so, I heard him comming. 25

Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gate, 'tis he : Villaine thou dyest.
Cas. That thrust had beene mine enemy indeed,
 But that my Coate is better then thou know'st :
 I will make prooue of thine. 30

15. angry. Now,] angry now: Q₁.
angry, now, Q₂. angry, now Q₃.

17. gaine] game Qq, Jen. Coll. Wh. i, Ktly, Rlf.

19. Of] For Qq.

22. halk] has Qq.

dayly] daynty Jabez (N. & Qu. 5, vii, 83).

24. him : there] him there; Q₂.

much perill] perill Q₂, Pope+, Jen.

25. But so,] be't so, Qq, Jen. Sing. Ktly.
Be it so, Pope+. be't so; Coll. Wh. i, Dyce

iii, Huds. Be't so. Cam.

25. heard] heare or hear QqFf et cet.

[Exit Jago. Rowe.

27. gate] gait Johns.

[He runs at Cassio and wounds him.

Rowe.

28. mine] my Qq.

29. know'st] think'st Q₂, Jen. Steev.
 Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly.

30. [Fight. Iago cuts Cassio behind in the Leg, and Exit. Then Rod. and Cas-sio fall. Theob.

17. Liue] For instances where the subjunctive may be indicated by placing the verb before the subject, see ABBOTT, § 361.

19. bob'd] MALONE: That I fool'd him out of. [Both Malone and Dyce cite Coles's Latin Dict., 1679, as an authority for this word; but Rider's Latin Dict. of 1626, half a century earlier, gives 'A bob or mocke, sanna.' It is still current slang here in America.—ED.]

25. But so] DYCE (ed. iii): Qy. if intended for 'But, soft'? HUDSON: And so I suspect it should be.

29. Coate] MALONE supposes that Iago overhearing this, and inferring from it that Cassio wears secret armour, afterwards wounds Cassio in the leg. KNIGHT says that the characteristics, according to Vecellio, of the costume of a 'soldato disarmato,' which would be that of Cassio and Iago when off guard, were the 'buff jerkin and the scarf of company,' and that it is to this 'buff jerkin' that Cassio refers, and not to any secret armour. THEOBALD asserts, however, that Shakespeare 'copied his Italian Novelist in this incident,' wherein it is stated that the Ancient 'dirrizzò un colpo alle gambe, per farlo cadere.'

Rod. Oh, I am flaine.

31

Cassio. I am maym'd for euer:
Helpe hoa : Murther, murther.

Enter Othello.

Oth. The voyce of Cassio, Iago keepes his word.

35

Rod. O Villaine that I am.

Oth. It is euen so.

Cas. Oh helpe hoa : Light, a Surgeon.

Oth. 'Tis he : O braue Iago, honest, and iust,
That hast such Noble sence of thy Friends wrong,
Thou teachest me. Minion, your deere lyes dead,
And your vnblest Fate highes : Strumpet I come :
For of my heart, those Charmes thine Eyes, are blotted.
Thy Bed lust-stain'd, shall with Lufts blood bee spotted.

40

Exit Othello.

45

Enter Lodouico and Gratiano.

Cas. What hoa? no Watch? No passage?
Murther, Murther.

Gra. 'Tis some mischance, the voyce is very direfull.

49

31. [Fight, and both fall. Rowe.

32, 33. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.

32. I am] I'm Pope+, Dyce iii, Huds.
maym'd] maind Q₁.

33. Helpe] light Qq, Cap. Coll.

Murther, murther.] murder, Q₂Q₃.

34. Enter...] Enter Othello, above at a Window. Rowe.

Scene II. Pope+, Jen.

37. It is] Harke tis Q₂Q₃. Harke, tis
Q₄, Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Sing. Ktly. 'Tis Knt, Sta.

euen] en Coll. Wh. i.

41. me. Minions] Ff, Rowe, Coll. Sing.
Wh. Glo. Ktly, Cam. Rlfe. me;—minion
Qq, Knt, Dyce iii. me—minion Pope et
cet.

42. vnblest Fate highes:] fate hies apace
Q₂, Pope+, Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var.
Sing. vnblest fate hies; Q₂Q₃. vnblest fate
hies apace; Ktly.

43. For of] For off Ff, Rowe. From off Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. Forth of Qq, Johns. et seq.

are] have Han. ii.

44. Bed lust-stain'd] Bed-left-stain'd
F₃F₄.

45. Exit...] Ex. Q₁. Exit. Q₂Q₃.

46. Enter...] Enter... at a distance.
Theob.

Scene III. Pope+, Jen.

47, 48. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

49. voyce] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt, Dyce
i, Sta. cry Qq et cet.

39-44. INGLEBY (Shakespeare, the Man, &c. ii, 192), believing that Shakespeare did not intend Othello to speak at all in this Scene, denies that Shakespeare wrote these lines, which he calls 'atrocious stuff.'

43. For of] Unquestionably a misprint for Forth of, of which form see other instances in ABBOTT, § 156.

47. passage] JOHNSON: No passengers? nobody going by? SINGER: A passenger anciently signified a passage-boat or vessel, and could not, therefore, be used in its modern sense without an equivouque.

Caf. Oh helpe. 50
Lodo. Hearke.
Rod. Oh wretched Villaine.
Lod. Two or three groane. 'Tis heauy night;
 These may be counterfeits : Let's think't vnfafe
 To come into the cry, without more helpe. 55
Rod. Nobody come : then shall I bleed to death.
Enter Iago.
Lod. Hearke.
Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with Light, and Weapons. 60
Iago. Who's there ?
 Who's noyse is this that cries on murther ?
Lodo. We do not know.
Iago, Do not you heare a cry ?
Caf. Heere, heere : for heauen sake helpe me. 65
Iago. What's the matter ?
Gra. This is Othello's Ancient, as I take it.
Lodo. The same indeede, a very valiant Fellow.
Iago. What are you heere, that cry so greeuoufly ? 69

51. Hearke.] Hark, hark! Ktly. 60. [Re-enter Iago with a light. Dyce.
 53. groane] groans Qq. groans Pope +, 61, 62. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.
 Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. 62. on] out Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Jen. Steev.
 'Tis] Ff, Rowe, Knt. it is a Qq et '85.
 cet. murther f] murther thus? Coll.
 55. into] QqFf, Rowe +, Jen. Sing. (MS).
 Ktly. in to Cap. et cet. 63. We] I Qq, Jen.
 56. come :] Ff, Rowe, Pope. come, Qq. 64. Do] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Knt. Did come? Theob. et cet. Qq et cet.
 57. Enter Iago] Enter Iago with a light. 65. heauen] heauens Qq. heaven's Han.
 Qq. Enter Iago in his shirt. Rowe. et seq.
 59. Light] lights Qq.

52. JOHN HUNTER: Roderigo here reproaches himself.

53. groane] KNIGHT: Lodovico does not merely say that there are two or three groans from one man, but that two or three men groan; and he adds, 'these may be counterfeits.' LETTSOM (Walker, Crit. iii, 290, foot-note): How could people at a distance distinguish whether groans proceeded from one person or from more, when the groaners were lying close together? [Probably they did not both groan in the same key.—ED.]

touché!

53. heauy] JOHNSON: A thick, cloudy night, in which an ambush may be commodiously laid. PURNELL: 'Gloomy.' Used elsewhere only of the eye in this sense.

62. cries on] MALONE: So in Eastward Ho, 1605: 'Who cries on murder? Lady, was it you?' That line is a parody on a line in The Spanish Tragedy. See also Ham. V, ii, 351. WHITE (ed. i): That is, cries continually murder.

Caf. Iago? Oh I am spoyl'd, vndone by Villaines : 70
Giue me some helpe.

Iago. O mee, Lieutenant!
What Villaines haue done this?

Caf. I thinke that one of them is heereabout, 74
And cannot make away. [335 a]

Iago. Oh treacherous Villaines :
What are you there? Come in, and giue some helpe.

Rod. O helpe me there.

Caffio. That's one of them.

Iago. Oh murd'rous Slaue! O Villaine! 80

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhumane Dogge!

Iago. Kill men i'th'darke?

Where be thefe bloody Theeues?

How filent is this Towne? Hoa, murther, murther. 84

70. Iago?] Iago, Qq.

I am] I'm Pope+, Dyce iii, Huds.

72, 73. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.

72. me,] my Q₄. me Q₅. me, Q₆Ff
et cet.

74. that one] the one Qq.

77. [To Lod. and Gra. Theob.

78. me there.] me! here. Coll. Wh. 1.

there] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. Sta. here
Qq et cet.

79. them] em Qq.

80. murd'rous] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Wh.

ii. murderous Qq, Johns. et cet.

[Thrusts him in. Q₂Q₃. Iago stabs him. Rowe.

81. inhumane] inhumaine Q₂Q₆. in humaine Q₅.

Dogge] dog,—o, o, o. Qq, Cap. Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var.

[Dies. Han.

82, 83. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

82. men] him Q₄.

83. the] those Qq.

79. BOOTH: Cassio takes Desdemona's handkerchief,—the gift of Othello,—from his pocket and binds his leg.

80. HAWKINS (Life of Kean, i, 253): Previous actors of Iago did not appear to have remembered that the whole fortune of the Ancient hinged upon this event; they stabbed Roderigo, and then walked away with perfect ease and satisfaction. Not so Kean. He gave and repeated the murderous thrust till no life could be supposed to remain; but feeling this to be too important a matter to be left in doubt, he, though conversing coolly with those about him, threw his eye continually towards the prostrate body, with an intensity as if he would pierce its vital recesses to ascertain the important fact. Sometimes he walked by it carelessly and surveyed it with a glance too rapid to be observed; sometimes he deliberately approached it and looked at it with his candle, as if to satisfy the spectators that it was the villain who had attacked his friend Cassio, and thus he continued to watch and hover over it until he left the stage, his manner perfectly cool, while his eye expressed the most restless anxiety.

83. be] ABBOTT, § 299: Be is used in questions implying doubt: 'where can they be?'

84. BOOTH: As Iago is about to stab Cassio, he sees Lodovico and Gratiano approaching with servants and torches.

Lend me a Light : know we this face, or no ? . 111

Alas my Friend, and my deere Countryman .

Rodorigo? No : Yes fure : Yes, 'tis Rodorigo.

Gra. What, of Venice ?

Iago. Euen he Sir : Did you know him ? 115

Gra. Know him? I.

Iago. Signior Gratiano ? I cry your gentle pardon :
These bloody accidents must excuse my Manners,
That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you. 120

Iago. How do you Cassio ? Oh, a Chaire, a Chaire.

Gra. Rodorigo ?

Iago. He, he, 'tis he :

Oh that's well said, the Chaire.

Some good man beare him carefully from hence, 125

Ile fetch the Generall's Surgeon. For you Mistris, Saue you your labour. He that lies slaine heere (Cassio)
Was my deere friend. What malice was between you ?

Caf. None in the world : nor do I know the man ?

Iago. What? looke you pale? Oh beare him o'th'Ayre. 130
Stay you good Gentlemen. Looke you pale, Mistris ?

112. Countryman] country man : Qq.

113. Yes, 'tis] Q₂Q₃, Cap. Knt. Yea, 'tis
Ff, Rowe+. O heauen Q₁, Jen. et cet.
Rodorigo] Rederigo Q₂Q₃.

114. What] Roderigo ? what Cap. conj.
(p. 36 b).

116. I] QqFf. Ah! Rowe+. Ay.
Han. et cet.

117. your] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt, Sta.
you Qq et cet.

120. I am] I'm Dyce iii.

123, 124. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

123. He, he,] He, Qq.

[Enter Some with a Chair. Cap.

124. the] a Qq.

126. Generall's] General F₄.
[To Bianca. Johns.

127. labour. He] labour, he Qq.
(Cassio)] Om. Han.

128. between] betwixt Q₂Q₃. betwix Q₄.

129. man] man : F₄. man. Qq, Rowe
et seq.

130. [To Bianca. Johns.

o'th'] out o'th Q₁. out oth' Ff. out o' th' Rowe+, Jen. Dyce iii, Wh. ii. o' the
Knt. out o' the Q₂Q₃ et cet.

131. Gentlemen.] Gentlewoman, Qq,
Mal. V-r.

112. Countryman] STEEVENS: This passage incontestably proves that Iago was meant for a Venetian. BOOTH: Iago is very much overcome.

124. well said] See II, i, 192.

131. Gentlemen] MALONE upholds the Qq: 'No reason can be assigned why Lodovico and Gratiano should leave before they had heard from Iago further particulars of the attack on Cassio, merely because Cassio was borne off; whereas, Bianca would naturally endeavour to accompany Cassio, to render him assistance.' BOSWELL agrees with Malone, and thinks that Iago stops Bianca under a pretended suspicion

Do you perceiue the gaftneffe of her eye? 132
 Nay, if you ftare, we fhall heare more anon.
 Behold her well : I pray you looke vpon her :
 Do you fee Gentlemen? Nay, guiltineffe will fpeake 135
 Though tongues were out of vfe.
Æmil. Alas, what is the matter?
 What is the matter, Husband?
Iago. Caffio hath heere bin fet on in the darke
 By Rodorigo, and Fellowes that are fcap'd : 140
 'He's almoft flaine, and Rodorigo quite dead. [335 b]
Æmil. Alas good Gentleman : alas good Caffio.
Iago. This is the fruits of whoring. Prythe Æmilia,
 Go know of Caffio where he fupt to night. 144

132. gaftneffe] ieaftures Q₁Q₂. jeftures Q₃. geftures Q'81. ghastness Knt, Sing. Ktly, Del.

[To Bianca. Rowe.

133. if you ftare] an you ftirre Qq. (ftir Q₃). an you ftir :— Coll. Hal. heare] haue Qq.

134. well :...you] well...you, Qq. well, ...you Rowe.

135. Do...guiltineffe] One line, Qq, Pope+, Jen.

136. vfe.] vfe. Enter Em, Qq. (Emi. Q₃Q₄).

Scene V. Pope+, Jen.

137, 138. One line, Qq, Cap. et seq. (except Knt).

137, 138. Alas, what is... What is] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. Alas! what's...what's Coll. Wh. i, Ktly, Hal. Rlfe. 'Las, what's ...what is Sta. 'Las what's...what's Qq et cet.

139. hath heere bin] has here bin Qq, Cap. has heere Q'81. has been Q'95. hath there been Theob. Warb. Johns.

141. quite] Ff, Rowe, Knt. Om. Qq, Pope et cet.

143. fruits] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Sta. Wh. i, Del. fruite Qq et cet.

Prythe] pray Q₃, Pope+, Jen. prithce Q₄F₄, Rowe, Knt, Dyce, Glo. Cam. Rlfe, Wh. ii. Prethce F₂Q₃, 'Prythee Sing. Ktly. Prythee Cap. et cet.

that she would try to escape. REED defends the Ff on the ground that it was more proper for the two gentlemen to leave with Cassio in order to assist him, than to stay and gratify their curiosity. Respect for Othello's successor, if not personal regard, would have dictated such a proceeding had they not been stopped by Iago's desiring them not to go.

135. will] MOREL: Ce n'est pas un futur, mais une forme emphatique on fréquente. Le latin donne parfois une valeur analogue aux désinences du futur: Cantabit vacuus coram latrone viator.'—Juvenal.

136. use] STEEVENS: So in Ham. II, ii, 569: 'For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak With most miraculous organ.'

144. to night] MALONE: In the last Scene of the preceding Act, Iago informs Roderigo that Cassio was to sup with Bianca; that he would accompany Cassio to her house, and would take care to bring him away from thence between twelve and one. Cassio, too, had himself informed Iago (IV, i) that he would sup with Bianca, and Iago had promised to meet him at her house. Perhaps, however, Iago chose to appear ignorant of Cassio's movements during the evening. STEEVENS: Yet how happens it that

What, do you shake at that ?

145

Bian. He fupt at my houle, but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O did he fo ? I charge you go with me.

Æmil. Oh fie vpon thee Strumpet.

Bian. I am no Strumpet, but of life as honeft,

As you that thus abuse me.

150

Æmil. As I ? Fie vpon thee.

Iago. Kinde Gentlemen :

Let's go fee poore Caffio drest.

Come Miftris, you must tel's another Tale.

Æmilia, run you to the Cittadell,

155

And tell my Lord and Lady, what hath happ'd :

Will you go on afore ? This is the night

That either makes me, or foredoes me quight. Exeunt 158

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Desdemona in her bed.

Oth. It is the Cause, it is the Cause (my Soule)

3

148. Oh fie] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Knt, Coll. Wh. i. Fie Q₂Q₃, Fie, fie Q₄ et cet.

151. Fie] Ff, Rowe +, Knt, Coll. Wh.

i. fough, fie Q₁, Jen. now fie Q₂Q₃. foh ! fie Cap. et cet.

152, 153. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

153. go] Om. Pope +.

154. tel's] tell us Steev. Mal. Var. Rann. Knt.

155. you] Om. Pope, Theob. i, Han.

156. hath] has Qq, Mal. Steev.'93, Var. Sing. Ktly.

157. on afore ?] on, I pray, Q₁. on, I pray ? Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing.

Rlf. on ? I pray : Q₂Q₃. on ? I pray. Glo. Cam. Wh. ii.

157. [Aside. Steev. et seq.

158. makes] markes Q₄.

1. Scœna...] Om. Qq. Scene VI. Pope +, Jen.

2. Enter...] Enter Othello with a light.

Q₁. Enter Othello with a light, and Desdemona in her bed. Q₂Q₃. A Bed-chamber: Desdemona is discover'd asleep in her bed. Enter Othello. Rowe. Enter Othello with a light and a sword. Pope.

...A light burning. Steev.

Bianca, instead of replying,—‘He supp’d,’ &c., did not answer, addressing herself to Iago: ‘Why, you well know | He supp’d,’ &c. The former line being imperfect, some such words might have been omitted. Or, perhaps, our author was unwilling that Bianca should say, in the presence of Iago’s wife, that he too had been of Cassio’s supper-party; and hence this seeming inconsistency. SINGER: We must suppose that Iago thought it more secure to waylay Cassio, as we find he does, without actually joining him at supper-time.

157. BOOTH: Watch them well off, then take a look at Roderigo and speak hoarsely.

158. foredoes] See Ham. II, i, 103.

2. KNIGHT is at some pains to explain the setting of the stage for this Scene in Shakespeare’s time, and, with the aid of Tieck and Ulrici, devises a satisfactory arrangement, whereby we have a stage within the stage. But I do not think that much real information has been added to that which Malone has left us; certainly Dyce and Collier found nothing to add, and all that Malone was able to discover was, substantially, that there was a balcony, or upper stage, at the back of the principal stage, and that, in addition to the principal curtain in the front, there were others, as substitutes for scenes, which were called traverses, and could be drawn aside, disclosing inner compartments. It is really not difficult to imagine that even these simple resources were adequate to all the needs of this last scene.—ED. FECHTER: Desdemona's Chamber. At the back a large window with balcony, overlooking the sea. On the left of the window an arch discovering an oratory; by the half-raised curtain is seen a prie-Dieu, surmounted by a Madonna, and lighted by a red lamp. On the same side, in front, a bed raised by two steps. A door at the right. A high and elegant Venetian lamp burns at the head of the bed, where Desdemona lies asleep; a small toilette glass, fallen from her hand, lies near her. Her clothes scattered about. On the balcony, Othello, motionless, enveloped in a long white burnous, is looking at the stars. Far off,—at sea,—is heard the Song of Willow. As the voices die away, Othello, who, during the last couplet, comes slowly forward to the bed to look at Desdemona, accidentally touches the glass in which he sees his bronzed face,—(With bitter despair): 'It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul! (returning to the window, his eyes fixed on the heavens.) Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!—(looking at his face once again). It is the cause! (He violently throws the glass into the sea, goes to the door, locks it, advances to the bed, half drawing his sword; then suddenly stops, and returns it to the scabbard) Yet I'll,' &c. BOOTH: A Bed-chamber in the Castle. Raised Bed L., opposite to large Window R. Moonlight streams through window and falls upon Bed. Door C. Divan C. A Light burning on Table. Desdemona in Bed, asleep, discovered. Othello also discovered. BOOTH (MS.): I prefer the bed at the side of the stage, with the head towards the audience; it is of more importance that Othello's face should be seen than Desdemona's dead body, and the killing is partly hidden at the same time. MRS F. A. KEMBLE (Temple Bar, July, 1884): This last Scene presents technical difficulties in its adequate representation which have never yet been even partially overcome. The audience, of course, cannot be expected to sit by and see Desdemona smothered; the curtains of the alcove in which the bed is, are therefore lowered during that operation, but it is very desirable, if not absolutely necessary, that she should be both heard and seen when she gasps out her dying exculpation of her husband, and while she is perpetually apostrophized by Emilia, Othello, and Lodovico. The lines addressed to the lamp, 'If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,' should certainly be spoken with the light in near juxtaposition to the bed, and the intense pathos of the following ones, 'When I have plucked the rose,' &c., can only be given with due effect,—and what effect Salvini's voice would give to them!—by Othello leaning over his sleeping wife. . . . The position of the bed (which for all the purposes of the Scene would be altered with advantage to the side of the stage), by which Othello is constrained to turn his back to the audience while addressing Desdemona, if she remains in it, has, we suppose, induced Signor Salvini to make her come from the alcove and speak the greater part of the dialogue standing in front of it; an alteration of the stage tradition which hurts the effect of the Scene, and is untrue to the intention of Shakespeare, who makes Othello tell his wife that she is on her death-bed, and in reply to his furious command, 'Peace, be still,' receives the answer, 'I will; what is the matter?' with which the terrified woman cowers down upon her pillow like a poor, frightened child. Indeed, the whole Scene loses its most pitiful

[2. Enter Othello, and Desdemona in her bed.]

Let me not name it to you, you chaste Starres,
 It is the Cause. Yet Ile not shed her blood,
 Nor scarre that whiter skin of hers, then Snow, element, by allowing Desdemona to confront Othello standing, instead of uttering the piteous pleadings for mercy in the helpless prostration of her half-recumbent position; although we have no doubt that a most powerful effect might be produced by any actress equal to the situation, who should herself rush from the bed to Othello's feet, as she utters the piercing denial, 'No, no, no; send for the man and ask him.'

5

3, 4. JOHNSON: The abruptness of this soliloquy makes it obscure. The meaning, I think, is this:—I am here (says Othello in his mind) overwhelmed with horror. What is the reason of this perturbation? Is it want of resolution to do justice? Is it the dread of shedding blood? No; it is not the action that shocks me, but 'it is the cause, it is the cause, my soul.' STEEVENS: Othello, full of horror at the cruel action which he is about to perpetrate, seems at this instant to be seeking his justification, by representing to himself the cause, i. e., the greatness of the provocation he had received. He may, however, mean,—It is the cause of chastity and virtue that I maintain. HUDSON: Othello means that Desdemona's crime is the sole motive or reason that impels him to the present act; that in this alone he has a justifying cause, a 'compelling occasion,' for what he is about to do; so that he cannot justly lie under the reproach of having acted from any subjective or self-generated animus of revengeful jealousy. WHITE (ed. ii): This is, to me, one of the most doubtful and perplexing passages in all these plays. Which is the emphatic word, 'it' or 'is' or 'cause,' and what is 'the cause,' and of what it is the cause, I confess that I am not ready to decide. That 'it' in the second line refers to Desdemona's supposed unchastity is plain enough; but that her unchastity is 'the cause' is not so certain. For Othello to say to himself, and at this moment, that Desdemona's conduct is the cause of his intended murder, seems very tame; and the [eighth] line, with its conclusion, 'else she'll betray more men,' seems to imply that Othello has deluded himself into looking upon his act as providential rather than retributive, and that 'cause' is his emphatic word. [If 'cause' is the emphatic word, and assuredly it is when it first occurs, it should not receive an equal emphasis twice in the same line; then White's perplexity falls on all of us. Is the second 'it' or the second 'is' to be emphatic? I should prefer to let the emphasis fall on 'is.' But is it necessary to emphasize any one word? Is not the mere repetition of each word in itself an emphasis of each word?—ED.]

4. chaste Starres] HUDSON: In classical poetry the Moon is Diana, the goddess of chastity, and the stars are the train of virgins attending on her. The epithet 'chaste' thus applied suggests the nature of the cause which the purity of the stars forbids to be named in their presence. The Athenaeum (10 April, 1875): After delivering the speech, 'It is the cause,' slowly, the first lines being spoken close to the door by which he enters, Othello [Salvini] kisses his sleeping wife, then goes to the window, and stands with the lightning playing upon his face.

6. whiter] For many instances of this transposition of the adjective, see ABBOTT, § 419 a, and WALKER (Crit. i, 160).

6. of hers] ABBOTT, § 239: 'This of yours' is now, as in E. E., generally applied to one out of a class, whether the class exist or be imaginary. We could say 'this coat of yours,' but not (except colloquially) 'this head of yours.' It is, however, commonly used by Shakespeare, as in the present instance, where even the conception of a class is impossible.

And smooth as Monumentall Alablaster : 7
 Yet she must dye, else shee'l betray more men :
 Put out the Light, and then put out the Light : 9

7. as] and Pope ii.
Alablaster] QqF, F, Rowe ii, Pope.
Alablaster F, Rowe i.
 [Lays down the sword. Theob.
 9. Light, ... Light :] QqFf, Mal. Steev.
 '93, Var. '03, Var. '13, Var. '21, Dyce i, Glo.
 Cam. Del. Wh. ii. Light, and then put out the Light, Rowe i. Light, and then put out the Light, Rowe ii. light, and then put out the light : Pope. light, and,
then, put out the light ; Theob. light : and then—put out thy light. Han. light, and then—Put out the light ? Warb. Jen. Knt, Coll. i, Coll. ii. light, and, then—Put out the light ? Johns. light, and then—Put out the light ! Cap. Steev. '78, Steev. '85, Rann, Sing. Sta. Ktly, Rlfe. light, and,
then—Put out the light ! Steev. '73. light, and then put out the light. Wh. i. light,— and then put out thy light : Dyce ii, Dyce iii, Coll. iii, Huds. light, and then put out the light ? Hal.

7. Alablaster] HUNTER (ii, 281) : Compare with this, R. of L., 'Where, like a virtuous monument she lies.'—391. And again, 'Without the bed her other fair hand was, On the green coverlet; whose perfect white Shew'd like an April daisy on the grass.'—ib. 393. And again, 'With more than admiration he admired Her azure veins, her alabaster skin, Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.'—ib. 418. MURRAY (New Eng. Dict.) : The spelling in the 16-17th centuries is almost always alablaster; apparently due to a confusion with arblaster, a cross-bowman, also written alablaster.

8. more men] HUNTER (ii, 288) : I confess the sense is not clear to me. It seems as if it should be that Othello is the 'betrayed,' not Cassio, or any other person whom the Moor, in his disordered mind, may suppose to be a second Cassio. I would therefore suggest as worthy of consideration, that the words may have been originally, 'else she'll betray me more.' This conjecture is, to a certain extent, supported by the use of the word 'betray' in the following passage of Beard's Theatre of God's Judgment, 1531 : 'Out of the same fountain sprang the words of Queen Hecuba in Euripides, speaking to Menelaus touching Helen, when she admonished him to enact this law, that any woman which should betray her husband's credit and her own chastity to another man, should die the death.'—p. 387.

9. UPTON (p. 177) : Othello enters with a taper (not with a sword, for he intended all along to strangle his wife in her bed), and in the utmost agony of mind says, he has cause for his cruelty, a cause not to be named to the chaste stars; 'tis fit, therefore, Desdemona should die. 'I'll put out the light, and then,'—strangle her, he was going to say; but this recalls a thousand tender ideas in his troubled soul; he stops short—If I quench the taper, how easy 'tis to restore,' &c. WARBURTON : The meaning is, I will put out the light, and then proceed to the execution of my purpose. But the expression of putting out the light, bringing to mind the effects of the extinction of the light of life, he breaks short, and questions himself about the effects of this metaphorical extinction, introduced by a repetition of his first words, as much as to say, But hold, let me first weigh the reflections which this expression so naturally excites. FARMER : Warburton's punctuation gives a spirit which, I fear, was not intended. It seems to have been only a play upon words. 'To put out the light' was a phrase for 'to kill.' FIELDING (A Journey from this World to the Next, Miscellanies, 1743, vol. ii, p. 65) : I then observed Shakespeare standing between Betterton and Booth, and deciding a Difference between those two great Actors, concerning the placing an Accent in one of his lines; this was disputed on both sides with a Warmth, which surprised me in Elysium, till I discovered by Intuition that every Soul retained its principal Characteristic, being, indeed, its very Essence. The Line was that celebrated one in Othello: 'Put out the Light, and then put out the Light,' according to Betterton. Mr Booth contended to have it thus: 'Put out the Light, and then put out the Light.' I could not help offering my Conjecture on this Occasion, and suggested it might perhaps be: 'Put out the Light, and then put out thy Light.' Another hinted a Reading very sophisticated in my Opinion, 'Put out the Light, and then put out thee, Light,' making 'Light' to be in the vocative Case. Another would have altered this last Word, and read, 'Put out thy Light, and then put out thy Sight.' But Betterton said, if the Text was to be disturbed, he saw no reason why a Word might not be changed as well as a Letter, and instead of 'put out thy Light,' you might read, 'put out thy eyes.' At last it was agreed on all sides to refer the matter to the decision of Shakespeare himself, who delivered his Sentiments as follows: 'Faith, Gentlemen, it is so long since I wrote the Line I have forgot my Meaning. This I know, could I have dreamt so much Nonsense would have been talked and writ about it, I would have blotted it out of my Works; for I am sure, if any of these be my Meaning, it doth me very little Honour.' He was then interrogated concerning some other ambiguous Passages in his Works, but he declined any satisfactory Answer, saying, if Mr Theobald had not writ about it sufficiently, there were three or four more new Editions of his Plays coming out, which he hoped would satisfy every one; Concluding, 'I marvel nothing so much, as that Men will gird themselves at discovering obscure Beauties in an author. Certes, the greatest and most pregnant Beauties are ever the plainest and most striking; and, when two Meanings of a Passage can in the least balance our Judgements which to prefer, I hold it matter of unquestionable Certainty that neither of them are [sic] worth a farthing.' MALONE: The poet, I think, meant merely to say: 'I will now put out the lighted taper which I hold, and then put out the light of life;' and this introduces his subsequent reflection and comparison, just as aptly, as supposing the latter words of the line to be used in the same sense as in the beginning of it, which cannot be done without destroying that equivoque and play of words of which Shakespeare was so fond. I believe, however, that Shakespeare wrote, 'and then put out thy light'; and the reading of Q, in line 12, 'but once put out thine,' seems to me to countenance this emendation. [This very line in the Folio KNIGHT adduces as strengthening Warburton's interpretation.] BOSWELL: If Warburton's explanation be an error, it is demptus per vim, and I, for one, am very sorry to part with it. Broken sentences are very much in Shakespeare's manner, and are surely natural in the perturbed state of Othello's mind. I am unwilling to persuade myself that a regulation of the text which contains so much beauty could be merely the refinement of a critic, and that our great author, in one of his most highly-wrought scenes, instead of it, intended nothing but a cold conceit. [Both Steevens and Malone cite many instances from Shakespeare, his predecessors, and contemporaries, to prove that 'to put out the light' means 'to kill' or 'to die. As if the inverted torch were not as old as mortuary symbolism!—ED.] WHITE (ed. i): Warburton's ingenious reading makes the second clause the lively expression of stimulated intelligence; to me it is the despairing utterance of the profoundest woe. WALKER (Crit. iii, 291): Read, I believe, 'then put out thy light!' or, possibly, 'her light.' CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: Mr Goldwin Smith, regarding the line in question as a stage direction which has crept into the text, suggests to us that the passage ought to be printed as follows: 'Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.' [Takes off his sword, and then puts out the light.] If I

[9. Put out the Light, and then put out the Light:]

If I quench thee, thou flaming Minister, 10
 I can againe thy former light restore,
 Should I repent me. But once put out thy Light,
 Thou cunning'st Patterne of excelling Nature,
 I know not where is that Promethæan heate
 That can thy Light re-Lume. 15
 When I haue pluck'd thy Rose,
 I cannot giue it vitall growth againe,
 It needs must wither. Ile smell thee on the Tree.
 Oh Balmy breath, that doſt almoſt perſwade 19

12. me] Om. Pope+.
thy Light] thine Qq, Jen. Rann,
 Steev.'93, Var. Sing. Ktly.
 13. cunning'st] cunning Q, Jen.
 14. Promethæan] promethian Qq. Promethæan Ff. heate] fire Cap. conj. (p. 37 a).
 15, 16. One line, Qq, Cap. et seq.
 15. re-Lume] F, F, returne Q, re-lume
lume Q, Q, Cap. Jen. Steev.'85. re-lumine
 Rowe+. re-lume F, re-lume Mal. et cet.
 [Sets down the Taper. Theob. ... not putting it out. Han.
 16. thy] the Qq, Han. Jen. Rann, Glo.
 Cam. Dyce iii, Coll. iii, Huds. Rlfe, Wh. ii.
 18. needs must] must needs Qq, Glo.
 Cam. Rlfe, Wh. ii. thee] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt. the
 F, it Qq, Johns. et cet.
 [Kisses her. Q, Q, He kisses her
 (after lines 22, 23) Q.
 19. Oh] A Qq. O Rowe. Ah Glo. doſt almoſt] doth almost Qq, Knt.
almost doſt Jen.

quench thee,' &c., or thus: '— alabaster. [Takes off his sword.] Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men. [Puts out the light.] If I quench thee,' &c. DYCE (ed. iii): I agree with Malone and Walker that [thy light] is the true reading, though Boswell objects to it as introducing 'a cold conceit' (he, we may suppose, having suddenly forgotten what a crop of 'conceits' there is in Shakespeare). Compare the context: 'but once put out thy light, . . . that can thy light relume.' [Surely Malone knew that his change to 'thy light' was not original. Farmer's reference to Fielding is quoted in Malone's own edition; it was this casual reference to Fielding that led me to look up the passage. Ought not Dyce to have known that it was at least as old as Hamner? Dyce is unsparing in his criticisms of mistakes or oversights in others, yet he is no more infallible than the rest of us. In the interpretation of the present line every one will decide, and for the nonce rightly, according to his own temperament. Warburton's suggestion suits mine.—ED.] THEOBALD gives us a glimpse of the stage business of his day where he says: 'The players in all the companies wherever I have seen this tragedy performed, commit the absurdity of making Othello put out the candle.' He goes on to say, 'Desdemona is discovered in her bed in the dark; Othello enters the chamber with a taper. If there were any other lights in the room, where would be the drift of putting out his? If there were no others, and that he put out his, how absurd is it for Desdemona in the dark to talk of his "eyes rolling," and his "gnawing his nether lip." The difficulty is solved, Theobald thinks, by making Othello set down the light while he goes to kiss Desdemona; this wakens her, and so 'they continue in discourse together till he stifles her.' [How vapid is the Italian translation: Ch' io spenga questa face, E poi la vita sua.]

16. thy Rose] To me, this is far preferable to the rose of the Qq. This is 'beauty's Rose' of the Sonnets.—ED.

Iustice to breake her Sword. One more, one more : 20
 Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,
 And loue thee after. One more, and that's the last.
 So sweet, was ne're so fatall. I must weepe,
 But they are cruell Teares : This forrow's heauenly,
 It strikes, where it doth loue. She wakes. 25

Def. Who's there ? Othello ?

Othel. I Defdemona.

Def. Will you come to bed, my Lord?

Oth. Haue you pray'd to night, Defdemon ?

Def. I my Lord. 30

Oth. If you bethinke your selfe of any Crime
 Vnreconcil'd as yet to Heauen, and Grace,
 Solicite for it straight. 33

20. Iustice] Iustice her selfe Qq, Jen.
 Steev.'85, Mal. Rann.

Sword. One more, one more:]
sword once more, Q₃. sword: one more;
Q₃Q₃. Sword.—Once more— Jen. Steev.
 '85, Mal. Rann.

22. One more] Once more Q₃, Jen. Steev.
 '85, Mal. Rann.

and that's] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Dyce,
 Sta. that's Pope+. and this Qq et cet.

25. where] when Q₃, Jen.
doth] does Qq.

She wakes.]—She wakes— Pope.
She wakes— Steev. A Stage direction, reading It...Othello? as one line, Anon.
 ap. Cam.

27. I] I, QqF₃F₄. Ay, Rowe.

29. pray'd] prayed Qq.
Defdemon] F₃, Knt, Dyce, Sta.
 Del. Defdemona QqF₃F₄ et cet.

23. weepe] BOOTH: Remember how often he is moved to tears,—therefore I do not attempt to restrain them in the excess of passion here, in Act III, and elsewhere. [Yet Othello himself says that his eyes are 'unused to the melting mood.'—ED.]

24. heauenly] JOHNSON: 'This tenderness, with which I lament the punishment which justice compels me to inflict, is a holy passion.' I wish these two lines could be honestly ejected. It is the fate of Shakespeare to counteract his own pathos. STEEVENS: The 'cruel tears' seem adopted from the fabulous history of the crocodile [ROLFE quotes this, and befittingly adds an exclamation mark]; the 'heavenly sorrow' from a passage in the Scriptures. DEIGHTON: Othello surely means, 'I cannot help weeping at your fate, but my tears do not soften my heart, so as to change my determination to kill you.' HUDSON: The tears are cruel, because, while heart-wringing pity is streaming from the eyes, an overmastering strain of duty is forcing him to what is, objectively, an act of cruelty. And the very loveliness of the victim only works to intensify his purpose, lest love should usurp the crown that belongs to a higher passion,—a passion, too, that must wear the crown, else love itself will fall from its propriety. Pathos carried to the most soul-searching height! And the 'sorrow is heavenly,' because it is baptized and washed into holiness by the sacred and divine regards of justice.

33. Solicite] WALKER (Crit. iii, 291): That is, plead, as in the old sense of solicitor; yet I do not know that plead exactly expresses the meaning.

- Def.* Alacke, my Lord,
What may you meane by that? 35
Oth. Well, do it, and be breefe, I will walke by :
I would not kill thy vnprepared Spirit,
No, Heauens fore-fend) I would not kill thy Soule.
Def. Talke you of killing ?
Oth. I, I do. 40
Def. Then Heauen haue mercy on mee.
Oth. Amen, with all my heart. [336 a]
Def. If you say, I hope you will not kill me.
Oth. Humh.
Def. And yet I feare you : for you're fatall then 45
When your eyes rowle fo.
Why I should feare, I know not,
Since guiltineffe I know not : But yet I feele I feare.
Oth. Thinke on thy finnes.
Def. They are Loues I beare to you. 50
Oth. I, and for that thou dy'ft.
Def. That death's vnnaturall, that kils for louing.
Alas, why gnaw you so your nether-lip ?
Some bloody passion shakes your very Frame :
These are portents : but yet I hope, I hope, 55

- | | |
|---|---|
| 34, 35. One line, Qq, Cap. et seq. | 48. guiltineffe] guilt Pope+. |
| 34. Alacke] Ff, Rowe+, Knt, Dyce, | But] Om. Pope+. |
| Sta. Huds. Alas Qq et cet. | 50. They are] They're Pope+, Dyce |
| 35. may] doe Q ₂ Q ₃ , Glo. Rlf, Wh. ii. | iii, Huds. |
| 38. Heauens] Ff, Rowe+, Knt. heauen | Loues] love Ff. |
| Qq et cet. | I beare] to beare Q ₃ . |
| 41, 42. haue...heart] As one line, Cap. | 51. I, and] And Qq. |
| Steev. et seq. (except Cam.). | dy'ft] dieft Qq. |
| 43. say] say so QqFf et cet. | 52. vnnaturall...louing] unnatural ; |
| 44. Humh] Hum Qq. Humph / Mal. | what ! kill for loving / Han. |
| 45. you're] Ff, Rowe+, Dyce iii, Huds. | 53. gnaw] knew Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| 'are Q ₂ Q ₃ , you are Q ₄ et cet. | nether-lip] neather lip Qq. |
| 46, 47. One line, Qq, Theob. et seq. | 55. I hope, I hope] I hope Qq. |

36. walke by] BOOTH : Faces the room.
38. Soule] STEEVENS : Othello appears to have been a favourite of his author ; he has bestowed on him that piety which he had refused to Hamlet. See Ham. III, iii, 94.
42. BOOTH : Say it with all your heart and soul.
52. vnnaturall] MALONE : Compare Rich. III. I, ii, 134, 'It is a quarrel most unnatural, To be revenged on him that loveth you.'
54. FECHTER : She throws back the coverlet, rises, and sits on the bed.
55. portents] For other instances of 'portent' thus accented on the last syllable, see ABBOTT, §490.

They do not point on me.

56

Oth. Peace, and be still.

Def. I will so : What's the matter ?

Oth. That Handkerchiefe

Which I so lou'd, and gaue thee, thou gau'ft to Cassio.

60

Def. No by my Life, and Soule : fend for the man,
And aske him.

Oth. Sweet Soule, take heed, take heed of Periury,
Thou art on thy death-bed.

Def. I, but not yet to dye.

65

Oth. Presently.

Therefore confesse thee freely of thy finne :

For to deny each Article with Oath,

Cannot remoue, nor choake the strong Conception

That I do grone withall. Thou art to dye.

70

Def. O Heauen haue mercy on me.

Oth. I say, Amen.

Def. And haue you mercy too. I neuer did
Offend you in my life : neuer lou'd Cassio,

But with such generall warrantie of Heauen,

75

As I might loue. I neuer gaue him Token.

Oth. By Heauen I saw my Handkerchiefe in's hand.

O periur'd woman, thou do'ft stone my heart,

78

58. will so :] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Jen.
Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Ktly. will, so, Q₂Q₃. will so, Q₃. will so. Johns. et
cet.

59, 60. That...thee] One line, Qq, Cap.
Steev. et seq.

59, &c. Handkerchiefe] handkercher
Q₁.

60. gau'ft] gaueft Qq.
so] Om. F₃F₄, Rowe+.

61, 62. Lines end, Soule :...him. Qq,
Cap. Steev. et seq.

63, 64. Lines divided, heed,...death-bed.
Cap. Steev. et seq.

64. Thou art] thou'rt Steev.'93, Var.
Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Dyce iii,
Huds.

66. Presently] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Theob.
Warb. Johns. Yes, presently Qq et cet

69. Conception] conceit Q₂, Jen.

71. O Heauen] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Jen.
Steev.'85, Knt. Then Lord Qq et cet.

73, 74. I...Cassio] One line, Qq.

74. life : neuer] life,—neuer Qq.

77. in's] in his Qq, Jen. Steev. Mal.
Var. Sing. Ktly.

78. periur'd...do'ft] periured...doest Q₂.
my] thy Q₁.

58. will so :] Note the punctuation of Q₂Q₃; indicating what seems to me to be the true reading: 'I will.—So.—What's,' &c.—ED.

65. BOOTH: Desdemona comes from her bed, and rests tremblingly against it.

66. Presently] ABBOTT, § 59: That is, 'at the present time,' 'at once,' instead of, as now, 'soon, but not at once.'

71. BOOTH: Sinking on her knees. During the rest of this, down to line 98, she is half reclining on the steps and dais of the bed.

And makes me call, what I intend to do,
 A Murther, which I thought a Sacrifice. 80
 I saw the Handkerchiefe.
Des. He found it then :
 I neuer gaue it him : Send, for him hither.
 Let him confesse a truth.
Oth. He hath confest. 85
Des. What, my Lord ?
Oth. That he hath vs'd thee. 87

79. makes] makest Q₁Ff. makst Q₂Q₃.
 80. Murther] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Knt,
 Wh. Rlfe. murder Qq, Johns. et cet.
 84. Let] And let Q₁, Jen. Steev. Mal:
 Var. Sing. Ktly.
 85. hath] has Qq.
 87. hath vs'd thee.] Ff, Rowe, Knt, Dyce, Wh. Glo. Cam. Del. Rlfe. hath— vs'd death. Q₁. hath—vs'd thee. Q₂Q₃ et
 cet.

80. Sacrifice] JOHNSON: This line is difficult. 'Thou hast hardened my heart, and makest me kill thee with the rage of a murderer, when I thought to have sacrificed thee to justice with the calmness of a priest striking a victim.' I suspect 'thy heart' of Q₁ to be genuine. The meaning then will be,—'Thou forcest me to dismiss thee from the world in the state of the murdered without preparation for death, when I intended that thy punishment should have been a sacrifice atoning for thy crime.' I am glad that I have ended my revisal of this dreadful scene. It is not to be endured. HALLIWELL: Many readers will probably sympathize with Dr Johnson's concluding observation. Without disputing the masterly power displayed in the composition of the present tragedy, there is something to my mind so revolting, both in the present Scene and in the detestable character of Iago, which renders a study of the drama of Othello rather a painful duty than one of pleasure. [I do not shrink from saying that I wish this Tragedy had never been written. The pleasure, however keen or elevated, which the inexhaustible poetry of the preceding Acts can bestow, cannot possibly, to my temperament, countervail, it does but increase, the unutterable agony of this closing Scene. —ED.]

85–98. HALES (p. 112): For the most part Shakespeare delights in tracing the action of the great moral laws of the world, and showing how fearful is the penalty of transgression. But sometimes he exhibits a yet more dreadful spectacle,—a spectacle mysterious, inscrutable, soul-prostrating. It is Fate blind, inexorable, rapacious. Desdemona is one of Fate's choicest victims. Her 'graces serve' her 'but as enemies.' Her very virtues bring on her ruin. What is most innocent is construed into evidence against her. In obeying the best instincts of her clear spirit she excites the vilest suspicions and secures the bitterest condemnation. The truth from her lips is turned into a lie. In the present passage, her answers, by an almost incredible infelicity, are, through the very purity of her nature, just such as to confirm Othello's detestable impeachment. Could replies be more unfortunate? She lies in the toils of Fate, and there is no escape for her. We may go further than her name in Greek, δυσδαίμων, 'ill-starred,' and say it is merely a variation of δυσδαιμονία, 'ill-starredness.' She is not only unhappy, she is unhappiness itself.

87. vs'd thee] COLLIER (ed. iii): The First Qto gives an important reading, as if Othello were choked and unable to utter the words. [To be sure 'vs'd death' is not

- Des.* How? vnlawfully? 88
Oth. I.
Des. He will not say so. 90
Oth. No : his mouth is stopp'd :
Honest Iago hath 'tane order for't.
Des. Oh, my feare interprets. What is he dead?
Oth. Had all his haire bin liues, my great Reuenge
Had stomacke for them all. 95
Des. Alas, he is betray'd, and I vndone.
Oth. Out Strumpet : weep'st thou for him to my face?
Des. O banish me, my Lord, but kill me not.
Oth. Downe Strumpet.
Des. Kill me to morrow, let me liue to night. 100
Oth. Nay, if you striue.
Des. But halfe an houre.
Oth. Being done, there is no pause.
Des. But while I say one prayer. 104

93. Oh,...interprets.] My feare interprets then,— Qq, Theob. Warb. Johns.

Cap. Jen. Mal. Steev. Var. Coll. Sing.

Ktly. My fear interprets. Oh! Han.

94, 95. my...all.] One line, Qq.

95. them] 'em Q, Jen. em Q₂Q₃.

96. betray'd] betrayed Q₃.

I] I'm Han.

97. Out Strumpet.] O strumpet,— Qq.

97. weep'st] weep'st Qq.

101. if] an Qq.

striue.] QqFf, Rowe, Pope, Knt.
strive— Theob. et cet.

102. houre.] hour— Rowe, Pope, Har.

103 is omitted, joining in one lines 102,
104, by Q, Pope, Han. Dividing it at done
Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Sta.
Wh. i, Ktly.

an uncommon exclamation in the old dramas ('vds pittie' occurs in Q₂ at IV, iii, 84), but Desdemona's next question shows clearly, I think, that it is out of place here.—Ed.]

92. 'tane order] STEEVENS: That is, ~~has~~ taken measures. [See SCHMIDT, s. v. 2.]

94. liues] STEEVENS: This thought appears to have been very common; it occurs frequently in dramas prior to Othello.

97. BOOTH: Enraged. After his next speech there is a struggle, during which Othello hides her from the audience while she gets back upon the bed.

103. Being done] KNIGHT: A correspondent suggests that the reading should be, 'being down, there is no pause.' We cannot agree to receive Othello's meaning so literally. He certainly has already said, 'Down, strumpet,' and has probably at that moment commenced the death-struggle; for he adds, 'nay, if you strive.' But the words 'being done' appear to us to have a much greater depth of meaning. They are not addressed to Desdemona, but exhibit what is passing in Othello's mind. The conflict between his love and his wounded honour is over; he looks upon the act of retribution as done when he has lifted his murderous hand against his wife. It is done. For the mere completion of the violence, which will then be mercy, 'there is no pause.'

Oth. It is too late.

Smothers her. 105

Æmilia at the doore.

Æmil. My Lord, my Lord? What hoa?

My Lord, my Lord.

[336 b]

Oth. What noife is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead?

I that am cruell, am yet mercifull,

110

I would not haue thee linger in thy paine?

So, fo.

112

105. It is too] Tis too Q₁, Jen. Tis to Q₂Q₃.

Smothers her.] he stifles her. Q₁.
he stifles her. (after line 104) Q₂Q₃. Attempts to smother her. Rowe ii.

105, 107. late. Æmil. My Lord] late.
Def. O Lord, Lord, Lord. Em. My Lord
Q₁, Jen. Coll. Ktly.

Scene VII. Pope +, Jen.

106. Æmilia...] Emillia calls within.
Qq.

107, 108. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.

109. noife] voyce Qq, Jen.

111, 112. One line, Qq.

112. [Stabbing her. Rann.

105. STEEVENS: After this speech, Q₁ adds an invocation from Desdemona, consisting only of the sacred name thrice repeated. As this must be supposed to have been uttered while she is yet struggling with death, I think an editor may be excused from inserting such a circumstance of supererogatory horror. SINGER was misled by this note of Steevens, as was pointed out by the Cambridge Editors, and 'invented a reading of Q₁'; he says that Desdemona's invocation was 'God! God! God!' COLLIER (ed. i) having adopted these exclamations, which, as he said, are found only in Q₁, DYCE (Rem. 242), adds: 'And there Collier ought (with the other modern editors) to have left them; for they were most probably foisted into the text by the players. So far is "O Lord, Lord, Lord!" from adding to the terror or pathos of the scene, that [sic] it is disgustingly vulgar; and being immediately followed by Emilia's "My lord, my lord! what ho! my lord, my lord!" the effect of the whole is not a little comic.' COLLIER, nothing intimidated, calmly printed the Quarto's words in his next edition. Whereupon DYCE, in his next edition, observed that though he had protested against the insertion of 'Oh Lord, Lord, Lord,' as disgustingly vulgar, &c., his 'protest appears to have had no other effect than to make Mr Collier the more determined to retain it in his second edition.' In his third and last edition COLLIER again imperturbably prints the invocation from the Qto, and says that the words are 'exclamations by Desdemona, to show that she is not killed, and she speaks afterwards.'

105. BOOTH: Long pause. Emilia's rap must not be loud.

112. In the Appendix will be found the Ballad which was discovered among the Egerton Papers by Collier. From this ballad we learn that the earliest actor of Othello, Burbadge, Shakespeare's friend and fellow-actor, stabbed Desdemona, and 'dyed to gory red, his hands of blackest shade.' Collier, however, shows that the writer 'spoke at random' in it, with regard to Burbadge's early career, and its antiquity has been recently questioned, so that its authority as to the 'stabbing' must pass for what it is worth. From the tone of FRANCIS GENTLEMAN's remarks in the Dramatic Censor (i, 148) in 1770, where he is presumably criticising Garrick, we may infer that the stabbing of Desdemona was an innovation which needed justification. Gentleman says: 'The revival of Desdemona from a state of suffocation, and her expiring without any fresh violence, we apprehend to be rather absurd, therefore, highly approve Othello's stabbing her with a dagger,—drawing blood accounts naturally for gaining power of speech, and yet may be mortal.' The editors and commentators, in the Variorum Editions, are singularly silent. STEEVENS alone alludes to the question, and he approves of 'stabbing' on the ground, suggested by Gentleman, of its relief to congestion, and believes that a stage direction to that effect had been accidentally omitted. This omission was supplied by RANN, the solitary editor who has inserted it. KNIGHT thinks it is 'most probable' that Othello stabs Desdemona, 'according to the practice of the modern stage. His previous resolution, "I'll not shed her blood," is forgotten in the agony and terror of the moment, when he says "not dead, not yet quite dead."' DELIUS believes that if Shakespeare had 'intended Othello to stab Desdemona, he would have given us in the context some hint, no matter how slight, from which it might be inferred. The lack of this hint, coupled with the express stage directions, compels us to suppose that with the "So, so" Othello again stifles Desdemona.' COLLIER says, in reference to the stabbing, that 'it may be so.' HUDSON thinks the stage custom of stabbing 'may be right.' COWDEN-CLARKE believes that "'So, so" may merely be intended to represent that Othello heaps more clothes around her, pressing the pillow more closely upon the mouth.' DYCE, STAUNTON, WHITE, ROLFE, and PURNELL are silent. FECHTER: Passing his poignard under the pillow and turning away his eyes. BOOTH: Hide your face in trembling hand while you stab and groan 'So, so'; the steel is piercing your own heart. SALVINI: I think that this 'So, so' means that Othello kneels on her breast to hasten her death.

[112. I would not haue thee linger in thy paine? So, so.]

Thus far Editors and Actors, with a ground-tone from the public at large to the effect that there does seem to be something not altogether true to physiology in the subsequent revival of Desdemona; yet, such is the Anglosaxon faith in Shakespeare, that, in any variance between him and Nature, Shakespeare is considered quite able to hold his own.

It was the phrase 'Pale as thy smock' which first caught my attention; it seemed to reveal either an oversight on Shakespeare's part, or that he had intended, contrary to the directions in the QqFf, that Desdemona should be stabbed. As far as I know, no one has ever noticed the bearing, on the manner of Desdemona's death, of this exclamation. To my layman's small knowledge there seemed here a violation of physiological laws so downright, in representing a smothered person as pale, that I knew Shakespeare, who could note the 'crimson drops i' the bottom of a cowslip,' never could have committed it. The reality before our very eyes cannot be as vivid as the coinage of his brain was to Shakespeare. What he saw, he spoke; so that he must either have known of a case where congestion of blood in the face did not follow stifling, or he must have intended Othello to stab Desdemona; which, after all, would only half solve the difficulty; the stabbing would leave the face pale, but the smock red, as I thought. For Shakespeare's credit I felt no concern, but I did feel mortified for Nature, on whose behalf it seemed that if ever our best medical wisdom were to be unmuzzled, this was the hour. To this trial, in which Nature is the defendant (not Shakespeare, perish the thought!) I hoped to summon such an array of experts that their verdict would be accepted as final wherever the masters in medicine are known and honored, or any faith exists in diagnosis. To each one of the following eminent men, whose friendship I am glad to own, I sent a copy of this last Scene, with the following passages underscored: 'Yet I'll not shed her blood'; 'So, so'; 'She's Dead'; 'Ha, No More Moving? Still as the Grave'; 'I think she stirs again,—No'; all Desdemona's words after the smothering: 'Your niece, Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopped'; and lastly, 'Pale as thy smock,' accompanying which were these questions: 1. Do you think it likely that [112. I would not have thee linger in thy pain? So, so.]

Othello stabbed Desdemona at 'So, so'? 2. If he stabbed her, could her smock be pale? 3. If she were smothered, could she be pale? 4. In either case, could she speak after apparent death? 5. If she could speak, why did she not quite revive? 6. From what cause, then, did she really die?

To these questions there came the following answers:—

DR D. HAYES AGNEW: In answer to your inquiry, I would say that Shakespeare has been most unfortunate in killing Desdemona. Death by strangulation, inferred from the language used by Othello: 'Whose breath indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd,' cannot readily be reconciled with a temporary revival and ability to speak at three different times on the part of the victim, after all signs of life had apparently disappeared nor with the post-mortem appearances, in which the color of the face and of the smock are compared (both presumably white).

Against the theory of death by stabbing, we have the declaration of Othello himself, 'Yet I'll not shed her blood,' and the supposed absence of blood-stains on the clothing of Desdemona, indicated by the expression, 'pale as thy smock'; and yet all the phenomena before and after death are comprehensible on the theory of internal hemorrhage, namely, the possibility of a stab in a vital region of the body, without more than a few drops of blood being seen externally; syncope, resembling actual death, causing a temporary arrest of bleeding and a return to consciousness and to speech, followed by the recurrence of a rapidly-fatal hemorrhage, leaving the face bloodless and pale.

There is, however, a theory which (though somewhat strained) would meet all the conditions of the text; namely, that death ensued from the secondary effects of injury to the larynx. It is true that in fatal cases following laceration or fracture of that organ, the patient dies from a slow asphyxia, and may be rendered voiceless by the lesion; but surgical writers refer to instances in which, after violence applied to the neck and the person apparently suffocated, partial recovery has followed with ability to speak, and yet death suddenly followed from shock, with probably some spasm of the glottis. In shock the blood retreats from the superficial vessels, giving to the surface the pallor of death. Probably such were the conditions in the case of Desdemona.

DR D. G. BRINTON: There is not a word in the text about stabbing, and several passages make directly against it. In describing Desdemona's death, Othello distinctly states that he 'stopped her breath,'—smothered her. Death by stabbing, therefore, could not have been in the mind of the author at all.

This leads to the further result that her death is not represented as the immediate act of her husband; he is not the murderer that he thinks himself; his hands refused the deed and failed at the second attempt, as they did at the first. Again she moves and speaks. But her frail body has been put to too severe a strain. Anxiety and fear have been too much for her debilitated heart, and her last and superhuman effort to exculpate her loved husband completely exhausts her vital powers; the central organ fails, and she falls back dead from 'cardiac exhaustion.' We may call it 'paralysis of the heart,' like that brought about by certain potent poisons, or that which supervenes in feeble subjects on sudden and violent emotions, either of fear or joy. We know little of the intimate pathology of this fatal process. Writers say that such physical or mental shocks 'extinguish life by their action on the cardiac plexus.' The phrase sounds well, but leaves us where we were before.

Such instances are by no means rare, and must have come to the knowledge of the author of Othello. A number of them were quoted for the defence in a trial in New York City a few years ago. The victim, wife of a physician, was smothered by the assassin. The defence was, that the attempt at suffocation was abortive, that she revived, but died of heart-shock from fright and struggling. The theory of her death thus advanced by the defence is my theory of the death of Desdemona. It consistently explains the appearance of her face, her smock, her recovery of speech, &c., and relieves us from the painful and repugnant contemplation of her husband as her actual murderer. I shall be delighted if these crude remarks aid you in any degree in throwing light on the train of thought in this wonderful literary creation.

[112. I would not haue thee linger in thy paine? So, so.]

DR J. M. DA COSTA: The features of Desdemona's death cannot, I believe, be reconciled to strict scientific facts; it is best to accept them as not transgressing poetic license. That she should have spoken after being smothered is not possible; if she had regained consciousness sufficiently to speak intelligently, as she did, recovery would have ensued, though death might have happened, after a time, from injuries induced by the violence.

Concerning the pallor of the countenance, it is contrary to the customary conception of death by strangulation; the face is held to be suffused and swollen, of dusky or violet hue; but the great poet, in assuming it otherwise, has not been guilty of error. The countenance in strangulation may be pale and sunken; indeed, so eminent an authority as Casper declares his observation to have taught him that the greater number of persons strangled have neither a turgid nor a livid countenance, but one simply like that of any other corpse.

These statements deal with the supposition that Desdemona's death was caused by strangling. If the stage tradition of her being also stabbed be admitted as correct, a view suggests itself which removes all difficulties. The effect of the bleeding would be to relieve the cerebral and pulmonary congestion occurring in strangulation. She revives sufficiently to speak; the internal hemorrhage continues; she dies exhausted, and, as always in death from loss of blood, with extreme pallor marked. 'Pale as thy smock' Othello might well say; nor need a poet's words be so literally construed as to exclude the thought of some blood-stains on the white garment; though in point of fact a stab severing large vessels in the chest may prove fatal without giving rise to external bleeding.

The stabbing subsequent to the smothering makes, then, the death of Desdemona one which is described with the closest attention to truth. Whether the stage tradition represent Shakespeare's thought is, of course, an open question. There is that in the text, however, which supports the supposition of the stabbing, notwithstanding Othello's first-declared intention of not shedding blood. He sees her linger, and he determines on quick, decisive measures. The words 'So, so,' when he is supposed to stab her, are short, abrupt expressions, very suitable to rapid, sudden movements as in stabbing.

DR WILLIAM A. HAMMOND: The matter that engrosses your attention has many features of interest to me, and your questions lead up to several important points.

Without going into details, I may say, first, I do not think Othello stabbed Desdemona; he expressly says, 'I will not shed her blood.' I am of the opinion that, at the words 'So, so,' he pressed the pillow more forcibly against her face.

If he stabbed her, I think it possible, though not probable, that her smock might be pale.

If she were smothered she might be pale. Persons who are smothered do not ordinarily show any signs of having suffered a violent death. For my views in full on this point, permit me to refer you to my novel, Mr Oldmixon, chap. xiii, in which Hogarth Oldmixon smothers his wife.

[112. I would not haue thee linger in thy paine? So, so.]

If she were smothered sufficiently, she certainly could not speak after the act. A person smothered, and speaking afterwards, would not die from the smothering. The mere fact of her speaking shows that she was not smothered to the extent necessary to cause death.

As to what really killed her, I think it is clearly apparent that Shakespeare was ignorant of the modus operandi of smothering. She ought not to have died at all so far as any act of Othello's is directly concerned, except, perhaps, from what is called a 'broken heart,' or from extreme shock to her nervous system.

DR WILLIAM HUNT: You have asked me some interesting questions about Desdemona's death. I am happy to be able to answer you positively and at once; her sad end is no pathological puzzle to me. She died of fracture of the cricoid cartilage of the larynx. Shakespeare is entirely consistent, and must have had, as in everything else, an intuitive, if not practical, knowledge of the subject. Years ago I wrote an Article upon that fracture, founded upon a case of it. The Article is quoted as authority to this day. I collected all the reported cases I could find, and several of them were like Desdemona's. It was a piece of unpardonable oversight in me that I did not put her in the list. The poet's story is exactly in accordance with the ordinary sequence of symptoms. There is nothing for a school-boy or anybody else to laugh at in it.

Othello, true to his stated purpose, did not 'shed her blood, nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow.' He first tried a very ineffectual method of smothering with pillows. His poor victim was simply dazed, 'not dead.' Seeing this, he grasps her neck with his powerful hands, his thumbs being over the larynx, and with two strong squeezes and a 'So, so,' garrotes her.

The cricoid cartilage breaks, and under the shock there is 'no more moving.' She is 'still as the grave.' But I have no doubt she did 'stir again'; had any good auscultator placed his ear to her chest he would have heard her heart beating feebly and rapidly. Paleness, not lividity, would accompany this condition. I have seen it so in others. A short time passes. Desdemona slowly and temporarily reacts. An exciting conversation is held in her presence. She hears, and in a smothered, hoarse whisper, perfectly audible, she speaks; there is a slight spitting of blood, for which, in her nicety, she uses a handkerchief she had about her, and which must have reminded her of that other fatal one 'spotted with strawberries,' and so her smock is left pale and undefiled. In my case the patient was pale as a ghost, and his speech as hoarse as a raven's. Gradually Desdemona succumbs to the pressure of swelling and emphysema, and to the nervous shock. Tracheotomy was the only thing that might have saved her, but there was nobody there to perform it, and the chance was slim. I have thus, I think, answered all your questions. Does not Othello himself acknowledge my method when he says, 'There lies your niece, whose breath indeed these hands have newly stopped'? There was never a clearer case. Is not Shakespeare's universality wonderful?

Rest assured, Desdemona died of fracture of the larynx. The history and the sequences are without flaws.

In future, let no Othello stab; and let Desdemona learn a hoarse, grating, audible whisper that will rasp the audience into sympathetic agony.

DR AD. LIPPE: To the first question, I answer No; Othello stifles, but does not stab Desdemona; he had said 'I will not shed her blood'; at 'So, so,' he stifles her the more.

Had she been stabbed, her smock would have been saturated with blood.

If she were smothered, she could be nothing else but pale.

Emil. within. What hoa? my Lord, my Lord?

113

Oth. Who's there?

113. within.] Om. Qq.

Had she been stabbed and the dirk or knife not withdrawn, she might have spoken. If the dagger had been withdrawn, she could not have spoken. If smothered, and, since Othello says 'I think she stirs again,' not fully dead, a few drops remaining in the left heart would permit of a contraction, and the lungs not being completely clogged would allow the utterance of a few words. These last few contractions of the left heart must have been caused by the violent mental emotions produced by Emilia's relation and her questions. These few remaining drops having been expelled, her ability to speak ceased, and she was fully dead. The real cause of her death was suffocation and stifling. In Wharton and Stillé's Medical Jurisprudence, ii, 802, we find a complete vindication of Shakespeare: 'Homicidal Suffocation. Those who are usually the victims of this form of murder are infants and the aged, or those who are otherwise helpless. So slight a degree of resistance is necessary to defeat the purpose of the assassin, that a great disproportion of strength must exist for the attempt to be successful. Nevertheless, those miserable wretches, Burke and his accomplices, reduced murder by suffocation to a system, choosing it as a mode of death most likely to leave no mark of crime behind it. The murderer bore with his whole weight upon the breast of his victim, and with his hands forcibly covered the mouth and nostrils till death came on. The body of one of the victims presented, according to Dr Christison, so few traces of injury, that without the assistance of proof from other sources, it would have been impossible to have declared that the death was not a natural one.' How well Shakespeare knew the difference between suffocation and strangulation is evident from his masterly description of the latter in the case of Gloucester in 2 Hen. VI. III, ii. Suffocation alone caused the death of Desdemona, and the suffocation was slow. Violent mental emotion caused the heart to expel the last few drops of blood, and when the right side of the heart became filled with dark venous blood, she died. How violent mental emotions can affect the heart belongs to the deep mysteries of Nature. Materialists cannot solve the question.

DR S. WEIR MITCHELL: I suppose Shakespeare would have put in a stage direction at 'So, so,' if he had meant that Othello used a dagger. Were I an actor I should simply throttle her fiercely again and again as I said 'So, so.' With this view her smock need not trouble us. Death by strangling leaves the face horribly congested, not pale. Believing that Othello simply choked Desdemona, how could she have been pale of visage and spoken several distinct sentences with so clear a brain as the relevancy of her words displays, and yet have been fatally strangled?

It could not have been; but I fancy Shakespeare cared little for realism when he desired an explanatory dramatic effect.

If there is evidence that Shakespeare meant that Othello choked her insufficiently, and finished with a dirk, it becomes clearer, because then speech, partial recovery, death from bleeding, help us to understand the passage. At the same time the face would have been paling from blood-loss, and as to the smock, all wounds do not bleed externally; then a little blood on the smock would not have made less for him its general whiteness.

Again, where Othello says he has 'newly stopp'd her breath,' he does not speak of what would have been the more striking object to the spectator, the dagger-wound. For him, too, that would have been the murder, not the ineffectual throttle.

Æmil. Oh good my Lord, I would speake a word 115 with you.

Oth. Yes : 'Tis *Æmil*ia : by and by. Shee's dead.
'Tis like she comes to speake of Cassio's death :
The noise was high. Hah, no more moouing ?
Still as the Graue. Shall she come in? Wer't good ? 120
I thinke she stirres againe No, what's best to do ?
If she come in, shee'l sure speake to my wife :
My wife, my wife : what wife ? I haue no wife.
Oh insupportable ! Oh heauy houre !
Me thinkes, it should be now a huge Eclipse 125
Of Sunne, and Moone ; and that th'affrighted Globe
Did yawne at Alteration.

Æmil. I do befeech you
That I may speake with you. Oh good my Lord. 129

115, 128. Æmil.] Emil. within. Mal.
115. good my] my good F, F₄, Rowe+.
I would] I'de Qq, Cap. Jen.
117. *Æmil*ia : by and by :] Emilia, by and by : Qq. *Æmil*ia—by and by— Rowe+, Cap. Jen.
119. high] here Q₁, Jen. Glo. Cam.
Rlf, Wh. ii.
119, 120. moouing ? Still] moving ;
Still Jen.
121. best to do] the best Qq, Pope+,
Cap. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll.
122. she come] she'll come Coll. iii.
123. wife : what wife ?] wife, my wife ;
Q₁.
I haue] I ha Qq.
126. th'] Ff, Rowe ii+, Jen. Coll. Wh.
i, Dyce iii. the Qq et cet.
127. Did] Ff, Rowe i, Knt. Should
Qq et cet.
Alteration.] Alteration—Rowe,
Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.
128, 129. I do...Lord] One line, Qq.
Good my lord, | I do beseech you I may speake with you. Cap. I do...with you.
One line, Johns. Jen. Steev. Mal. Var.
Coll. Sta. Wh. i, Del.
128. do] Om. Pope, Theob. Han. Warb.
129. That I] I Qq, Johns. Jen. Steev.
Mal. Var. Coll. Wh. i, Del.
Oh good] good Q₁.

119. noise . . . high] BOOTH : That is, of the struggling with Desdemona, whose cries were mingled with Othello's angry voice. (Irving supposes this to refer to Emilia's knock.) [Does not this refer to Roderigo's attack on Cassio?—ED.]

119. WALKER, in his Article 'On the omission of repeated words' (Crit. ii, 144), queries if still be not omitted at the end of this line? HUDSON answered in the affirmative by adding it, 'because,' as he says, 'the metre certainly wants it, and the sense even more, perhaps, than the metre.'

122. wife] BOOTH : At this word he pauses as if stunned, or, rather, puzzled by so strange a word, and mutters it twice inquiringly, then, under the full force of the horror, he almost screams, 'I have no wife!' and falls prostrate on the divan in centre of the stage, where he writhes while speaking the lines that follow.

125-127. THEOBALD : Let the Poet account for the profanation, if he has committed any; but it is very obvious to me his allusion is grounded on a certain solemn circumstance, when darkness is said to have covered the whole face of the land; when rocks were rent; and graves opened.

Oth. I had forgot thee : oh come in Æmilia. 130
Soft, by and by, let me the Curtaines draw.
Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now?

Enter Æmilia.

Æmil. Oh my good Lord, yonders foule Murthers 135 done.

Oth. What? now?

Æmil. But now, my Lord.

Oth. It is the very error of the Moone,
She comes more neerer Earth then she was wont,
And makes men mad. 140

Æmil. Cassio, my Lord, hath kill'd
A young Venetian, call'd Rodorigo.

Oth. Rodorigo kill'd? and Cassio kill'd?

Æmil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd? Then Murther's out of tune, 145
And sweet Reuenge growes harsh.

Des. O falfely, falfely murder'd. 147

- | | |
|--|---|
| 130. forgot] forgotten Q ₂ Q ₃ , Cap. | Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. What , |
| oh come] come Q ₂ Q ₃ , Cap. | Q ₁ , et cet. |
| 132. [Unlocks the door. Theob. | 139. neerer] neerer the Qq, Pope +, Cap. |
| 133. Enter...] After draw line 131, Qq. | Jen. Steev. Mal. Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, |
| After thou ? line 132, Dyce. | Ktly, Dyce iii. |
| 134. my good] good my Steev.'93, Var. | 141, 142. Cassio... Venetian] One line, |
| Coll. i, ii. | Qq, Cap. et seq. |
| yonders] yonder's Qq. | 141. hath] has Qq, Cap. Mal. Steev. |
| Murthers] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han. | Var. Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Del. |
| Cap. Knt, Wh. ii. murders Qq, Sing. | 143. Two lines, Cap. Steev. et seq. |
| Dyce i, Glo. Ktly, Cam. murther Theob. | 147. murder'd] murdered Qq. mur- |
| Warb. Wh. i, Rlfe. murder Johns. et cet. | ther'd Theob. Han. Warb. Knt, Wh. |
| 136. What?] FfQ ₂ Q ₃ , Rowe +, Steev. | Rlfe. |

130. FECHTER: Othello goes to the door, which, in his agitation, he tries to open at the hinges; and, perceiving his mistake, leans against the wall distracted, wiping the cold damps from his forehead.

134. my good] DYCE: Perhaps Steevens and the others may be right; Emilia has just before twice used that form of expression.

134. murther] BOOTH: Othello starts at this word.

139. more neerer] Compare Ham. II, i, 11, or ABBOTT, § 11, for instances of double comparatives and superlatives.

147. KEIGHTLEY: It would not be possible, in the whole compass of poetry, to find a more glaring absurdity than this of making Desdemona speak after she had been smothered. [The following extract, involving, as it does, a name around which still cluster holy memories in living hearts, is of a date so recent that I should hesitate to use it here did I imagine that any service in the illustration of Shakespeare could bring aught but honour, or that I should hereby lightly treat him whose voice appeared to Æmil. Alas! what cry is that? 148

Oth. That? What?

Æmil. Out, and alas, that was my Ladies voice. 150
Helpe, helpe hoa, helpe. Oh Ladie speake againe,
Sweet Desdemona, oh sweet Miftris, speake.

Des. A guiltlesse death, I dye.

Æmil. Oh who hath done this deed?

Des. No body: I my selfe, farewell: 155
Commend me to my kinde Lord: oh farewell.

Oth. Why, how should she be mured? 157

148. Alas] O Lord Q₂, Cap. Jen. Ah! alas 154. this deed] As beginning 155, Cap.
Q₂, cry is] cry's Steev.'93. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt, Coll. Sing. Wh. i, 150. that was] it is Q₂, Jen. it was Ktly, Dyce iii.
Q₂ Q₂, 156. [She dies. Qq.
154. kath] has Qq. 157. mured] murdered Qq.

me the solitary one worth listening to, on a London Sunday, thirty years ago.—ED.] 'When I returned at 5 A. M. next day, copious effusion had taken place in one of the pleura, and death was close at hand . . . almost immediately afterwards, without any struggle, all was over,—as it seemed. We remained kneeling around the bed. No sound came from the motionless chest, the beating of the artery under my finger was no longer perceptible; the hand, which a moment before was grasping mine, had relaxed its hold; the countenance was no longer scored by lines denoting difficulty in breathing; the spark in the eye had gone out, and nowhere, so far as I could see, was there any reason for thinking that the fire of life was still smouldering. I could find no such reason then, I can find no such reason now. And yet shortly afterwards, he, who seemed to have died, and to have been dead for several minutes, or moments, minutes rather than moments, as I remember them, slowly raised himself upon one of his elbows into a half-sitting posture, and said distinctly, "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your—our—hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord; and the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be amongst us and remain with us always;" and having so said, without another word, he lay down and died—again. The voice in which these words were uttered was the old familiar voice, clear and solemn. . . . Between them and the preceding words, which were hurried and scarcely coherent, and almost lost in distracting sounds connected with lack of breath, a broad line of separation must be drawn. In uttering these last words no difficulty in breathing or speaking was noticeable. . . . I cannot confound these words with any ordinary death-bed utterances.'—DR C. B. RADCLIFFE (Life of Frederick Denison Maurice, 2d ed., vol. ii, p. 645, London, 1884).

150. BOOTH: Emilia rushes to the bed and throws back the curtains.

155, 156. BOOTH: This should affect Othello; he believes her dying with a lie on her lips, and he shows how it pains him. His next speech is in half-choked utterances. FECHTER says that this line 157 is spoken 'looking at Emilia with steady effrontery.' ELZE (Notes, &c., 2d Ser. p. 157) would divide these lines at 'me,' reading the second, 'To my | kind lord. | O, fare | well.'

Æmil. Alas : who knowes ? 158
Oth. You heare her fay her felfe, it was not I.
Æmil. She faid fo : I muft needs report the truth. 160
Oth. She's like a Liar gone to burning hell,
'Twas I that kill'd her.
Æmil. Oh the more Angell she, and you the blacker Diuell.
Oth. She turn'd to folly : and she was a whore. 165
Æmil. Thou do'ft bely her, and thou art a diuell.
Oth. She was false as water.
Æmil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
That she was false. Oh she was heavenly true. 169

159. heare] Ff, Rowe. heard Qq et cet. 168. Thou art] Thou as Q₄. Thou'rt
160. the truth] a truth Qq, Coll. Wh. i. Cap.
161. burning] burne in Q₄, Cap. 168, 169. to say...true] One line, Qq, 163, 164. Two lines, Cap. Steev. et seq.

161, 162. FECHTER : With a burst of triumph. BOOTH : With deep emotion, not harshly.

163. Angell] HUDSON : Emilia evidently means that Desdemona is the more angel for having spoken the falsehood in question. And surely all well-ordered minds must agree with her; at all events, I, for one, cannot choose but love and honour Desdemona the more for that lie. For, indeed, the sweet, dear sufferer knows that Othello is driven onward by some monstrous delusion; that some hideous inspiration has put him clean out of his native self; that he is sure to have the worst of it, and so is even more an object of compassion than herself; and the unspeakable agony legible in his features wrings her pure soul with a pity so intense as to take from her all sense of the pangs of death; and so her last breath is hallowed with a tender yearning to shield him, as far as she possibly can, from the dreadful retributions which await him, both from without and from within, when the truth shall be known. So deep and sacred is the head and spring of Desdemona's dying falsehood! It is a lie born of the very holiness of truth itself!

165. folly] MALONE : This signifies here, as in the sacred writings, wantonness or unchastity. So in R. of L., 556 : 'Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly.' STEEVENS : So in Deut. xxii, 21 : 'She hath wrought folly in Israel.' MOREL : C'est une vieille acception du français 'folie' qui a persisté jusqu' au dix-septième siècle. La Fontaine dit encore 'faire la folie' pour 'se livrer à la débauche.' PROF. GEORGE ALLEN (MS note) : So also in Greek. Cf. Euripides, Hippolytus, 644 : ἡ δ' ἀμήχανος γυνή | γυνήμη βραχέλα μωρίαν ἀφηρέθη. Monk says : μωρία, impudicitia, vel libido, quæ significatione adhibetur etiam in Ion, 557.

167. as water] JOHNSON : As water that will support no weight, nor keep any impression. PURNELL : The comparison is as old as Jacob's farewell to his sons : 'Reuben, unstable as water.'—Gen. xlix, 4.

168. Thou art] WALKER (Crit. ii, 203) : To be pronounced as one syllable. See I, ii, 34; III, iv, 195.

- Oth.* Cassio did top her : Ask thy husband else. 170
 O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell:
 But that I did proceed vpon iust grounds
 To this extremity. Thy Husband knew it all.
Æmil. My Husband? [337 a]
Oth. Thy Husband. 175
Æmil. That she was false to Wedlocke?
Oth. I, with Cassio : had she bin true,
 If Heauen would make me such another world,
 Of one entyre and perfect Chrysolite,
 I'd not haue sold her for it. 180
Æmil. My Husband?
Oth. I, 'twas he that told me on her first,
 An honest man he is, and hates the slime
 That stickes on filthy deeds.
Æmil. My Husband? 185
Oth. What needs this itterance, Woman?

170. top] QqFf, Rowe, Pope i, Knt,
 Coll. i, Sing. Glo. Ktly, Cam. Wh. ii. top
 Pope ii et cet.

173. extremity] extreme Steev. conj.

174. Husband] husband: Q₂Q₃.

177. Two lines, Cap. Steev. Var. Knt, Sing.

I, with] Ay, and with Ktly.

had] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. Knt. way, had Qq et cet.

true] but true Coll. (MS).

180. for it] for't Cap.

182. me on her first] Ff, Knt. me first
 Qq et cet.

184. on] one Q₂.

186, 187. One line, or prose, Qq, Cap.
 Steev. et seq.

186. itterance, Woman] iteration ?
woman, Qq, Ktly. iteration, woman ?
 Pope (subs.)+, Jen. Steev.'85, Mal. Coll.
 Sing. Glo. Cam. Wh. ii.

171, 172. BOOTH: With vigour; in justification of what he has done.

179. Chrysolite] Holland's Translation of Pliny's Naturall Historie, The seuen and thirtieth Booke, Chap. viii: 'The Topaze or Chrysolith, hath a singular green colour by it selfe, for which it is esteemed very rich, and when it was first found, it surpassed all others in price. . . . It is said, that the first that tooke a liking vnto the stone, was queene Berenice the mother of Ptolome the second, and that by the meanes of Philomon (lieutenant generall to her son in those countries) who presented one of them to the said queen. Of which Chrysolit, Ptolomeus Philadelphus K. of Egypt, caused the statue of his wife Arsinoë to be made, 4 cubits long; and in honour of the said queene his wife, dedicated it in a chappell named the Golden temple.' [This passage in Holland's Pliny is referred to by Plumptre. Can it be doubted that it was the story of this precious statue which suggested 'chrysolite' to Shakespeare?—ED.] WHITE (ed. ii): A greenish, yellow stone of no rarity and small value. It is little worn: probably Shakespeare never saw one; but the word promises largely, and it sounded well in his verse.

185. ROLFE: Emilia's astonishment here is sufficient proof that she did not before suspect Iago of being the 'eternal villain' that had devised this slander. See IV, ii, 154.

186. itterance] See note on 'Reprobance,' line 261, post.

I say, thy Husband. 187

Emil. Oh Mistris,
Villany hath made mockes with loue
My Husband say she was false? 190

Oth. He, Woman;
I say thy Husband : Do'st vnderstand the word?
My Friend, thy Husband; honest, honest Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious Soule
Rot halfe a graine a day : he lyes to'th'heart, 195
She was too fond of her most filthy Bargaine.

Oth. Hah?
Emil. Do thy worst:
This deede of thine is no more worthy Heauen,
Then thou was't worthy her. 200

Oth. Peace, you were best.
Emil. Thou hast not halfe that powre to do me harm,
As I haue to be hurt. Oh Gull, oh dolt,
As ignorant as durt : thou hast done a deed
(I care not for thy Sword) Ile make thee known, 205

- | | |
|--|--|
| 188-193. Om. Q ₁ . | 196. too fond] to fond Q ₃ . |
| 188, 189. One line, Q ₂ Q ₃ , Rowe et seq. | 198. worst] F ₁ . |
| 189. hath] had F ₁ , has Rowe+. | 202. that powre] the power Qq, Jen. |
| 190. say she] Ff, Rowe+. say that she | Mal. Steev. Var. Coll. Sing. Kily, Huds. |
| Q ₂ Q ₃ et cet. | 203. be hurt] bear hurt Han. |
| 191, 192. One line, Q ₂ Q ₃ . | 204. thou hast] thou'st Pope+. |
| 193. honest, honest] honest-honest Sta. | deed] Ff, Rowe i. deed — Qq et |
| 194. say] says Theob. | cet. |
| 195. to'th'] QqFf, Rowe+, Jen. Wh. i, | 205. Sword] word F ₁ . |
| Huds. to the Cap. et cet. | known] know Qq. |

189. mockes] JOHNSON: 'Villainy' has taken advantage to play upon the weakness of a violent passion. HUDSON: That is, villainy has made a sport and mockery of love, by playing upon it, and beguiling it into a conflagration of its own home. Emilia probably refers to Desdemona's friendly efforts in Cassio's behalf.

195. to'th'heart] The Cambridge Editors note that Johnson reads 'o' th' heart.' In my copy of Johnson the t of 'to' is very faint, but I think it is unmistakably present. There is, however, no indication whatever of an apostrophe after the o. Let the vanity be pardoned which prompts me to show how exact is my collation, by comparing it with that of the Cambridge Editors.—ED.

202, 203. JOHNSON: She means to say, 'I have in this cause power to endure more than thou hast power to inflict.' MALONE: Compare Hen. VIII.: III, ii, 387, 'I am able. . . . Out of a fortitude of soul, I feel, To endure more miseries. . . . Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer'; and a Hen. VI.: IV, i, 130: 'More can I bear than you dare execute.'

203. As] See ABBOTT, § 109, for an instance of 'as' for that without the antecedent so.

Though I loft twenty liues. Helpe, helpe, hoa, helpe : 206
The Moore hath kill'd my Miftris. Murther, murther.

Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago.

Mon. What is the matter ? How now Generall ?

Æmil. Oh, are you come, Iago : you haue done well, 210
That men muft lay their Murthers on your necke.

Gra. What is the matter ?

Æmil. Difproue this Villaine, if thou bee'ft a man :
He fayes, thou told'ft him that his wife was falfe :
I know thou did'ft not : thou'rt not fuch a Villain. 215
Speake, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought,
And told no more
Then what he found himfelfe was apt, and true.

Æmil. But did you euer tell him, 220
She was falfe ?

Iago. I did.

Æmil. You told a Lye an odious damned Lye :
Vpon my Soule, a Lye ; a wicked Lye. 224

- | | |
|---|--|
| 206. hoa, helpe] O helpe Qq. | 212. Gra.] All. Qq. |
| 207. hath] has Qq, Steev. Mal. Var. | 213. Difproue this Villaine] Disprove |
| Coll. Sing. Wh. i, Ktly, Del. | it, villain Cap. Disprove this villany Cap. |
| 208. Enter...and Iago] Enter...Iago, | conj. Rann. |
| and others. Qq. (Gragantio Q ₂ Q ₃). | 215. did'ft] dift Q ₂ Q ₃ . |
| Scene VIII. Pope+, Jen. | thou'rt] thou art Qq. |
| 209. [Staying him. Cap. | 217, 218. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq. |
| 210. you haue] you've Dyce iii, Huds. | 219. Then] But Cap. |
| 211. Murthers] murder Qq. | 220, 221. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq |

206. BOOTH : Othello goes to the bed, and lies moaning there, not loudly.

211. BOOTH : Iago, of course, is much astonished.

213. this Villaine] CAPELL (having misprinted it instead of 'this,' has the following note, which is unusually lucid) : One of the present Editor's oversights is corrected in the 'Errata.' At discovery, and in ruminating upon it, it appears to him that there is a further mistake by the old printers made in the same line : 'villaine,' as they point it, is predicated of Othello ; suppose their pointing erroneous, and make villaine a vocative, it then belongs to Iago ; but this direct application, and to their face, of such a term as is villaine to parties standing in such relation as both do to the speaker, is a trespass on character ; and may easily be remov'd by supposing the word intended was—villainy, which takes off the directness.

214. BOOTH : Iago hardens himself, as it were, looking straight before him ; immovable,—and answers after a pause, and doggedly.

222. BOOTH : Short and sharp. He darts a quick, steely glance at her in defiance, but quails as she proceeds, and speaks line 227 with desperation.

ACT V, SC. II.]	THE MOORE OF VENICE	315
Shee false with Cassio ?		225
Did you say with Cassio ?
Iago . With Cassio , Mistress?
Go too, charme your tongue.
Emil . I will not charme my Tongue;
I am bound to speake,		230
My Mistress here lies murdered in her bed.
All . Oh Heavens, forefend.
Emil . And your reports have set the Murder on.
Othello . Nay stare not Masters,
It is true indeede.		235
Gra . 'Tis a strange Truth.
Mont . O monstrous Acte.
Emil . Villany, villany, villany:	[337 b]
I thinke vpon't, I thinke: I smel't: O Villany:
I thought so then: Ile kill my selfe for greefe.		240
225-230. Three lines, Qq, Rowe et seq.	232. All.] Mon. Gra. Cap. Dyce iii,
225. Shee false] She was false Q ₃ .	Huds.
230. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii.	232-241. Put in margin. Pope, Han.
231-241. Om. Q ₁ .	233. Murder] murderer Q ₆ , Johns.
231. heere lies] lies here Pope +.	Murther F ₃ F ₄ .
murthered] murdered Q ₆ Q ₈ .	234, 235. One line, Q ₆ Q ₈ , Rowe, Theob.
murther'd Pope et seq.	Warb. et seq.
bed.] bed , Q ₃ , Cap. Dyce, Sta.	239. I smel't: O Villany] I smell a
Huds.	villany Q ₆ Q ₈ .

228. charme] JOHNSON: I know not whether I have read, or whether my own thoughts have suggested, an alteration here. It seems to me not improbable that Shakespeare wrote clam your tongue; to clam a bell is to cover the clapper with felt, which drowns the blow and hinders the sound [qu., hinders the blow and drowns the sound? The Cambridge Editors record 'chain, Anon. conj.'—ED.] MALONE: That is, compel to be silent, as if by the power of enchantment. STEEVENS: Thus Jonson, Cynthia's Revels [I, i]: 'Charm your skipping tongue.' Also Faerie Queene, V, ix [line 350]: 'That well could charme his tongue, and time his speech.' [For additional examples in Shakespeare, see SCHMIDT.]

236. strange] STAUNTON: This is one of the many words which have lost weight and emphasis since Shakespeare's time. With us it imports no more than unusual, not customary, &c.; but when Desdemona spoke of the Moor's adventures as 'strange,' she meant that they were wonderful, incredible; and it is in this deeper sense of the word that Gratiano employs it here.

239. In the punctuation of this line the Ff are followed by the Globe, Hudson, Rolfe, White ii. All other editions substantially follow Rowe in separating the first clause: 'I think upon't—I think—I smell't—O villainy!' except STAUNTON, whose punctuation seems, to me, the best: 'I think upon't,—I think I smell't;—O, villainy!—'—ED.

240. then] STEEVENS: That is, at the instant when she gave Desdemona's handkerchief to Iago; for even then Emilia appears to have suspected it was sought after O villany ! villany !

241

Iago. What, are you mad ?

I charge you get you home.

Emil. Good Gentlemen, let me haue leaue to speake :

'Tis proper I obey him ; but not now :

245

Perchance Iago, I will ne're go home.

Oth. Oh, oh, oh.

Emil. Nay, lay thee downe, and roare :

For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,

That ere did lift vp eye.

250

Oth. Oh she was fowle !

I scarce did know you Vnkle, there lies your Neece,

Whose breath (indeed) these hands haue newly stopp'd :

I know this acte shewes horrible and grim.

Gra. Poore Desdemon :

255

242, 243. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

246. Perchance] Perhaps Q₂Q₃.

247. Oh, oh, oh.] Oh ! oh ! oh ! oh ! Cap.
Steev.'93, Ktly.

[Oth. falls on the bed. Qq. (falls Q₂Q₃).

251. [Rising. Theob.

254. horrible] terrible Qq, Coll. Wh. i.

255, 256. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

255. Desdemon] F₂, Knt, Dyce, Sta.

Del. Huds. Desdemone Cap. Desdemona
QqF₃F₄ et cet.

for no honest purpose, and there asks her husband : 'What will you do with it ?' &c., III, iii, 366. COWDEN-CLARKE : In allusion to her suspicions at IV, ii, 154 ; she seems to be about to say, 'I thought then that there was villainy going on, but little thought my husband was the author.' The very thought that Iago could be capable of such villainy, causes her to interrupt her half-uttered sentence with 'I'll kill myself for grief.' ROLFE agrees with Cowden-Clarke.

246. I will] ABBOTT, § 319 : Some passages which are quoted to prove that Shakespeare used will with the first person without implying wish, desire, &c., do not warrant such an inference [see Ham. V, ii, 167]. . . . There is a difficulty in the expression 'perchance I will' ; but, from its constant recurrence, it would seem to be a regular idiom. Compare this passage in Othello with Com. of Err. IV, i, 39 : 'Perchance I will be there as soon as you,' and Mer. of Ven. II, v, 52 : 'Perhaps I will return immediately.' In all these passages 'perchance' precedes, and the meaning seems to be in the last example, for instance : 'My purpose may, perhaps, be fulfilled,' and 'my purpose is to return immediately,' or, in other words, 'If possible, I intend to return immediately.' In all these cases the 'perhaps' stands by itself. It does not qualify will, but the whole of the following sentence.

247. BOOTH : Iago gloats over this quietly. Emilia sits on divan, c.

252. Vnkle] BOOTH : Gratiano falls into a seat near the bed, soon after his entrance, when he discovers his niece dead.

255. Desdemon] See III, i, 58. DELIUS : Gratiano appears to have come to Cyprus to bring to Desdemona the news of her Father's death. [In that 'the gentle lady' never knew of her Father's death, is the one tiny glimmering ray of comfort in this blackness. —ED.]

I am glad thy Father's dead, 256
 Thy Match was mortall to him : and pure greefe
 Shore his old thred in twaine. Did he liue now,
 This sight would make him do a desperate turne :
 Yea, curſe his better Angell from his ſide, 260
 And fall to Reprobance.

Oth. 'Tis pittifull : but yet Iago knowes
 That ſhe with Caffio, hath the Act of ſhame,
 A thouſand times committed. Caffio confeſt it,
 And ſhe did gratifie his amorous workes 265
 With that Recognizance and pledge of Loue
 Which I firſt gaue her : I ſaw it in his hand :
 It was a Handkerchiefe, an Antique Token
 My Father gaue my Mother. 269

256. I am] I'm Pope +, Dyce iii, Huds.	266. that] the Q ₁ .
258. in twaine] atwaine Q ₁ .	267. gaue her] gave Pope, Har.
261. Reprobance] Ff , Cap. Knt, Dyce,	268. a] an Pope +, Steev.'85.
Wh. i, Del. Huds. Rlfe. reprobation Qq	268, 280. Handkerchiefe] handkercher et cet.	Q ₁ .
263. hath] had Q ₁ Q ₂ , Theob. Warb.	268. Antique] Antick F ₃ F ₄ , Rowe.
Johns.

260. side] MALONE: So in Sonn. 144: 'My female evil Tempteth my better angel from my side.'

261. Reprobance] In his Article on 'the instance of error in the beginning or earlier parts of words, WALKER (Crit. ii, 241) says: 'By the way, terminations in ance for ation are not infrequent.' He then gives five or six instances in addition to the present. His Editor, LETTSOM, in a foot-note, says: 'So we have a little above "iteration," which is necessary for the metre. Collier reads iteration and reprobation with the Qq, because there is no authority for the other forms. That is the very reason why they were corrupted in the Qq.'

262. BOOTH: Iago, who has turned aside, now faces them as all look towards him.

264. thousand] PYE (p. 342): This is merely hyperbolical, and is used every day by impatient men in common speech for five or six. COWDEN-CLARKE: Merely an indefinite number; used here to convey the effect of long time. See 'a hundred times,' III, iii, 339.

265. gratifie] WALKER (Crit. iii, 291): That is, express her gratitude for, recompense.

269. Mother] STEEVENS: In III, iv, 69, Othello says that 'an Egyptian' gave this handkerchief to his Mother; and here he says it was his Father. This has been censured as an oversight in Shakespeare, but perhaps it is only a fresh proof of his art. The first account of the handkerchief, as given by Othello, was purposely ostentatious, in order to alarm his wife the more. When he mentions it a second time, the truth was sufficient for his purpose. COWDEN-CLARKE: Even this slight deviation from truth works its own retribution. Had not Othello over-excited Desdemona's fears by his description of the handkerchief, she might not have been led to prevaricate and into falsehood.

- Emil.* Oh Heauen ! oh heauenly Powres ! 270
Iago. Come, hold your peace.
Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out. I peace?
 No, I will speake as liberall as the North ;
 Let Heauen, and Men, and Diuels, let them all,
 All, all, crie thame against me, yet Ile speake. 275
Iago. Be wife, and get you home.
Emil. I will not.
Gra. Fye, your Sword vpon a Woman.
Emil. Oh thou dull Moore,
 That Handkerchiefe thou speak'ft of 280
 I found by Fortune, and did giue my Husband :
 For often, with a solemne earnestnesse,
 (More then indeed belong'd to such a Trifle)
 He begg'd of me, to steale't.
Iago. Villanous Whore. 285
Emil. She giue it Cassio? No, alas I found it,
 And I did giu't my Husband.
Iago. Filth, thou lyeft. 288
270. Oh...Powres] O God, O heauenly
God Q, Sta.
 271. Come] Zounds Q, Sta.
 272. 'Twill out, 'twill out.] FfQ, Q,
 Cam. 'Twill out, 'twill: Q, 'Twill out,
 'twill out—Rowe+, Jen. 'Twill out,
 'twill out / Sta. Huds. 'Twill out, 'twill out;—Cap. et cet.
I peace] Ff, Cap. I peace / Rowe,
 Pope, Theob. Han. Dyce, Wh. Glo. Cam.
 Huds. Rlfe. I, peace / Warb. I hold my peace fir, no, Qq, Johns. et cet.
 273. No] Om. Qq, Jen. Sing. Ktly.
I will speake as] Ile be in speaking,
 Qq, Jen. Sing. Ktly.
273. North;] ayre Q, Pope, Theob.
 Han. Warb. Cap. Jen. Mal. Steev. Var.
 Sing. Ktly. wind Coll. (MS).
 274. them] em Qq, Jen.
 277. [Iago offers to stab his wife. Rowe.
 278. Fye] As closing line 277, Cap.
 Steev. et seq.
 279, 280. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.
 280. of] on, Qq, Jen.
 284. steale't] F, F, Sing. Ktly, Sta.
steale it QqF, et cet.
 286. giue] gaue Qq, Johns.
No, alas] Alas F, F, Rowe+. found] find Q,
 287. giu't] give it Steev.'85, Mal.

271. BOOTH: Iago had not thought of her betraying him, and now starts and trembles violently.

273. North] Compare Cymb. I, iii, 36: 'the tyrannous breathing of the north Shakes all our buds from growing.' Also R. of L. 1335: '— hie as fast As lagging fowls before the northern blast.' It was the wind which, it seems to me, symbolized masterful rudeness. Steevens cites from Webster's White Devil [p. 92, ed. Dyce]: 'And let th' irregular north wind sweep her up,' which does not help us much.—ED.

281. by Fortune] MOREL: Cf. la locution française: 'Comme elle dissit ces mots | Le loup, de fortune, passe.'—La Fontaine.

288. Filth] DYCE (Few Notes, p. 149): Here Iago uses a term synonymous with the word he has just applied to her. Compare Greene's Notable Discovery of Coosnage,

- Emil.* By Heauen I do not, I do not Gentlemen :
 Oh murd'rous Coxcombe, what should such a Foole 290
 Do with so good a wife ?
Oth. Are there no stones in Heauen,
 But what serues for the Thunder ?
 Precious Villaine.
Gra. The woman falles : 295
 Sure he hath kill'd his Wife.
Emil. I, I : oh lay me by my Mistris side.
Gra. Hee's gone, but his wife's kill'd.
Mon. 'Tis a notorious Villain : take you this weapon 299

290. [To Oth. Cap.
 291. wife] woman Qq, Coll. i, ii, Glo.
 Wh. ii.

[The Moore runnes at Iago. Iago kills his wife. Qq. Iago breaks through, and wounds his Wife, then runs out. Rowe.
Oth. offers to stab Iago but is disarmed by Mont. Dyce.

293, 294. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

293. But...for] For what then serves
 Warb.

serues] QqF₂F₃, Cap. serve F₄ et
 cet.

294. Precious] pretious Q₂. pernitious
 Q₂Q₃.

295, 296. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

297. [Exit Iago. Qq.

299. you this] your Qq. this Pope +
 Cap.

&c., 1592 [p. 44, ed. Grosart]: 'To him will some common filth (that neuer knew loue) faine an ardent and honest affection.' HALLIWELL: 'Filth,' applied to man or woman, was a term implying the greatest possible degree of contempt.

291. wife] DYCE (Remarks, p. 243): It is absolutely necessary to adopt here the reading of the Folio.

292, 293. WARBURTON: Without question Shakespeare wrote and pointed thus:
 'Are there no stones in heaven? For what then serves the thunder?' i. e. are there no bolts in heaven for this villain? for what purpose then serves the thunder, that instrument of vengeance? [Kean adopted this emendation; see Wood's Personal Recollections, &c., p. 264.—ED.] STEEVENS: Othello does not demand a thunder-bolt for Iago. He only asks, if there are no lesser degrees of chastisement more proportioned to the guilt of mortals, ready to drop down on such villains as Iago, though Omnipo-tence withholds its thunder as too noble an instrument for the punishment of crimes like his? Shakespeare might, however, mean, Does heaven reserve its thunder only to make a noise? has it no implements of mischief to punish as well as terrify? MALONE:
 Has not heaven one supernumerary bolt, to hurl directly at the head of this atrocious villain? Must all the stores of its arsenal be reserved for common and ordinary thunder?

294. Precious] COLLIER: Pernitious of the Qq does not suit the measure. DYCE (ed. iii): "'Precious villain' is more in the style of Cloten than of Othello: qu. Pernitious with Q₂. This could scarcely have crept in from "pernicious caitiff" 80 lines below. Collier's metrical objection is "naught." See Walker, Vers., &c., Art. ix.—
 LETTSON. [I have failed to find this passage in Walker; it certainly is not in Art. ix.
 I therefore give it on Lettson's authority.—ED.]

299. notorious] See IV, ii, 167. ROLFE: Iago was not a notorious villain in its modern sense; his villainy had but just then become known.

Which I haue recouer'd from the Moore : 300
 Come guard the doore without, let him not passe,
 But kill him rather. Ile after that fame villaine,
 For 'tis a damned Slaue. Exit.

Oth. I am not valiant neither : [338 a]
 But euery Punie whipster gets my Sword. 305
 But why should Honor out-liue Honesty?
 Let it go all.

Æmil. What did thy Song boad Lady?
 Hearke, canst thou heare me? I will play the Swan,
 And dye in Muficke : Willough, Willough, Willough. 310
 Moore, she was chaste : She lou'd thee, cruell Moore,
 So come my Soule to blisse, as I speake true :
 So speaking as I thinke, alas, I dye.

Oth. I haue another weapon in this Chamber, 314

300. haue recouer'd] haue here recovered Qq. recover'd haue here Pope i.
haue here recover'd Pope ii et seq.

301. Come guard] Some guard Theob.
 conj. (withdrawn).

303. Exit.] Exit Mont. and Gratiano.
 Qq. Exit Montano. Knt.

Scene IX. Pope+, Jen.

308-310. What... Willough] Om. Q₄.

310. [Singing. Dyce.

313. alas, I dye.] Ff, Rowe+, Knt,
 Wh. i. I die, I die. Qq et cet.

[She dies. Qq.

303. Slaue] See IV, ii, 156.

305. Punie] BOOTH: Can we infer from this that Othello was a large man? Yet, further on he speaks of his 'little arm.' The Moors, I believe, are usually slight of build and wiry. [I think it is more an expression of contempt in both cases, without any reference to physical size. Is the contemptuous inferiority implied in 'whipster' due to a survival of the feeling of feminine weakness involved in the feminine termination?—ED.]

306. Honor . . . Honesty] WALKER (Crit. i, 22) suggests that 'Honor' belongs to birth, dignity, grace of mind or person, while 'Honesty' is equivalent to virtue, and cites Wint. Tale, II, i, 66: 'She is a goodly lady . . . 'Tis pity she's not honest-honourable' (the hyphen is Walker's), i. e., honourable with honesty. Also Hen. VIII. I, i, 39: 'As I belong to worship, and affect In honour honesty.' 'Each of these words, by the way,' adds Walker, "'honour" and "honesty," was, at times, used in both meanings.'

309. Swan] STEEVENS: Compare, for the same thought: Mer. of Ven. III, ii, 44, and King John, V, vii, 21. ROLFE adds 'And now this pale swan in her watery nest Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending,'—R. of L. 1611; and 'death-divining swan,'—Phan. & Thet. 15. DOUCE (i, 262), in a note on the passage from Mer. of Ven., cited by Steevens, proves the antiquity, from Plato to Luther, of the belief in the swan's dying song.

It was a Sword of Spaine, the Ice brookes temper : 315
Oh heere it is : Vnkle I must come forth.

Gra. If thou attempt it, it will cost thee deere ;
Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Looke in vpon me then, and speake with me,
Or naked as I am I will assault thee. 320

Gra. What is the matter?

Othel. Behold, I haue a weapon :
A better neuer did it selfe sustaine
Vpon a Soldiers Thigh. I haue seene the day,
That with this little Arme, and this good Sword, . 325
I haue made my way through more impediments
Then twenty times your stop. But (oh vaine boast)
Who can controll his Fate? 'Tis not so now.
Be not affraid, though you do see me weapon'd :
Heere is my iournies end, heere is my butt 330
And verie Sea-marke of my vtmost Saile.
Do you go backe difmaid? 'Tis a lost feare : 332

315. It was] Ff, Rowe+, Cap. It is
Qq et cet.

the Ice brookes] the Icebrookes Qq.
the Ice brooks F₃F₄, the Ebro's Pope, Theob. Han. Warb. Cap.

temper.] temper;—Cap. temper.
— Coll.

316, 317. forth. Gra.] forth. Gra. with-
n. Gra. Qq. forth. Gra. [within] Pope. forth. Gra. [without] Sta.

319. with me] to me Qq, Coll.

320. [Re-enter Gra. Theob.

322. Behold] Lo! Pope+.

324. I haue] I've Pope+, Dyce iii,
Huds.

326. I haue made] I made Pope, Han.
I've made Theob. Warb. Johns. Dyce iii,
Huds.

327. your stop] you stop Q₃F₃F₄.

329-335. Om. Q₁.

331. And verie] The very Q₂Q₃,
Theob. Warb. Johns. Jen. Steev.'85.

315. Ice brookes] JOHNSON: Steel is hardened by being put red-hot into very cold water. STEEVENS identifies the 'ice brook' with the river called Salo (now Xalon), near Bilbilis, by citations from Martial [Epig. IV, lv, 15, and I, xlix, 12] and Justin, l, 44. POPE'S needless change was thus justified by BLACKSTONE: I incline to read 'the ebroes temper.' If we suppose that the words, 'the ebroes', were huddled together, either in transcribing or composing, thus, 'the ebroes', the compositor, in running it over with his eye, might (to make it sense, as he thought) add a couple of letters, and divide the words thus: the ebroes, which is nearly as it stands in the old Qto. I doubt whether 'ice-brooks' are usual in the climate of Spain. MALONE: How this fact may be, I know not; and I am confident Shakespeare did not inquire.

320. naked] WHITE (ed. ii): That is, weaponless, as Gratiano supposes him.

327. stop] STEEVENS: So in Cor. I, i, 72: 'cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link asunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment.'

328. Fate] The echo of Desdemona's 'It is my wretched Fortune.'—ED.

Man but a Ruff againſt Othello's brest, 333
 And he retires. Where ſhould Othello go?
 Now : how doſt thou looke now? Oh ill-Starr'd wench, 335
 Pale as thy Smocke : when we ſhall meete at compt,
 This looke of thine will hurle my Soule from Heauen,
 And Fiends will ſnatch at it. Cold, cold, my Girle?
 Euen like thy Chafſtity. O curſed, curſed Slaue!
 Whip me ye Diuels, 340
 From the poſſeſſion of this Heauenly fight :
 Blow me about in windes, roaſt me in Sulphure,
 Waſh me in ſteepe-downe gulſes of Liquid fire.
 Oh Deſdemona ! dead Deſdemona : dead. Oh, oh ! 344

335. Now : how] Ff. How Q₂Q₃. Now
 —how Rowe+, Jen. Now, how Cap. et
 cet.

ill-Starr'd] ill ſtor'd Q₃.

336. compt] count Q₂. 'count Jen.

339, 340. Three lines, Rlf. O...Diuels
 one line, Cap. Steev. Mal. Var. Knt.

339. curſed, curſed] curſed Qq,
 Pope+, Jen. Coll. Glo. Cam. Wh. ii.

340. ye] you Qq.

342. roaſt] and roaſt F₂F₄, Rowe.

343. ſteepe-downe] ſteepe downe Qq.

gulſes] Gulſ Rowe ii.

344. Oh...oh] Knt. O Deſdemona ! dead, Deſdemona ! dead ! O, O ! Sta. Huds.
 O Deſdemona, Deſdemona, dead, O, o, o.
 Q₂. O Deſdemona, Deſdemona; dead, O, o, o. Q₂Q₃. Oh Deſdemona, Deſdemona ! dead ! oh, oh, oh ! Jen. O Deſdemona !

Deſdemona ! dead ? O, O, O ! Coll. O
Deſdemona ! Deſdemona ! dead ! | Oh !
 Oh ! Oh ! Glo. Cam. Rlf. Wh. ii. Oh
Deſdemona ! dead Deſdemona : dead, dead.
 Oh, oh ! F₂. Oh Deſdemona ! dead Deſ- demona : dead, dead. Oh, oh ! F₂. Oh Deſ- demona ! Dead, Deſdemona : Dead, dead.
 Oh, oh ! F₂, Rowe. Oh Deſdemona ! Deſ- demona ! dead, dead ! oh, oh ! Pope+. O Deſdemona ! dead, Deſdemona ? dead ?
dead ? | O, o, o ! Cap. O Deſdemona !
Deſdemona ! dead ? | Dead ? O ! O ! O !
 Steev.'73, '78, '85, Mal. Rann, Steev.'93, Var.'03, '13, '21, Sing. Ktly. O Deſ- demona ! dead, Deſdemona ! dead ! O ! Dyce, Wh. i, Del. O Deſdemona ! Deſdemona ! dead ? O ! Hal. O Deſdemona ! Deſ- demona ! dead ! Oh, oh, oh ! Clarke.

333. An allusion, says STAUNTON, to the mock tournaments, in which the combatants were armed with rushes in place of spears. This leads DELIUS to conjecture that the reading should be 'Run but a rush,' &c.

334. BOOTH : Goes towards the bed, near which his sword falls from his hand.

335. wench] STEEVENS : This originally signified only a young woman. Cassandra, in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra, 1578, says of herself : 'O wretched wench, where may I first complayne?' Again : 'Therefore, sweet wenche, helpe me to rue my woe.' It is used without any dishonourable meaning in the Bible : 'Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz stayed by En-rogel; . . . and a wench went and told them,' &c.—s Sam. xvii, 17. And by Gawin Douglas, in his version of the Æneid : 'audetque viris concurrere virgo. This wensche stoutlye rencounter durst with men.' HALLIWELL : Here we find it applied to a princess : 'For Ariodant so lov'd the princely wench, That Neptune's floods unneth his flames cold quench.'—Har. Ariost. v, 20 [There was, nevertheless, I think, a faint subaudition of inferiority of some kind.—ED.]

336. compt] DYCE : That is, the reckoning at the Judgement-day.

Enter Lodouico, Cassio, Montano, and Iago, with Officers.

345

Lod. Where is this rash, and most vnfortunate man?

Oth. That's he that was Othello : heere I am.

Lod. Where is that Viper?

Bring the Villaine forth.

350

Oth. I look down towards his feet ; but that's a Fable,
If that thou bee'st a Diuell, I cannot kill thee.

Lod. Wrench his Sword from him.

Iago. I bleed Sir, but not kill'd.

Othel. I am not sorry neither, Il'd haue thee liue :

355

For in my fense, 'tis happineffe to die.

Lod. Oh thou Othello, that was once so good,

357

345. Enter...] Enter Lodouico, Montano, Iago, and Officers, Cassio in a Chaire. Qq. (Iago Om. Q₂Q₃). Enter Lodouico, Cassio led in wounded, Montano, and Iago Prisoner, with Officers. Rowe.

Scene X. Pope +, Jen.

347. vnfortunate] infortunate Qq.

348. Othello: heere] Othello; [pointing to his wife] here Cap.

349, 350. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

349. that] this Q₁.

352. If that] If Q₄.

[Oth. wounds Iago. Rowe.

353. Wrench] Wring Q₄.

354. bleed...not] bleed, but am not Han. ii.

357. that was] Ff, Steev.'85, Var. Knt, Sing. Ktly. wast Rowe +, Cap. Mal. Steev. that wert Qq et cet.

339. Slaue] Booth: By gesture show that you mean Iago. [Until now, I had always thought that this referred to Othello himself.—ED.]

342. Blow . . . windes] Douce calls attention to that immortal passage in Meas. for Meas. III, i, 124: 'To be imprison'd in the viewless winds, And blown with restless violence round about The pendent world.'

344. See III, i, 58. COLLIER (ed. ii) says that the 'line ends strictly at "dead,"' but then Collier reads 'Desdemona.'

345. Cassio] COLLIER: From the omission in the Folio of the stage direction here found in the Qq, we may infer that the practice of our old stage in this respect was not uniform. In modern times Cassio walks in lame, and supported, with the handkerchief as a bandage about his wounded leg.

350. Booth: Othello draws the bed-curtains close at Iago's entrance, that Desdemona's corpse may not be polluted by Iago's gaze. All eyes are fastened on Iago, thus giving Othello the chance to assault him unobserved.

351. feet] JOHNSON: To see if, according to the common opinion, his feet be cloven.

354. I bleed] MAGINN (p. 260, note): This is strange language. Should it not be, 'I [i. e., Ay, as usual in Shakespeare], bled, sir, but not killed'?

356. Booth: 'If 't were now to die, 'twere now to be most happy.' The same sad refrain first heard in the very heaven of his happiness, now in his hell of misery. Let it be faintly heard wherever possible through your performance of this character.

357. so good] Booth: Not a savage brute. Remember this.

Falne in the practife of a curfed Slaue, 358
What fhall be faide to thee.

Oth. Why any thing : 360

An honourable Murderer, if you will :
For nought I did in hate, but all in Honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confest his Villany :
Did you and he confent in Caffio's death.

Oth. I. 365

Caf. Deere Generall, I neuer gaue you caufe.

Oth. I do beleue it, and I aske your pardon :
Will you, I pray, demand that demy-Diuell,
Why he hath thus enfnar'd my Soule and Body. [338 b]

Iag. Demand me nothing : what you know, you know : 370
From this time forth, I neuer will fpeake word.

Lod. What? not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips. 373

358. curfed] Ff, Rowe +, Cap. Steev.
Mal. Var. Knt, Sing. Wh. i, Ktly. damned
Qq et cet.

359. fhall] fhould Qq.

thee.] thee? QqF₄ et seq.

362. I did in] did I in Qq, Jen. Sta.
Cam. Del. I did F₄.

366. neuer gaue] did neuer giue Qq,
Jen.

367. your] you Qq, Coll. i, Glo. Del.
Rlfe.

368. I pray] pray Q₂.

369. enfnar'd] infnar'd Qq.

373. ope] ope Q₂.

358. in] WALKER (Crit. iii, 291): 'In' for into, ut saepe; for Shakespeare can scarcely have written, 'Fall'n into th' practise.'

358. practise] JOHNSON: In the snare, by the stratagem.

358. cursed] DYCE (ed. iii): I prefer the Qq, because Othello has a little before exclaimed 'O cursèd, cursèd slave!'

371. SWINBURNE (p. 179): Iago has within him a sense or conscience of power incomparable: and this power shall not be left, in Hamlet's phrase, 'to fust in him unused.' A genuine and thorough capacity for human lust or hate would diminish and degrade the supremacy of his evil. He is almost as far above or beyond vice as he is beneath or beyond virtue. And this it is which makes him impregnable and invulnerable. When once he has said it, we know as well as he that henceforth he never will speak word. We could smile almost as we can see him to have smiled at Gratiano's most ignorant and empty threat, being well assured that torments will in no wise ope his lips; that as surely and as truthfully as ever did the tortured philosopher before him, he might have told his tormentors that they did but bruise the coating, batter the crust, or break the shell of Iago. Could we imagine a far other lost spirit than Farinata degli Uberti's endowed with Farinata's might of will, and transferred from the sepulchres of fire to the dykes of Malebolge, we might conceive something of Iago's attitude in hell,—of his unalterable and indomitable posture for all eternity. BOOTH: I grind my teeth at this, not because it 'takes,' but because I feel that it expresses determination never to speak again.

Oth. Well, thou doest best.

Lod. Sir, 375

You shall vnderstand what hath befallne,
(Which, as I thinke, you know not) heere is a Letter
Found in the pocket of the slaine Rodorigo,
And heere another, the one of them imports
The death of Cassio, to be vndertooke 380
By Rodorigo.

Oth. O Villaine!

Cassio. Most Heathenish, and most grosse.

Lod. Now, heere's another discontented paper
Found in his pocket too : and this it seemes 385
Rodorigo meant t'haue sent this damned villaine :
But that (belike) Iago in the interim
Came in, and satisfi'd him.

Oth. Oh thou pernicious Caitiffe ;
How came you (Cassio) by that Handkerchiefe 390
That was my wiues ?

Cassio. I found it in my Chamber :
And he himselfe confest it but euen now,
That there he dropt it for a speciall purpose,
Which wrought to his desire. 395

- | | |
|---|--|
| 374. doest] doest Qq. | 387. interim] nicke Q., Jen. |
| 375, 376. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq. | 388. satisfi'd] satisfied Qq. |
| 377. not] Om. Johns. | 389. Oh thou] Ff, Rowe+, Knt, Sta |
| heere is] here's Pope, Theob. Han. | Del. O the Qq et cet. |
| Warb. Dyce iii. | Caitiffe] catieffe Qq. |
| 379. the one] one Pope+. | 390. that] a Qq, Jen. |
| 380, 381. One line, Qq. | Handkerchiefe] handkercher Q. |
| vndertooke By] vndertooke—by | 391. wiues] wifes Qq. wife's Rowe. |
| Q. | 393. it but] Ff, Rowe+, Jen. it Q. |
| 386. t'haue] Ff, Rowe+, Dyce iii, | but Cap. et cet. |
| Huds. to haue Qq et cet. | 394. speciall] speaciall Q. |

377. Letter] KOESTER (Sh. Jahrbuch, i, p. 142) finds here, in the needlessness of these letters, and in the fact that they rehearse only what is already known to the audience, a proof that the scenes, in which the events related in these letters occur, were omitted in the representation.

382. Villaine] RITSON: Read, for the sake of both sense and metre: villainy 'Of course,' says WALKER (Crit. ii, 45).

388. satisfi'd] WHITE (ed. ii): Gave him enough; killed him. [See IV, ii, 279.]

390. BOOTH: After a pause,—looking wonderingly at the handkerchief.

393. it] MALONE: This was manifestly caught by the compositor's eye glancing on the next line.

Othel. O Foole, foole, foole!

396

Cassio. There is besides, in Rodorigo's Letter,
How he vpbraides Iago, that he made him
Braue me vpon the Watch : whereon it came
That I was cast : and euen but now he spake
(After long seeming dead) Iago hurt him, Iago fet him on.

400

Lod. You must forfake this roome, and go with vs :
Your Power, and your Command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this Slaue,
If there be any cunning Crueltie,
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It shall be his. You shall close Prisoner rest,
Till that the Nature of your fault be knowne
To the Venetian State. Come, bring away.

405

410

Oth. Soft you ; a word or two before you goe :
I haue done the State some seruice, and they know't :

412

398. vpbraides] obraides Q₂Q₃. up- braides F₁.

Cam. Coll. iii, Huds. them Coll. (MS).
bring him Qq et cet.

Iago] Iagos Q₃.

411. before you goe] Om. Q₂.

400. but] Om. Rowe ii +.

412. I haue] I've Pope+, Dyce iii,

spake] speake Q₃, said Rann conj.

Huds.

405. For] Fore Q₃.

know't] know it Steev. Mal. Var.

410. bring] Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.
Johns. Cap. Steev.'93, Knt, Dyce, Sta.

Rann, Coll. Wh. i.

396. HAWKINS (Life of Kean, i, 229) : Booth, Garrick, Barry, and Kemble raved, tore their hair, and became convulsed with passion when expressing these words, but Kean knew better; he felt no agony at the moment, because neither Shakespeare nor Nature taught him to feel any, 'and he repeated the word quickly and almost inarticulately, and with a half smile of wonder at his incredible stupidity in having been such a "fool."' OTTLEY (p. 32) : It is needless to remind those who saw Kean in this passage, of the marvellous use he made of the occasion,—his eye wandering in vacancy, as stupefied by amazement, remorse, and despair,—and the clasped hands, palms upwards, gathered across the head, as if to crush a fevered brain, which threatened to burst out into a volcano,—exclaiming the while with trembling, gasping utterance, and in agonized tones : 'Fool ! fool ! fool !' BOOTH : From this onward, I imagine Othello to be on the very verge of pure insanity.

400. cast] See I, i, 164; II, ii, 31; II, ii, 302.

411. Soft you] GOULD (p. 116) : As J. B. Booth begins this speech he takes a silken robe and carelessly throws it over his shoulder; then reaches for his turban, possessing himself of a dagger he had concealed therein. BOOTH : Othello opens the curtains,—pauses,—kisses Desdemona,—slowly and with deepest feeling of remorse,—turns towards the others, who, in respectful sympathy, droop their heads, and, therefore, do not see his purposed suicide until it is too late.

No more of that. I pray you in your Letters,
 When you shall these unluckie deeds relate,
 Speake of me, as I am. Nothing extenuate,
 Nor set downe ought in malice.
 Then must you speake,
 Of one that lou'd not wifely, but too well :
 Of one, not easily Iealous, but being wrought,
 Perplexed in the extreame : Of one, whose hand
 (Like the base Iudean) threw a Pearle away

415. of me, as I am] of them as they are Q₂, Jen.

416, 417. One line, Qq, Pope et seq.

417. must you] you must Q₂Q₃.

418. too well] to well Q₃.

419. Iealous] F₂. iealous or jealous
 QqF₃F₄.

420. Perplexed] Perplext Qq. per- plex'd Rowe.

421. base] bare Cartwright.

Iudean] Indian QqF₃F₄. Judian
 Theob. Warb. Judean Han. Johns. Steev.

Mal. Var. Indian F₂ et cet.

420. Perplexed] WALKER (Crit. iii, 291): This word, as Shakespeare understood it, meant much more than with us. [In proof, many instances are cited, Cymb. V, v, 108; Two Gent. II, iii, 9, &c., and a striking one from Sidney's Arcadia, Bk. ii, p. 189, l. 4: 'But the truth indeed is, that partly with the shame and sorrow she took of her father's faultiness, partly with the fear, that the hate I conceived against him, would utterly disgrace her in my opinion, whensoever I should know her, so vehemently perplexed her, that her fair colour decayed, and daily and hastily grew into the extreme working of sorrowfulness,' &c.]

421. Iudean] POPE: In the first edition it is Judian, occasion'd, probably, by the word Tribe just after, but the common reading is better; as the word Tribe is applicable to any race of people, and the thought of an ignorant Indian's casting away a pearl very natural in itself, whereas to make sense of the other, one must presuppose some particular story of a Jew alluded to, which is much less obvious. THEOBALD adopted Judian on the grounds that no Indian was so ignorant as not to know the value of pearls; that an Indian would have been called rude and not 'base'; that 'pearl' is metaphorical, and by it 'our author very properly means a fine woman.' To Pope's objection to Judian, that it must contain a reference to some particular Jew, Theobald opposes the story of 'Herod, who in a fit of blind jealousy threw away such a jewel of a wife as Mariamne,' whose story was dramatized in 1613 by Lady Elizabeth Carew. Lastly, that the accent was no obstacle to a poet who shortens the second syllable in Euphrates. WARBURTON agrees with Theobald, and adds that from the phrase 'out-herod Herod' applied to a poor player in Hamlet, the existence of a tragedy on Herod is to be inferred. [Malone afterwards showed that the Herod here alluded to was a character in one of the ancient Mysteries.] UPTON (p. 255): In the First book of the Ethiopian romance of Heliodorus there is the story of Thyamis, an Aegyptian robber, who fell in love with Chariclea; stung with jealousy, and despairing of possessing her himself, he resolves to murder her; and thinking he had killed her (but it happened to be another), he cries out, 'Alas, poor maid, these are the nuptial gifts I present thee.' This story is alluded to in Twelfth Night, V, i, 121; and it is this same story, it seems to me, that Othello refers to here, and the phrase should therefore be, 'Like the base

[421. (Like the base Judean) threw a Pearle away].

Egyptian, threw,' &c. This exactly agrees with the Romance. 'Twas Thyamis's own hand, and he, too, in a strong fit of love and jealousy, that committed this murder. Brabantio had called Othello 'a foul thief.' These circumstances crowd into Othello's mind, and with great propriety he calls himself 'the base Egyptian.' As for Theobald's reference to Herod and Mariamne, very little will be found in it applicable to Desdemona's case. Othello was a private murderer, Herod brought his wife to public justice; Desdemona was fond of the Moor, the Jewess hated her husband, and always treated him with scorn and contempt. On the other hand, the story of the Egyptian thief is very minutely applicable, and the passage in Twelfth Night shows that our author was pleased with the allusion. It seems the corruption was owing to some sort of ill-written abbreviation, that might be in the original, as Egyptian, and which could not be easily understood by printer or player. HEATH (p. 571) defends Indian against Theobald's objections by asserting, first: That Indians do not know the value of pearls. 'Nay, even at this day the various tribes of Indians who inhabit the continent of North America, would joyfully exchange the most valuable pearl that might accidentally fall into their hands for a bottle of rum, or a flask of gunpowder.' Secondly: 'Base' is used to signify not only villainous and treacherous, but mean, vulgar, uninstructed in the arts of polished life. Thirdly: That the 'pearl' doth not mean a fine woman in virtue of a metaphor, but is only likened to one, to wit, to Desdemona, in virtue of a comparison or similitude. On the other hand, there are three unanswerable objections to Judean. First: There is no such word, and the verse will not permit Judean. Secondly: It contradicts the probable truth of the manners, as it is in the highest degree improbable that Othello, born a Negro or Moor, and bred in the tented field, and rude in speech, should have ever heard of Herod and Mariamne. Thirdly: There is not the least resemblance between the two stories, except that both Othello and Herod put their wives to death, the one privately, the other publicly. STEEVENS: I cannot join with the learned critics in conceiving this passage to refer either to the ignorance of the natives of India, in respect of pearls, or to the well-known story of Herod and Mariamne. The poet might just as fairly be supposed to have alluded to that of Jephthah and his Daughter. Othello, in detestation of what he had done, seems to compare himself to another person who had thrown away a thing of value, with some circumstances of the meanest villainy, which the epithet base seems to imply in its general sense, though it is sometimes used only for low or mean. The Indian could not properly be termed base in the former and most common sense, whose fault was ignorance, which brings its own excuse with it; and the crime of Herod surely deserves a more aggravated distinction. I do not believe the poet intended to make the present simile coincide with all the circumstances of Othello's situation, but merely with the single act of having basely (as he himself terms it) destroyed that on which he ought to have set a greater value. As the pearl may bear a literal as well as a metaphorical sense, I would rather choose to take it in the literal one, and receive Pope's rejected explanation, presupposing some story of a Jew alluded to, which might be well understood at that time, though now, perhaps, forgotten, or, at least, imperfectly remembered. I have read in some book, as ancient as the time of Shakespeare, the following tale, though at present I am unable either to recollect the title of the piece or the author's name [That obliging, and yet treacherous, memory!—ED.]: 'A Jew, who had been prisoner for many years in distant parts, brought with him at his return to Venice a great number of pearls, which he offered on the 'change among the merchants, and (one alone excepted) disposed of them to his satisfaction. On this pearl, which was the largest ever shown at market, he had fixed an immoderate price, nor could be persuaded to make the least abatement. Many of the magnificoes, as well as traders, offered him considerable sums for it, but he was resolute in his first demand. At last, after repeated and unsuccessful applications to individuals, he assembled the merchants of the city, by proclamation, to meet him on the Rialto, where he once more exposed it to sale on the former terms, but to no purpose. After having expatiated, for the last time, on the singular beauty and value of it, he threw it suddenly into the sea before them all.' Though this anecdote may appear inconsistent with the avarice of a Jew, yet it sufficiently agrees with the spirit so remarkable at all times in the scattered remains of that vindictive nation. 'Richer than all his tribe' seems to point out the Jew again in a mercantile light, and may mean that 'the pearl was richer than all the gems to be found among a set of men generally trading in them.' Neither do I recollect that Othello mentions many things but what he might fairly have been allowed to have had knowledge of in the course of his peregrinations. Of this kind are the similes of the Euxine Sea flowing into the Propontick, and the Arabian trees dropping their gums. The rest of his speeches are more free from mythological and historical allusions than almost any to be found in Shakespeare, for he is never quite clear from them; though in the design of this character he seems to have meant it for one who had spent a greater part of his life in the field, than in the cultivation of any other knowledge than what would be of use to him in his military capacity. It should be observed, that most of the flourishes merely ornamental were added after the first edition; and this is not the only proof to be met with, that the poet, in his alterations, sometimes forgot his original plan. FARMER: I abide by the old text Judian, and to the allusion to Herod in the play of Mariamne: 'I had but one inestimable jewel—Yet I in suddaine choler cast it downe, And dasht it all to pieces.' MALONE: I once thought that the accent here given to Judean was a strong objection to this reading: and that the word must have been Jutkan or Judean (as a derivative from Juda), which would not suit the metre. But the objection was founded on a mistake; for derivative words of this kind were thus accented in Shakespeare's time. Thus, in Merry Wives, we have in the old copies, 'an Epicurian rascal,' which ascertains the pronunciation of that word to have been different formerly from what it is now. The word is also thus spelt in North's Plutarch. Again, in Ant. & Cleo. II, i, 24: 'Keep his brains fuming, Epicurean cooks.' Those who would adopt the original reading, Indian, may urge in its support that the pearl naturally brings a people of the East to Shakespeare's mind; the connection in his time being considered so strong, that a contemporary author has distinguished the inhabitants of India by an epithet founded on the circumstance of their abounding in pearls: 'where the bright sun with neighbour beams Doth early light the pearled Indians.'—Cornelia, by T. Kyd, 1594. On the other hand, the word 'tribe' is strongly in favour of 'Judean,' and I have now no doubt that it is the true one. Webster, in his Appius and Virginia, 1654, has 'the jewels that she wore, More worth than all her tribe' [p. 217, ed. Dyce]. BOSWELL: Read Indian. 'Tribe' is not peculiarly applicable to Jews; it meant, as we learn from Cockeram, a kindred, and is constantly used at this day in speaking of Indians. The Jews are not in general described as willing to throw away what is valuable; and it is not likely that Shakespeare would allude to an anecdote of a single individual, of which, perhaps, none of his auditors had ever heard; but in our author's time, when voyages of discovery to America were common, each 'putter-out of five for one' was probably stimulated by a description of the riches he might find there, and of the facility with which the Indians, base, on account of their ignorance, would part with them. [Boswell here cites two allusions to the casting away of pearls and gems by Indians, one from Howard's The Woman's Conquest, 1671, and another from Habington's Castara, 1634, p. 67, ed. Arber]. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., p. 256, referring to Warburton's note): Thus it is for no-poets to comment on the greatest of poets! To make Othello say that he, who had killed his wife, was like Herod, who killed Mariamne!—Oh, how many beauties, in this one line, were impenetrable to the ever thought-swarming, but idealess, Warburton! Othello wishes to excuse himself on the score of ignorance, and yet not to excuse himself,—to excuse himself by accusing. This struggle of feeling is finely conveyed in the word 'base,' which is applied to the rude Indian, not in his own character, but as the momentary representative of Othello's Indian,—for I retain the old reading,—means American, a savage in genere. KNIGHT: We might have thought that there was in *F*₁ only a substitution of n for n, had we not turned to all the passages in that edition where 'Indian' occurs, and found it invariably spelt I-n-d-i-a-n. . . . To show how far conjecture may be carried, we may mention that a correspondent wishes to impress upon us that the allusion was to Judas Iscariot. COLLIER: The meaning is very clear, the allusion obscure; and the probability is, that Shakespeare referred to some known fable of the time, now lost. DYCE (Remarks, p. 243): It was rather unnecessary in Boswell to refer to Cockeram, since, in the present play, Iago says, 'the souls of all my tribe defend From jealousy!'—III, iii. The latter part of Boswell's note [i. e., the citations from Habington and Howard] (the most valuable of Boswell's contributions to the illustration of Shakespeare) proves, I think, that Othello alludes to no particular story, but to 'the Indian' as generally described; and to the passages just cited the following may be added: 'The wretched Indian spurns the golden ore.'—Drayton, Legend of Matilda, sig. F, f 7.—Poems, n. d. WHITE (Shakespeare Scholar, p. 443): There appears to me not a doubt that *F*₁ is right, and that the allusion is to Herod and Mariamne. [White here gives a long extract from George Lunt, of which the following is an abstract]: The expression is one of generalization, demanding the ready understanding of the reader. Whether he understand the particular allusion or not, at least it should be of that character that he might, or ought to have known it; and not drawn from a source so remote as to be out of his reach. On this ground we are willing to set up any possible Judean against any Indian that can be imagined. In the first place, 'tribe' is a word peculiarly appropriate to the Jewish people. Next, 'base' would be held peculiarly descriptive of the Jewish people; in common understanding, it would fit any Jew and all Jews. There would have been a manifest impropriety in the epithet as denoting the characteristics of East Indians in general. Lastly, the word 'Judean,' in reality, means something more than Jew. A 'Judean' is, in fact, an inhabitant of Judea; and thus, in correspondence with Shakespeare's common mode of expression, the word might naturally, and with more force would, refer to Herod, King of Judea, as the Judean, par excellence,—as representing the State. [Thus far Lunt. White then resumes, and emphasizes the absolute necessity of a reference to a particular story. In Boswell's citations and in Dyce's, not only] is the Indian generally described, but the act. No specific deed is referred to; there is a mere allusion to a characteristic of the Indian. Not so in Othello's speech. In that, a particular person and a particular act must be alluded to, because Othello likens himself, not to the Indian who throws a pearl away, but to 'the base Judean' who 'threw a pearl away.' The reference is to some story, specific and unmistakable; can there be a shadow of a doubt that Herod's was the story referred to, and that we should not disturb the *F*₁? [Six years later, in his edition, WHITE says]: To my

[421. (Like the base Judean) threw a Pearle away].

[421. (Like the base Judean) threw a Pearle away].

Richer then all his Tribe : Of one, whose subdu'd Eyes, 422
 Albeit vn-vfed to the melting moode,
 Drops teares as fast as the Arabian Trees 424

422. subdu'd] subdued Qq. Om. Pope,
 Theob. Han. Warb.

424. Drops] Q₂, Ktly. Dropt Jen.
Drop Q₂Q₃Ff et cet.

maturer judgement and more careful consideration, the allusion appears to be to the ignorance of the Indians in regard to the value of their gold and jewels, which was a matter of more common remark two hundred and fifty years ago than it is at present. [In White's Second Edition there is no note whatsoever on the passage.] WALKER (Crit. iii, 292): Indian, certainly. STAUNTON: We follow the Qq, but must admit that a good case has been made out for the reading of the Folio. JOHN HUNTER: As there are several allusions in old poetry to the wretchedness or ignorance of the Indians in spurning the golden ore and casting away pearls and gems, we have no doubt that Indian was our author's word. COLLIER (ed. iii): We may add, what has never been referred to, that in G. Fenton's translation of Guevara, 1582, p. 277, 'Judea' is misprinted India,—'Titus having subdued the countrey of India, and taken the great city of Hierusalem,' &c. This would rather show that the true reading is Judean; but either way the sense is precisely the same. THOS. M'GRATH (N. & Qu. 4th, iii, 120) elaborates Steevens's allusion to the story of Jephthah and his Daughter, and maintains that no parallel could be much closer than that between the Judean and Othello: 'We have a story of a Jew, a member of the tribe of Ephraim or Manasseh, base in birth, who, with his own hand, threw away a treasure, the pearl of his tribe. A story also well known to Shakespeare, for we find it commented on in his other plays.' [That Othello killed his wife, and Jephthah his daughter, does not disconcert M'Grath, for he philosophically adds, 'we cannot expect every minute detail' to be exact in counter-part.] HUDSON: Whether Shakespeare meant an allusion to any particular story of an Indian, or to the Indians as generally described, is not quite clear; probably the latter. COWDEN-CLARKE: Even though we follow the Qq, we confess to entertaining considerable doubts whether the Folio may not, after all, give what Shakespeare wrote. PURNELL: Read Judean, and refer to Herod and Mariamne. [In N. & Qu. 6th, iii, 264, H. K. gives two citations to show the common repute of an Indian's indifference to the value of gems; one is from Carew, 'To A. D.,' and is given by Walker (Crit. iii, 292), and the other is from Pierce Pennilesse, p. 80. In the next volume, p. 245, of the same periodical, A. E. QUEKETT adds a passage, to the same effect, from Chapman's Revenge for Honour, IV, ii. Again, in The Academy, 14 April, 1883, H. A. EVANS calls attention to the words 'Indian' and 'pearle' in Bullen's Reprint of Glapthorne's The Lady Mother, p. 121. And I dare say many and many another allusion can yet be found,—but to me all are idle that are subsequent to the date of Othello, and are general in expression, without referring to any particular Indian, who, on some especial occasion, threw away a pearl. I have reserved HALLIWELL's opinion to the last, because, to me, it gives the true explanation. It is as follows: 'The epithet 'base' appears to support 'Judean,' which, if correct, I cannot but think, notwithstanding that the idea has been ridiculed, refers to Judas Iscariot.' Is there not, may I be permitted to add, suggestion even in the identity of the two first syllables, Judas and Judean? Once before in this Scene, Othello's agonized thoughts had turned for a fit comparison to that dread time when the affrighted globe yawned and darkness covered the face of the earth.—ED.]

Their Medicinable gumme. Set you downe this : 425
 And fay besides, that in Aleppo once,
 Where a malignant, and a Turbond-Turke
 Beate a Venetian, and traduc'd the State,
 I tooke by th'throat the circumcised Dogge,
 And smoate him, thus. 430

425. Medicinable] Ff, Knt, Del. Rlf. med'cinable Cap. Steev.'85, Mal. Dyce, Sta. Wh. i. medicinall Qq et cet. gumme] gums Johns.
 427. Where] When Coll. (MS). malignant] Malignant Q.
Turbond-Turke] Turband Turke

Q₂. Turband Turke Q₂Q₃. Turband Turk Rowe i. Turban'd Turk Pope.
 429. by th'] Ff, Rowe, Pope i, Han. Johns. Jen. Wh. i. bi' th Qq. by Cap. by the Theob. et cet.
 430. [He stabs himselfe. Qq.

425. Medicinable] ROLFE: Shakespeare has the word in four other passages (Much Ado, II, ii, 5; Tro. & Cress. I, iii, 91; Ib. III, iii, 44, and Cymb. III, ii, 33); in all it is equivalent to medicinal, and in all pronounced as here med'cinable. Medicinal, in the only instance in which Shakespeare uses it (Wint. Tale, II, iii, 37: 'Do come with words as medicinal as true'), is pronounced med'cinal, which would not suit the measure here.

425. gumme.] HUNTER (ii, 289) thinks from the description in The Great Herbal, that this is the gum called 'Bernix,' which was used in medicine. BUCKNILL (p. 274): Probably not gum arabic, but myrrh.

426. Aleppo] STEEVENS: I am told that it is immediate death for a Christian to strike a Turk in Aleppo. Othello is boasting of his own audacity.

427. Turbond] DELIUS: Shakespeare seems to have connected the idea of arrogance with turbans. See in Cymb. III, iii, 6: 'that giants may jet through And keep their impious turbans on.' FECHTER: Othello here seizes and forces Iago, still bound, to kneel before Desdemona, but promptly intercepted by Lodovico and Montano, he draws his poignard, and suiting the action to the word utters the last two lines 429, 430; stabs himself, and throws the dagger at the feet of Iago; then, tottering, walks to the bed; but, unable to reach Desdemona, falls in despair and dies.

430. HAWKINS, Life of Kean (i, 75): Kean's falling on his back in the last Scene of Othello was suggested by an incident in nature. He was giving a young officer some instruction in fencing, when he accidentally received an alarming wound in the breast, from the effect of which, becoming insensible, he fell to the ground on his back. When he recovered his senses he asked, 'How did I fall?' BOOTH: At the word 'thus' Othello stabs himself, cries 'O, Desdemona!' makes an effort to reach the bed, clutching (not much) for the curtains as he falls back dead.

430. DYCE (ed. iii): When Othello offers to stab Iago he is disarmed by Montano, but he has 'another weapon,—a sword of Spain.' Of that weapon, after wounding Iago, he is also deprived; this is shown not only by the exclamation of Lodovico, 'Wrench his sword from him,' but by the remark of Cassio, 'This I did fear, but thought he had no weapon.' The instrument he now uses must, therefore, have been a dagger, which was concealed about his person. [See GOULD, line 411.]

430. SALVINI upholds his disregard of the usage of Shakespeare's own stage, as shown by the directions in the Qq, and prefers cutting the throat to stabbing, on the following grounds: 'First, it is the use and wont of African tribes thus to execute Lod. Oh bloody period.

431

Gra. All that is spoke, is marr'd.

Oth. I kift thee, ere I kill'd thee : No way but this,
Killing my selfe, to dye vpon a kisse.

Dyes

Caf. This did I feare, but thought he had no weapon : [339 a]
For he was great of heart.

Lod. Oh Sparton Dogge :

437

432. that is] Ff, Rowe+, Steev.'85,

434. Dyes.] He dies. Qq.

Mal. Knt, Sta. that's Qq et cet.

437. Sparton] Spartane Qq. Spartan

434. kiffe] kiffo Q₃,

Ff.

criminals or armed prisoners of war; secondly, the shape of their weapons is more adapted to a blow than a thrust; thirdly, Shakespeare does not forbid my mode of death; Othello simply says: "I took by the throat the circumcised dog, and smote him thus;" allusion having been made to the throat, it seems to me more natural that the action should lie there where attention was directed and 'the dog' was seized. A fourth and last reason is, that the critics of this mode of death adduce only two trifling arguments against it; namely, that a man after his throat is cut cannot speak; as though a single artery were not enough, but that the carotid must be severed! The second argument is even more trifling, almost absurd, namely: tradition, to which, with all respect be it said, I will not subject myself.' [—Translation of a Lecture delivered in Florence by the eminent Tragedian, and contributed by him to Lewinsky's Vor den Coulissen, Berlin (ii, 219). A translation by Mr Botta from the original Italian appeared in The Century for November, 1881.—ED.]

430. To divert all suspicion, Kean simulated a pride in his punishment of the turbaned Turk, and as his eyes wandered with searching brilliance from face to face in order to see whether any suspicion as to his object lurked in their minds, he went through the concluding words with inimitable strength and beauty: 'And smote him,—thus!' and as he spoke the glistening steel entered his breast; a frozen shudder swept over his frame,—every physiological indication of his suffering was faithfully and distinctly marked; and in the attempt to imprint a last kiss on the cold, rigid face of his wife, he fell backwards,—dead.—HAWKINS, Life of Kean, i, 231. We only object to the virulence with which he stabs himself,—a virulence which Othello would feel neither against himself at the moment, nor against the 'turbaned Turk' (whom he had slain) at such a distance of time.—HAZLITT, quoted in ib., p. 234.

431, 432. BOOTH: Let Cassio speak these lines sorrowfully, while all show grief by pose and action as the slow curtain falls.

433. No way but this] Must not this phrase have floated through Macanlay's memory? See Lays of Ancient Rome, Virginia: 'Then clasp me round the neck once more, and give me one more kiss; And now, mine own dear little girl, there is no way but this.'—ED.

434. Dyes] The winds have blown, till they have waken'd death, and after this tempest, comes the calm.—II, i, 213.—ED.

437. Sparton] HANMER: The dogs of Sparta were reckoned among those of the most fierce and savage kind. SINGER: The reference seems to be to the determined silence of Iago, and to the proverbial silence of the Spartans under suffering, as well as to the savageness of the dogs.

More fell then Anguish, Hunger, or the Sea : 438
 Looke on the Tragicke Loading of this bed :
 This is thy worke : 440
 The Obiect poyfons Sight,
 Let it be hid. Gratiano, keepe the house, [339 b]
 And seize vpon the Fortunes of the Moore,
 For they succcede on you. To you, Lord Gouvernor,
 Remaines th eCensure of this hellish villaine : 445
 The Time, the Place, the Torture, oh inforce it :
 My selfe will straight aboard, and to the State,
 This heauie Act, with heauie heart relate. Exeunt.

FINIS.

439. Tragicke] targicke Q₃.
Loading] lodging Qq.

440, 441. One line, Qq, Rowe et seq.

443. seize] cease Qq.

444. on you] to you Qq, Rowe +, Jen.
 Mal. Steev. Var. Sing. Ktly.

445. Censure] senfure Q'81.

446. Torture, oh] torture : O Qq.

448. Exeunt.] Exeunt omnes. Qq.

443. seize vpon] WALKER (Crit. iii, 293): That is, take possession of; the law term, as in Rich. II. II, i, 160: 'we do seize to us The plate, &c. Whereof our uncle Gaunt did die possess'd.' So also Ib. IV, i, 181: 'Here, cousin, seize the crown,' and Much Ado, V, iv, 53: 'Which is the lady I must seize upon.'

444. COLLIER (ed. ii): Gratiano was uncle to Desdemona, and it is hardly to be supposed that Othello left any known heirs behind him. Gratiano, therefore, took possession of the 'fortunes of the Moor' in right of his niece.

448. COLERIDGE (Notes, &c., p. 256): Let me repeat that Othello does not kill Desdemona in jealousy, but in a conviction forced upon him by the almost superhuman art of Iago, such a conviction as any man would and must have entertained who had believed Iago's honesty as Othello did. We, the audience, know that Iago is a villain from the beginning; but in considering the essence of the Shakespearian Othello we must perseveringly place ourselves in his situation and under his circumstances. Then we shall immediately feel the fundamental difference between the solemn agony of the noble Moor, and the wretched fishing jealousies of Leontes, and the morbid suspiciousness of Leonatus, who is, in other respects, a fine character. Othello had no life but in Desdemona; the belief that she, his angel, had fallen from the heaven of her native innocence, wrought a civil war in his heart. She is his counterpart; and, like him, is almost sanctified in our eyes by her absolute unsuspectingness, and holy entireness of love. As the curtain drops, which do we pity the most?

The Names of the Actors.

(: * * :)

Thello, the Moore.Brabantio, Father to Desdemona.Cassio, an Honourable Lieutenant.Iago, a Villaine.

5

1-16. Om. Qq.

1. The Names...] The Actors Names. Ff. (At the beginning of the Play in F₄) Dramatis Personæ. Q'81 et seq.2. Othello...] Othello... General of the Army in Cyprus. Q'81. Othello... General for the Venetians in Cyprus. Rowe.3. Brabantio...] Brabantio, a Magnifico,... Q'81. Brabantio, a noble Venetian. Rowe.4. Cassio...] Cassio, his Lieutenant General. Q'81.5. Iago...] Iago, standard-bearer to the Moor; a Villain. Q'81. his Ancient. Cap.

2. Othello] STEEVENS: It is highly probable that Shakespeare met with this name in some tale that has escaped our researches: as I likewise find it in Reynolds's God's Revenge against Adultery, standing in one of his Arguments as follows: 'She marries Othello, an old German soldier.' This History (the eighth) is professed to be an Italian one. Here also occurs the name of Iago. It is likewise found, as Dr Farmer observes, in The first and second part of the History of the famous Euordanus, Prince of Denmark. With the strange Adventures of Iago, Prince of Saxonie: And of both theyr severall fortunes in Love. At London, printed by I. R. for R. B. 1605. It may, indeed, be urged that these names were adopted from this tragedy, but I trust that every reader who is conversant with the peculiar style and method in which the work of honest John Reynolds is composed, will acquit him of the slightest familiarity with the scenes of Shakespeare. B. H. C. (N. & Qu., 2d, x, 269): In 1606, M. A. Othelio, a learned jurisconsult, wrote a reply to the Bull of Excommunication which Pope Paul V. issued against the Doge, Senate, and Republic of Venice. RUSKIN (Munera Pulveris, p. 126): This means, I believe, 'the careful'; all the calamity of the tragedy arising from the single flaw and error in his magnificently-collected strength. MRS F. A. KEMBLE (Records of Later Life, 1884, p. 88): I have two drawings which Mrs Somerville made for me; one, a delicate outline sketch of what is called Othello's House in Venice, and the other, a beautifully-executed coloured copy of his shield, surmounted by the Doge's cap, and having three mulberries for a device,—proving the truth of the assertion that the Otelli del Moro were a noble Venetian folk, who came originally from the Morea, whose device was the mulberry, and showing how curious a jumble Shakespeare has made, both of name and device, in calling him a Moor, and embroidering his arms on his handkerchief as strawberries. In Cinthio's novel the husband is a Moor, and, I think, called by no other name.

5. Iago] RUSKIN (Munera Pulveris, p. 127): 'Iago' and 'Iachimo' have, evidently, the same root,—probably the Spanish Iago, Jacob, 'the supplanter.' W. C. HAZLITT (Shakespeare's Library, Pt. I, vol. ii, 284): So far as I can judge, there is a certain inconsistency in the form which this name (a form of James) is allowed to take in the modern editions. When the I or i of the old printed copies is otherwise altered

Rodorigo, a gull'd Gentleman.	6
Duke of Venice.
Senators.
Montano, Gouvernour of Cyprus.
Gentlemen of Cyprus.	10
Lodouico, and Gratiano, two Noble Venetians.
Saylors.
Clowne.
Defdemona, Wife to Othello.
Æmilia, Wife to Iago.	15
Bianca, a Curtesan.

6. Rodorigo...] Roderigo, a foolish Gentleman, that follows the Moor in hopes to Cuckold him. Q'81. Rodorigo, a foolish Gentleman in love with Desdemona. Rowe.

8. Senators.] Om. Rowe.

9. Montano...] Montano, the Moors Predecessor in the Government of Cyprus. Q'81. (Montano...Predecessor...Q'95).

11. Lodouico] Lodouico their kinsman. Q'81. [i. e. to Brabantio and Gratiano]. Gratiano] Gratiano, his Brother. Q'81. [i. e. to Brabantio].

13. Clowne.] Clown, Servant to the Moor. Q'81.

15. Æmilia...Iago.] Emilia...Jago. Q'81. Æmilia...Jago. Rowe.

16. Bianca...] Bianca, Cassio's Wench. Q'81.

Officers, Gentlemen, Messengers, Musicians, Herald, Attendants. Q'81.

Scene Cyprus. Q'81. Scene for the First Act in Venice; during the rest of the Play in Cyprus. Rowe.

Throughout the play the names are spelled Roderigo and Emilia in the Qq. And Jago in Q'81, Q'95. Rowe, Pope.

to J or j, Iago alone remains unchanged,—perhaps to meet rhythmical exigencies. It is, in fact, the same name as Jago, which is still a common appellation in Cornwall.

9. Montano] STEEVENS: Though Montano's rank in Cyprus cannot be exactly ascertained, yet, from many circumstances, we are sure he had not the powers with which Othello was subsequently invested.

14. Desdemona] SHAFESBURY was the earliest to call attention to a meaning in this name (see I, iii, 168), but he translated it 'superstitious.' UPTON (p. 288) corrected it, saying that 'the name is not derived from Δευσιδαιμων, but Δυσδαιμων, that is, the "unfortunate"; and Cinthio, making the word feminine, calls her Disdemona.' [See HALES, V, ii, 85.]

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

THE TEXT

IN the Registers of the Stationers' Company (Arber's Transcript, vol. iv, p. 59) occurs the following Entry:

8^o Octobris 1621

Thomas Walkley Entred for his copie vnder the handes of Sir GEORGE BUCK, and Master Swinhowe warden, The Tragedie of OTHELLO the Moore of Venice vj^d

During the next year this 'copie' was published with the following title page:

THE | Tragedy of Othello, | The Moore of Venice. | As it hath bene diuerse times acted at the | Globe, and at the Black-Friers, by | his Maiesties Seruants. | Written by VVilliam Shakespeare. | [Vignette] | LONDON, | Printed by N. O. for Thomas Walkley, and are to be sold at his | shop, at the Eagle and Child, in Brittons Burse. | 1622.

N. O. stands, probably, for Nicholas Oakes, and as the Vignette is the same as that on the title page of the Pide Bull edition of King Lear, it may be that he was the printer of the latter also (see Lear, p. 357).

To this edition, which, following the Cambridge Editors, I have called the FIRST QUARTO, or Q₁, is prefixed the following:

The Stationer to the Reader.

To set forth a booke without an Epistle, were like to the old English prouerbe, A blew coat without a badge, & the Author being dead, I thought good to take that piece of worke vpon mee: To commend it, I will not, for that which is good, I hope every man will commend, without intreaty: and I am the bolder, because the Authors name is sufficient to vent his worke. Thus leaving every one to the liberty of iudgement: I haue ventured to print this Play, and leaue it to the generall censure.

Yours,

Thomas VValkley.

On p. 20 it has Actus 2 Scena 1, a division which corresponds to all other editions; and so also does Actus 4, on p. 61, and Actus 5, on p. 77. There is no reference to Actus 3. Up to p. 74 the pagination is correct; from there to the last page it is quite irregular. The last page is 99, in reality it is 91.

In the next year we find the following Entry in the Register of the Stationers' Company (Arber's Transcript, iv, 107):

8^o Johannis 1628

Master Blounte Entred for their Copie vnder the hands of Master Doctor WORRALL
Isaak Jaggard and Master Cole warden Master WILLIAM SHAKSPEERS Comedyes Histories, and Tragedyes soe manie of the said Copies as are not formerly entered to other men. . . . vis^t vij^s

The Tempest

The two gentlemen of Verona

Measure for Measure

COMEDYES The Comedy of Errors

As you like it

All's well that ends well

Twelfth night

The winters tale

HISTORIES The thirde parte of HENRY ye SIXT
HENRY the EIGHT

CORIOLANUS

TIMON of Athens

TRAGEDIES JULIUS CÆSAR

MACKBETH

ANTHONIE and CLEOPATRA

CYMBELINE

It will be noted that in accordance with the terms of the Entry, no play is included in this list of which an authentic Quarto had been already printed; yet when the volume was published, it contained these Quarto plays. From which it is to be presumed that the interests in these Quartos had become vested in various ways, by purchase, inheritance, or marriage, in the proprietors of the Folio: Jaggard, Blount, Smithwicke, and Apsley. But there is a mystery about Othello. It certainly appeared in Quarto, and it certainly appeared in the Folio, and yet Thomas Walkley had not resigned all his interest in it in 1623. For in the Stationers' Registers (Arber, iv, 194) we find the following:

1^{mo} Martii 1627 [i. e., 1628]

Master Richard Assigned ouer vnto him by Thomas Walkley, and Consent of a Hawkins Court holden this Day all the estate right title and Interest which he hath in these Copies following xvij^d vis^t

A kinge and no kinge.

PHILASTER or love lies ableeding.

ORTHELLO the more of Venice.

It is not easy to reconcile this proof of property still vested in Walkley with the appearance of Othello in the First Folio. Collier suggests that, 'most likely, the publishers of the Folio purchased Walkley's interest at a date posterior to the entry of their undertaking at Stationers' Hall, and thus became entitled to include it in their noble volume,' which does not help us. Although the Folio was issued in 1623, the printing must have been in hand long before that. Indeed, there are not wanting copies which are supposed to bear the genuine date 1622, the very year in which Walkley issued his Quarto, so that the two books must have been in the hands of the printers at the same time. Can we here infer some private understanding between the publishers? Was it to emphasize his possession of the Quarto, while acquiescing in its appearance in the Folio, that Walkley put forth his unusual address 'to the Reader'? But speculations are idle; even if they led to assurance, what should we gain? Merely a better knowledge of the private affairs of Thomas Walkley. 'When all's done, you look but on a stool.' Of more importance is it that two years later, in 1630, Richard Hawkins put his assignment to use by issuing a Quarto Othello with exactly the same title-page, except that there is a different Vignette, and that it is stated to be: 'Printed by A. M. for Richard Hawkins, and are to be sold at | his shoppe in Chancery-Lane, neere Sergeants-Inne. | 1630.'

This is the Second Quarto, or Q₂.

We next meet 'Orthello' in the Stationers' Register (Arber, iv, p. 420), when on the 28th 1638, vrsula Hawkins widdow (late wife of Richard Hawkins deceased) assigned to 'Master Mead and Master Meredith' certain 'Copies' 'which did belong vnto her said husband;' in the list of twenty-five titles, which follows, appears 'ORTHELLO the More of Venice a play.' Master Mead and Master Meredith did not long retain possession of Orthello; on the 25th of January of the following year, 1639, they assigned over to Master William Leake 'these Copies,' 'following which were Entred vnto them from Mistris Hawkins.' Again in this list also we have 'Orthello the More of Venice a Play.' For sixteen long years did Master Leake permit the dust to settle on Orthello before he published what he called, on the Title-page, 'The fourth Edition.' The rest of the title-page is exactly the same, barring a Crown for a Vignette, as in the preceding Quartos, except that it is: 'Printed for William Leake at the Crown in Fleet- | Street, between the two Temple Gates, 1655.'

This is the Third Quarto, or Q₃.

A Player's Quarto appeared in 1681, as 'now [acted] at the Theater Royal, by His Majesties Servants.' It is 'Printed for W. Weak, and are to be sold by Richard Bent | ley and M. Magnes in Ruffel Street near Covent- | Garden, 1681.' Halliwell suggests that 'Weak' is a misprint for Leake. If it be the same W. Leake that published the Third Qto, who was presumably the same W. Leake that was 'called as an Assistant' to the Stationers' Company, seventy-seven years before, in 1604, it may be a misprint, it cannot possibly, after such a protracted existence, be a misnomer. Reprints of this Quarto followed in 1687 and 1695.

Meanwhile the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Folios had appeared in 1623, 1632, 1663, and 1685.

Here bibliographic interest in all of them ceases. Their value to us as texts is all that is of importance now. Although this value is somewhat difficult of adjustment, there is greater harmony among Editors with regard to it in this play than usually falls to the lot of a play which has attendant satellites in the shape of Quartos.

We have Four Folios and Three Quartos. How many independent texts are there and what are their respective values?

The Four Folios are practically one. For any changes introduced after the First was issued, there is no more authority to be yielded than is due to the intelligence, more or less keen, of a compositor. For the text of the First Folio there must have been used either the original MS of Shakespeare (Heminge and Condell asserted that they had so used it, but then we know that in the case of certain other plays this was 'a grace snatched beyond the bounds of truth') or else a stage copy, which, perhaps contained no single word written by Shakespeare's own hand.

Considering the twenty years since Shakespeare's ink was dry on the original, and considering the burning, between whiles, of 'The Globe' and its contents (it was a conflagration of the world to us), this latter supposition, that the Folio was printed from a stage copy, seems the more probable. In either case Shakespeare's personal friends vouched for its accuracy, and no similar authority vouches for any other. This, then, the text of the Folio of 1623, becomes the text of the play; and in any claim for preference put forth by other texts the burden of proof lies on the claimants, the presumption of authenticity is all in favour of *F*₁. As we have seen at II, ii, 231, Dyce, whose opinion on such matters is of very great weight, asserts that this play in *F*₁ was 'beyond all doubt printed from a transcript belonging to the theatre.'

On the other side stand the three Quartos.

The FIRST, as we have seen, was issued by a Stationer named Walkley. What manuscript he used, or how he obtained it, we cannot know. He says in his address 'to the reader,' that the author is dead; it is, therefore, not likely that he received the MS from Shakespeare during Shakespeare's lifetime and kept it lying idle for five or six years. Nor is it likely that Walkley's text was taken down surreptitiously by short-hand from a performance on the stage: the stage directions are not sufficient in number, nor descriptive enough in character, to indicate an eye-witness; and although four of the Acts are noted, there are no divisions into Scenes. Yet there can be no doubt that Walkley's text is an original text, and that it is not the same as that of the Folio. In a comparison of the two, mere omissions go for nothing. Counting every line of the Folio, not as verses but as lines, as is done in the preceding pages of this volume, and counting the lines in the Quarto in the same way, there are, roughly speaking, more than three hundred and fifty lines in the Folio that are omitted in the Quarto. Knight, who with closer accuracy, computed the verses, reckons the number at 'a hundred and sixty-three.' But additions are important; they are presumably from the hand of the author; and in the way of additions there are ten or fifteen lines in the Quarto, Knight says less than ten, which are not to be found in the Folio. This alone goes far to stamp the Qto as an independent text. But the most noticeable difference, one that strikes every reader at once, from the beginning to the end, in the first speech of Iago and among the last speeches of Emilia, and in Cassio's drunken scene, lies in the use of oaths and adjurations. 'Zounds,' 'God,' 'Sblood,' etc., scattered through the First Quarto, are either omitted altogether or are toned down, in the Folio. Hence there can be no reasonable doubt that in the First Quarto we have a genuine text, and since it cannot be supposed to have come from Shakespeare, and was not taken down by short-hand, we are forced to conclude that it too was a play-house copy, and, I think, an old one, possibly 'stolne.' It is not worth while here to enter upon a minute comparison of the two texts. The very purpose of the Textual Notes in the foregoing pages is to enable the student to do that for himself. It is not hard to grow interested in minute collation, but then one must do it for himself, at first hand. Simply to repeat another's work is most tolerable and not to be endured. It is no better than proof-reading, proof-reading, too, uncheered by the hope of blunders.

The older Editors, from JOHNSON to the time of KNIGHT, were influenced in favour of this Qto, which they considered older and more authentic. Knight followed the Folio, upholding its text always through thick, and sometimes through thin. COLLIER leaned to the Second Qto, but since his time the balance of favour has been on the side of the Folio, which is, to me, far and away the better.

Perhaps it is well to mention that Pope, in his 'Table of the Several Editions' which he had used, closed his list with the title of an Othello, undated, but 'Published by Tho. Walkely, Quarto, (soon after his Death, as appears by the Preface.)' Overlooking Pope's somewhat startling announcement of 'Walkely's' posthumous performance, Malone conjectured that this Quarto was simply *Q*₂, whose date had been 'cut off, which frequently happens in old plays.' Capell, both in his 'Table of Plays' and in his Appendix, refers to this undated *Q*₂, but it is on the authority of Pope. The Cambridge Editors think that the reference to the publisher's preface is conclusive that Pope's *Q*₂ was the *Q*₂ of 1622. No undated *Q*₂ having been discovered from Pope's day to the present, we may safely acquiesce in Malone's opinion.

The SECOND QUARTO appeared in 1630. Have we here an independent text, or merely a reprint? MALONE dismissed it as 'an edition of no authority,' but COLLIER espoused its cause with zeal, on the ground that it 'was unquestionably printed from a manuscript different from that used for the *Q*₂ of 1622 or for the Folio of 1623; and presents a number of various readings, some of which singularly illustrate the original text of Othello.' Collier cites III, iii, 518, where *Q*₂ gives the word feels adopted by the majority of Editors, instead of 'keepes,' of the Ff. GRANT WHITE, however, does not estimate this *Q*₂ as highly as Collier does (DYCE and STAUNTON do not even mention it in their Prefaces); he says, in reference to it, in his Introduction: 'After a careful consideration of its readings, I have come to the conclusion that it is 'only a reprint of the *Q*₂ of 1622, corrected by the text of the Folio, having some 'typographical errors peculiar to itself, and a very few unimportant corrections and 'sophistications, such as crept into almost every dramatic reprint of the period. I 'therefore regard it as of no authority, and make no mention of its readings.' The CAMBRIDGE EDITORS agree in the main with Grant White. 'After a minute comparison,' they say, 'of the two [Quartos] it appears to us clear that the Quarto of 1630 'must have been printed from a copy of the Quarto of 1622, which had received additions and corrections in manuscript. The resemblances between the two are too close 'to allow of any other supposition. These additions and corrections, though agreeing 'for the most part with the First Folio, which had appeared in the interval, were derived 'from an independent source.'

It by no means follows that 'this independent source' was Shakespeare or his MS.; a compositor or an actor would be competent to have suggested the changes. With this understanding, I quite agree with this conclusion, to which, I think, any one would the more readily come if the two copies and the Folio were placed open side by side. Where *F*₁ supplies the omissions of *Q*₂, *Q*₂ follows *F*₁, and even where it differs from *F*₁, there seems to be more an attempt to correct than to rewrite. For instance, II, i, 45, 'Euen till we make the Maine, and th' Eriall blew,' is not in *Q*₂; in *Q*₂ the line is found, but it is evidently an attempt to convert nonsense into sense, and not an original reading: 'Euen till we make the Maine and th' Ayre all blue.' Again, oaths and adjurations are sometimes omitted and sometimes retained, even on the same page, as though the excision had been attempted but done carelessly. Once more, let the Textual Notes suffice for any further investigation, if the subject be worth it.

The THIRD QUARTO is a reprint of *Q*₂; if it were a good reprint, it would be to that extent respectable; as it is, it is worthless. I have recorded its separate readings only here and there as mere curiosities. I can say nothing worse of it than that, having been issued in the same year with the Third Quarto of King Lear, I think Jane Bell must have printed them both, and tried her 'prentice hand on Othello.

THE DATE OF COMPOSITION.

THE earliest attempt to fix the Date of the Composition of this Play was made by WARBURTON, who asserted that there was an allusion to the creation of baronets by James the First, in the words of Othello to Desdemona in III, iv, 55: 'The hearts of old, gaue hands: But our new Heraldry is hands, not hearts.' 'The expression of "new heraldry,"' says Warburton, 'was a satirical allusion to the times. Soon after King James the First came to the crown, he created the new dignity of baronets for money. Amongst their other prerogatives of honour, they had an addition to their paternal arms, of a HAND gules in an Escutcheon argent. And we are not to doubt but that this was the new heraldry alluded to by our author: by which he insinuates that some then created had hands indeed, but not hearts; that is, money to pay for the creation, but no virtue to purchase the honour. But the finest part of the poet's address in this allusion is the compliment he pays to his old mistress, Elizabeth. For James's pretence for raising money by this creation, was the reduction of Ulster, and other parts of Ireland; the memory of which he would perpetuate by that addition to their arms, it being the arms of Ulster. Now the method used by Elizabeth in the reduction of that Kingdom was so different from this, the dignities she conferred being on those who employed their steel, and not their gold, in this service, that nothing could add more to her glory, than the being compared to her successor in this point of view: nor was it uncommon for the dramatic poets of that time to satirize the ignominy of James's reign. So, Fletcher, in The Fair Maid of the Inn. One says, 'I will send thee to Amboyna in the East Indies for pepper.' The other replies, 'To Amboyna? so I might be pepper'd.' Again, in the same play, a Sailor says, 'Despise not this pitch'd canvas, the time was, we have known them lined with Spanish ducats.'

This 'satirical allusion' of Warburton would fix the date at 1611, the year in which James instituted the order of Baronets, and in this date there arose general acquiescence. MALONE, in his first edition, 1790, accepted it, but under protest. After quoting Warburton's note, 'our Hibernian coadjutor,' as Steevens calls him, proceeded thus to criticise it:

'By what chemistry can the sense which Warburton has affixed to this passage be extracted from it? Or is it probable that Shakespeare, who has more than once condescended to be the encomiast of the unworthy founder of the order of Baronets, who had been personally honoured by a letter from his majesty, and substantially benefited by the royal license granted to him and his fellow-comedians, should have been so impolitic, as to satirize the king, or to depreciate his new-created dignity? . . . On every marriage the arms of the wife are united to those of the husband. This circumstance it was, that suggested heraldry in this place. . . . It was the office of the herald to join, or, to speak technically, to quarter the arms of the new-married pair. Hence with his usual license, Shakespeare uses 'heraldry' for junction, or union in generall. Thus in R. of L. 64, the same term is employed to denote that union of colours which constitutes a beautiful complexion. This passage not affording us any assistance, we are next to consider one in The Alchemist, by Ben Jonson, which, if it alluded to an incident in Othello, as Steevens seems to think it does, would ascertain this play to have appeared before 1610, in which year The Alchemist was first acted: 'Lovewit. Dids't thou hear a cry, says't thou? Neighbour. Yes, sir, like unto a man that had been strangled an hour, and could not speak.' But I doubt whether Othello was here in Jonson's contemplation. Old Ben generally spoke out; and if he had intended to sneer at the manner of Desdemona's death, I think he 'would have taken care that his meaning should not be missed, and would have written—'like unto a woman,' &c.' Although Othello was not printed until 1622, Malone said 'it was acted at court early in the year 1613'; and, as an authority for this statement, cited 'MS. Vertue,' for an account whereof see Chalmers, post. Malone continues: 'I have persuaded myself that Othello was one of Shakespeare's latest performances; a supposition to which the acknowledged excellence of the piece gives some degree of probability. It is here [i. e., in Malone's edition of 1790] attributed to the year 1611, because Warburton's comment on the passage may convince others, though, I confess it does not satisfy me. Emilia and Lodovico, two of the characters in this play, are likewise two of the persons in May-day, by Chapman, first printed in 1611.'

The value of Warburton's citation from Fletcher's Fair Maid of the Inn, Malone destroyed in his note on III, iv, 55, where he says 'that play indeed never was performed before King James, being the last play but one that Fletcher wrote, and not produced till the 22nd of Jan. 1625-6, after the death both of its author and King James; but when it was written, he must, from the circumstances already mentioned, have had the court before his eyes.'

Malone died in 1812, and when the Variorum of 1821 appeared, it was found that he had abandoned the date of 1611 and adopted 1604, but before this change became known, two other dates had been proposed.

First: CHALMERS (Supplemental Apology, 1799, p. 457) urged a date later even than Warburton, 'who,' said Chalmers, 'is partly right, and partly wrong. By what chemistry could this critic extract such a sense from this passage? asks Mr Malone. The answer must be, the same sort of chemistry, which so frequently enabled the observant dramatist to captivate his audience, by his striking allusions to the passing scene; to satyrise without lampoon; and to throw out sarcasms without scoffing. In IV, i, Iago, working on the jealousy of Othello, artfully remarks: 'If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her [a] patent to offend.' The audience, who knew from their feelings, how much vexation had arisen from the patents of monopoly, which Queen Elizabeth and King James had so frequently granted, and so often retracted, must have been electrified by this fine stroke of well-timed satire. . . . Warburton was right in supposing that the stroke at the new heraldry was, incidentally, aimed at the creation of baronets, which was attended with uncommon circumstances. The epoch of this order was undoubtedly May, 1611. But, unluckily, for the speculation of Warburton, the additional armorial bearing, of the bloody hand, was not given by the patent of creation. The order had scarcely been created when a dispute arose, during those punctilious times, about precedence, between the baronets and the younger sons of viscounts, and barons. On this difficult point King James sat personally, during three several days, to hear the learned counsel; to take the information of Heralds; and to consider the proofs: And, in the end, he decided against the baronets, declaring he had not had any purpose to wrong third parties tacitly, whatever he might intend to confer, by his creation, on others: But the King, wishing to amplify his favour towards the baronets, granted them by a second patent, dated 28 May, 1612, among other pre-eminences, 'the arms of Ulster, that is, in a field argent, a hand gules, or a bloudie hand.' Spenser will inform us, in his State of Ireland, 'that the bloody hand is O'Neel's badge.' Such, then, was the new heraldry, which Shakespeare played with, in order to please his audience! Yet we see clearly, from the second patent, in 1612, that the epoch, which was assigned to Othello in 1611, cannot be supported. And we must, therefore, look for the true date in some subsequent year. The fact is, that the 'baronets had to encounter a severer shock. A great noise was made in the House of Commons on the 23 May, 1614, about the creation of Baronets. This clamour against the King's right to create such an order was silenced in committee. . . . There was, a few days before, a still louder outcry raised, in the House of Commons, with much greater cause, against patents of monopoly. Owing to those remarkable coincidences, and powerful reasons, I am of opinion, that Othello was written in 1614; and, being written at this epoch, was the last, as it was one of the greatest, of his labours.'

Malone had stated, as we have seen, that Othello 'was acted at Court early in the year 1613,' and gave as his authority 'Vertue's MS.' This date, if authentic, would overthrow Chalmers's chronology; wherefore Chalmers set to work 'making some inquiries by a friend what manuscript of Vertue's it were, which I saw so often quoted about scenic matters, and Mr Steevens was so obliging as to say: 'The books, from which those extracts were made, with several others lost, belonged to Secretary Pepys, and afterwards to Dr Rawlinson, who lent them to Mr Vertue. There is a MS note subjoined to the MSS of Vertue, which, about thirty years ago, were lent to Mr Steevens by Mr Garrick.' Much is it to be lamented that any MS or book which furnished an illustration of Shakespeare, and having once been seen, should ever disappear. I would bow to any register of the time; but I will not allow Vertue, though a very diligent collector, to draw deductions for me which are to militate against the strongest probabilities.'

Second: though Chalmers discarded Vertue's MS, DRAKE (Shakespeare and his Times, ii, 528) accepted it; and taking its date, viz: the '1st of January, 1613,' as a final limit in one direction, and the date of the 'Second Patent' to the Baronets, viz: the '28th of May, 1612, as a starting-point on the other, Drake felt 'no hesitation in expressing 'the belief that Othello was written in the interval between the two.'

We now come to MALONE's final decision in the Variorum of 1821; a decision, which, although formed on evidence now lost, has been generally concurred in down to the present day. To his note in 1790 (quoted above), Malone now adds: 'A passage in the Essays of Sir Wm Cornwallis, the younger, 1601, may have suggested to Shakespeare the mention of the new heraldry upon which Warburton has put, what I think, a most erroneous interpretation: 'We of these later times full of a nice curiositie mislike all the performances of our forefathers; we say they were honest plaine men, but they want the capering wits of this ripe age. . . . They had wont to give their hands and their hearts together, but we think it a finer grace to looke asquint, our hand looking one way and our heart another.' If the simile of the 'Pontick Sea,' in III, iii, is an allusion to Pliny, translated by Philemon Holland in 1601, this will assist us further in ascertaining the date of this play. We know it was acted in 1604, and I have, therefore, placed it in that year.'

On this last very noteworthy sentence, BOSWELL has the following: 'Mr Malone never expresses himself at random. I therefore lament deeply that I have not been able to discover upon what evidence he knew this important and decisive fact.'

Here, for the moment, we must leave the discussion of this final date of Malone, and proceed chronologically.

In 1836, COLLIER (New Particulars, p. 58) announced his discovery of the proof that Othello was written not in 1604, according to Malone's chronology, but as early as 1602. This fact was obtained from the Accounts preserved at Bridgewater House in the handwriting of Sir Arthur Mainwaring, of the expenses incurred by Sir Thomas Egerton, afterwards Lord Ellesmere, in entertaining Queen Elizabeth and her Court for three days at Harefield. 'It is headed, '31^o July et 1^o et 2^o Augusti, 1602, the “Queenes Ma^{tie} beeing at Harefield iij nights,” and among the particulars is the following: “6 Aug. 1602. Rewardes to the Vaulters Players and Dauncers. Of this £10 “to Burbidge’s players for Othello . . . 64 18 10.” “It is indisputable,” says Collier, “from this evidence, that Othello was acted at Harefield in 1602.”

KNIGHT accepted this date in his edition which followed shortly after Collier’s announcement.

A few years after this, PETER CUNNINGHAM, a man of literary and antiquarian tastes, was appointed to a situation in the Audit Office, Somerset House, and forthwith started on a search for ‘old papers,’ rummaging ‘in dry repositories, damp cellars, and still damper vaults, for books of accounts, for warrants, and for receipts.’ He found many documents of value, but still nothing of commanding interest, until at last his perseverance was rewarded. ‘My last discovery,’ he says, ‘was my most interesting; and ‘alighting as I now did upon two official books of the Revels,—one of Tylney’s and ‘one of Buc’s,—which had escaped both Musgrave and Malone, I at last found something about Shakespeare,—something that was new, and something that was definitive. ‘This was my little Guanahana’ [sic]. And this was all. Cunningham was destined to find no more. Still it was a great ‘find’; any ‘find’ connected with Shakespeare is great. Malone’s Transcripts from ten of the Books of the Revels are printed in vol. iii of the Variorum of 1821, pp. 364–409, and at the close of the last, ending in 1587–88, Malone adds: ‘There is no subsequent Revels Account in the reign of Queen Elizabeth now extant,’ wherein he was probably correct. Cunningham’s discovery, which he calls ‘Book XII,’ opens with November, 1605.

These ‘Revels Books’ are the Accounts of the expenses incurred for the entertainment of Royalty by the Master of the Revels, a title which sufficiently defines itself. From 1579 to 1610 this office was filled by one man, Edmund Tylney, who deserves a fame which has not been vouchsafed to him. His term extended over nearly the whole of Shakespeare’s dramatic life; through his hands and under his eyes must have passed the original manuscripts (‘O happy reader, by no critic vex’t!’) of upwards of thirty of those immortal plays. Since Edmund Tylney adorns no tale, let him at least point a moral. The first, fresh inhalation of Shakespeare’s poetry in Shakespeare’s own handwriting ought to have proved a liberal education, but, alack the day! in Tylney’s case it did not; witness the following uncouth description of his office; its lack of polish can be accounted for, I fear, only by the fact that he read the text without the help of the commentators: ‘The Office of y^e Revells consisteth of ‘a Wardropp, and other several Roomes, for Artificers to worke in, viz. Taylors, Im- ‘brotherers, Propertimakers, Paynters, Wyerdrawers, and Carpenters, together with a ‘convenient place for y^e Rehearsalls and settinge forth of Playes and other Showes ‘for those Services.’ It is the infinite variety of expenses, big and little, necessarily connected with these duties that composes these Revels Books, whereof the whole Series was printed by The Shakespeare Society in 1842 under Cunningham’s editorial supervision. For the most part it is weary, dreary reading, wherein it is inconceivable that human intelligence can find present interest, an endless repetition of the most insignificant items, which would require Dickens’s immortal ‘pair of million-magnifying gas microscopes, of hextra power’ to enlarge into even a languid interest. We find page after page embalming the facts that the Master of the Revels spent so many pence for ‘A peece of small corde,’ ‘A pound of glewe,’ ‘A peece of greate corde,’ ‘For pynnes,’ ‘For allom,’ ‘For broomes,’ &c., &c., &c. But on pp. 203, 204, we are startled broad awake by the sight of the ‘greatest name in all literature;’ it is true that in ‘Shaxberd’ its favour, like Roderigo’s, is defeated, literally, with an vsurp’d beard,—but it is there!

We read :

The Plaers	1605	The Poets wca mayd the plaies
By the Kings	Hallamas Day being the first of Nouembar
Maties plaiers	A play in the Banketinge house att Whithall called The Moor of Venis.	Shaxberd

(In the original, 'Shaxberd' is not placed here, but opposite the play of Mesur for Mesur.) Then follows a list of twelve or thirteen plays, such as 'the Merry Wiues of Winsor,' 'Mesur for Mesur,' 'The Plaie of Errors,' 'How to lerne of a woman to wooue,' &c., with the names of 'Shaxberd,' 'Hewood,' &c., in the margin, a practice observed nowhere else in the volume. Although this is headed 1605, internal evidence in the rest of the entries shows that the true date is 1604.

This date of the performance of Othello in 1604, of course, corroborated Collier's of 1602, and it is safe to say that it influenced every editor down to, and including, Dyce in 1866. The original MS volume, from which Cunningham printed, disappeared.

VERPLANCK, who wrote shortly after Cunningham's publication, unwillingly, on æsthetic grounds, relinquished the later dates of Malone and Chalmers. The emotions and passions depicted in Othello are not, so he thought, such as could be reasoned out from a young Poet's mind, or portrayed by any effort of an inexperienced imagination. 'Richard and Romeo, and The Tempest (whatever may have been their actual dates) 'might have been the creations of youthful genius, but Othello required actual experience, or close observation, of the workings of bitter passions, in however humble a 'form, yet in actual life.' So impressed was Verplanck with this belief that, in order to reconcile the Othello of 1602 with the Othello of 1622, he suggested that the former 'may have been, like the original Hamlet, barely an outline, sufficient for dramatic 'effect, containing all the incidents and characters, but wanting some of the heightened 'poetry and intense passion of the drama we now read.'

The controversy that arose in 1859 over the genuineness of the MS Corrections in Collier's Second Folio, extended to the other Shakespearian documents put forth by Collier in his New Facts and New Particulars, and among them to the papers in Bridge-water House, with the item of £64 paid to 'Burbidge's players for Othello' in 1602, the only one which concerns us here. I do not find that this paper is anywhere, early in the controversy, specifically mentioned as spurious. Halliwell, to whose opinion as to the genuineness of the five Bridgewater documents great weight is deservedly attached, did not see this Othello item (Hamilton's Inquiry, p. 81), and although Hamilton, in his Inquiry (p. 84), says that 'these [five] documents are given in Appendix I,' yet when we turn to Appendix I, this Othello item is not there, and it is stated (p. 109) that there are six documents, and when we come to count them we find that there are, in all, seven documents; and had the Othello item been given, there would have been eight. I dare say this confusion, or discrepancy, is all my own, and shall accept with equanimity any imputation on my editorial fidelity or capacity. I might as well confess, at once, not merely to an indifference, but to an aversion, to all this discussion over the authorship of these documents. It is one thing to prove a document a forgery, but it is another, and a very different thing, to say who is the forger. The imputation of dishonesty, and a motiveless dishonesty at that, cast upon one to whom every student of dramatic history is under lasting obligations, is so painful that I have always avoided the whole matter; and while ready to accept results, as to genuineness, arrived at by my betters, must beg to be suffered to retain my private judgement as to the hand by which the dishonesty was committed. While thus confessing that my reading has not been thorough, I wish it understood that, from what I have read, I have received the deep impression that if these documents, and the MS corrections in F., are forged, it was not Collier who was guilty; he must have been the dupe, not the forger. In the department of 'the Collier controversy' my library is incomplete, and will remain so. I have felt that this obtrusive personal reference is necessary to explain the omission of all discussion as to the character, genuine or otherwise, of this reference by Collier to the performance of Othello in 1602. DYCE, in his first edition (vol. i, p. lxix), quotes Collier, but with a caveat. STAUNTON is more outspoken. In his Preface to Othello, alluding to this Bridgewater item, he says, 'the suspicion long entertained that the Shakespearean documents in that collection are modern fabrications having now deepened almost into certainty, the extract in question is of no historical value.' HALLIWELL, in his Folio Edition (1865, vol. i, p. 188), while stating the questionable character of all the Bridgewater documents, passes no judgement on the Othello item, because that one, as he says, he had not seen. In his Preface to Othello in that same edition, he passes it over in silence. DYCE, in his Second Edition (1866, vol. i, p. 77), quotes Staunton's verdict, and adds, from Hardy's Review of the Present State of the Shakespearean Controversy, p. 60: 'The writing, the ink, and the signature [of the paper containing the Othello item] equally condemn it at once.' I can find no notice of it in HALLIWELL-PHILLIPPS'S Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare, 1885, 5th edition.

Here we must leave its further consideration, and turn to the Editors in chronological order. The next in point of time is GRANT WHITE, who, in his First Edition, was strongly influenced by Warburton's theory, and inclined to place the date in 1611. 'It seems impossible to avoid the conclusion that this passage [i. e., 'our new heraldry 'is hands, not hearts'] was written after the creation of the first baronets'; 'although 'it is possible that the play was written before the creation, and that the allusion was 'introduced immediately afterwards, it is not probable.' Collier's Bridgewater document has been 'pronounced a forgery,' but even should it 'prove genuine, the performance of a play called Othello by 'Burbidge's players,' in 1602, cannot, for reasons to be presently given, be accepted as conclusive evidence that Shakespeare's tragedy was 'then written. As to the genuineness' of Cunningham's item from the Revels Account, there can be no doubt; and 'the probability seems strong that the play in question was 'Shakespeare's Othello. But is it certain? Not quite, in my opinion. It may have 'been a play founded on Giraldi Cinthio's story, and called The Moor of Venice, which 'was written by another playwright, and which, being the property of his company, 'Shakespeare afterwards entirely re-wrote, taking the names of Othello and Iago from 'the History of the Prince of Denmark, before mentioned. This supposition is so 'much in accordance with Shakespeare's practice, and the heraldic allusion before 'mentioned is entitled to such weight in the decision of the question, that, although 'there seems no sufficient ground for a fixed opinion upon the subject, I am inclined to 'place the date of the composition of this tragedy rather after 1611 than before that 'year. There is yet another fact which leads towards this conclusion. . . . Troilus 'and Cressida and Pericles were published in 1609; and after a lapse of thirteen 'years without the appearance of one of Shakespeare's dramas from the press, this tragedy was published in 1622, although there were then nineteen of no inferior rank 'among his works which were known to the public only upon the stage. Why this 'long interval passed thus unimproved by the dealers in dramatic literature, and why 'this play was chosen from among so many, to be published only a year before the 'appearance of the collected edition, (the intentions in regard to which could hardly 'have been unknown to the trade, or even to the public,) can only be a matter of very 'vague conjecture. We know that it was high in general favour; but I am inclined to the opinion that in addition to this claim upon a publisher's notice, it had also that of being one of its author's very latest productions. It certainly seems strange that after thirteen years had passed without the publication of one of Shakespeare's plays, during the first half of which period he produced works which were as well adapted for the press as any that had previously been issued, a publisher should go back at least eighteen years for one, which was the case if The Moor of Venice performed before King James, in 1604 was Shakespeare's Othello, in the only form in which it is known to us.'

If there were in those days only one play called The Moor of Venice, and if the heraldic allusion were not a later insertion, it was reserved for SIR FREDERIC MADDEN to overthrow completely Warburton's date of 1611. Among the MSS in the British Museum there is an account of the journey in England of Lewis Frederick, Prince of Wirtemberg, in 1610, 'which has been briefly penned in the French language by me, Hans Jacob Wurmsser von Vendenheym.' In this journal Madden found the following entry in the month of April: 'Lundi, 30. S. E. alla au Globe lieu ordinaire ou l'on joue les Commedies, y fut representé l'histoire du More de Venise.'

HALLIWELL in his Folio edition, relying on the Revels Book, puts the date of composition 'some time previously to November 1st, 1604,' and adds a reference to the performance of the play seen by the Prince of Wirtemberg; and, 'again, in an account of plays acted before Prince Charles, the Lady Elizabeth, and the Prince Palatine Elector, early in the year 1613, in both instances under its title of the 'Moor of Venice.' . . . The twelfth Public Act, which was passed in the first Parliament of James, some time between March 19th and July 7th, 1604, was levelled 'against conjuration, witchcraft, and dealing with evill and wicked spirits.' [Cited by GREY, see I, iii, 76.] In the course of this Act it is enacted, that 'if any person or persons shall, from and after the feaste of Saint Michaell, the Archangell next comminge, take upon him or them by witchcrafte, inchantment, charme or sorcerie, to tell or declare in what place any treasure of golde or silver should or might be founde or had in the earth or other secret places, or where goodes or thinges loste or stollen should be founde or become, or to the intent to provoke any person to unlawfull love,' then such person or persons, if convicted, 'shall for the said offence suffer imprisonment by the space of one whole yere without baile or maineprie, and once in everie quarter of saide yere shall, in some markett towne upon the markett day, or at such tyme as any faire shal be kepte there, stande openlie upon the pillorie by the space of sixe houres, and there shall openlie confesse his or her error and offence.' It seems probable that part of the First Act of Othello would not have assumed the form it does, had not the author been familiar with the statute, in common with the public of the day, the Duke referring to such a Law when he tells Brabantio, that his accusation of the employment of witchcraft shall be impartially investigated. If this be the case, the date of the composition of this tragedy may be positively assigned to the year 1604.' To this note Halliwell-Phillipps adds in his Outlines, &c., 5th ed., p. 541: 'Although the offence named in the statute refers not to the use of charms to make people love one another, but to the employment of them for the provocation of unlawful love, yet still this may be said to have an oblique application to the story of the tragedy in the surreptitious marriage of Othello. By the Act of James, a previous one, 5 Eliz. c. 16, of a similar character was 'utterlie' repealed, and the object of the second Act appears to have been to punish the same offence more severely.' [The existence of an Act of a 'similar character' already in force, somewhat weakens this argument, as it seems to me.]

In a note on III, iii, 183: 'Who steals my purse steals trash,' Halliwell observes

'This is imitated by one J. M. in an unpublished manuscript, 'The Newe Metamorphosis, or a Feaste of Fancie, or Poeticall Legendes, written by J. M., gent., 1600.' This imitation would give the date of the play to an earlier period than is stated [above], but the year 1600, attached to the manuscript, appears to indicate the era in which the poem was commenced:

"The highwayman that robs one of his purse
 "Is not so bad; nay, these are ten tymes worse!
 "For these doe rob men of their pretious name,
 "And in exchange give obloquie and shame."

STAUNTON in his note on the same passage cites this reference of Halliwell, and adds: 'But the reflection is sufficiently trite, and in both instances, as in many others 'where it occurs, was probably founded' on passages in Homily XI, pt. 2, Homily XII, pt. 1. HALLIWELL-PHILLIPPS (Outlines, p. 163, first ed.) now pronounces the passage from J. M. to be 'of no critical value to the enquiry. Although the date of 1600 appears 'on the title-page of that poem, the manuscript itself contains a distinct allusion by name 'to Speed's Theatre of Great Britaine, a work first published in 1611.' (For a fuller account of The New Metamorphosis, see p. 98, and Appendix C of the 2nd edition of that fine revelation of Shakespeare's early and wide influence, INGLEBY'S Centurie of Prayse, which, in this 2nd Edition, revised and added to by MISS LUCY TOULMIN SMITH, adds another instance of enduring, scholarly work, in the Shakespearian field, done by a woman.)

In 1868, The Athenaeum (20th of June) announced a painful discovery in connection with the Revels Books, edited for The Shakespeare Society by Cunningham. In The Galaxy of November following, the story of the discovery was re-told by GRANT WHITE with fuller details, which he had 'learned from authentic sources.' It is substantially as follows: 'The story about the finding of the Revels Book had passed out of mind, 'though not out of memory, when about three months ago an oldish man, broken down 'by hard drinking, appeared at the British Museum and presented for sale an old manuscript volume, which contained, he said, records of much value about the early English drama, and which 'his friend, Mr Collier, said was worth sixty guineas.' It was Peter Cunningham, and the volume was that one of the 'Revels Accounts,' which contained the record of the performance of nine plays by Mr Shaxberd. The volume was retained for examination before purchase, was found to be public property, and was, of course, held as such. So interesting a volume attracted at once the attention of the experts of the Audit Office, and they at once discovered that, although the book was genuine, that part of it which was of greater interest than all the rest, the leaves containing the 'record of the performance of Shakespeare's plays, was a forgery, a gross forgery from 'beginning to end. Mr Duffus Hardy, of the Rolls Court, than whom there is no better 'authority in England, not excepting Sir Frederic Madden himself, so pronounces it, 'and so do the distinguished Shakespearian scholars, the Rev Alexander Dyce and Mr 'J. O. Halliwell, although they have founded part of their editorial labours upon it. . . . 'It is to be remarked, that the important entries are made upon two leaves lying loose 'in the volume, and that these leaves, and these only of all the volume, have in the 'margin the names of the writers of the plays. There is other writing upon the margins, usually mere index words for convenience of reference; but here only in the 'course of thirteen books, which when put into print make two hundred and twenty-six octavo pages, is the name of the author of a play, mask, or interlude given. This 'circumstance in itself, of which no notice seems to have been taken, casts great sus 'picion upon the pages on which these records appear, and when it is found that they are loose and were never bound into the volume, suspicion approaches certainty. But the evidence of the writing itself is said to settle the question at once for any person familiar with old manuscript. . . . And now who is the forger? The conclusion that Peter Cunningham is the man seems unavoidable.'

From an Article in The British Quarterly Review of January, 1869, we learn, in reference to this MS volume which Cunningham offered to the British Museum, that 'it only required a glance of the experts to discover that the list of Shakespeare's plays performed before the Court in the years alluded to, had been appended to the old documents by a modern hand. The trifling and uninteresting items of expenditure are genuine, but the book containing these appears to have also contained some blank pages, into which the forger has crammed the whole of the writings referring to Shakespeare.'

But the mystery connected with these entries in the Revels Book by no means ends here. Recent revelations have shown that Malone was right when he said that he knew Othello was acted in 1604; and the proof of this knowledge, which Boswell failed to find, has been discovered, and it turns out to be this very list, which, or a copy of it, Cunningham is accused of forging in 1842. These revelations are made in that inestimable volume, for which too much gratitude to the author cannot be shown, especially by us Americans, debarred as we are from all access to original records, the Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare, by Halliwell-Phillipps. From the Fifth Edition, 1885, p. 607, I quote the following:

'There are substantial reasons for believing, that although the manuscript [of the pages of Cunningham's Revels Book] itself is spurious, the information which it yields is genuine.'

'In the year 1791 Sir William Musgrave, the First Commissioner of the Board of Audit, made arrangements for Malone's inspection of the ancient manuscripts then in his office, these including what he termed 'records of the Master of the Revels for '1604 and 1605.' These facts are derived from explicit notes that will be found in the Variorum Shakespeare, ed. 1821, iii, 361, 363. That Malone availed himself of the opportunity, and visited Somerset House for the express purpose of examining the whole collection of the documents that pertained to the Office of the Revels, is evident from his own statement in the work just quoted, ibid., 361; and amongst the papers that came with that portion of his library which was added to the treasures of the Bodleian in 1821 is a leaf which contains the following memoranda no clue, however, being given to the source whence they were derived:—'1604 & 1605—Ed^d. "Tylney—Sunday after Hallowmas—Merry Wyves of Windsor perf^d by the K's players—Hallamas—in the Banqueting ho^s. at Whitehall the Moor of Venis—perf^d. by "the K's players—on St. Stephens Night—Mesure for Mesur by Shaxberd"' [as in the case of the Revels Book, only so much is cited here as applies to Othello and Shaxberd].

'Although the contents of this leaf are not in Malone's handwriting, there is no doubt whatever that it belonged to his collection of materials, it being one with others of an analogous character that were in a loose bundle of scraps which formed part of the original gift to the Bodleian, and had remained uncatalogued and inaccessible to students until they were bound in recent years under the direction of Mr H. S. Harper, one of the officials of that library. The leaf containing the abridged transcript just given is now preserved in MS. Mal. 29; and Mr Harper, who well recollects arranging the papers for the formation of that volume, assures me that there is no 'possibility of any of its contents having been acquired subsequently to the reception 'of the Malone Collection in 1821. There is nothing either in the character of the 'handwriting or in the form of the transcript, to justify the faintest suspicion that it is

 'in itself a forgery. It has, on the contrary, every indication of being a faithful abridge-
 'ment, sent most probably to Malone from the Audit Office, of the list which was 'printed in 1842. There now arises the crucial enquiry for the period at which
 'Malone became acquainted with the information yielded by that list, for, unless he 'met with the latter for the first time nearly at the end of his career, it is incredible
 'that he should have accepted the genuineness of any of its important details without 'a personal examination of the original. Such an assumption is incompatible with the 'numerous traces of the unwonted assiduity that pervaded his Shakespearian researches.
 'Now, although there is at present no direct evidence of the fact, the little that is known
 'favours the belief that he was in possession of the contents of the existing forgery
 'within a few years after his invitation to the Audit Office in 1791, while nothing has 'been produced which is in the slightest degree inconsistent with that opinion. Let
 'the following intimations be carefully weighed: The material novelties that are intro'duced into that forgery are restricted to the dates therein given of the performances
 'of Othello and Measure for Measure, and the entries respecting these are the only
 'items which Malone would have been absolutely compelled to notice in his disserta'tion on the order of Shakespeare's plays. With respect to the first, he took the new 'chronological fact for granted when he made the following decisive statement,—'we 'know it (Othello) was acted in 1604, and I have therefore placed it in that year,'—
 'important words that were penned before his death in 1812 (Variorum Shakespeare,
 'ed. 1821, ii, 404); and there can hardly be a reasonable doubt that he was relying on
 'the same testimony when he observed in another work: 'I formerly thought that ' "Othello was one of our great dramatic poet's latest compositions, but I now know,
 ' "from indisputable evidence, that was not the case"—note to a passage in Dryden's ' Grounds of Criticism, ed. 1800, pp. 258, 259. If the former work, the Variorum of ' 1821, had not been impaired by the disadvantages attending its posthumous com'pilation, it being the product of Malone's imperfectly revised text and essays, the con'firmation of his assertion respecting the date of the tragedy would no doubt have been 'given; and to the same unfortunate accident must be imputed the circumstance of his 'observations on the date of Measure for Measure in that edition being a mere reprint
 'of those which had appeared in 1790. It is altogether impossible that so experienced
 'a record-student as Malone could have been even transiently deceived by the forgery
 'now in existence, while the character of its ink encourages the suspicion that it could 'not have been perpetrated until long after his death in 1812. The latter opinion is to 'some extent supported by its entries not belonging to the more graphic species of lite'rary frauds that were current before that period. Then there is the extreme improb-
 'ability that Malone should have lighted upon two documents, each of them yielding
 'the unexpected information of the early date of Othello, while his acknowledged rigid
 'integrity excludes the very thought that he would have been accessory to a deception
 'in the matter. It may, therefore, on the whole, be fairly presumed that he had access
 'in or before 1800 to a genuine manuscript that included in some form the entries that
 'are given in the abridged transcript; for we may feel sure that he would never have 'used the words 'indisputable evidence' in respect to one of them until he had made
 'a personal scrutiny of the original, even if his residence had not been, as it was, within
 'less than an hour's walk from the Audit Office. There appears to be only one solution 'that reconciles all the known facts of the case. It is that the forger had met with,

‘and reproduced in a simulated form, trustworthy extracts from a genuine record that had disappeared from that Office. This view of the case is essentially supported by what is, in respect to the present inquiry, the important discovery at Hatfield of the note of Sir Walter Cope, which mentions the revival of Love's Labour's Lost by the King's Company in or shortly before January, 1605, an evidence that could not have been known to the imposter, and one of a fact that would have been beyond even the remote probability of a successful conjecture. On the other hand, with the single exception of the day assigned for the performance of that comedy, there are no questionable indications of any kind in the contents of the fabricated list, nothing that cannot be either explained or corroborated. The only other feature that could really justify a suspicion is the quaint orthography of the poet's name, but this no doubt is to be ascribed to the illiteracy of the original scribe; and it may be added that similar forms were in provincial use, e. g., Shaxber, Chapel-lane deed, 1572, and Stratford MS., 1704; Shaxbere, Henley-street conveyance, 1573; Shaxbeer, Stratford MS., 1737.’ [Halliwell-Phillipps here gives six confirmatory facts of the performance of the plays from the accounts of the Treasurer of the Chambers, and two for the performance of the masks from Winwood's Memorials; four of these confirmatory facts from the accounts of the Treasurer of the Chambers, Cunningham also reprinted in the Preface to his Revels Books, pp. xxxvi, xxxvii. Halliwell-Phillipps then continues]: ‘It would appear from these notices either that the fabricator had not before him a complete list of the plays that had been acted, or that he intentionally omitted a number of entries. Whatever may have been the exact nature of his proceedings, it is certain that the particulars of the forgery were not based upon the defective information given in the official accounts of the Treasurer of the Chambers. If that had been the case, it would be necessary to assume that he went recklessly out of his way to insert a fictitious notice of a performance on a day that was not sanctioned by those accounts, the high probability of the accuracy of that solitary discrepancy having, moreover, been lately revealed by the discovery of an evidence to which he could not have had access. This singular coincidence may fairly be held to outweigh the suspicion attending the omission in the Treasurer's ledger, an oversight of a very unusual character, and yet an error infinitely more likely to occur than the preternatural ratification of what would have been by itself an extravagant conjecture. Upon a balance of probabilities there can thus hardly be a doubt that Love's Labour's Lost was revived at Court very early in January of 1605 in a representation that was not honoured by the presence of the Queen. When, therefore, a play was to be selected almost immediately afterwards for the entertainment of Her Majesty at Lord Southampton's, it was natural that Burbadge, who had only one day's notice of the intended performance, should have recommended a drama which his company had just then in hand, and which at the same time would have been a novelty to the only spectator whose approval was regarded.’

WARD, whose valuable History of English Dramatic Literature preceded Halliwell-Phillipps's discovery of Malone's transcript, says: According to internal evidence of character and manner there can be no difficulty in assigning to this play a date not far removed from those of Macbeth and Lear, a conclusion fairly supported by the ‘tests’ of versification. No trustworthy external evidence exists as to the date of Othello, unless importance be attached to the [passage in The Newe Metamorphosis, cited by Halliwell. But Halliwell, as we have seen, subsequently withdrew all belief in its critical value].

HUDSON, on the strength of the performances before the Duke of Wirtemberg in 1610, and before Prince Charles in 1613, from Burbadge's Elegy (see post), and from the lack of other authentic contemporary notices, is inclined to give a late date, either 1609 or early in 1610. 'And the internal evidence of style and manner is, I think, in entire harmony with that conclusion; the diction, versification, and psychologic inwardness being such as to speak it into close chronological neighbourhood with Cymbeline and Coriolanus.'

In the New Shakspeare Society's Transactions, 1874, p. 10, FLEAY, by the application of Metrical Tests, puts the date of Othello as 1605, and Ib., p. 450, INGRAM, in his tabulation of the Plays according to the Numbers of Light and Weak Endings, gives Othello the Twenty-first place, between Julius Caesar and Lear.

DOWDEN (Shakspeare, His Mind and Art, p. 223): Around the year 1600 are grouped some of the most mirthful comedies that Shakspeare ever wrote. Then a little later, as soon as Hamlet is completed, all changes. From 1604 to 1610 a show of tragic figures, like the kings who passed before Macbeth, filled the vision of Shakspeare. . . . During these years the imaginative fervour of Shakspeare was at its highest, and sustained itself without abatement. There was no feverish excitement in his energy, and there was no pause. . . . During a certain brief season it may have been that Shakspeare altogether ceased to write for the stage. But now in unbroken series, year by year, one great tragedy succeeds another. Having created Othello, surely the eye of a poet's mind would demand quietude, passive acceptance of some calm beauty, a period of restoration. But Othello is pursued by Lear, Lear by Macbeth, Macbeth by Antony and Cleopatra, Antony and Cleopatra by Coriolanus.

The CAMBRIDGE EDITORS were, I think, the first to call attention to 'many oaths and expletives' in Q₂ (see Text, p. 342) which, in all the later editions, are altered or omitted. 'This shows,' they continue, 'that the MS. from which it was printed had not been recently used as an acting copy.' (From which I infer that they would throw back the date of composition to the early years of the century.)

KNIGHT had noticed long ago this difference in one particular passage between the Folio and Quarto (see I, i, 4), and had conjectured therefrom that the First Quarto was written before the passage of the Statute 3 Jac., 1605, against profanity on the stage.

FURNIVALL places it in Shakspeare's THIRD PERIOD (1601-1608), as a companion to Macbeth in The Tempter-yielding Group, with the date (? 1604).

ROLFE groups this play with Lear and Macbeth, 'when Shakespeare was in the full maturity of his powers.'

GRANT WHITE's latest conclusion is that while the allusion to the 'new heraldry' points to 1611, we have an authentic record of its performance in April, 1610. 'It is more than possible, then, that the tragedy was originally written before 1606 (in 1605 or 1604), and that it afterwards received additions on some special occasions.'

If 'time will unfold what plighted cunning hides,' we need but cross our hands and wait. (Will not a few shreds of Shakespeare's mantle suffice to cover me, if, patterned by his fondness for quibbles, I suggest that 'time will unfold what plighted Cunningham hides'?) Nothing else but time, I fear, will ever solve the mystery of these forged leaves in the Revels Book. That they are forged is a settled fact. But, unlike other forgeries, their substance is genuine. Their items are all authenticated by extrinsic evidence. The rough transcript found by Halliwell-Phillipps among Malone's papers repeats every item, except three, word for word. If this transcript is a true copy from a genuine original, then are Cunningham's pages a true copy from the same; and, as we have seen, in Malone's transcript Halliwell-Phillipps puts entire faith. When a scholar so learned and so cautious leads the way, ought we not to follow? Were we all to trust ourselves unreservedly to his guidance, it is doubtful if Shakespearian literature would ever receive a single harmful bias 'down the ringing grooves of change.' Yet, at the same time, may we not be permitted, just by way of showing off an independence which we do not possess, to scrutinize somewhat closely for a minute or two that same transcript of Malone?

One argument in favour of its being a draft from a genuine original, which has great weight with Halliwell-Phillipps, is that Malone said he knew Othello was acted in 1604, which he would not have said without the fullest documentary proof, such proof as an inspection of the original would alone have afforded. We all know how thoroughly trustworthy Malone is, and nothing can be farther from my intention than to impugn his accuracy; and yet, although it is not likely, it is not inconceivable that Malone's knowledge extended no farther than to this rough transcript. Malone had the same confidence in Sir William Musgrave that we all have in Malone, and if Sir William had sent the transcript to him as a memorandum of a document awaiting his inspection, it is perfectly consistent with honesty that Malone should refer to the contents of this transcript as 'known' even before he had examined the original, or even if he had never examined the original. Granting that this transcript came from Somerset House, (and it is not easy to see whence else it could have come,) Malone would not hesitate on the strength of it to believe in the existence of the original document. Indeed my supposition receives some faint colour from a letter of Malone to Sir William Musgrave in my possession. In it Malone says: 'I mean to print Queen Elizabeth's letter to Lady Paget as it stands in Nichols's Progresses, copied from a MS of Dr Birch in the Museum; surely there can be no harm in saying that the original is still extant.' (The Italics are Malone's.) I also happen to have Sir William Musgrave's reply to this very letter, in which he shows more caution than Malone, for he says: 'I certainly have not any objection against your saying, "That you have been informed that the original is still extant."' Although this correspondence refers to facts which it was necessary to keep secret, and therein is somewhat removed from ordinary cases, yet it is, perhaps, worth citing, as showing that Malone, like all the rest of us, was willing to accept as fact that which was known to be such by one in whom he had an absolute trust. Do we not all accept The Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare in the same faith? What the original document could have been from which this rough transcript was taken, it is hard to imagine. I do not see how it could have belonged to the Accounts either of the Treasurer of the Chambers or of the Master of the Revels. The fact that it gives the names of the authors of the plays renders it wholly unlike either; it is anomalous in that regard. Could it have been the hasty memorandum of the Revels accountant, from which he intended afterwards to fill out his books, and for that purpose left the blank pages subsequently utilized by Cunningham; who, having found the memorandum, fulfilled the long-neglected duty, and then destroyed the original? But these imaginings are idle, and particularly idle in one as ignorant in such matters as myself. It was the mistrust in this transcript of Malone, written in an unknown hand, of an unknown date, from an unknown source, save that it was among Malone's papers, and unknown, apparently, even to Boswell, that led me to give as large a space as I did to Halliwell-Phillipps's defence of it, which, be it distinctly remembered, is based mainly on Sir Walter Cope's notice of the revival of Love's Labour's Lost.

In dealing with questions like this of the date of the composition of a play, it seems to me that it is of the first moment to keep before us the end and aim which gives the subject its importance; we ought to adjust our lines of perspective and so arrange our objects in view that each shall have its true relative value, and that we be not in danger of confounding nearness with magnitude or importance. Every one has a right to select his vanishing-point, and arrange his lines as suit him best; to me it is a great charm in the study of Shakespeare that the number of points from which that myriad-minded man can be studied are as myriad as his mind. If we are searching for the facts of his outward life, then the days and months and years when he wrote his plays are of essential importance. But if the outward conditions of his muddy vesture of decay do not attract us, and we are straining to catch sound of immortal harmony, what profit to us then is there in tides and times? Would a year or two, one way or the other, in the composition of Othello, or a dozen years, for that matter, bring us any nearer to a knowledge of the Moor? Would a single throb be added to Romeo's last farewell to Juliet if we knew the very day, or the very hour of the day, when Shakespeare wrote the scene? We must beware that we do not confound in any question like this, the essential and the accidental. Does the history of the Koh-i-nor add one doit to its value or one tint to its rays? It is not the knowledge that it was written in 1604 or in 1704 that fills our theatres when Othello is on the stage.

Accepting the date of 1604, I began with a reliance on time, and a trust in Halliwell-Phillipps; there we may safely remain, 'enshelter'd and embay'd.'

DATE OF THE ACTION

MALONE (Note on II, i, 1): All the modern editors following Rowe have supposed the capital of Cyprus to be the place where the scene of Othello lies during the last four Acts, but this could not have been Shakespeare's intention; Nicosia, the capital city of Cyprus, being situated nearly in the centre of the island, and thirty miles distant from the sea. The principal sea-port town of Cyprus was Famagusta, where there was formerly a strong fort and commodious haven,—the only one of any magnitude in the island; and there undoubtedly the scene should be placed. 'Neere unto the haven (says Knolles), standeth an old castle, with four towers after the ancient manner of building.' To this castle we find Othello presently repairs.

It is observable that Cinthio, whose novels were first published in 1565, makes no mention of any attack being made on Cyprus by the Turks. From our poet's having mentioned the preparations against this island, which they first assaulted and took from the Venetians in 1570, we may suppose that he intended that year as the era of his tragedy; but by mentioning Rhodes as also likely to be assaulted by the Turks, he has fallen into an historical inconsistency, for they were then in quiet possession of that island, of which they became masters in December, 1522; and if, to evade this difficulty, we refer Othello to an era prior to that year, there will be an equal incongruity; for from 1473, when the Venetians first became possessed of Cyprus, to 1522, they had not been molested by any Turkish armament.

REED: The time of this play may be ascertained from the following circumstances: Selymus the Second formed his design against Cyprus in 1569, and took it in 1571. This was the only attempt the Turks ever made upon that island after it came into the hands of the Venetians (which was in the year 1473), wherefore the time must fall in with some part of that interval. We learn from the play that there was a junction of the Turkish fleet at Rhodes in order for the invasion of Cyprus; that it first came sailing towards Cyprus, then went to Rhodes, there met another squadron, and then resumed its way to Cyprus. These are real historical facts which happened when Mustapha, Selymus's general, attacked Cyprus in May, 1570, which, therefore, is the true period of this performance. (See Knolles's History of the Turks, pp. 838, 846, 867.)

KNIGHT: The Republic of Venice became the virtual sovereign of Cyprus in 1471, when it assumed the guardianship of the son of Catharine Cornaro, who, being left a widow, wanted the protection of the Republic to maintain the power which her husband had usurped. The island was then first garrisoned by Venetian troops. Catharine, in 1489, abdicated the sovereignty in favour of the Republic. Cyprus was retained by the Venetians till 1570, when it was invaded by a powerful Turkish force, and was finally subjected to the dominion of Selim II in 1571. From that period it has formed [until it was acquired a few years ago by England] a part of the Turkish Empire. Nicosia, the inland capital of the island, was taken by storm; and Famagusta, the principal sea-port, capitulated after a long and gallant defence. It is evident, therefore, that we must refer the action of Othello to a period before the subjugation of Cyprus by the Turks. The locality of the scenes after the First Act must be at Famagusta, which was strongly fortified,—a fact which Shakespeare must have known, when in III, ii, Othello says: ‘I will be walking on the works.’

STAUNTON gives a long extract from Knolles's History narrating the ‘circumstances originating the siege of Nicosia, “the chief and richest citie of all the Island,” and the ultimate conquest of Cyprus by the Turk, (for there was no “segregation of the Turkish fleet” as the play supposes,) of which the most important, it might be said the only important, items, (and italicized by Staunton,) are as follows: ‘For Mustapha, author of that expedition, had before appointed Piali Bassa at a time prefixed to meet him at the Rhodes, and that he that came first should tarrie for the other, that so they might together saile into Cyprus.’ And again: ‘The whole fleet at that time consisted of two hundred galleys, amongst whom were diverse galliots,’ &c.

DURATION OF THE ACTION

SHAKESPEARE'S art in dealing with Time was first noticed by HALPIN and Professor WILSON, and was referred to in the Preface of Hamlet, where is given a brief exposition of their views. According to Professor Wilson, Shakespeare counts off days and hours, as it were, by two clocks, on one of which the true Historic Time is recorded, and on the other the Dramatic Time, or a false show of time, whereby days, weeks, and months may be to the utmost contracted. It is as though the hour-hand pointed to historic time, while the minute-hand, recording fresh sensations with every swing of the pendulum, tells dramatic time. While the former has traveled from one figure to another, the latter has traversed the whole twelve, and is true to the hour when the hammer falls. We know that but an hour has passed, and yet, following the minute-hand, we have lived through the whole twelve. In no one way, it is submitted, does Shakespeare show more emphatically than in this, that he wrote his plays to be heard and not read. In the theatre no trace is noted of this art, or even trick (be it respectfully termed); while on the printed page it may be detected in almost every Scene. In no play is this glamour carried to greater lengths than in Othello. That Desdemona should be murdered within thirty-six hours after landing in Cyprus is what no spectator of the play can readily believe; and yet to the reader of the tragedy this headlong speed is so real that it was proclaimed two hundred years ago by Rymer, who hissed and cackled over what he considered an absurdity so glaring, that he believed the exposure would forever disgrace and dethrone Shakespeare. Perhaps it is well that Professor Wilson did not know in whose footsteps he was unconsciously treading—but to what a different goal!

Whilst this legerdmain in regard to dramatic or illusory time is thus pronounced in Othello, in scarcely any other is the historic or real time more clearly noted. We can follow the characters through each day, nay, we can discover even the very days of the week, and that Othello landed in Cyprus on Saturday afternoon.

In the foregoing pages no notes in regard to this question of time have been included, except one or two here and there, enough to recall to the student's memory that such a question exists, and should be borne in mind.

It is but fair to say, at the outset, that there are not wanting good scholars who deny this theory of Double Time, and who variously interpret the allusions which Halpin and Wilson consider indications of it. It will be, of course, my endeavour duly to set forth their opposition; but, for the present, let the correctness of the theory be assumed, and let it be taken for granted that here, in Othello, Shakespeare has interwoven two different computations of time, the historical or real, the dramatic or illusory.

I propose first to note the passages which point to Historic Time, and as briefly as possible; the whole play is at hand and compression is obligatory.

The drama opens at night. Within an hour after the council is adjourned, Othello and Desdemona start for Cyprus. This night we may fancifully call the First Day.

How long the voyage from Venice to Cyprus lasts, we have no means of knowing. The distance was great, thirteen or fourteen hundred miles, and the labouring barks were slow and delayed by a tempest; ten days or a fortnight is none too long. Iago's arrival anticipated Cassio's expectation by a se'en nights' speed. The desperate tempest had lasted during the night, when the wind-shak'd surge had seemed to cast water on the burning Bear; it had evidently cleared up in the afternoon, and the aerial blue appeared. The afternoon was Saturday. At five o'clock the Herald announced that, upon certain tidings now arrived of the perdition of the Turkish fleet, there was to be sport and revels till the bell have tolled eleven. Othello tells Cassio to look to the guard to-night, and before ten o'clock Iago has begun his temptation of Cassio, from which hour the action steadily proceeds through the night, until Cassio, after his disgrace, resolves to beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for him betimes in the morning. Although on parting Iago wishes him good-night, yet the day was breaking, and Cassio did not go to bed. As soon as he thinks Emilia is stirring, he appears before Othello's dwelling with some musicians, to give his General the good-morrow customary on the morning after marriage.

This is the beginning of the Second Day, and in Cyprus, and Sunday.

Emilia admits Cassio, and promises to bestow him where he should have time to speak his bosom freely to Desdemona. The great Third Scene of the Third Act opens with this interview between Desdemona and Cassio; which is broken off by the return of Othello, with Iago, from an inspection of the works; the gentle lady intercedes for the disgraced Lieutenant, and here we learn the days of the week: 'Des. Good love, call him back. Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona, some other time. Des. But shall't be shortly? Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you. Des. Shall't be to-night [Sunday], at supper? Oth. No, not to-night. Des. To-morrow [Monday] dinner then? Oth. I shall not dine at home; I meet the Captains at the citadel. Des. Why then to-morrow [Monday] night, on Tuesday morn. On Tuesday noon or night, on Wednesday morn. I prithee thee name the time, but let it not exceed three days.'

Before this scene closes Othello has become Iago's victim, and withdraws to furnish himself with some swift means of death for Desdemona, but first he wishes to discover the truth of Iago's assertion that Cassio has the handkerchief; to Desdemona he therefore goes at once. That Othello goes instantly to Desdemona, I infer not only from the eternal fitness of things, (he never could have been in her company one minute without resolving his doubts), but also from his Aside when he first greets her: 'Oh hardness to dissemble!' This is his first attempt at dissembling, therefore the first time that he had seen her. He finds that the handkerchief is gone, and leaves her in fury. Cassio sees Bianca and promises to call on her that evening, which is of course Sunday evening, and with this interview between Cassio and Bianca the Third Act closes.

The only chance thus far, it seems to me, for any time to elapse is between the close of the Third and the beginning of the Fourth Act. I was at one time in great hopes that at least some days could be wedged in here, especially since the conversation, with which the Act opens, between Iago and Othello is not only general in its character, as though they were discussing some abstract question of morality, but Othello had actually forgotten all about the handkerchief. I was the victim of Shakespeare's art, and two little words of Bianca's bind the two Acts together as one in point of time. Bianca asks Cassio what he meant by that same handkerchief which he gave her even now; so that we are still in Sunday, in the afternoon, after the generous islanders invited by Othello had had their dinner. Bianca repeats her invitation to Cassio to come to supper to-night. To supper likewise Othello invites Lodovico, who arrives from Venice before this Scene closes. Before the next Scene closes the trumpets summon to this very supper. After Bianca's supper Cassio is wounded, and after the supper to the Venetian Ambassadors, Desdemona is smothered,—on Sunday night, within thirty-six hours after her arrival in Cyprus.

The indications of Dramatic Time are not so easily enumerated; they are often mere hints, vanishing touches, leaving an impression not by their force, but by their frequent and varied repetition.

It is not till the Moor is caught in the whirlwind of passion raised by Iago that any necessity arises for these hints of Protracted Time. But, when once caught up, it is of the utmost necessity that the action should drive ahead in storm; one minute's calm would explain everything; yet the delusion must be complete that Othello's passion is of gradual growth. Before our eyes it must be made to pass through all stages of development. In the First Act, therefore, there are but few indications, that I can detect, of this Dramatic Time. There are one or two towards the close of it, where Iago tells Roderigo that 'It cannot be that Desdemona should long continue her love to the Moor, nor he his to her, it was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an answerable sequestration.' The past tense flits by us, and the marriage of the Moor, within the hour, seems already like an old story. Again, before the Senate, Othello speaks as though this were not the first campaign in which he had been accompanied by his wife. He promises for himself with an assurance, clearly born of experience, when he repels the thought that 'Light-winged toys of feathered Cupid' could 'seel his speculative and officed instruments.' Again, Iago, at the very close, leaves us with the impression that his knavery will be slow in its advances. 'Let's see: After some time to abuse Othello's ear.' Trusting in this promise that the process will be slow, we accept the order of the subsequent events as in fulfilment of it.

Of one fact in this First Act it is important to be sure, before we leave it, and this is that Othello's marriage takes place on the very night that it was discovered by Brabantio; the first words that Roderigo utters refer to it as an end of all his hopes, and Iago tells Cassio shortly afterwards that Othello 'is made forever if the land carack prove lawful prize which he has secured to-night.' If we may suppose that Othello and Desdemona were married for some time before the night on which the play opens, then many of the difficulties of the Short Time in Cyprus disappear. This theory was started and disproved by Professor Wilson in his Christopher under Canvas for April, 1850, p. 510.* Seward, one of the interlocutors, is represented as starting this theory, 'That there was long time at Venice after marriage, and short time at Cyprus;' and in support urged that 'the pliant hour' which Othello says he once took to ask Desdemona to be his wife, cannot refer to the day on which the play commences; also, that much weight should be given to the calm tone, the husband-like and matron-like demeanor, of Othello and Desdemona when confronted with the Senate. Professor Wilson thus disposes of it.

'NORTH. The thing most preposterous to me in a long marriage at Venice, is the 'continued lying position in which it places Othello and Desdemona towards her father. 'Two months—say—or three or four—of difficult deception! when the uppermost characteristic of both is clear-souledness—the most magnanimous sincerity. By that, 'before anything else, are they kindred and fit for one another. On that, before anything else, is the Tragedy grounded—on his unsuspecting openness, which is drawn, 'against its own nature, to suspect her purity that lies open as earth's bosom to the sun. 'And she is to be killed for a dissembler! In either, immense contrast between the 'person and fate. That These Two should truckle to a domestic lie!

'SEWARD. Why should not Othello marry Desdemona, and keep her at her father's 'as theorized?

'NORTH. It is out of his character. He has the spirit of command, of lordship, of dominion—an animus imperiosus. This element must be granted to fit him for his place; 'and it is intimated, and is consistent with and essential to his whole fabric of mind. 'Then, he would not put that which belonged to him out of his power, in hostile keeping—his wife and not his wife. It is contrary to his great love, which desires and 'would feed upon her continual presence. And against his discretion, prudence, or 'common sense, to risk that Brabantio, discovering, might in fury take sudden violent 'measures—shut her up in a convent, or turn her into the streets, or who knows what '—kill her. . . . The least that can be said is, that it invests the sanctimony of marriage with the air of an illicit amour.

'TALBOYS. Then the high-minded Othello running the perpetual and imminent risk 'of being caught thieving—slipping through loop-holes—mouse-holes—key-holes. 'What in Romeo and Juliet is romance, between Othello and Desdemona is almost 'pollution.

'NORTH. What a desolating of the MANNERS of the Play! Will you then, in order 'to evade a difficulty of the mechanical construction, clog and overwhelm the poetry, and 'moral greatness of the Play, with a preliminary debasement? Introduce your Hero 'and Heroine under a cloud? . . . My dear Seward—pray, meditate but for a moment 'on these words of Desdemona in the Council Chamber: "My noble Father, I do perceive here A DIVIDED DUTY."—I, iii, 205–214. These are weighty words—of grave 'and solemn import—and the time has come when Desdemona the Daughter is to be 'Desdemona the Wife. She tells simply and sedately—affectionately and gratefully— 'the great primal Truth of this our human and social life. Hitherto her Father has 'been to her the Lord of Duty—the Lord of Duty henceforth is to be her Husband. 'Othello, up to that night, had been but her Lover; and up to that night—for the hidden wooing was nothing to be ashamed of or repented—there had been to her no

* See Blackwood's Magazine for November, 1849, April and May, 1850: These articles, having been, in substance, reprinted in the Transactions of The New Shakspeare Society, 1875–76 and 1877–79, are accessible to all. These Dies Boreales are brilliant, though lacking somewhat of the charm of the youth and lustihood and poetry of the Noctes Ambrosianae, with their central figure, that idealized character,—the Shepherd.—Ed.

'divided Duty'—to her Father's happiness had been devoted her whole filial heart. But had she been a married woman for weeks or months before, how insincere—how hypocritical had that appeal been felt by herself to be, as it issued from her lips! The Duty had, in that case, been 'divided' before—and in a way not pleasant for us to think of—to her Father violated or extinct. Grant that Othello and Desdemona must be married for two months before he murders her—that our hearts and imaginations require it. The resemblance to the ordinary course of human affairs asks it. We cannot bear that he shall extinguish her and himself—both having sipped only, and not quaffed, from the cup of hymeneal felicity. Your soul is outraged by so harsh and malignant a procedure of the Three Sisters. Extended time is required for the probability—the steps of change in the heart of Othello require it—the construction and accumulation of proofs require it—the wheel of events usually rolls with something of leisure and measure. So is it in the real World—so must it seem to be on the Stage—else no verisimilitude—no 'veluti in speculum.' 'Two months shall elapse between marriage and murder,' says Shakespeare—going to write. They must pass at Venice, or they must pass at Cyprus. Place Shakespeare in this position, and which will he choose? If at Venice, a main requiring condition is not satisfied. For in the fits and snatches of the clandestine marriage Othello has never possessed with full embrace, and heart overflowing, the happiness which he destroys. If an earthquake is to ruin a palace, it must be built up to the battlements and pinnacles; furnished, occupied, made the seat of Pleasure, Pomp, and Power; and then shaken into heaps—or you have but half a story. Only at Cyprus, Othello possesses Desdemona. There where he is Lord of his Office, Lord over the Allegiance of soldier and civilian—of a whole population—Lord of the Island, which, sea-surrounded, is as a world of itself—Lord of his will—Lord of his Wife. But if, my dear Seward, Shakespeare elects time at Venice, he wilfully clouds his two excellent Persons with many shadows of indecorum, and clogs his Action with a procedure and a state of affairs, which your Imagination loses itself in attempting to define—with improbabilities—with impracticabilities—with impossibilities. If he was resolute to have a well-sustained logic of Time, I say it was better for him to have his Two Months distinct at Cyprus. I say that, with his creative powers, if he was determined to have Two Calendar Months from the First of May to the First of July, and then in One Day distinctly the first suspicion sown and the murder done, nothing could have been easier to him than to have imagined, and indicated, and hurried over the required gap of time; and that he would have been bound to prefer this course to that inexplicable marriage and no marriage at Venice. But Shakespeare, my dear Boys, had a better escape. Wittingly or unwittingly, he exempted himself from the obligation of walking by the Calendar. He knew, or he felt, that the fair proportionate structure of the Action required liberal time at Cyprus. He took it; for there it is, recognized in the consciousness of every sitting or standing spectator. He knew, or he felt, that the passionate expectation to be sustained in the bosoms of his audience required a rapidity of movement in his Murder-Plot, and it moves on feet of fire.

'SEWARD. Venice is beginning to fade from my ken.

'NORTH. You must go to the TREMENDOUS DOUBLE TIME AT CYPRUS, knowing that the solution is to be had there, or nowhere.' *

DANIEL (Time Analysis of the Plots, &c., New Shakspere Society Trans., 1877-79, p. 239) fully agrees with Professor Wilson that there is no long time at Venice after marriage, but thinks that the supposition of 'long time at Venice before marriage' is necessary, as it is the very foundation whereon Iago subsequently builds up Othello's jealousy by his repeated references to Cassio's former connection with Desdemona, and of his having been from first to last the confidant of Othello's wooing. Wilson having said that there is not the slightest ground for supposing an acquaintance, or, at least, intimacy, between Desdemona and Emilia before they started together from Venice, Daniel controverts it, and asserts that, 'rightly considered there is good ground for supposing a prior acquaintance in the very first lines of the play.' Roderigo's first speech, 'Never tell me, &c.' is, says Daniel, 'unintelligible, Roderigo's whole connection with Iago impossible, except on the supposition that Iago has for some time previous to the commencement of the action been fooling the poor gull on the strength of his acquaintance, therefore probably of Emilia's acquaintance, with Desdemona. It offers the only possible explanation of the reproaches with which Roderigo assails Iago here and in subsequent scenes in Cyprus, II, iii; IV, ii. The "hundred times" that Iago woo'd his wife to steal the handkerchief, Othello's questioning with Emilia (IV, ii), and numerous incidents of her connection with Desdemona, are only possible on the supposition of this prior acquaintance for the belief in which Wilson sees not the slightest ground.'

* These extracts are not literal transcripts; space obliges me to condense them painfully.—Ed.

I am afraid that Daniel doth protest a tiny bit too much. When he says that 'it offers the only possible explanation of the reproaches with which Roderigo assails Iago,' to what does the 'it' refer? To Iago's acquaintance with Desdemona, or to Emilia's acquaintance with her? If to the former, it is hardly an answer to Wilson; if to the latter, he has just said that Iago's use of that acquaintance was only probable, and Wilson would at once deny it altogether, on the ground that the acquaintance did not exist. It seems to me that all of Daniel's difficulties here and in Othello's questioning of Emilia, for which 'long time at Venice before marriage' offers, for him, the only solution, ought to be solved by Wilson's Double Time; but this solution has not proved satisfactory to Daniel, whose opinion on this, as on all Shakespearian topics, is entitled to great weight and great respect. That Roderigo and Iago were acquainted with each other long before Othello was married, it has never, for a minute, occurred to anybody to deny; but to say that the only possible way in which Iago could have persuaded Roderigo of his power to help him into Desdemona's graces, was by the nearness in which Emilia stood to her, or by the acquaintance of the two women with each other, or even by his own acquaintance with her, is to put a limit to Iago's fertility of resource in lying and to Roderigo's capacity for being gulled, which I, for one, flatly refuse to set; given great capacity to be deceived on the one hand, and great, almost illimitable, capacity to deceive on the other, and it seems to me that we have all that is needed for an indefinite number of ways in which an explanation can be found of Iago's influence over Roderigo. Have we not a specimen of Iago's lying in that very First Scene? Does not Shakespeare, at the very outset, give us a cue to the way in which Iago has been tolling Roderigo on, by that lying description, every syllable of it false, of Othello, the regal Gentleman, evading three Venetian Noblemen with bombast circumstance! horribly stuffed with epithets of war? When Iago can thus lie about Othello, is it to be supposed that he needs such a trifle as the presence of his wife near Desdemona, in order to induce in Roderigo a belief of his unbounded influence with the Magnifico and his daughter? I am much afraid that if we give ourselves up to this supposition, the Gull will have companions.

Furthermore, Daniel interprets the gift of the handkerchief, not as a marriage gift, but as a betrothal gift, which Othello might have made long before his marriage, whereby ample opportunity is given for 'the hundred times' that Iago asked Emilia to steal it. When my fate would have me wive,' read the Qq (III, iv, 77), which will fully support Daniel's interpretation, and 'the hundred times' before marriage; but 'When my fate would have me wived,' read the Ff, which will not support Daniel's interpretation, and with it will tumble 'the hundred times' before marriage. I prefer the Ff, but Daniel, of course, will elect to follow the Qq, and there is no excellent reason why he should not, only somewhere along the pathway I think it would do no harm to rear a placard, bearing on it, 'Beware of using the word impossible in Shakespeare!'

Professor Wilson thus takes up the subject of Protracted Time.*

'TALBOYS. Long Time cunningly insinuates itself, serpentwise, throughout Desdemona's first recorded conversation with Cassio, at the beginning of III, iii, 25—the 'Dreadful Scene.' Thus: 'Assure thee, If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it,' and so on, down to line 33: 'Than give thy cause away.' This points to a protracted time in the future—and though announcing an intention merely, yet somehow it leaves an impression that Desdemona carries her intention into effect—that she does 'watch him tame,' does make his 'bed seem a school'—does 'intermingle everything she does with Cassio's suit.' Then Desdemona says: 'I have been talking with a suitor here, A man that languishes in your displeasure.' I cannot listen to that line, even now, without a feeling of the heart-sickness of protracted time—'hope deferred maketh the heart sick'—languishes / even unto death. I think of that fine line in Wordsworth: 'So fades—so languishes—grows dim, and dies.' Far in this Scene, Othello says to Iago: 'If more thou dost perceive, let me know more: Set on thy wife to observe.' Iago has not said that he had perceived anything, but Othello, greatly disturbed, speaks as if Iago had said that he had perceived a good deal; and we might believe that they had been a long time at Cyprus. Othello then says: 'This honest creature, doubtless, Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.' In all this, sir, we surely have a feeling of longish time. 'O curse of marriage! That we can call those delicate creatures ours—And not their appetites.' This is the language of a some-time married man—not of a man the morning after his nuptials.

'NORTH. The Handkerchief.

'TALBOYS. Ay—Emilia's words, III, iii, 338–344: 'I am glad I have found this napkin,' &c. Here we have long time, and no mistake. Iago has wooed her to steal it a hundred times! When and where? Since their arrival at Cyprus. The words naturally give us the impression of long time. In none of his soliloquies at Venice, or at Cyprus on their first arrival, has Iago once mentioned that Handkerchief as the chief instrument of his wicked design—and therefore Emilia's words imply weeks at Cyprus. Again, line 396: 'I slept the next night well.' Next night—night after night—many nights—many wedded nights—long time at Cyprus.

'NORTH. And then Cassio's dream.

'TALBOYS. 'I lay with Cassio—lately.' Where, but at Cyprus? 'Cursed fate! that gave thee to the Moor.' And on Othello going off in a rage about the handkerchief—what saith Desdemona? 'I ne'er saw this before.' These few words are full charged with long time.

'NORTH. They are. And Emilia's—'Tis not a year or two shows us a man.' True, that is a kind of general reflection—but a most foolish general reflection indeed, if made to a Wife weeping at her husband's harshness the day after marriage.

'TALBOYS. Emilia's 'year or two' cannot mean one day—it implies weeks—or months. Desdemona then says,—'Something, sure, of state, Either from Venice, or

* Blackwood's Magazine, April, 1850: Again I wish to say that these are not transcripts, but meagre abridgements, from which, however, I trust nothing essential is omitted.—ED.

'some unhatch'd practice,' &c. Does not that look like long time at Cyprus? Unlike the language of one who had herself arrived at Cyprus from Venice but the day before. And in continuation, Desdemona's 'such observances As fit the bridal,' III, iv, 171. And that thought brings sudden comfort to poor Desdemona, who says sweetly: 'Beshrew me much, Emilia,' &c., down to line 176. That is—why did I, a married woman some months old, forget that the honeymoon is gone, and that my Othello, hero as he is, is now—not a Bridegroom—but a husband? 'Men are not gods.'

'NORTH. And Bianca? She's a puzzler.

'TALBOYS. A puzzler, and something more. (See III, iv, 192-204.) Here the reproaches of Bianca to Cassio develop long time. For, besides his week's absence from her house, there is implied the preceding time necessary for contracting and habitually carrying on the illicit attachment. Bianca is a Cyprus householder; Cassio sups at her house; his intimacy, which has various expressions of continuance, has been formed with her there; he has found her, and grown acquainted with her there, not at Venice. I know it has been suggested that she was his mistress at Venice—that she came with the squadron from Venice; but for believing this there is here not the slightest ground. 'What! keep a week away?' would be a strange exclamation, indeed, from one who knew that he had been but a day on shore—had landed along with herself yesterday from the same ship—and had been a week cooped up from her in a separate berth. And Bianca, seeing the handkerchief, and being told to 'take me this work out,' cries—'To the felt absence now I feel a cause.' 'To the felt absence,' Eight score eight hours! the cause? Some new mistress at Cyprus—not forced separation at sea.

'NORTH. Then, Talboys, where Othello is listening to the conversation of Iago and Cassio, which he believes relates to his wife, Othello says, IV, i, 145. 'Have you SCORED ME?' That is, have you marked me for destruction, in order that you may marry my wife? Othello believes that Cassio is said to entertain an intention of marrying Desdemona, and infers that, as a preliminary, he must be put out of the way. 'This on the first day after marriage? No, surely—long time at Cyprus.'

'TALBOYS. Iago says to Cassio: 'This is his second fit: he had one yesterday.' This is a lie—but Cassio believes it. Cassio could not have believed it, and therefore Iago would not have told it, had 'yesterday' been the day of the triumphant, joyful, and happy arrival at Cyprus. Assuredly, Cassio knew that Othello had had no fit that day; that day he was Othello's lieutenant—Iago but his Ancient—and Iago could know nothing of any fits that Cassio knew not of—therefore—Long Time.

'NORTH. 'For I will make him tell the tale anew, Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when, He hath—and is again to—' He does so—and Othello believes what he hears Cassio tell of Bianca to be of Desdemona. Madness any way we take it—but madness possible only—on long time at Cyprus.

'TALBOYS. Then, sir, 'They do command him home, Deputing Cassio in his government.' What are we to make of that?

'NORTH. The Recall, except after considerable time, would make the policy of the Senate frivolous—a thing Shakespeare never does, for the greatness of political movements lies everywhere for a support to the strength and power of his tragical fable. Half that we know of Othello out of the Scenes is, that he is the trusted General of the Senate. What gravity his esteem with you derives hence, and can we bear to think of him superseded without cause? Had Lodovico, who brings the new commission, set off the day after Othello from Venice? No. You imagine an intercourse, which has required time, between Othello, since his appointment, and the Senate.

'Why, in all the world, do they thus suddenly depose him, and put Cassio in his place? 'You cannot very well think that the next measure of the Senate, after entrusting the 'command of Cyprus, their principal Island, to their most tried General, in most criti- 'cal and perilous times, was to displace him ere they hear a word from him. They 'have not had time to know that the Turkish Fleet is wrecked and scattered, unless 'they sit behind Scenes in the Green-room.

'TALBOYS. We must conclude that the Senate must give weeks or months to this 'New Governor ere interfering with him.—To recall him before they know he has 'reached Cyprus—nay, to send a ship after him next day—or a day or two following 'his departure—would make these 'most potent, grave, and reverend Signors,' enig- 'mas, and the Doge an Idiot. What though a steamer had brought tidings back to 'Venice that the Turks had been 'banged' and 'drowned?' That was not a sufficient 'reason to order Othello back before he could have well set his foot on shore, or taken 'more than a look at the state of the fortifications, in case the Ottoman should fit out 'another fleet.

'NORTH. Then mark Lodovico's language. He asks, seeing Othello strike his 'wife—as well he may—'Is it his use?' Or did the letters 'work upon his blood, 'and new-create this fault?' And Iago answers, 'It is not honesty in me to speak 'what I have seen and known.' Lodovico says, 'The noble Moor, whom our Senate 'call all in all sufficient.' Then they have not quarrelled with him, at least—nor lost 'their good opinion of him! Iago answers, 'He is much changed?' What, in a day? 'And again—'It is not honesty in me to speak what I have seen and known.' What, 'in a day? Lodovico comes evidently to Othello after a long separation—such as 'affords room for a moral transformation; and Iago's words—lies as they are—and 'seen to be lies by the most unthinking person—yet refer to much that has passed in 'an ample time—to a continued course of procedure. But in all the Play, nothing is 'so conclusive of long time as IV, ii, 3–14. If all this relates to their residence at 'Cyprus, it indicates many weeks. Then a word about Emilia. Now, consider, first, 'her character. She seems not very principled, not very chaste. Yet how strong her 'affection for Desdemona, and her faith in her purity! She witnesses for her, and she 'dies for her! I ask, how long did that affection and that opinion take to grow? a few 'days at Venice, and a week while they were sea-sick aboard ship? No. Weeks— 'months. A gentle lady once made to me that fine remark,—'Emilia has not much 'worth in herself, but is raised into worth by her contact with Desdemona—into heroic 'worth!' 'I care not for thy sword—I'll make thee known, though I lost twenty 'lives.' The impure dying a voluntary martyr for the pure is to the highest degree 'affecting—is the very manner of Shakespeare, to express a principal character by its 'influence on subordinate ones—has its own moral sublimity; but more than all, for 'our purpose, it witnesses time. Love, and Faith, and Fidelity, won from her in whom 'these virtues are to be first created! Othello, in his wrath, calls Emilia 'a closet-lock- 'and-key of villainous secrets: and yet she'll kneel and pray; I have seen her do't.' 'Where and when? It could only have been at Cyprus; and such language denotes a 'somewhat long attendance there on Desdemona. 'Some of your function, mistress,' 'renewed to Emilia—when, after conversing with Desdemona, Othello is going out— 'is his treatment of one whom he supposes to have been serviceable to his wife's and 'Cassio's amour. Where? There, only there, in Cyprus, by all witnessing, palpably. 'She could not before. He speaks to her as professional in such services, therefore 'long dealing in them; but this all respects this one intrigue, not her previous life. 'The wicked energy of the forced attribution vanishes, if this respects anything but her helpfulness to his wife and her paramour, and at Cyprus—there—only there. Nothing 'points to a farther back looking suspicion. Iago's 'thousand times committed' can 'only lengthen out the stay at Cyprus. Othello still believes that she once loved him—that she has fallen to corruption. Could he have the most horrible, revolting, and 'loathsome of all thoughts, that he wedded her impure? and not a hint given of that 'most atrocious pang? Incredible—impossible! I can never believe, if Shakespeare 'intended an infidelity taking precedency of the marriage, that he would not by word 'or by hint have said so.' [In answer to this last assertion, Daniel urges, as is mentioned above, that 'the very foundation on which Iago builds up Othello's jealousy' is the relationship existing before marriage between Cassio, Desdemona, and the Moor himself; 'surely,' says Daniel (p. 229), 'this is a pretty strong hint, and Othello, in IV, 'ii, 103,' where he first directly accuses Desdemona of unchastity, 'gives another pretty strong hint too.'] 'Lastly, the wedding sheets were reserved; they had been 'laid by for weeks—months—time long enough to give a saddest character to the 'bringing them out again—a serious, ominous meaning—disturbed from the quietude, 'the sanctity, of their sleep by a wife's mortal presentiment that they may be her shroud.'

In that storehouse of information, The Shakespeare Key (p. 217), COWDEN-CLARKE gives the following references to Long Time, which were not noticed by Wilson: I, iii, 283–328; I, iii, 419; II, i, 32; II, i, 89–91; III, iii, 64–75; Ib., 496; Ib., 537; III, iv, 130. On this last passage is the following note: 'It is in this brief Scene that so much lapse of time is implied; for Cassio speaks of his 'former suit,' and Desdemona sends for him to inform him of the progress she has made in her advocacy on his behalf, although there is no absolutely-stated interval since she begged Othello to let Cassio come and plead for recall, and her husband refused to allow this return to be made either 'to-night,' 'to-morrow,' or within the next 'three days.' So systematically is Long Time implied while Short Time is preserved, that it is impossible not to believe in this having been the author's thorough intention and artistic plan.' Also, III, iv, 145; IV, ii, 163; Ib., 182; Ib., 207–212.

Even in addition to these enumerated by Wilson and Cowden-Clarke, it seems to me that a few other instances which intimate Long Time may be gleaned. Thus, II, ii, 345, on the very first evening in Cyprus, after Cassio's disgrace, Iago speaks of Othello's having given himself up to the contemplation of Desdemona's graces to such an extent that the general's wife is now the general; such an assertion seems to require a long course of marked attention, in public and in private, to justify it. Again, Roderigo was a man of wealth; in the pursuit of his pleasure he could afford to buy jewels rich enough to half corrupt a votarist; before he left Venice he may be supposed to have fulfilled his promise to Iago, and to have converted all his land into money; his last words were, 'I'll go sell all my land.' Iago speaks of the amount of his gold and jewels as large; and yet he has been in Cyprus but a few hours before he tells Iago that his money is almost spent, that he has not more than enough to last him to get back to Venice; and in referring to himself as hunting in a chase we have visions of a lavish expenditure, day after day, and week after week; nor does Iago diminish this impression when he speaks of the dilatory time and of the patience which their work demands. Again, Cassio expresses to Desdemona a fear that the policy which obliges Othello to treat him coldly may last so long that Othello will forget him.

This question of Shakespeare's use of these Two Times is so important (of more importance in this than in almost any other play) that it is incumbent on us to give good heed to Wilson's explanation of it, whereof the substance I have here endeavoured to extract.

'The usefulness of the Two Times is palpable from first to last—of the Short Time
 'for maintaining the tension of the passion—of the Long for a thousand general needs.
 'Thus Bianca must be used for convincing Othello very potently, positively, unanswer-
 'ably. But she cannot be used without supposing a protracted intercourse between 'her and Cassio. Iago's dialogue with him falls to the ground if the acquaintance 'began yesterday. But superincumbent over all is the necessity of our not knowing 'that Iago begins the Temptation, and that Othello extinguishes the Light of his Life,
 'all in one day. And observe how this concatenation of the passionate scenes operates.
 'Let the Entrances of Othello be four—A, B, C, D. You feel the close connection of 'A with B, of B with C, of C with D. You feel the coherence, the nextness, and all 'the force of the impetuous Action and Passion resulting. But the logically-consequent
 'near connection of A with C, and much more with D, as again of B with D, you do 'not feel. Why? When you are at C, and feeling the pressure of B upon C, you have 'lost sight of the pressure of A upon B. At each entrance you go back one step—you 'do not go back two. The suggested intervals continually keep displacing to distances
 'in your memory the formerly felt connections. This could not so well happen in real 'life, where the relations of time are strictly bound upon your memory, though some'thing of it happens when passion devours memory. But in fiction, the conception
 'being loosely held, and shadowy, the feat becomes easily practicable. Thus the Short 'Time tells for the support of the Passion, along with the Long Time, by means of vir-'tuous installations from the hand or wing of Oblivion. From one to two you feel no
 'intermission—from two to three you feel none—from three to four you feel none; but 'I defy any man to say that from one to four he has felt none. I defy any man to say 'honestly that 'sitting at the Play' he has kept count from one to four. Besides every 'past Scene, constituting a marked moment in the progress of the Play, has the effect for
 'the Poet, as well as for you, of protracting the time in retrospect,—throwing everything 'that has passed further back. The goings-out and re-enterings of Othello have a 'strangely deluding effect—they disconnect the time more than you can think—and all
 'the changes of persons on the stage, all shiftings of scenes and droppings of curtains,
 'break and dislocate the time to your imagination, till you do not in the least
 'know where you are. In this laxity of your conception, all hints of extended time
 'sink in and spring up, like that fungus which, on an apt soil, in a night grows to a 'foot diameter. Shakespeare, we have seen, in his calmer constructions, shows, in a 'score of ways, weeks, months; that is therefore the true time, or call it the historical
 'time. Hurried himself, and hurrying you on the torrent of passion, he forgets time,
 'and a false show of time, to the utmost contracted, arises. I do not know whether 'he did not perceive this false exhibition of time, or perceiving, he did not care. But 'we all must see a reason, and a cogent one, why he should not let in the markings of 'protraction upon his dialogues of the Seduced and the Seducer. If you ask me, How 'stood the time in the mind of Shakespeare? I answer, I do not know. The ques'tion splits itself into two: first, 'How did he project the time?' Second, 'How did
 'he conceive it in the progress of the Play?' My impression is, that he projected 'extended time. If so, did he or did he not know that in managing the Seduction he 'departed from that design by contracting it into a Day? Did he deliberately entertain
 'a double design? If he did, how did he excuse this to himself? Did he say, 'A 'stage necessity, or a theatrical or dramatic necessity'—namely, that of sustaining at
 'the utmost possible reach of altitude the tragical passion and interest—'requires the 'precipitation of the passion from the first breathing of suspicion—the 'Ha! Ha! I 'like not that,' of the suggesting Fiend—to the consecrated 'killing myself, to die upon

‘a kiss!’—all in the course of fifteen hours—and this tragical vehemency, this impetuous energy, this torrent of power I will have; at the same time I have many reasons—amongst them the general probability of the action—for a dilated time; and I, being a magician of the first water, will so dazzle, blind, and bewilder my auditors that they shall accept the double time with a double belief—shall feel the unstayed rushing on of action and passion, from the first suggestion to the cloud of deaths—and yet shall remain with a conviction that Othello was for months Governor of Cyprus—they being on the whole unreflective and uncritical persons?’

TALBOYS. And, after all, who willingly criticises his dreams or his pleasures?

NORTH. And the Audience of the Globe Theatre shall not—for ‘I hurl my dazzling spells into the spungy air,’ and ‘the spell shall sit when the curtain has fallen.’ Shakespeare might, in the consciousness of power, say this. For this is that which he has—knowingly or unknowingly—done. Unknowingly? Perhaps—himself borne on by the successively rising waves of his work. For you see, Talboys, with what prolonged and severe labour we two have arrived at knowing the reality of the case which now lies open to us in broad light. We have needed time and pains, and the slow settling of our understandings, to unwind the threads of delusion in which we were encoiled and entailed. If a strange and unexplained power could undeniably so beguile us—a possibility of which, previously to this examination, we never have dreamt, how do we warrant that the same dark, nameless, mysterious power shall not equally blind the ‘Artificer of Fraud’? There are the Two Times, the Long and the Short; and each exerts upon you its especial virtue. I can believe that Shakespeare unconsciously did what Necessity claimed,—the impetuous motion on, on, on of the Passion,—the Long Time asked by the successive events; the forces that swayed him, each in its turn, its own way. And put up with these Two Times we must,—one for our sympathy with Othello’s tempest of heart,—one for the verisimilitude of the transaction.

‘Illusion, a constituent of Poetry, is WHEN THE SAME THING IS, AND IS NOT. Pa—God bless him!—makes believe to be a Lion. He roars, and springs upon his prey. He at once believes himself to be a Lion, and knows himself to be Pa. Just so with the Shakespeare Club—many millions strong. The two times at Cyprus are there; the reason for the two times—to wit, probability of the Action, storm of the Passion—is there; and if any wiseacre should ask, ‘How do we manage to stand the known together-proceeding of two times?’ the wiseacre is answered—‘We don’t stand it—for we know nothing about it. We are held in a confusion and a delusion about the time.’ We have effect of both—distinct knowledge of neither. We have suggestions to our Understanding of extended time—we have movements of our Will by precipitated time. Does any man by possibility ask for a scheme and an exposition, by which it shall be made luminous to the smallest capacity how we are able distinctly all along to know, and bear in mind, that the preceding transactions are accomplished in a day, and at the same time and therewithal, distinctly all along to know and bear in mind that the same transactions proceeding before our eyes take about three months to accomplish? Then, I am obliged—like the musicians, when they are told that, if they have any music that may not be heard, Othello desires them to play it—to make answer, ‘Sir, we have none such.’ It is to ask that a deception shall be not only seemingly but really a truth! If you ask me—which judiciously you may—what or how much did the Swan of Avon intend and know of all this astonishing legerdemain, when he sang thus astonishingly? Was he, the juggler, juggled by aerial spirits,—as Puck or Ariel? I put my finger to my lips, and nod on him to do the same; and if I am asked, ‘Shall a modern artificer of the Drama, having the same pressure from 'within and from without, adopt this resource of evasion?' I can answer with great confidence, 'He had better look before he leap.'

'TALBOYS. Assume, sir, that Shakespeare knew what he was doing.

'NORTH. Then the Double Time is to be called—an Imposture.

'TALBOYS. Oh, my dear sir,—oh, oh!

'NORTH. A good-natured Juggler, my dear Talboys, has cheated your eyes. You ask him to show you how he did it. He does the trick slowly—and you see. 'Now, "good Conjuror, do it slowly, and cheat us." 'I can't. I cheat you by doing it quickly. 'To be cheated, you must not see what I do; but you must think that you see.' When we inspect the Play in our closets the Juggler does his trick slowly. We sit at the Play, and he does it quick. When you see the trick again done the right way,—that is, quick,—you cannot conceive how it is that you no longer see that which you saw when it was done slowly! Again the impression returns of a magical feat.

'TALBOYS. I doubt, if we saw Othello perfectly acted, whether all our study would preserve us from the returning imposture.'

For me, after this revelation, 'the rest is silence.' The only time when Wilson does not take me with him is when he suggests that Shakespeare's use of these Two Times may have been unconscious. The more I study Shakespeare, the more profoundly do I become impressed with the evidences on every hand of his consummate art. From the bias to the world's estimate of him which Milton gave us we have scarcely yet recovered. There are not wanting those who even at this late day believe that Shakespeare warbled his native wood notes wild with as much unconsciousness as does a song-sparrow. It will be many a long day yet, I think, before we exhaust the evidences of his myriad-sided art. There can be no subtle effect produced on us by the interlacing of these Two Times which Shakespeare himself did not feel, and did not forecast.

Daniel, however, does not believe in these Two Times, and is inclined to attribute the discrepancies, which a disbelief in them detects, to the imperfect state of the text, an asylum always at hand and wide open as a retreat from any and every Shakespearian difficulty; lest I do injustice to a scholar whose opinion is entitled to more weight than mine, let me quote his words:

DANIEL (New Shakspeare Soc. Trans., 1877-79, Part ii, p. 231): 'But though I think it must be admitted that long time at Venice before marriage is an element worthy of consideration as affording some explanation of many otherwise simply impossible incidents of the play, I am forced to admit that this explanation is far from satisfactory. Incidents such as the recall of Othello by the Senate before it could be known that he had landed in Cyprus are not affected by it in the least. Long time at Cyprus after marriage is absolutely necessary for the probability of the plot; but before I seek refuge in the . . . inexplicable mystery of 'double time,' I should like to be convinced that the author himself did not provide it. I say, with Professor Wilson, that 'with his creative powers, if he was determined to have Two Calendar Months from the First of May to the First of July, and then in One Day distinctly the first suspicion sown and the murder done, nothing could have been easier to him than to have imagined, and indicated, and hurried over, the required gap of time.' Long familiarity with Shakespeare's work has convinced me, as it must have convinced most students, that we cannot with certainty affirm that any of his plays have reached us in the state in which they left his hands: in some cases their corruption and mutilation for stage purposes can be proved to demonstration, and it is quite possible that in Othello some scenes may have been struck out and others so run together as to confuse the time-plot originally laid down by the author. The links in the chain of time, the absence of which so startles the reader, would not be, and indeed are not, missed in the visible action on the stage; but we should not, therefore, rashly jump to the conclusion that they never existed, and therefore that the author deliberately designed an impossible plot.'

FLEAY (Robinson's Epitome of Literature, 15th June, 1879) proposes a third solution, which partakes somewhat of the nature of Daniel's, in so far as it suggests a division of the Acts different from that in the QqFf. Convertite as I am to Wilson's Double Time, I find answers therein, in the foregoing pages, to Fleay's arguments. After a rapid review of the First and Second Acts, and Scenes i, ii, and iii of Act Third, Fleay proceeds: 'So far the commentators and I are agreed, but I do not agree that a considerable time must have elapsed since the landing, to render the dialogue intelligible. They allege, for instance, that Roderigo's money could hardly have been spent on the first night of his arrival. Why not? The voyage has been tempestuous, and, unless I quite misinterpret the allusions to it, has occupied not less than a week. Roderigo is just the man to empty his purse in one night's gaming, and Iago would not procrastinate in that matter. Moreover, he may have been spending heavily at Venice before the marriage.'

'Iago has asked Emilia a hundred times to steal the 'hankercher.' When? says Daniel. On the voyage, surely.' [Daniel, in a foot-note, p. 231, says, 'Mr. E. H. Pickersgill calls attention to the time occupied by the voyage to Cyprus as suggesting a possible explanation with reference to Emilia's 'hundred times.'']

'Iago says: 'I lay with Cassio lately.' But Cassio has not been abed in Cyprus,' says Daniel again. And what then? Does this over-careful critic take this statement for a narrative of fact? or does he imply that Shakespeare must have made all his villains lie so carefully as never to clash with possibility?

'Up to this point the arguments for a long residence in Cyprus seem to me overstrained and futile: and at this point comes in the same question I raised as to A Midsummer Night's Dream: 'are the present divisions into acts to be regarded as 'authentic'? Why should they be, since they can in no instance be traced to Shakespeare's lifetime? I would therefore end the Third Act here, and allow a week's interval between this Scene and the next. There is no reason for the immediate conclusion of the Scenes, except Wilson's opinion, regarded as cogent by Daniel, that Othello would not have let an hour elapse before inquiring about the 'hankercher.' Perhaps Othello would not: but Othello under Iago's inspiration probably would. And, besides, we have the positive statement of Bianca that Cassio has been away for a week; and, moreover, time is absolutely necessary for the Senate to hear of the loss of the Turkish fleet, and to send to recall Othello. These are positive integral parts of the plan, not to be neglected in any scheme.'

'And why are scholiasts' opinion of what their author should, must, or ought to have done, to be preferred to the direct allegations of the text? In IV, i, again, we hear that Othello had a fit yesterday. This at once disproves Daniel's notion that Acts III, IV, V, all take place on one day, and gives us a reason for Othello's delay in inquiring about the 'hankercher.' Othello, under Iago's guidance, has, it seems to me, been waiting (after III, iii) to let Desdemona betray herself: after some days she does so by a repeated application on Cassio's behalf (III, iv, 18). The first application had been utilized by Iago to excite Othello, and so produced the first fit. But this is conjectural. My main object is not to add more guesses to Shakespearian criticism, but to submit the following scheme of time for this play,—not founded on my own prejudications, but taken from the text itself:

'Act I, Sc. i, ii, iii.—One day. Interval for voyage. Act II, Sc. i, ii, iii.—One day.
'Act III, Sc. i, ii, iii.—One day (Sunday). Interval of a week, at least. Act IV,
'Sc. i, ii, iii; Act V, Sc. i, ii, iii.—One day. Where my Act IV begins with what 'is now Act III, Sc. iv, and my Act V with the present Act IV, Sc. iii.'

THE SOURCE OF THE PLOT

POPE: The Story is taken from Cynthio's Novels. THEOBALD: Cinthio Giraldi seems to have designed his Tale as a Document to young Ladies against disproportioned Marriages: di non se accompagnare con huomo, cui la Natura, & il Cielo, & il modo della Vita disgiunge da noi; that they should not link themselves to such, against whom Nature, Providence, and a different way of Living have interposed a Bar. Our Poet inculcates no such Moral; but rather, that a Woman may fall in Love with the Virtues and shining Qualities of a Man, and therein overlook the Difference of Complexion and Colour.

FARMER: I have seen a French translation of Cynthio, by Gabriel Chappuys, Paris, 1584. This is not a faithful one, and I suspect through this medium the work came into English. [This translation is reprinted by FRANÇOIS-VICTOR HUGO in his edition of Shakespeare, Paris, 1868, vol. v, pp. 443–458.—ED.]

✱ SIMROCK (Quellen des Shakespeare, &c., Berlin, 1831, iii, 181) ridicules the idea that it is necessary to find a translation into English of Giraldi Cinthio. 'As if,' he says in scorn, 'it would not have been mere child's play for such a genius as Shakespeare to have mastered Italian and French! . . . It is as probable that the story of Cinthio 'was founded in fact as in fiction. Waiblinger, in the Taschenbuch, Penelope, 1831, 'asserts that there is an Italian ballad on this subject of Othello, but we have looked 'for it in vain in Wolff's Egeria. At all events, the style of the "novel" renders it not 'unlikely that it originated in some popular romance, such as minstrels, who wandered 'around the country with painted placards, were wont to sing. This "novel" belongs 'to the best of Cinthio's, whose skill as a narrator we do not highly prize.' [While declining to accept Rawdon Brown's hypothesis as set forth in his Marin Sanuto (see post), Simrock in his 2d edition in 1870 expressed himself as not doubting but that] 'the Moor was an historic character, not a negro, whose colour had been miscon-' ceived through a mistaken interpretation of his name.'

KNIGHT: It is not improbable that [Cinthio's novel] is of Oriental origin; the revenge of the Moor, as there described, is of that fierce and barbarous character which is akin to the savage manner in which supposed incontinence is revenged amongst the Arabs. The painfully affecting tale of The Three Apples, in The Thousand and One Nights, is an example of this; and, further, there is a similarity between the stolen apple and the stolen handkerchief. The malignity of the slave in the Arabian tale, too, is almost as motiveless as that of Iago; [but the Iago of Cinthio was not motiveless.—ED.]

COLLIER: Shakespeare may have read Cinthio's story in the original language; it is highly probable that he was sufficiently acquainted with Italian for the purpose.

[In 1837, RAWDON BROWN published, at Venice, Ragguagli sulla Vita e sulle Opere di Marin Sanuto, &c., wherein (i, 226–235) he conjectured that a certain 'Christophal Moro,' a 'Luogotenente di Cipro,' who returned from Cyprus in 1508 after having lost his wife, was the original of the Moor of Venice of Giraldi Cinthio. In the incidents of this warrior's life Brown found sufficient similarity to the novel of Cinthio to lead him to suppose that the story was popular enough to have supplied the details to Shakespeare at the hands of some of the members, high or low, attached to the Italian Embassy in London. In the name Barbarigo, of the Secretaries of the Embassy from 1610 to 1616, Brown discerns the name Brabantio; in Gratiano, a certain Gradenigo; in Montano, a Mocenigo, &c. The theory in this shape depends for its support on a date for the composition of Othello quite as late as that assigned to it by Warburton or Chalmers; and as we have relinquished all dates after 1604, this theory, I fear, must be abandoned with them. Its author, however, did not desert it; he subsequently returned to it, and this time with a date as early as 1603; see his letter in The Academy, post. One fact, in connection with it, is certainly curious, and that is that in the Barbarigo family, as proved by an Item in a Will, there actually was a slave-girl named Barbara. Brown sums up his theory, which finely witnesses to his knowledge of early Venetian History, as follows (p. 234): 'I suppose that there was a mystery 'connected with the death of Cristofal Moro, the "Luogotenente" of Cyprus, out of 'which was made a romance by mingling fact and fancy. This romance, passed over 'to England years and years afterwards, was translated and read by Shakespeare. Venice was the fashion; and from a romance of Venetian history The Moor of Venice 'became an English tragedy.'—ED.

KLEIN (Geschichte des Dramas. Das Italienische Drama, ii, 384) finds a resemblance which he deems quite striking between several passages in Othello and Ludovico Dolce's Marianna (first acted in 1565), and suggests that Shakespeare while working on his tragedy may have had the Italian in view.

In Marianna there is one situation which resembles Othello. Salome, Herod's sister, has secretly accused Marianna, Herod's wife, of having bribed his cup-bearer to poison him. Erode (Herod) cross-questions the cup-bearer, who confirms the charge. Like Othello, Herod demands proofs. 'The Cup-bearer envelops Erode's soul in his 'snaky coils, until, like Iago, he finds the chance to dart his poisonous fang. 'They 'who brood on crime,' he hisses; 'play the game so close that one hand knows not 'what the other does.' Erode is determined that the cup-bearer shall repeat the accusation in the presence of the Queen, and Marianna is called.

Erode addresses her:

'Marianna, io torrei perder il regno,
E insieme rimaner mendico e nudo
Prima, ch'aver cagion, come n' ho troppa
D' imputarti, o crudel, delitto alcuno.'

To which Marianna replies:

'Se delitto è d' avervi amato sempre
Con quello amor, ch' amar si dee consorte,
Et onorato, come mio Signore,
Avete alta cagion d' odiarmi ognora.'

('Marianna, I would gladly lose my kingdom, And remain for aye a beggar and unclad, Rather than have cause, as but too much I have, To impute to thee, O cruel one, any crime.' The parallel passage, which will occur to every one, is, of course: 'Had it pleas'd Heaven,' &c., IV, ii, 57. Marianna's reply is in the same scene: 'If it be a crime to have always loved you With that love with which one should love a husband, And to have honoured you as my lord, You have deep cause to hate me always.')

While noting these parallelisms, and suggesting, as I have said, that Shakespeare may have used Marianna as a lay figure in draping his tragedy, Klein acknowledges the grander scale on which Shakespeare worked and the loftier key in which his drama is pitched; whereby 'the wild, gloomy, hellish temperament of a Herod is transfigured into the lofty, noble, clear soul of a grand-hearted, g-aleless man.' To me it would be impossible in Shakespeare's case to infer any familiarity with Dolce, even were the parallelisms many times more numerous and more exact. But Klein's opinions on dramatic subjects are always to be respectfully heard, and treated with the deference due to an antagonist whose weapon, were he living, would be 'the whole tree of knowledge torn up by the roots.'

In The Academy (9th January, 1875) appeared the letter above referred to, written in Venice, from RAWDON BROWN, which gives interesting and fuller details from early Venetian documents concerning the bearers of the name of 'Moro,' in one of whom, Christopher, as we have seen, the writer finds the original Othello. After giving some proofs of credulity, on the part of the Venetian Senate, in stories quite as marvellous as any in Othello's travels' history, Brown proceeds: 'Fronting the summit of the "Giants' Stair," where the Doges of Venice were crowned, there are still visible four shields "spotted with mulberries" ("strawberries" in the description of Desdemona's handkerchief), indicating that that part of the palace portal on which they are carved was terminated in the reign of Christopher Moro, whose insignia are three mulberries sable and three bends azure on a field argent; the word "Moro" signifying in Italian either mulberry-tree or blackamoor.

'In July, 1469, this Doge . . . Christopher Moro effected indirectly the annexation of Cyprus to Venice, and in May, 1505, as a reward for military and diplomatic services, the Grand Council elected his namesake—Christopher Moro, son of Lorenzo—lord-lieutenant of the island, where he remained, after his term of service had expired, and by reason of his being thus accidentally on the spot, he was appointed to defend it from an hypothetical attack which, according to report, was meditated either by the Soldan, the Sofi, or the Turk. This statement exists in the summary of a dispatch from Christopher Moro's successor, the Lord-Lieutenant Lorenzo Giustinian, who adds that he and the counsellors had "elected Christofal Moro captain of the fourteen ships detained by them for fear;" and it is a curious coincidence that the tenour of the official advices from Cyprus corresponds precisely with the causes assigned for the subsequent dispatch of Othello from Venice for the defence of that island, as in Act I, Scene iii, of Shakespeare's tragedy. And, finally, the return of Christopher Moro to Venice is recorded in Marin Sanuto's Diaries thus: A. D. 1508, October 22. "Item. The ship from Syria arrived, having on board Christopher Moro, on his return from the Lord-Lieutenancy of Cyprus. 1508, October 26. In the morning there presented himself to the College, Christopher Moro, returned Lord-Lieutenant from Cyprus, and elected Captain in Candia, wearing his beard for the death of his wife [Desdemona?] on her way from Cyprus, as heard previously, and he made his report." . . . To return to Christopher Moro. He was decidedly a lady's man, as according to Barbaro's genealogies he was married four times. Nor should it be forgotten that the tale, whether told by Cinthio or Shakespeare, must have its incidents dated between 1486, when Catherine Cornaro abdicated in favour of Venice, until the fall of Famagosta, in 1571. Further, Moro's military exploits in the Romagna, against Cæsar Borgia, and subsequently during the League of Cambrai, as recorded by the Venetian historians, and by an inscription which once existed in the Palazzo Pretorio at Padua, would warrant his saying of himself, 'I have done the State some service, and they know it.'

'Cinthio's novel, it may be added, would never have sufficed Shakespeare for his Othello. The Italian described Desdemona's handkerchief as a 'nose-napkin' (pannicello da naso), and says it was most delicately wrought, but does not give the design, which reveals the whole thing. Had he called things by their right names, the sale of his book in Venice would have been prohibited. . . . Among the Venetians in England from 1603 to 1615 there were the secretary Scaramelli, and the ambassadors Duodo, Correr, Francesco Contarini, and Foscarini, from one or other of them, or from some of their attendants, Shakespeare—who may, perhaps, have been struck by some English translation of Cinthio's tales—might easily have ascertained the true story of his Othello.'

In The Academy of 20 February, 1875, E. H. PICKERSGILL replied to Rawdon Brown, and among other arguments gives a shrewd reason for Shakespeare's conversion (if it be a conversion) of the 'three mulberries sable' into 'strawberries.' By the assumption that the "strawberries" were Othello's insignia at all, we should involve Shakespeare in a gross inconsistency. For, of course, in that case, Cassio, when he found the handkerchief dropped in his bed-chamber, could not have been in doubt respecting its ownership; he would have recognized it, at once, as the property of Desdemona. In Cinthio's novel, Cassio actually does recognize it, not by any insignia upon it, but by the curious inwrought "Moresco work." Furthermore, Pickersgill asks: 'If Shakespeare was acquainted with the historical Moro's military exploits in the Romagna, why does he prefer to mention Rhodes, Cyprus, and Aleppo as the scenes of the exploits of his Othello?' The most conclusive argument against Brown's theory Pickersgill finds in the actual date, settled by Reed, of Othello's dispatch to Cyprus [see p. 357], which was sixty years after Christopher Moro's governorship of the island.

Lastly, in The Athenæum, 18 September, 1875, C. ELLIOT BROWNE asks: 'Was Shakespeare indebted for any part of the conception of Othello to the story of Sampiero, the famous Corsican leader? . . . The hint was thrown out more than a century ago by the anonymous writer of a paper in Dodsley's Museum, when replying to some of Rymer's criticisms upon this drama. He said (in substance), why this continual cry about the unnaturalness of Othello, when there is evidence from real life that a brave soldier, whose character resembled in many points that which Shakespeare has given to the Moor, being placed in similar circumstances of terrible perplexity, behaved almost exactly as Othello is represented to have done?'

'There is some resemblance between the careers of Sampiero and Othello. Sampiero, or, as the name is more correctly written, San Pietro di Bastelica, was an Italian adventurer in the service of France, who had arrived at high distinction by conduct and valour; and he had married, against the wish of all her relatives, the beautiful Corsican heiress, Vanina d'Ornano. . . . In 1563, Sampiero, leaving his wife in France, went to Constantinople to beg assistance for the Corsicans from the Turks. During this absence his Genoese enemies are said to have tampered with some servants of his wife's household, and caused a report to reach Constantinople that she was living on too intimate terms with his secretary, Antonio. Immediately returning to France, Sampiero came up with his wife at Aix; and after a scene which all accounts agree to have been characterized on his part by a strange mixture of passionate tenderness and brutal ferocity, and on hers by gentle, uncomplaining submission, he asked pardon upon his knees for the deed he was about to commit, and deliberately strangled her with her handkerchief. It is proper to add, that there is in existence another version of the affair, in which the cause of Vanina's fate is attributed to her husband's indig

'nation at some secret advances which she had made to the Genoese government for the purpose of obtaining his pardon, thus excluding altogether the motive of jealousy.

'Although wanting in several important points of resemblance, this story comes much nearer to the murder-scene of the drama than that of the tale in the "Hecatommithi." . . . This Sampiero tragedy made so great a noise in Europe, that it is almost impossible to believe that Shakespeare would be unacquainted with it.'

The Hecatommithi of GIOUANBATTISTA GIRALDI CINTHIO are divided into Ten Decades, each Decade devoted to a particular subject, whereto ten Stories or Novels furnish the appropriate illustrations.

The Third Decade deals with 'The Unfaithfulness of Husbands and of Wives,' and is dedicated, let us hope with permission, to the 'Illvstrissima Signora la Signora Laura Eustochia da Este.'

The Seventh Novel in this Decade is here faithfully reprinted from the original edition, issued 'In Venegia M·D·LXVI.' Here and there the ampersands are changed to e and et; and u is changed to v.

A translation of this Novel appeared in MRS LENOX's Shakespear Illustrated, 1753, vol. i, p. 101. Again in 1795, it was translated by WOLSTENHOLME PARR; this translation was reprinted by Collier in the first edition of Shakespeare's Library, and again by W. C. Hazlitt in the second. Lastly, in 1855, by JOHN EDWARD TAYLOR. This translation is here reprinted on the same page with the Italian.

It was translated into German by WIELAND, and appeared in the Teutsche Mercur, Weimar, 1773, p. 63. Again by ECHTERMAYER, HENSCHEL, and SIMROCK in Quellen der Shakespeare, Berlin, 1831.

Of the author, Giraldi Cinthio, TAYLOR, in the Introduction to his Translation, says that he 'was a nobleman of Ferrara, and a Professor of Philosophy in that city;' and adds that 'it is somewhat amusing to read the terms in which he speaks of the composition of his work, in connection with his 'grave studies of philosophy,'—by the light of which, the fount and origin of laudable habits, and of all honest discipline, and likewise of every virtue, I have sought to perfect my work, which is wholly directed, with much variety of examples, to censure vicious actions and to praise honest ones,—to make men fly from vice and embrace virtue.' What could the reader expect from this poem (which is found totidem verbis in all the books of this school), but a work of untarnished purity and morality?—all I can say is, he would be disappointed'

DECA TERZA

Un Capitano Moro piglia per mogliera una cittadina Venetiana, un suo Alfieri l'accusa di adulterio al Marito; cerca, che l'Alfieri uccida colui, ch' egli credea l'Adultero; il Capitano uccide la Moglie, è accusato dall' Alfieri, non confessa il Moro, ma essendovi chiari inditij, è bandito; Et lo scelerato Alfieri, credendo nuocere ad altri, procaccia a sè la morte miseramente. [A Moorish Captain takes to wife a Venetian Dame, and his Ancient accuses her of adultery to her husband; it is planned that the Ancient is to kill him whom he believes to be the adulterer; the Captain kills the woman, is accused by the Ancient, the Moor does not confess, but after the infliction of extreme torture, is banished; and the wicked Ancient, thinking to injure others, provided for himself a miserable death.]

NOVELLA VII.

FU già in Venezia un Moro, molto valoroso, il quale, per essere prò della persona, e per haver dato segno, nelle cose della guerra, di gran prudenza, e di vivace ingegno, era molto caro a que' signori, i quali nel dar premio a gli atti virtuosi avanzano quante Repubbliche fur mai. Avenne, che una virtuosa Donna, di maravigliosa bellezza, Disdemona chiamata, tratta non da appetito donnesco, ma dalla virtù del Moro, s'innamorò di lui: et egli, vinto dalla bellezza, e dal nobile pensiero della Donna, similmente di lei si accese, et ebbero tanto favorevole Amore, che si congiunsero insieme per matrimonio, anchora che i parenti della Donna facessero ciò, che poterono, perche, ella altro marito si prendesse, che lui: e vissero insieme di sì concorde volere, et in tanta tranquillità, mentre furono in Venetia, che mai tra loro non fù non dirò cosa, ma parola men, che amorevole. Occorse, che i Signori Venetiani fecero mutatione delle genti d' arme, ch' essi sogliono tenere in Cipri: et elessero per Capitano de soldati, che là mandavano, il Moro. Il quale, anchora che molto lieto fosse dell' honore, che gli era offerto (però che tal grado di dignità non si suol dare senon ad huomini, e nobili, e forti, e fedeli, e che habbiano mostrato havere in sè molto valore) si scemava nondimeno la sua allegrezza, qualhora egli si poneva innanzi la lunghezza, e la malagevolezza del viaggio, pensandosi, che Disdemona ne dovesse rimanere offesa: la Donna, che altro bene non haveva al mondo, che il Moro, et era molto contenta, del testimonio, c' haveva havuto il Marito della sua virtù da così possente, e nobile Republica non vedea l' hora, che il Marito, colle sue genti, si mettesse in camino, et ella andasse seco in compagnia in così honorato luogo, ma le dava gran noia il vedere il Moro turbato. Et, non ne sapendo la cagione, un giorno mangiando gli disse; Che vuole egli dir, Moro, che poi, che vi è stato dato dalla Signoria così honorato grado, ve ne state tanto maninconico; a Disdemona disse il Moro, Turba la contentezza del ricevuto honore, l'amore, che io ti porto, perche io veggo, di necessità, delle due cose deverne avenir l' una: overo, che io ti meni con esso meco a pericoli del Mare: o vero, che, per non ti dar questo disagio, ti

There once lived in Venice a Moor, who was very valiant and of a handsome person; and having given proofs in war of great skill and prudence, he was highly esteemed by the Signoria of the Republic, who in rewarding deeds of valour advanced the interests of the State.

It happened that a virtuous lady of marvellous beauty, named Disdemona, fell in love with the Moor, moved thereto by his valour; and he, vanquished by the beauty and the noble character of Disdemona, returned her love; and their affection was so mutual that, although the parents of the lady strove all they could to induce her to take another husband, she consented to marry the Moor; and they lived in such harmony and peace in Venice that no word ever passed between them that was not affectionate and kind.

Now it happened at this time that the Signoria of Venice made a change in the troops whom they used to maintain in Cyprus, and they appointed the Moor commander of the soldiers whom they dispatched thither. Joyful as was the Moor at the honour proffered him, such dignity being only conferred on men of noble rank and well-tried faith, and who had displayed bravery in arms,—yet his pleasure was lessened when he reflected on the length and dangers of the voyage, fearing that Disdemona would be pained at his absence. But Disdemona, who had no other happiness in the world than the Moor, and who rejoiced to witness the testimony of his valour her husband had received from so powerful and noble a Republic, was all impatient that he should embark with his troops, and longed to accompany him to so honourable a post. And all the more it vexed her to see the Moor so troubled; and not knowing what could be the reason, one day, when they were at dinner, she said to him, 'How is it, O Moor, that when so honourable a post has been conferred on you by the Signoria, you are thus melancholy?'

The Moor answered Disdemona, 'My pleasure at the honour I have received is disturbed by the love I bear you; for I see that of necessity one of two things must happen,—either that I take you with me to encounter the perils of the sea, or, to save lasci in Venetia. La prima non mi potrebbe essere se non grave, perche ogni fatica, che tu ne sostenessi, et ogni pericolo, che ci sopravvenisse, mi recherebbe estrema molestia. La seconda, devendoti lasciare, mi sarebbe odioso a me medesimo; perche, partendomi da te, mi patirei dalla mia vita. Disdemona, ciò inteso; Deh, disse, Marito mio, che pensieri son questi che vi vanno per l' animo? a che lasciate, che cosa tal vi turbi? voglio io venire con voi, ovunque anderete, Se bene così dovessi passare in camiscia per lo fuoco, come son per venire per acqua con voi, in sicura, e ben guarnita nave: e, se pure vi saranno pericoli, e fatiche, io con voi ne voglio essere a parte, e mi terrei d'essere poco amata da voi, quando, per non mi havere in compagnia nel mare, pensaste di lasciarmi in Venetia, o vi persuadeste, che più tosto mi volessi star qui sicura, ch' essere con voi in uno istesso pericolo. Però voglio, che vi apparecchiate al viaggio, con tutta quella allegrezza, che merita la qualità del grado, che tenete. Gittò allhora le braccia al collo tutto lieto il Moro alla Mogliera, e con un affettuoso bacio le disse: Iddio ci conservi lungamente in questa amorevolezza, Moglie mia cara: et, indi a poco, pigliati gli suoi arnesi, e messossi ad ordine per lo camino, entrò, colla sua Donna, e con tutta la compagnia, nella galea; e date le vele al vento, si mise in camino: e con somma tranquillità del Mare, se n'andò in Cipri. Haveva costui nella compagnia un alfiere di bellissima presenza, ma della più scelerata natura, che mai fosse huomo del mondo. Era questi molto caro al Moro, non havendo egli delle sue cattività notitia alcuna. Perche, quantunque egli fosse di vilissimo animo, copriva nondimeno, coll' alte, e superbe parole, e colla sua presenza, di modo la viltà, ch' egli chiudea nel cuore, che si scopriva nella sembianza un' Ettore, od un Achille. Havea similmente menata questo malvagio la sua Moglie in Cipri, la quale era bella, et honesta giovane: e per essere Italiana, era molto amata dalla Moglie del Moro, e si stava la maggior parte del giorno con lei. Nella medesima compagnia era ancho un Capo di squadra, carrissimo al Moro: Andava spessissime volte questi a casa del Moro, e spesso mangiava con lui e you from this danger, I must leave you here in Venice. The first could not be otherwise than serious to me, for all the toil you would have to bear and every danger that might befall you would cause me extreme anxiety and pain, yet, were I to leave you behind me, I should be hateful to myself, since in parting from you I should part from my own life.'

Disdemona, on hearing this, replied: 'My husband, what thoughts are these that wander through your mind? Why let such things disturb you? I will accompany you whitherso'er you go, were it to pass through fire, as now to cross the water in a safe and well-provided ship; if indeed there are toils and perils to encounter, I will share them with you. And in truth I should think you loved me little were you to leave me here in Venice, denying me to bear you company, or could believe that I would liefer bide in safety here than share the dangers that await you. Prepare then for the voyage with all the readiness which the dignity of the post you hold deserves.'

The Moor, in the fulness of his joy, threw his arms around his wife's neck, and with an affectionate and tender kiss exclaimed, 'God keep you long in such love, dear wife!' Then speedily donning his armour, and having prepared everything for his expedition, he embarked on board the galley with his wife and all his troops, and, setting sail, they pursued their voyage, and with a perfectly tranquil sea arrived safely at Cyprus.

Now amongst the soldiery there was an Ensign, a man of handsome figure, but of the most depraved nature in the world. This man was in great favour with the Moor, who had not the slightest idea of his wickedness; for, despite the malice lurking in his heart, he cloaked with proud and valorous speech and with a specious presence the villainy of his soul with such art that he was to all outward show another Hector or Achilles. This man had likewise taken with him his wife to Cyprus, a young, and fair, and virtuous lady; and being of Italian birth she was much loved by Disdemona, who spent the greater part of every day with her.

In the same Company there was a certain Captain of a troop, to whom the Moor was much affectioned. And Disdemona, for this cause, knowing how much her husband con la Moglie. La onde la Donna che lo conosceva così grato al suo Marito, gli dava segni di grandissima benivolenza. La qual cosa era molto cara al Moro. Lo scelerato Alfiero, non curando punto la fede data alla sua Moglie, nè amicitia, nè fede, nè obbligo, ch' egli avesse al Moro, s' innamorò di Disdemona ardentissimamente; e voltò tutto il suo pensiero a vedere, se gli poteva venir fatto di godersi di lei: ma non ardiva di dimostrarsi, temendo, che, se il Moro se ne avedesse, non gli desse subito morte. Cercò egli con varii modi, quanto più occultamente poteva, di fare accorta la Donna, ch' egli l' amava. Ma ella, c' havea nel Moro ogni suo pensiero, non pensava punto nè allo Alfiero, nè ad altri. Et tutte le cose, ch' egli faceva, per accenderla di lui, non più operavano, che se fatte non le avesse. Onde s' imaginò costui, che ciò avvenisse, perchè ella fosse accesa del Capo di squadra; e pensò volerlosi levar dinanzi agli occhi, e non pure a ciò piegò la mente, Ma mutò l' amore, ch' egli portava alla Donna, in acerbissimo odio; e si die, con ogni studio, a pensare, come gli potesse venir fatto, che ucciso il Capo di squadra, se non potesse goder della Donna, il Moro anco non ne godesse. Et rivolgendosi per l' animo varie cose, tutte scelerate, e malvagie, alla fine, si deliberò di volerla accusare di Adulterio al Marito, e dargli ad intendere, che l' Adultero era il Capo di squadra; Ma sappiendo costui l' amore singolare, che portava il Moro a Disdemona, e l' amicitia, ch' egli havea col Capo di squadra, conosceva apertamente, che, se con astuta froda non faceva inganno al Moro, era impossibile a dargli a vedere nè l' uno, nè l' altro. Per la qual cosa si mise ad aspettare, che il tempo, et il luogo gli aprisse la via da entrare a così scelerata impresa. Et non passò molto, che il Moro, per haver messa mano alla spada il Capo di squadra, nella guardia, contra un soldato, e dategli delle ferite, lo privò del grado: la qual cosa fu gravissima a Disdemona. Et molte volte haveva tentato di rappacificare il Marito con lui. Tra questo mezzo disse il Moro allo scelerato Alfieri, che la Moglie gli dava tanta seccagine per lo Capo di squadra, che temea finalmente, di non essere astretto a ripigliarlo. Prese da ciò il mal' uomo argomento di por mano a gli orditi inganni, e disse; valued him, showed him proofs of the greatest kindness, which was all very grateful to the Moor. Now the wicked Ensign, regardless of the faith that he had pledged his wife, no less than of the friendship, fidelity, and obligation which he owed the Moor, fell passionately in love with Disdemona, and bent all his thoughts to achieve his conquest; yet he dared not to declare his passion openly, fearing that, should the Moor perceive it, he would at once kill him. He therefore sought in various ways, and with secret guile, to betray his passion to the lady; but she, whose every wish was centred in the Moor, had no thought for this Ensign more than for any other man; and all the means he tried to gain her love had no more effect than if he had not tried them. But the Ensign imagined that the cause of his ill success was that Disdemona loved the Captain of the troop; and he pondered how to remove him from her sight. The love which he had borne the lady now changed into the bitterest hate, and, having failed in his purposes, he devoted all his thoughts to plot the death of the Captain of the troop and to divert the affection of the Moor from Disdemona. After revolving in his mind various schemes, all alike wicked, he at length resolved to accuse her of unfaithfulness to her husband, and to represent the Captain as her paramour. But knowing the singular love the Moor bore to Disdemona, and the friendship which he had for the Captain, he was well aware that, unless he practised an artful fraud upon the Moor, it were impossible to make him give ear to either accusation; wherefore he resolved to wait until time and circumstance should open a path for him to engage in his foul project.

Not long afterwards it happened that the Captain, having drawn his sword upon a soldier of the guard, and struck him, the Moor deprived him of his rank; whereat Disdemona was deeply grieved, and endeavored again and again to reconcile her husband to the man. * This the Moor told to the wicked Ensign, and how his wife importuned him so much about the Captain that he feared he should be forced at last to receive him back to service. Upon this hint the Ensign resolved to act, and began to

Hà forse Disdemona cagione di vederlo volentieri. Et perche? disse il Moro, Io non voglio, rispose l' Alfieri, por mano tra marito, e moglie: ma, se terrete aperti gli occhi, voi stesso lo vi vedrete; Nè per diligenza, che facesse il Moro, volle l' Alfieri più oltre passare: Benchè lasciarono tali parole, così pungente spina nell' animo del Moro, che si diede con sommo studio a pensare ciò, che volessero dire tali parole, e se ne stava tutto maninconioso. La onde, tentando un giorno la Moglie di ammolire l' ira sua verso il Capo di squadra, e pregandolo a non volere mettere in oblio la servitù, e l' amicitia di tanti anni, per un picciolo fallo; essendo massimamente nata pace, fra il Soldato ferito, et il Capo di squadra, venne il Moro in ira, e le disse: Gran cosa è questa, Disdemona, che tu tanta cura ti pigli di costui, Non è però egli nè tuo fratello, nè tuo parente, che tanto ti debba essere a cuore. La Donna, tutta cortese, et humile; non vorrei, disse, che voi vi adiraste con meco, altro non mi muove, che il dolermi di vedervi privato di così caro amico, qual sò, per lo testimonio di voi medesimo, che vi è stato il Capo di squadra: non hà però egli commesso sì grave errore, che gli debbiate portare tanto odio. Ma voi Mori sete di natura tanto caldi, ch' ogni poco di cosa vi muove ad ira, et a vendetta. A queste parole più irato rispose il Moro, tale lo potrebbe provare, che non sel crede: vedrò tal vendetta delle ingiurie, che mi son fatte, che ne resterò satio. Rimase la Donna tutta isbigotita a queste parole: et, veduto fuor del suo costume, il Marito, contra lei riscaldato, humilmente disse; altro, che buon fine, a parlarvi di ciò non mi hà indotta, ma perche più non vi habbiate di adirar meco, non vi dirò più mai di ciò parola. Veduta il Moro la istanza, che di nuovo gli havea fatta la Moglie, in favore del Capo di squadra, s' imaginò che le parole, che gli havea detto l' Alfieri, gli havessero voluto significare, che Disdemona fosse innamorata di lui, et se n' andò a quel ribaldo tutto maninconioso, e cominciò a tentare, che egli più apertamente gli parlasse. L' Alfieri, intento al danno di questa misera Donna, dopo l' avere finto di non voler dir cosa, che fosse per dispiacerwork his web of intrigue. 'Perchance,' said he, 'the lady Disdemona may have good reason to look kindly on him.'

'And wherefore?' said the Moor.

'Nay, I would not step 'twixt man and wife,' replied the Ensign, 'but let your eyes be witness to themselves.'

In vain the Moor went on to question the officer,—he would proceed no further; nevertheless, his words left a sharp, stinging thorn in the Moor's heart, who could think of nothing else, trying to guess their meaning and lost in melancholy. 'And one day, when his wife had been endeavouring to pacify his anger toward the Captain, and praying him not to be unmindful of ancient services and friendship for one small fault, especially since peace had been made between the Captain and the soldier he had struck, the Moor was angered, and exclaimed, 'Great cause have you, Disdemona, to care so anxiously about this man! Is he a brother, or your kinsman, that he should be so near your heart?'

The lady, with all gentleness and humility, replied, 'Be not angered, my dear lord; I have no other cause to bid me speak than sorrow that I see you lose so dear a friend as, by your own words, this Captain has been to you; nor has he done so grave a fault that you should bear him so much enmity. Nay, but you Moors are of so hot a nature that every little trifle moves you to anger and revenge.'

Still more enraged at these words, the Moor replied, 'I could bring proofs—by heaven it mocks belief! but for the wrongs I have endured revenge must satisfy my wrath.'

Disdemona, in astonishment and fright, seeing her husband's anger kindled against her, so contrary to his wont, said humbly and with timidity, 'None save a good intent has led me thus to speak with you, my lord; but to give cause no longer for offence, I'll never speak a word more on the subject.'

The Moor, observing the earnestness with which his wife again pleaded for the Captain, began to guess the meaning of the Ensign's words; and in deep melancholy he went to seek that villain and induce him to speak more openly of what he knew. Then the Ensign, who was bent upon injuring the unhappy lady, after feigning at first gli, mostrandosi vinto da preghi del Moro, disse; Io non posso negare, che non m' incresca incredibilmente, di havervi a dir cosa, che sia per esservi più di qualunque altra molesta: ma, poi che pur volete, ch' io la vi dica, e la cura, che io debbo havere dell' honor vostro, come di mio signore, mi sprona anco a dirlovi, non voglio hora mancare nè alla vostra dimanda, nè al debito mio. Devete adunque sapere, che, non per altro, è grave alla Donna vostra il veder il Capo di squadra in disgratia vostra, che per lo piacere, che ella si piglia con lui, qual' hora egli in casa vostra viene: come colei, a cui già è venuta a noia questa vostra nerezza. Queste parole passarono il cuore al Moro insino alle radici: Ma, per saper più oltre (anchora, ch' egli credesse vero quanto havea detto l' Alfieri, per lo sospetto, che già gli era nato nell' animo) disse, con fiero viso; non sò io che mi tenga, che non ti tagli questa lingua, tanto audace, che hà havuto ardire di dar tale infamia alla Donna mia. L' Alfiero allhora, non mi aspettava, disse, Capitano, di questo mio amorevole ufficio, altra mercede; Ma, poi che tanto oltre mi hà portato il debito mio, et il desiderio dell' honor vostro: io vi replico, che cosl stà la cosa, come intesa l' avete, et se la Donna, col mostrar di amarvi, vi hà cosl appannati gli occhi, che non habbiate veduto quel, che veder dovevate, non è mica per ciò, che io non vi dica il vero. Perche il medesimo Capo di squadra l' hà detto a me, come quegli, cui non pareva la sua felicità compiuta, se non ne faceva alcuno altro consapevole; Et gli soggiunse: e, se io non havessi temuta l' ira vostra, gli havrei dato, quando ciò mi disse, quella mercede, coll' ucciderlo, della quale egli era degno. Ma poscia, che il farvi sapere quello, che più a voi, che a qualunque altro appartiene, me ne fa havere cosl sconvenevole guiderdone: me ne vorrei essere stato cheto, che non sarei, tacendo, incorso nella disgratia vostra. Il Moro allhora tutto cruccioso, se non mi fai, disse, vedere cogl' occhi quello, che detto mi hai, viviti sicuro, che ti farò conoscere, che meglio per te sarebbe, che tu fossi nato mutolo. Agevol mi sarebbe stato questo, soggiunse il Malvagio, quando egli in casa vostra veniva, ma hora, che, non per quello che bisognava, ma per vie più lieve great reluctance to say aught that might displease the Moor) at length pretended to yield to his entreaties, and said, 'I can't deny it pains me to the soul to be thus forced to say what needs must be more hard to hear than any other grief; but since you will it so, and that the regard I owe your honour compels me to confess the truth, I will no longer refuse to satisfy your questions and my duty.' Know, then, that for no other reason is your lady vexed to see the Captain in disfavour than the pleasure that she has in his company whenever he comes to your house, and all the more since she has taken an aversion to your blackness.'

These words went straight to the Moor's heart; but in order to hear more (~~now that he believed true all that the Ensign had told him~~) he replied, with a fierce glance, 'By heavens, I scarce can hold this hand from plucking out that tongue of thine, so bold, which dares to speak such slander of my wife!'

'Captain,' replied the Ensign, 'I looked for such reward for these my faithful offices,—none else; but since my duty, and the jealous care I bear your honour, have carried me thus far, I do repeat, so stands the truth, as you have heard it from these lips; and if the lady Disdemona hath, with a false show of love for you, blinded your eyes to what you should have seen, this is no argument but that I speak the truth. Nay, this same Captain told it me himself, like one whose happiness is incomplete until he can declare it to another; and, but that I feared your anger, I should have given him, when he told it me, his merited reward, and slain him. But since informing you of what concerns you more than any other man brings me so undeserved a recompense, would I had held my peace, since silence might have spared me your displeasure.'

Then the Moor, burning with indignation and anguish, said, 'Make thou these eyes self-witnesses of what thou tell'st, or on thy life I'll make thee wish thou hadst been born without a tongue.'

'An easy task it would have been,' replied the villain, 'when he was used to visit at cagione, l'havete scacciato, non mi potrà essere se non malagevole, che anchora che io stimi, ch'egli di Disdemona si goda, qualhora voi gliene date l'agio, molto più cautamente lo dee fare hora, che si vede esservi venuto in odio, che non faceva di prima. Ma anco non perdo la speranza di potervi far vedere quel, che creder non mi volete. Et con queste parole si dipartirono. Il misero Moro, come tocco da pungentissimo strale, se n'andò a casa, attendendo che venisse il giorno, che l'Alfieri gli facesse veder quello, che lo doveva far, per sempre, misero. Ma non minor noia dava al maladetto Alfieri la castità, ch'egli sapeva, che osservava la Donna, perche gli pareva non poter ritrovar modo a far credere al Moro quello, che falsamente detto gli haveva: e, voltato in varie parti il pensiero, pensò lo Scelerato a nuova malitia. Andava sovente la Moglie del Moro, come hò detto, a casa della Moglie dell'Alfieri, e se ne stava con lei buona parte del giorno, onde veggendo costui ch'ella talhora portava seco un pannicello da naso, ch'egli sapeva, che le havea donato il Moro, il qual pannicello era lavorato alla moresca sottilissimamente, et era carissimo alla Donna, e parimente al Moro, si pensò di torglielo secretamente, e quindi apparecchiare l'ultimo danno. Et havendo egli una fanciulla di tre anni, la quale era molto amata da Disdemona, un giorno, che la misera Donna a casa di questo reo si era andata a stare, prese egli la fanciulla in braccio, et alla Donna la porse: La quale la prese, e la si reccò al petto; questo Ingannatore, che eccellentemente giocava di mano, le levò da cintola il pannicello così accortamente, ch'ella punto non se ne avide, e da lei, tutto allegro, si dipartì. Disdemona, ciò non sappiendo, se ne andò a casa: e occupata da altri pensieri, non si avide del pannicello. Ma, indi ad alquanti giorni, cercandone, e nol ritrovando, stava tutta timida, che il Moro con gliele chiedesse, come egli sovente faceva. Lo scelerato Alfieri, pigliatosi comodo tempo, se ne andò al Capo di squadra, e con astuta malitia gli lasciò il pannicello a capo del letto, nè se ne avide il Capo di squadra, se non la seguente mattina, che levandosi del letto, essendo il pannicello caduto in terra, vi pose il piede sopra: nè sapendosi imaginare, come in casa your house; but now that you have banished him, not for just cause, but for mere frivolous pretext, it will be hard to prove the truth. Still, I do not forego the hope to make you witness of that which you will not credit from my lips.'

Thus they parted. The wretched Moor, struck to the heart as by a barbed dart, returned to his home, and awaited the day when the Ensign should disclose to him the truth which was to make him miserable to the end of his days. But the evil-minded Ensign was, on his part, not less troubled by the chastity which he knew the lady Disdemona observed inviolate; and it seemed to him impossible to discover a means of making the Moor believe what he had falsely told him; and, turning the matter over in his thoughts in various ways, the villain resolved on a new deed of guilt.

Disdemona often used to go, as I have already said, to visit the Ensign's wife, and remained with her a good part of the day. Now, the Ensign observed that she carried about with her a handkerchief, which he knew the Moor had given her, finely embroidered in the Moorish fashion, and which was precious to Disdemona, nor less so to the Moor. Then he conceived the plan of taking this kerchief from her secretly, and thus laying the snare for her final ruin. The Ensign had a little daughter, a child three years of age, who was much loved by Disdemona, and one day, when the unhappy lady had gone to pay a visit at the house of this vile man, he took the little child upon his arms and carried her to Disdemona, who took her and pressed her to her bosom; whilst at the same instant this traitor, who had extreme dexterity of hand, drew the kerchief from her sash so cunningly that she did not notice him, and overjoyed he took his leave of her.

Disdemona, ignorant of what had happened, returned home, and, busy with other thoughts, forgot the handkerchief. But a few days afterwards, looking for it and not finding it, she was in alarm, lest the Moor should ask her for it, as he oft was wont to do. * Meanwhile, the wicked Ensign, seizing a fit opportunity, went to the Captain of the troop, and with crafty malice left the handkerchief at the head of his bed without his discovering the trick, until the following morning, when, on his getting out of bed, l'avesse, conoscendolo cosa di Disdemona, deliberò di dargliele: et attendendo che il Moro fosse uscito di casa, se n'andò all'uscio di dietro, et ivi picchiò; volle la Fortuna, che pareva, che coll'Alfieri congiurata si fosse alla morte della meschina: che in quell'ora appunto, il Moro si venne a casa: et udendo picchiare l'uscio, si fece alla finestra: e tutto cruccio, disse, chi picchia là? Il Capo di squadra, udita la voce del Moro, temendo, ch'egli non scendesse a danno suo, senza rispondere parola si diede a fuggire. Il Moro, scese le scale: e aperto l'uscio, uscì nella strada, e cercando di lui nol ritrovò. Onde entrato in casa, pieno di mal talento, dimandò alla Moglie, chi fosse colui, che la giù picchiava. La Donna rispose quel, che vero era, che nol sapeva. Ma il Moro disse, mi ha egli paruto il Capo di squadra; Non sò, io disse ella, se sia stato nè egli, nè altri. Rattenne il Moro il furore, quantunque d'ira ardesse, Nè prima volle far cosa alcuna, che parlasse, coll'Alfieri, alquale subitamente se n'andò, e gli disse quanto era occorso, e lo pregò ad intendere dal Capo di squadra tutto quello, ch'egli poteva intorno a ciò. Egli, lieto di così fatto avvenimento, gli promise di farlo. Et al Capo di squadra parlò un giorno costui, che il Moro era in luogo, onde gli poteva vedere insieme ragionare. Et parlandogli di ogn'altra cosa, che della Donna, faceva le maggiori risa del mondo: e mostrando di maravigliarsi, facea di molti atti, e col capo, e colle mani, come, che udisse cose maravigliose. Il Moro, tosto che gli vide partiti, andò verso l'Alfieri, per sapere ciò, che colui detto gli avesse. Questi, dopo haversi fatto lungamente pregare, al fin gli disse, non mi ha egli celata cosa alcuna, e mi ha detto, che si ha goduto della Moglie vostra ogni volta, che voi coll'esser fuori, gli ne havete dato tempo: e che l'ultima fiata, ch'egli è stato con lei, gli ha ella donato quel pannicello da naso, che voi, quando la sposaste, le deste in dono. Il Moro ringratiò l'Alfieri, e gli parve, che se ritrovava, che la Donna non avesse il pannicello, potesse essere chiaro, che così fosse, come gli havea detto l'Alfieri. Per la qual cosa un giorno, dopo desinare, entrato the handkerchief fell upon the floor, and he set his foot upon it. And not being able to imagine how it had come into his house, knowing that it belonged to Disdemona, he resolved to give it to her; and waiting until the Moor had gone from home, he went to the back door and knocked. ~~It seemed as if fate conspired with the Ensign to work the death of the unhappy Disdemona.~~ Just at that time the Moor returned home, and hearing a knocking at the back door, he went to the window, and in a rage exclaimed, 'Who knocks there?' The Captain, hearing the Moor's voice, and fearing lest he should come down stairs and attack him, took to flight without answering a word. The Moor went down, and opening the door hastened into the street and looked about, ~~but in vain.~~ Then, returning into the house in great anger, he demanded of his wife who it was that had knocked at the door. Disdemona replied, as was true, that she did not know; but the Moor said, 'It seemed to me the Captain.'

'I know not,' answered Disdemona, 'whether it was he or another person.'

The Moor restrained his fury, great as it was, wishing to do nothing before consulting the Ensign, to whom he hastened instantly, and told him all that had passed, praying him to gather from the Captain all he could respecting the affair. The Ensign, overjoyed at the occurrence, promised the Moor to do as he requested, and one day he took occasion to speak with the Captain when the Moor was so placed that he could see and hear them as they conversed. And whilst talking to him of every other subject than of Disdemona, he kept laughing all the time aloud, and, feigning astonishment, he made various movements with his head and hands, as if listening to some tale of marvel. As soon as the Moor saw the Captain depart, he went up to the Ensign to hear what he had said to him. And the Ensign, after long entreaty, at length said, 'He has hidden from me nothing, and has told me that he has been used to visit your wife whenever you went from home, and that on the last occasion she gave him this handkerchief which you presented to her when you married her.'

The Moor thanked the Ensign, and it seemed now clear to him that, should he find Disdemona not to have the handkerchief, it was all true that the Ensign had told to him. One day, therefore, after dinner, in conversation with his wife on various sub-in varij ragionamenti colla Donna, le chiese il pannicello. La infelice che di questo havea molto temuto, a tal dimanda, divenne nel viso tutta fuoco; et per celare il rossore, il quale molto bene notò il Moro, corse alla cassa, e finse di cercarlo. Et dopo molto haverlo cercato; non sò, disse, com' hora non lo ritrovi, l' havreste voi forse havuto? s' havuto lo havessi, disse egli, perche te lo chiederei io? ma ne cercherai più agiatamente un' altra volta. Et partitosi cominciò a pensare, come dovesse far morire la Donna, et insieme il Capo di squadra, sì, che a lui non fosse data colpa della sua morte. Et pensando giorno, et notte sopra ciò, non poteva fare, che la Donna non si avedesse, ch' egli non era quegli, che verso lei, per adietro, essere solea. Et gli disse più volte, che cosa havete voi, che così vi turbi? che ove solevate essere il più festoso huomo del mondo, siete hora il più maninconico, che viva? Trovava il Moro varie cagioni di rispondere alla Donna, ma non ne rimaneva ella punto contenta. Et posto ch' ella sapesse, che per niuno suo misfatto, non dovesse essere così turbato il Moro, dubitava nondimeno, che per la troppa copia, ch' egli haveva di lei, non gli fosse venuta a noia. Et talhora diceva colla Moglie dell' Alfieri, Io non sò, che mi dica io del Moro, egli solea essere verso me tutto amore, hora, da non sò che pochi giorni in quà, è divenuto un' altro: et temo molto di non essere io quella, che dia essemplio alle giovani di non maritarsi contra il voler de suoi; et che da me le Donne Italiane imparino, di non si accompagnare con huomo, cui la Natura, et il Cielo, et il modo della vita disgiunge da noi. Ma, perche io sò, ch' egli è molto amico del vostro Marito, et comunica con lui le cose sue: vi prego, che se havete intesa cosa alcuna da lui, della quale mi possiate avisare, che non mi manchiate di aiuto, et tutto ciò le diceva direttamente piangendo; la Moglie dell' Alfieri, che il tutto sapeva, (come colei, cui il Marito haveva voluta usare per mezzana alla morte della Donna) ma non l'haveva ella mai voluto acconsentire, et temendo del Marito, non ardiva di dirle cosa alcuna; Solo le disse, habbate cura di non dare di voi sospetto al Marito, e cercate con ogni studio, ch' egli in voi conosca amore, et fede; ciò faccio io, disse ella, jects, he asked her for the kerchief. The unhappy lady, who had been in great fear of this, grew red as fire at this demand; and to hide the scarlet of her cheeks, which was closely noted by the Moor, she ran to a chest and pretended to seek the handkerchief, and after hunting for it a long time, she said, 'I know not how it is—I cannot find it; can you, perchance, have taken it?'

'If I had taken it,' said the Moor, 'why should I ask it of you? but you will look better another time.'

On leaving the room, the Moor fell to meditating how he should put his wife to death, and likewise the Captain of the troop, so that their death should not be laid to his charge. And as he ruminated over this day and night, he could not prevent his wife's observing that he was not the same towards her as he had been wont; and she said to him again and again, 'What is the matter? What troubles you? How comes it that you, who were the most light-hearted man in the world, are now so melancholy?'

The Moor feigned various reasons in reply to his wife's questioning, but she was not satisfied, and, although conscious that she had given the Moor no cause, by act or deed, to be so troubled, yet she feared that he might have grown wearied of her; and she would say to the Ensign's wife, 'I know not what to say of the Moor; he used to be all love towards me; but within these few days he has become another man; and much I fear that I shall prove a warning to young girls not to marry against the wishes of their parents, and that the Italian ladies may learn from me not to wed a man whom nature and habitude of life estrange from us. But as I know the Moor is on such terms of friendship with your husband, and communicates to him all his affairs, I pray you, if you have heard from him aught that you may tell me of, fail not to befriend me.' And as she said this, she wept bitterly.

The Ensign's wife, who knew the whole truth (her husband wishing to make use of her to compass the death of Disdemona), but could never consent to such a project, dared not, from fear of her husband, disclose a single circumstance: all she said was, 'Beware lest you give any cause of suspicion to your husband, and show to him by ma nulla mi giova. Il Moro, in questo mezzo tempo, cercava tutta via di più certificarsi di quello, che non havrebbe voluto ritrovare: e pregò l' Alfieri, che operasse di modo, che potesse vedere il pannicello in podestà del Capo di squadra: e benché ciò fosse grave al Malvagio, gli promise nondimeno di usare ogni diligenza, perche egli di ciò si certificasse. Haveva il Capo di squadra una donna in casa, che maravigliosi trapunti faceva sù la tela di renna, la quale veggendo quel pannicello, et intendendo, ch' era della Donna del Moro, et ch' era per esserle reso, prima ch' ella l' avesse, si mise a farne un simile: e mentre ella ciò faceva, s' avide l' Alfieri, ch' ella appresso una finestra si stava, e da chi passava per la strada poteva essere veduta, onde fece egli ciò vedere al Moro, il quale tenne certissimo, che l' honestissima Donna fosse in fatto Adultera; Et conchiuse coll' Alfiero, di uccidere lei, et il Capo di squadra, trattando ambidue tra loro come ciò si dovesse fare; lo pregò il Moro, ch' egli volesse essere quegli, che il Capo di squadra uccidesse, promettendo di restargliene obligato eternamente. Et ricusando egli di volere far cosa tale come malagevolissima, e di molto pericolo, per essere il Capo di squadra non meno accorto, che valoroso, dopo molto haverlo pregato, datagli buona quantità di danari, lo indusse a dire, che proverebbe di tentar la fortuna. Fatta questa resolutione, uscendo una sera il Capo di squadra di casa di una meretrice, colla quale egli si sollazzava, essendo la notte buia, gli si accostò l' Alfiero con la spada in mano, et gli dirizzò un colpo alle gambe, per farlo cadere, et avvenne, ch' egli gli tagliò la destra coscia a traverso, onde il misero cadde: gli fù addosso l' Alfieri, per finire di ucciderlo. Ma havendo il Capo di squadra, che coraggioso era, et avezzo nel sangue, et nelle morti, tratta la spada; et, così ferito come egli era, dirizzatosi alla difesa, gridò ad alta voce; io sono assassinato. Per la qual cosa, sentendo l' Alfieri correr gente, et alquanti de Soldati, ch' ivi attorno erano alloggiati, si mise a fuggire, per non vi essere colto: e, data una volta, fè vista anch' egli di essere corso a romore. Et ponendosi tra gli altri, vedutagli mozza la gamba, giudicò che se bene non era morto, morirebbe every means your fidelity and love. 'Indeed I do so,' replied Disdemona, 'but it is all of no avail.'

Meanwhile the Moor sought in every way to convince himself of what he fain would have found untrue, and he prayed the Ensign to contrive that he might see the handkerchief in the possession of the Captain. This was a difficult matter to the wicked Ensign; nevertheless, he promised to use every means to satisfy the Moor of the truth of what he said.

Now, the Captain had a wife at home who worked the most marvellous embroidery upon lawn, and seeing the handkerchief, which belonged to the Moor's wife, she resolved, before it was returned to her, to work one like it. As she was engaged in this task, the Ensign observed her standing at a window, where she could be seen by all the passers-by in the street, and he pointed her out to the Moor, who was now perfectly convinced of his wife's guilt. Then he arranged with the Ensign to slay Disdemona and the Captain of the troop, treating them as it seemed they both deserved. And the Moor prayed the Ensign that he would kill the Captain, promising eternal gratitude to him. But the Ensign at first refused to undertake so dangerous a task, the Captain being a man of equal skill and courage; until at length, after much entreating and being richly paid, the Moor prevailed on him to promise to attempt the deed.

Having formed this resolution, the Ensign, going out one dark night, sword in hand, met the Captain on his way to visit a courtesan, and struck him a blow on his right thigh, which cut off his leg and felled him to the earth. Then the Ensign was on the point of putting an end to his life, when the Captain, who was a courageous man and used to the sight of blood and death, drew his sword, and, wounded as he was, kept on his defence, exclaiming with a loud voice, 'I'm murdered!' Thereupon the Ensign, hearing the people come running up, with some of the soldiers who were lodged thereabouts, took to his heels to escape being caught; then turning about again, he joined the crowd, pretending to have been attracted by the noise. And when he saw the Captain's leg cut off, he judged that, if not already dead, the blow must, at all events, ad ogni modo di quel colpo; e, quantunque fosse di ciò lietissimo, si dolse nondimeno col Capo di squadra, come s' egli suo fratello fosse stato. La mattina la cosa si sparse per tutta la Città, et andò anco alle orecchie di Disdemona, onde ella, ch' amorevole era, et non pensava ch' indi le dovesse avenir male, mostrò di havere grandissimo dolore di così fatto caso; di ciò fece il Moro pessimo concetto. Et andò a ritrovare l' Alfieri, et gli disse; Tu sai bene, che l' Asina di mia Moglie è in tanto affanno, per lo caso del Capo di squadra, ch' ella è per impazzare. Et come potevate, disse egli, pensare altrimenti, essendo colui l' anima sua? Anima sua, eh? replicò il Moro, Io le trarrò ben' io l' anima del corpo, che mi terrei non essere huomo, se non togliessi dal mondo questa malvagia. Et discorrendo l' uno con l' altro, se di veleno, o di coltello si devea far morir la Donna, nè accettandosi questo, nè quello da loro, disse l' Alfieri; un modo mi è egli venuto nella mente, che vi sodisfarete, et non se ne avrà sospetto alcuno. Et egli è tale, La casa, ove voi state, è vecchissima, e il palco della camera vostra hà di molte fessure; voglio, che con una calza piena di rena percotiamo Disdemona, tanto ch' ella nè muoia, perche non appaia in lei segno alcuno di battitura: morta, ch' ella sarà, faremo cadere parte del palco, et romperemo il capo alla Donna, fingendo, che una trave nel cadere rotta gliele habbia, et uccisa: et, a questo modo, non sarà persona, che di voi pigli sospetto alcuno, stimando ognuno la sua morte essere venuta a caso. Piacque al Moro, il crudel consiglio: et, aspettato il tempo, che convenevole gli parve, essendo egli una notte con lei nel letto, et havendo già nascoso l' Alfieri in un camerino, che nella camera entrava, l' Alfieri, secondo l' ordine tra lor dato, fè non sò che strepito nel camerino: e, sentitolo, subitamente disse il Moro alla Moglie; hai tu sentito quello strepito? hollo sentito, disse ella; levati soggiunse il Moro, e vedi che cosa è. Levossi la infelice Disdemona: e, tosto ch' ella fù appresso il camerino, n' uscì l' Alfieri, il quale, essendo forte, et di buon nerbo, colla calza, che in punto haveva, le diede una crudel percossa, nel end his life; and whilst in his heart he was rejoiced at this, he yet feigned to compassionate the Captain as he had been his brother.

The next morning the tidings of this affair spread through the whole city, and reached the ears of Disdemona; whereat she, who was kind-hearted and little dreamed that any ill would betide her, evinced the greatest grief at the calamity. This served but to confirm the Moor's suspicions, and he went to seek for the Ensign, and said to him, 'Do you know that my wife is in such grief at the Captain's accident that she is well nigh gone mad.'

'And what could you expect, seeing he is her very soul?' replied the Ensign.

'Ay, soul forsooth!' exclaimed the Moor; 'I'll draw the soul from out her body; call me no man if that I fail to shut the world upon this wretch.'

Then they consulted of one means and another—poison and daggers—to kill poor Disdemona, but could resolve on nothing. At length the Ensign said, 'A plan comes to my mind, which will give you satisfaction and raise cause for no suspicion. It is this: the house in which you live is very old, and the ceiling of your chamber has many cracks; I propose we take a stocking, filled with sand, and beat Disdemona with it till she dies; thus will her body bear no signs of violence. When she is dead we can pull down a portion of the ceiling, and thus make it seem as if a rafter falling on her head had killed the lady. Suspicion cannot rest on you, since all men will impute her death to accident.'

This cruel counsel pleased the Moor, and he only waited for a fitting time to execute the plot. One night, when he and Disdemona had retired to bed, the Ensign, whom the Moor had concealed in a closet which opened into the chamber, raised a noise in the closet, according to a concerted plan; whereat the Moor said to his wife, 'Did you not hear that noise?'

'Indeed I heard it,' she replied.

'Rise,' said the Moor, 'and see what 'tis.'

The unhappy Disdemona rose from bed, and the instant she approached the closet, out rushed the Ensign, and being strong and of stout nerve, he beat her cruelly with mezzo della schiena, onde la Donna subito cadde, senza poter trarne appena fuori il fiato. Ma con quella poca voce, che potè avere, chiamò il Moro, che l' aiutasse; et egli, uscito del letto, le disse, Sceleratissima Donna, la mercede hai della tua dishonestà, così si trattano quelle, che fingendo di amare i loro Mariti, pongono loro le corna in capo. La misera Donna, ciò udendo, e sentendosi giunta al fine (però che l' Alfiero un' altro colpo dato le havea) disse, che in testimonio della sua fede, ella chiamava la giustizia divina, poi, che, quella del mondo le veniva meno; et chiamando ella Iddio, che l' aiutasse, sopraggiungendo la terza percossa, rimase uccisa dall' empio Alfieri. Poscia, messala nel letto, e spezzatale la testa, fecero egli, et il Moro, cadere come haveano ordinato fra loro il palco della camera, e cominciò il Moro a chiamare soccorso, che la casa cadeva, alla voce del quale corrono i vicini, e scoperto il letto, trovarono la Donna sotto le travi morta. La qual cosa, per la buona vita della Donna, increbbe ad ognuno. Il giorno seguente fu Disdemona sepolta, con universal dolore di quel popolo. Ma non volle Iddio, giusto riguardatore de gli animi altrui, che così gran sceleragine se ne rimanesse senza la dicevole pena. Imperò, che il Moro, che la Donna haveva amato più, che gli occhi suoi, veggendosene privo, cominciò ad avere tanto desiderio di lei, che l' andava, come fuori di sè, cercando per tutti i luoghi della casa: et considerando tra sè, che l' Alfieri era stato cagione, ch' egli avesse perduta, colla sua Donna, tutto il dolce della vita, et anco sè medesimo; gli venne lo Scelerato in tanto odio, che non haveva occhio, col quale vedere lo potesse: et, se non avesse havuto timore della inviolabile giustizia de Signori Venetiani, l' havrebbe palesamente ucciso. Ma non potendo far questo, con sua salvezza, gli levò la insegna, e più nol volle nella compagnia, onde nacque tanta aspra nimicitia tra l' uno, e l' altro, che non si potrebbe imaginare la maggiore, nè la più grave. Per la qual cosa l' Alfiero, peggiore di tutti gli scelerati, voltò tutto il pensiero a danni del Moro. Et, ritrovato il Capo di squadra, che già era risanato, the bag of sand across her back; upon which Disdemona fell to the ground, scarce able to draw her breath; but with the little voice she had left, she called upon the Moor for aid. But the Moor, leaping from bed, exclaimed, 'Thou wickedest of women, thus has thy falseness found its just reward, the recompense to wives who, counterfeiting love, place horns upon their husbands' brows.'

The wretched lady, hearing these words, and feeling that she was near her end, (for the Ensign had given her another blow,) appealed to the justice of Heaven, since justice here had failed her, in proof of her fidelity and truth; and as she was thus calling Heaven to witness, the wicked Ensign inflicted a third blow, under which she sank lifeless on the floor.

Then the Ensign and the Moor, laying Disdemona on the bed and wounding her head, pulled down part of the ceiling of the chamber, as they had arranged; whereupon the Moor began to call aloud for help, exclaiming that the house was falling. Hearing this uproar, the neighbours all came running up, and there found Disdemona lying dead beneath a rafter,—a sight which, from the good life of that poor lady, did fill all hearts with sorrow.

On the following day Disdemona was buried, followed to the grave by the universal grief of the people. But Heaven, the just regarder of all hearts, willed not that so wicked a deed should go unpunished. Ere long the Moor, whom Disdemona had loved more than her own life, began to feel such sorrow at her loss that he went wandering about as one bereft of reason, searching in every part of the house. And reflecting in his thoughts that the Ensign had been the cause that he had lost, with Disdemona, all joy in life, he conceived so deep a hatred to that wicked man he could not bear to set eyes on him, and had it not been for his fear of the inviolable justice of the Signoria of Venice, he would have slain him openly. But being unable to do this with safety, he deprived him of his rank, and would not allow him to remain in his Company; whereat such an enmity arose between the two that no greater or more deadly can be imagined.

The Ensign, that wickedest of all bad men, now turned his thoughts to injuring the et con una gamba di legno se n' andava in vece della tagliata, gli disse; Venuto è il tempo, che tu possi far vendetta della tua tagliata gamba: Et, quando tu voglia venire con esso meco a Venetia, io ti dirò, chi è stato il malfattore, che qui non arderei di dirlo, per molti rispetti: et io ne farò, per te, testimonio in giudicio. Il Capo di squadra, che si ritrovava fieramente offeso, et non sapeva perche; ringratiò l' Alfieri, e seco a Venetia se ne venne. Ove giunti, che furono, egli gli disse, che il Moro era stato quegli, che gli havea tagliata la gamba, per openione, che gli era nata nella testa, che egli si giacesse con Disdemona: e, che, per questa medesima cagione egli havea uccisa lei, e poscia data voce, che il palco caduto uccisa l' avesse. Il Capo di squadra, inteso ciò, accusò il Moro alla Signoria, e della gamba a lui tagliata, e della morte della Donna, et indusse per testimonio l' Alfieri, il quale disse; che l' uno, e l' altro era vero, perche il Moro havea il tutto comunicato seco, e l' havea voluto indurre a fare l' uno, e l' altro maleficio: e che, havendo poscia uccisa la Moglie, per bestial gelosia, che gli era nata nel capo, gli havea narrata la maniera, ch' egli havea tenuto in darle morte. I Signori Venetiani, intesa la crudeltà, usata dal Barbaro, in una lor cittadina, fecero dar delle mani addosso al Moro in Cipri, e condurlo a Venetia, e con molti tormenti cercarono di ritrovare il vero. Ma, vincendo egli, col valore dell' animo, ogni martorio, il tutto negò, così costantemente, che non se ne pote mai trarre cosa alcuna. Ma, se bene, per la sua constanza, egli schifò la morte, non fu però, che, dopo lo essere stato molti giorni in prigione, non fosse dannato a perpetuo essilio, nel quale finalmente fù da parenti della Donna, com' egli meritava, ucciso. Andò l' Alfieri alla sua patria: et, non volendo egli mancare del suo costume, accusò un suo compagno, dicendo, ch' egli ricercato l' havea di ammazzare un suo nimico, che gentiluomo era, per la qual cosa fù preso colui, et messo al martorio: et negando egli esser vero, quanto dicea l' accusatore, fù messo al martorio anco l' Alfieri per paragone. Ove, fù talmente collato, che gli si corropere le interiora: onde, uscito

Moor; and seeking out the Captain, whose wound was by this time healed, and who went about with a wooden leg in place of the one that had been cut off, he said to him, 'Tis time you should be avenged for your lost limb; and if you will come with me to Venice, I'll tell you who the malefactor is, whom I dare not mention to you here for many reasons; and I will bring you proofs.'

The Captain of the troop, whose anger returned fiercely, but without knowing why, thanked the Ensign, and went with him to Venice. On arriving there the Ensign told him that it was the Moor who had cut off his leg, on account of the suspicion he had formed of Disdemona's conduct with him; and for that reason he had slain her, and then spread the report that the ceiling had fallen and killed her. Upon hearing which, the Captain accused the Moor to the Signoria, both of having cut off his leg and killed his wife, and called the Ensign to witness the truth of what he said. The Ensign declared both charges to be true, for that the Moor had disclosed to him the whole plot, and had tried to persuade him to perpetrate both crimes; and that, having afterwards killed his wife out of jealousy he had conceived, he had narrated to him the manner in which he had perpetrated her death.

The Signoria of Venice, when they heard of the cruelty inflicted by a barbarian upon a lady of their city, commanded that the Moor's arms should be pinioned in Cyprus, and he be brought to Venice, where, with many tortures, they sought to draw from him the truth. But the Moor, bearing with unyielding courage all the torment, denied the whole charge so resolutely that no confession could be drawn from him. But, although by his constancy and firmness he escaped death, he was, after being confined for several days in prison, condemned to perpetual banishment, in which he was eventually slain by the kinsfolk of Disdemona, as he merited. The Ensign returned to his own country, and, following up his wonted villainy, he accused one of his companions of having sought to persuade him to kill an enemy of his, who was a man of noble rank; whereupon this person was arrested and put to the torture; but when he denied the truth of what his accuser had declared, the Ensign himself was likewise tortured to make him prove the truth of his accusations; and he was tortured so that his body ruptured, upon which he was removed from prison and taken home, where he died a miserable death. Thus did Heaven avenge the innocence of Disdemona; and all these events were narrated by the Ensign's wife, who was privy to the whole, after his death, as I have told them here.

di prigionie, et condotto a casa, miseramente sè ne morì; tal fece Iddio vendetta della innocenza di Disdemona. Et tutto questo successo narrò la Moglie dell' Alfieri, del fatto consapevole, poi ch' egli fù morto, come io lo vi hò narrato.

OTHELLO'S COLOUR

GENTLEMAN (Dram. Censor, 1770, i, 151): I remember once to see this esteemed performer [Quin] play the Moor in a large powdered major wig, which, with the black face, made such a magpie appearance of his head, as tended greatly to laughter; one stroke, however, was not amiss—coming on in white gloves, by pulling off which the black hands became more realized. [Quin retired from the stage in 1750.—ED.]

Othello's colour, and Desdemona's indifference to it, is intimated and explained by LE TOURNEUR in a note on 'My Mother had a Maid called Barbarie,' IV, iii, 32, which he thus translates: 'Ma mere avoit auprès d'elle une jeune fille, nommée Barbara. C'étoit une Moresse, une pauvre Moresse,' and refers us to Othello's speech before the Senate, I, iii, 151, where, in a note, it is explained that, to Desdemona, Othello's 'couleur noire n'étoit pas non plus pour elle une nouveauté. On verra dans la suite, que sa mere avoit une Moresse à son service. Ainsi son amour pour un brave More n'a rien d'étrange ni d'in vraisemblable. Habitée dès l'enfance à la compagnie d'une Moresse, elle a dû être moins révoltée de cette couleur dans un âge plus avancé.'

JOHN GALT (Lives of the Players, London, 1831, i, 268): It would be a curious speculation to attempt to determine the cause of Garrick's failure in Othello, for a failure it must be considered, as compared with his transcendancy in other parts. In the just and natural inflection of the voice, we have no cause to doubt that he was equally excellent. The probability, therefore, is that he failed in the expression of the countenance alone, and that this default and short-coming to expectation was entirely owing to the black disguise he was obliged to assume.

On the epithet 'thick-lips,' applied, I, i, 72, by Roderigo to Othello, COLERIDGE (p. 249) has the following: Roderigo turns off to Othello; and here comes one, if not the only, seeming justification of our blackamoor or negro Othello. Even if we supposed this an uninterrupted tradition of the theatre, and that Shakespeare himself, from want of scenes, and the experience that nothing could be made too marked for the senses of his audience, had practically sanctioned it,—would this prove aught concerning his own intention as a poet for all ages? Can we imagine him so utterly ignorant as to make a barbarous negro plead royal birth,—at a time, too, when negroes were not known except as slaves? As for Iago's language to Brabantio, it implies merely that Othello was a Moor, that is, black. Though I think the rivalry of Roderigo sufficient to account for his wilful confusion of Moor and Negro, yet, even if compelled to give this up, I should think it only adapted for the acting of the day, and should complain of an enormity built on a single word, in direct contradiction to Iago's 'Barbary horse.' Besides, if we could in good earnest believe Shakespeare ignorant of the distinction, still why should we adopt one disagreeable possibility instead of a ten times greater and more pleasing probability? It is a common error to mistake the epithets applied by the dramatis persona to each other as truly descriptive of what the audience ought to see or know. No doubt Desdemona saw Othello's visage in his mind; yet, as we are constituted, and most surely as an English audience was disposed in the beginning of the seventeenth century, it would be something monstrous to conceive this beautiful Venetian girl falling in love with a veritable negro. It would argue a disproportionateness, a want of balance, in Desdemona, which Shakespeare does not appear to have in the least contemplated.

HAWKINS (Life of Edmund Kean, i, 221): Kean regarded it as a gross error to make Othello either a negro or a black, and accordingly altered the conventional black to the light brown which distinguishes the Moors by virtue of their descent from the Caucasian race. Although in the tragedy Othello is described with a minuteness which leaves no doubt that Shakespeare intended him to be black, there is no reason to suppose that the Moors were darker than the generality of Spaniards, who, indeed, are half Moors, and compared with the Venetians he would even then be black. There is some variety in the colour of the Moors, but it never approaches so deep a hue as to conceal all change of colour. Betterton, Quin, Mossop, Barry, Garrick, and John Kemble all played the part with black faces, and it was reserved for Kean to innovate, and Coleridge to justify, the attempt to substitute a light brown for the traditional black. The alteration has been sanctioned by subsequent usage.

HUNTER (New Illustr., ii, 280): Shakespeare, in IV, ii, 257, seems to point to Mauritania as the native country of Othello, who is hence to be regarded as a Moor in the proper sense of the word, a native of the northern coast of Africa, towards the west; and the expression 'black' is to be interpreted as meaning no more than very dark, and this in comparison with the fair European. Moor, however, it may be observed, was used by English writers very extensively, and all the dark races seem, by some writers, to be regarded as comprehended under it. Sir Thomas Elyot calls the Ethiopians, Moors. A distinction was sometimes made between black Moors and white Moors.

KNIGHT (Note on I, i, 72): This passage has been received as indicating the intention of Shakespeare to make Othello a Negro. It is very probable that the popular notion of a Moor was somewhat confused in Shakespeare's time, and that the descendants of the proud Arabs, who had borne sovereign sway in Europe ('men of royal siege'), and, what is more, had filled an age of comparative darkness with the light of their poetry and their science, were confounded with the uncivilized African, the despised slave. We do not think, however, that Shakespeare had any other intention than to paint Othello as one of the most noble and accomplished of the proud children of the Ommiades and Abbasides. The expression 'thick-lips,' from the mouth of Roderigo, can only be received dramatically, as a nick-name given to Othello by the folly and ill-nature of this coxcomb. Whatever may have been the practice of the stage, even in Shakespeare's time,—and it is by no means improbable that Othello was represented as a Negro,—the whole context of the play is against the notion. [The following observations were communicated to Knight by a friend:] In the ages of her splendour, Venice was thronged with foreigners from every climate of the earth; and nowhere else, perhaps, has the prejudice of colour been so feeble. A more important fact, as regards Desdemona's attachment, is that it was the policy of the Republic to employ foreign mercenaries, and especially in offices of command, for the obvious purpose of lessening to the utmost the danger of cabal and intrigue at home. The families of Senators, or other chief citizens, were in the habit of seeing, in their dark-complexioned guests, those only who were distinguished by ability and by the official rank thereby gained,—picked men, whose hue might be forgotten in their accomplishments.

In Hacıatt's Notes and Comments on Shakespeare, pp. 217-249, are certain observations and opinions by JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, which cannot but 'make the judicious grieve.' So high is my admiration for that great statesman, that it seems almost like an act of lese-majestie, even to refer to these opinions here. The ex-President out-Herauds Heraud in his denunciation of Desdemona; not, however, like Heraud, for her lack of truth, but on the score of her wantonness as shown by her marriage with a 'rude, unbleached African.' It is enough to refer to these Notes; let who will, search them out. I cannot but think that, by way of palliation, we may therein read between the lines the public answer, wrung from the depths of vexation, to that inconsequent question with which the Abolitionists of old were wont constantly to be assailed, and which that 'old man eloquent' must have had thrust at him a thousand times: 'How would you like your daughter to marry a nigger?'—ED.

VERPLANCK: There was nothing in the Moor's descent so to affect his social position in the eyes of Cinthio's readers or Shakespeare's audience, as to surprise them at his being received on equal footing in the family of a Venetian noble, or attaining the highest military rank in the service of the Republic. Yet it is equally clear that, in regard to Desdemona, his race and colour are not a matter of indifference; they are especially dwelt upon as one of the grounds of jealousy; they place between the Moor and the Venetian lady a natural barrier, which it requires a 'downright violence and storm of fortune' to break down. It is the admiration of high intellect, of heroic qualities and achievements,—such as has been sometimes known in real life to overcome most strange disparities of age, character, and external circumstances,—which gives the lady to see Othello's visage only 'in his mind.' She does not lose her own social position by marriage with one under whom Italian and Cypriot nobles (Cassio, Iago, Montano) are ambitious to serve, and with whom the princes and rulers of the State associate as companions; yet her love to him would appear in itself strange and unaccountable, had not the Poet opened to us 'the pure recesses of her mind,' and showed us whence it sprang.

WILSON (Blackwood's Magazine, April, 1850, p. 484):

'NORTH. I cannot but believe that the Othello of Shakespeare is black, and all black. I cannot conceive the ethnography of that age drawing, on the stage especially, the finer distinction which we know between a Moor and a Blackamoor or Negro. The opposition, entertained by Nature, is between White and Black, not between White and Brown. You want the opposition to tell with all its power: "I saw Othello's visage in his mind" is nothing, unless the visible visage is one to be conquered,—to be accepted by losing sight of it. I say again, I cannot imagine the contemporary audience of Shakespeare deciding colour between a Moor and a Negro. The tradition of the Stage, too, seems to have made Othello jet black. Such, I opine, was the notion of the Moor, then, to the People, to the Court, to the Stage, to Shakespeare.'

'TALBOYS. Woolly-headed?

'NORTH. Why, yes,—if you choose,—in opposition to the "curled darlings."

'TALBOYS. Yet Coleridge said, "it would be something monstrous to conceive this beautiful Venetian girl falling in love with a veritable Negro."

'NORTH. Coleridge almost always thought, felt, wrote, and spoke finely, as a Critic,—but may I venture, in all love and admiration of that name, to suggest that the removal which the Stage makes of a subject from reality must never be forgotten? In life you cannot bear that the White Woman shall marry the Black Man. You could not bear that an English Lady Desdemona,—Lady Blanche Howard,—should, under 'any imaginable greatness, marry General Toussaint or the Duke of Marmalade.

'Your senses revolt with offence and loathing. But on the stage some consciousness 'that everything is not as literally meant as it seems,—that symbols of humanity, and
'not actual men and women, are before you,—saves the Play.

'TALBOYS. I believe that Wordsworth's line, "The gentle Lady married to the 'Moor," expresses explicitly the feeling of the general English heart,—pity for the 'contrast, and a thought of the immense love that has overcome it.

'NORTH. White and Black is the utter antithesis,—as, at intensity, Night and Day.
'Yes, Talboys,—every jot of soot you take from his complexion, you take an iota from 'the signified power of love.

'TALBOYS. As you say, sir, the gap which is between the Stage and Reality must 'prevent, in our hearts, anything like loathing of the conjunction.

'NORTH. The touch of such an emotion would annul the whole Tragedy. A dis'parity, or a discrepancy, vast as mysterious,—but which love, at the full, is entitled to 'overlook—overstep! Whether Fate dare allow prosperity to a union containing so 'mighty an element of disruption, is another question. It seems like an attempt at 'overruling the "Æterna foedera rerum." . . . Talboys, I cannot help thinking that 'Shakespeare shows up in Othello foul passions,—that you see in him two natures con-
'joined,—the moral Caucasian White and animal tropical Black. In the Caucasian,
'the spiritual or angelical in us attains its manifestation. In the offspring of the trop-
'ics, amongst the sands and under the suns of Africa, the animal nature takes domina'tion. The sands and suns that breed Lions, breed men with Lions' hearts in them.
'The Lion is for himself noble, but blood of the Irrational in the veins of the Rational 'is a contradiction. The noblest moral nature and the hot blind rage of animal blood!

'TALBOYS. Ay, the noblest moral nature, and high above every other evidence of it,
'his love of HER,—which, what it was, and what it would have remained, or become,—
'and what he was and would have been, had Iago not been there, we may imagine!
'With all the power of a warrior, and a ruler, he has the sensibility of a Lover,—with 'all spontaneous dignity and nobility, he has the self-mastery of reason,—before his 'overthrow.

'NORTH. Wherefore, my dear Sheriff, I prefer Othello as a specimen of the Ethical 'Marvellous. Like, as in another kingdom, a Winged Horse, or a Centaur,—the meet'ing of two natures which readily hold asunder. All this has under the Æthiop com'plexion its full force,—less if you mitigate,—if not mitigate merely, but take away,
'where are we all? The innate repugnance of the White Christian to the Black Moor'ish blood, is the ultimate tragic substratum,—the "must" of all that follows. Else,—
'make Othello White,—and, I say again, see where we are!

'TALBOYS. Shakespeare, sir, was not one to flinch from the utmost severity of a 'Case.

'NORTH. Not he, indeed,—therefore I swear Othello is a Blackamoor.

'TALBOYS. And I take it, sir, that Othello's natural demeanour is one of great grav'ity, to which the passionate moods induced are in extremity of contrast. I conceive 'that, by these mixtures and contrasts, he is rendered picturesque and poetical.

'NORTH. I swear Othello was a Blackamoor,—and that Desdemona was the Whitest 'Lady in Europe.'

GRANT WHITE (Shakespeare's Scholar, 1854, p. 432): Shakespeare nowhere calls Othello an Ethiopian, and also does not apply the term to Aaron in the horrible Titus Andronicus; but he continually speaks of both as Moors; and as he has used the first word elsewhere, and certainly had use for it as a reproach in the mouth of Iago, it seems that he must have been fully aware of the distinction in grade between the two races, although his notion of their distinctive traits was, perhaps, neither very true nor very clear. Indeed, I could never see the least reason for supposing that Shakespeare intended Othello to be represented as a negro. With the negroes the Venetians had nothing to do, that we know of, and could not have, in the natural course of things; whereas, with their over-the-way neighbours, the Moors, they were continually brought in contact. These were a warlike, civilized, and enterprising race, which could furnish an Othello; whereas, the contrary has always been the condition of the negroes. The reasons for supposing Othello to be a negro are few and easily set aside, which is not the case of those which show him to be a Moor. The most conclusive of the former is Roderigo's calling Othello 'thick lips'; but this is the result of Shakespeare's want of exact information. He had, doubtless, never seen either a Moor or a negro, and might very naturally confuse their physiological traits; but a man of his knowledge and penetration could not fail to know the difference between the position and the character of the nation which built the Alhambra and that which furnished their stock in trade to the Englishmen who, when he wrote Othello, were supplying the plantations in the West Indies with slaves, and, soon after his death, introduced negro slavery into Virginia. In addition to this epithet 'thick lips,' there are several allusions to Othello as having the visage of the devil, as black, and as being, therefore, the very reverse of attractive to a woman like Desdemona. But this proves nothing; for Shakespeare has applied these identical epithets to so eminent and undeniable a Moor as the Prince of Morocco. In the Mer. of Ven. I, ii, Portia says, upon the announcement of the royal Moor, 'if he have the condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he would shrive me than wive me.' He himself prays her, 'Mislike me not for my complexion'; and she, when he has selected the wrong casket, says, 'May all of his complexion choose me so'; and yet he was not jetty black like a negro, but tawny; for the stage direction in II, i, in the Qq is, 'Enter, Morochus, a tawny Moor, all in white.' Plainly, then, the devilish visage attributed to Othello, and the assumed repulsiveness of his colour, makes him out, in Shakespeare's estimation, only a Moor, and not even a very black Moor at that. But there is direct evidence that he was a Mauritanian [from Iago's calling him a 'Barbary horse,' and from his telling Roderigo that Othello was going to Mauritania].

HENRY REED (Lectures on Tragic Poetry, p. 268): The repulsive notion that Othello was a black,—a coarse-featured African,—seems to me directly at variance with the requisitions of both poetry and history; and I cannot but think it is an error, which may be traced either to some false critical theory, or else more probably to the too literal interpretation of passages in the play, the unimaginative reading which is fatal so often to the spirit of poetry. The hero is styled 'Othello, the Moor;' such is his title and familiar designation throughout. He was one of that adventurous race of men who, striking out from the heart of Arabia, had made conquest of Persia and Syria; and, overturning the ancient sovereignty of Egypt, swept in victory along the whole northern coast of Africa; and, passing thence across the narrow frith of the Mediterranean, scattered the dynasty of the Goths with Roderic at their head. . . . How true to his nature was it for Othello to stand in conscious pride,—the descendant of a race of kings, the representative of the Arabs who had been sovereigns of Europe,—his spirit glowing with noble ancestral memories! And, on the other hand, how perfectly consistent it was with the debasing malignity of Iago, and with the petulant disappointment of Roderigo, to be blind to all that ennobled and dignified the Moorish name—to see no distinction between the chivalrous Moor, the chieftain of Christian armies, and the barbarous Ethiop,—the despised slave. It was natural that vulgar words should be uttered from the lips of such men, and also that the parental frenzy of Desdemona's father should find relief in the same strain of vituperative misrepresentation, the propensity of a fresh and angry grief to magnify its injury. Such are the authorities that have led to the supposition that Othello was black. In one scene, indeed, he speaks so of himself; but it is when he is in Iago's grasp,—when he is 'changing with the poison.' The agony of doubt has heaved over the lofty complacent bearing of his happier moments, and his speaking of himself as black is,—what is very natural to such condition of mind,—a piece of morbid exaggeration; just as when, in the same scene, he describes himself as 'declined into the vale of years.' On every account, it is better to clear the fancy of this false conception of Othello's colour, most of all for the sake of our sympathies with the gentle Desdemona; for if we are brought to believe that this bright, this fair-faced, Venetian lady was wedded to a black, we should almost be tempted to think that the monstrous alliance was fitly blotted out in its fearful catastrophe. . . . The Moorish complexion of Othello, not intended to produce in our minds disgust at Desdemona's choice, is made to serve an important dramatic purpose, in that it greatly ministers to his suspicions of his wife's fidelity. It is the first unprompted argument for doubt; the first suggested by Othello's own thoughts, and, of course, quickly seized on and fomented by Iago. It serves, too, to account for the extreme sensitiveness of Othello's sense of honour,—that which is a prime element in his character.

J. E. TAYLOR (Introduction to Trans. of Cinthio, p. 13): We have merely to deal with the poet's own conception of the character, and to take this as the standard by which to judge its delineation: the drama, as a work of art, is simply amenable to the rules of art. And this is an instructive instance of the fact that artistic truth may consist with accidental errors which lie beyond the pale of art; the character of Othello may be in itself perfect,—faultless; and yet, when a nationality is affixed to it, it may violate the physical and moral laws of nature displayed in the distinction of races. This is a very minor point of mere speculation, not of criticism; still it is open to discussion. The novelist speaks of the blackness (negrezza) of the Moor, and that Shakespeare had the outward figure of a black present to his thoughts appears more than probable from numerous allusions in the Play. . . . Nothing can be more conclusive than these expressions, and the tradition of the Stage (there is reason to believe) has uniformly represented Othello as a black from Shakespeare's day to the present. Nevertheless, this in no degree affects the character of the Moor, for the reasons just stated.

HALLIWELL: The reference to 'Mauritania,' IV, ii, 257, surely settles the disputed question, Was Othello a negro? Certainly not. He was a Moor of lofty lineage, with thick lips and a very dark complexion. 'Black Othello' was the dark-complexioned Othello. So the word 'black' was employed in Shakespeare's time, as in the following extract: 'Quest. Why do some women love men that bee blacke, and other, those that be faire and well coloured? An. Women of feeble sight love them that bee blacke, because blacknesse doth joyne and unite the sight too much disparkled, and by this meanes doth comfort the same. Or else we may well say that every thing doth love and desire his like. They therefore which be hote of nature love them that be blacke, because they be more prone to heate. Other which be of colder nature do love them that be white, because they be of cold complexion, the mother of whitenesse.'—Delectable Demaundes and Pleasant Questions, 1596, p. 10.

HUDSON (also in reference to 'Mauritania'): This passage proves, so far as anything said my Iago may be believed, that Othello was not meant to be a Negro, as has been represented, both on the stage and off, but a veritable Moor. His kindred, the Mauritians,—from whose ‘men of royal siege he fetched his life and being,’ and among whom he was about to retire,—though apt enough to be confounded with the negroes, were as different from them externally as brown is from black; internally, in mind and character, the difference was far greater. [In his Preface, p. 33, Hudson writes:] The difference of Moors and Negroes was as well known in Shakespeare’s time as it is now; and that he thought them the same is no more likely from this play than from The Merchant of Venice, where the Prince of Morocco comes as a suitor to Portia, and in a stage direction of the Qto is called ‘a tawny Moor.’

MARY PRESTON (Studies in Shakespeare, 1869, p. 71): In studying the play of Othello, I have always imagined its hero a white man. It is true the dramatist paints him black, but this shade does not suit the man. It is a stage decoration, which my taste discards; a fault of colour from an artistic point of view. I have, therefore, as I before stated in my readings of this play, dispensed with it. Shakespeare was too correct a delineator of human nature to have coloured Othello black, if he had personally acquainted himself with the idiosyncrasies of the African race.

We may regard, then, the daub of black upon Othello’s portrait as an ebullition of fancy, a freak of imagination,—the visionary conception of an ideal figure,—one of the few erroneous strokes of the great master’s brush, the single blemish on a faultless work.

Othello was a white man! [The Authoress dates her Preface from ‘Oaklands, Harford County, Maryland.’—ED.]

LEWES (On Actors and the Art of Acting, p. 145): Othello is black,—the very tragedy lies there; the whole force of the contrast, the whole pathos and extenuation of his doubts of Desdemona, depend on this blackness. Fechter makes him a half-caste, whose mere appearance would excite no repulsion in any woman out of America.

ERL RYGENHOBG (Am. Bibliopolist, Dec., 1875): A thousand examples might be quoted to show that in Shakespeare’s time a dark or brunette complexion was indicated by calling a person ‘black.’ Thus, in the English Bible, 1611, Song of Solomon, i, 6, 7; and in the very play under consideration, II, i, Desdemona asks, ‘How if she be black and witty?’

SNIDER (i, 105): Othello was not a Hottentot on the one hand, nor was he a Caucasian on the other; he was, however, born in Africa, and his physiognomy is thoroughly African. The point which the Poet emphasizes so often and so strongly is the difference of race between him and Desdemona. He is her equal in rank, for he comes of royal lineage; he is the peer of her family in honor and fame, for he is the most distinguished man in Venice. The sole difference which is selected as the ground of the collision is the difference of race. This fact is sufficient for all dramatic purposes; to ascertain the exact shade of his skin may be left to those who have leisure to play with probabilities.

GRANT WHITE (Note in ad Edition on ‘thick lips,’ I, i, 72): Shakespeare’s notions about Moors and Negroes were, we may be sure, far from being clear and discriminating; and it is to be remarked that even Moors have thicker lips than the white European races.

[That Shakespeare meant to represent Othello as ‘black,’ I cannot but think, and ‘black’ in the full meaning of the word, not ‘dark-complexioned’ as Desdemona uses it in ‘How if she be black and witty,’ nor ‘tawny,’ but thoroughly black. Disregarding the ‘thick lips’ of Iago, or the ‘sootie bosome’ of Brabantio, or any phrase uttered by Othello's enemies in moments of passion, to me, beyond a peradventure, Othello himself supplies the evidence, 'which will not down,' where he says (III, iii, 445): 'My name that was as fresh As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and blacke As mine owne face.' The epithet 'begrim'd' amplifies and confirms the sootie hue. Its æsthetic propriety, I am taught by Wilson; its offencelessness, when I read the play, I learn from Lamb; and since actors now present the tawny hue, I am not offended when 'sitting at the play.'—ED.]

ACTORS

THE first Actor of Othello was RICHARD BURBAGE, at whose death, in 1618, appeared an Elegy, which, 'from a manuscript in the possession of the late Mr Heber,' Collier printed in his History of Dramatic Poetry (iii, 299, 2nd ed.). The following are the lines which relate to Othello:

'But let me not forget one chieftest part
'Wherein, beyond the rest, he mov'd the heart,
'The griev'd Moor, made jealous by a slave,
'Who sent his wife to fill a timeless grave,
'Then slew himself upon the bloody bed.
'All these and many more with him are dead.'

Another version is given in Ingleby's Centurie of Prayse (p. 131, 2nd ed.) from a MS. in the Huth Library, whereof all that concerns us here is as follows:

'hee's gone & wth him what A world are dead.
'which he reuiu'd, to be reuiued foe,
'no more young Hamlett, ould Heironymoe
'kind Leer, the Greued Moore, and more beside,
'that liued in him; haue now for euer dy'de.'

The name of NATHAN FIELD appears among the list of Actors, prefixed to the First Folio. Collier in his Hist. of Dram. Poetry (iii, 437, 2d ed.) has the following concerning him: 'If we may believe an epigram written about this time and handed down to us in MS, Field was of a jealous turn of mind; and it leads us to remark upon the probability that Burbage, some time before his death, had relinquished to Field the part of Othello.' [The first two, and last two lines of this epigram, are as follows:] 'Field is, in sooth, an actor—all men know it, And is the true Othello of the poet. . . . Since, as the Moore is jealous of his wife, Field can display the passion to the life.'

HALLIWELL-PHILLIPS (Outlines, 5th ed., p. 177): The Tragedy of Othello, originally known under the title of the Moor of Venice, . . . was very popular, Leonard Digges speaking of the audiences preferring it to the laboured compositions of Ben Jonson. In 1609, a Stage-loving parent, one William Bishop of Shoreditch, who had perhaps been taken with the representation of the tragedy, gave the name of Othello's perfect wife to one of his twin daughters. . . . These scattered notices, accidentally preserved, doubtlessly out of many others that might have been recorded, are indicative of its continuance as an acting play; a result that may, without disparagement to the author, be attributed in some measure to the leading character having been assigned to the most accomplished tragic actor of the day,—Richard Burbage. The name of the first performer of Iago is not known, but there is a curious tradition, which can be traced as far back as the close of the Seventeenth century, to the effect that the part was originally undertaken by a popular comedian, and that Shakespeare adapted some of the speeches of that character to the peculiar talents of the actor. [Hereupon are given the two following Illustrative Notes:] According to Wright's Historia Histrionica, 1699, p. 4, Taylor was distinguished in this part [Iago], but probably not until after the death of Shakespeare. The insertion of Taylor's name in the list of Shakespearian actors in ed. 1623, merely proves that he had been one of them in or before that year. 'I'm assur'd, from very good hands, that the person that acted Iago was in much esteem of a comedian which made Shakespear put several words and expressions into his part, perhaps not so agreeable to his character, to make the audience laugh, who had not yet learnt to endure to be serious a whole play.'—Gildon's Reflections on Rymer's Short View of Tragedy, 1694.

MALONE (Hist. Account of the English Stage, Var. '21, vol. iii, p. 126): The first woman that appeared in any regular drama on a public stage, performed the part of Desdemona; but who the lady was, I am unable to ascertain. The play of Othello is enumerated by Downes as one of the stock-plays of the King's Company on their opening their theatre in Drury Lane in 1663; and it appears from a paper found with Sir Henry Herbert's Office-book, that it was one of the stock-plays of the same company from the time they began to play without a patent at the Red Bull in St. John Street. Mrs Hughes performed the part of Desdemona in 1663, when the company removed to Drury Lane, and obtained the title of the King's Servants; but whether she performed with them while they played at the Red Bull, or in Vere Street, has not been ascertained. Perhaps Mrs Saunderson made her first essay there, though she afterwards was enlisted in D'Avenant's Company. The received tradition is, that she was the first English actress. [Mrs Saunderson afterwards married Betterton. Unmarried women were not called Miss 'until after the Revolution,' says Davies in his edition of Downes, p. 28; the first instance of its use which he found was in Flecknoe's Epigrams, 1669.—ED.] The verses which were spoken by way of introducing a female to the audience were written by Thomas Jordan, printed, I believe, in 1662. [Malone here reprints the whole Prologue, but I think a short extract will satisfy all demands of curiosity or of refinement:]

'But to the point:—In this reforming age
'We have intents to civilize the stage.
'Our women are defective, and so siz'd
'You'd think they were some of the guard disguis'd:
'For to speak truth, men act, that are between
'Forty and fifty, wenches of fifteen;
'With bone so large, and nerve so incontinent,
'When you call Desdemona, enter Giant.—
'We shall purge everything that is unclean,
'Lascivious, scurrilous, impious, or obscene;
'And when we've put all things in this fair way,
'Barebones himself may come to see a play.'

The Epilogue is in the same strain of apology [with a side-light thrown on Othello's colour]:

'Then he that censures her in such a case,
'Hath a soul blacker than Othello's face.
'But ladies what think you? for if you tax
'Her freedom with dishonour to your sex,
'She means to act no more, and this shall be
'No other play but her own tragedy.'

From a paper in the Times Library, containing, I think, the earliest copy preserved of the first full-length appearance in America, I received a fair copy of the play, and the Times Library is now, December 1, 1850, in the best state for study. It is but my, however, to a volume in which the appearance in the English stage.

At the New York on May 1, 1850, I found that it was then preserved in a volume in the possession of the proprietors of the Times Library, the Library of the Times and a Great Britain and Great Britain is, I think, among the papers, there preserved, at least a volume of the Times Library, collected in a collection, about the time of the Times Library, when the proprietors were receiving much and now that it is from the Times and the Times are their best against anything like the present appearance. I suppose that most of these in the volume were copied from the present appearance, many of which are now lost. In the list of these books, as given by John New York, Vol. 1, Part 1, Part 1, there appeared the following: Tragedy of Othello the Moor, Anonymous, not following Anonymous: Tragedy very timely. Not printed.

There was no in fact. John gave me a copy, that the book was written independently of Anonymous: Tragedy it was printed upon the play in consequence of its popularity, and not the play upon it. It varies slightly from the play, and makes large a fragment, as almost as some notices. The change was, perhaps, made in accordance with the prejudice of the time when it was written, possibly about 1810, after the working off of the Times March. It is as follows, and here I preserve the spelling of the MS, since it may not in some degree be fitting the age of the production:

THE TRAGEDY OF OTHELLO THE MOOR

The fatal effects of jealousy,
Othello's deadly hate,
Iago's cruel treachery,
And Desdemona's fate,
In this scene related you may read,
If not you let it see,
Which tells the vilest, bloodiest deeds
Yet ever seen with eye.

In Venice City, long time since,
A Noble Moore first live,
Who to the daughter of a Prince
In secretie did give.
She was as faire as he was blacke,
A sunshine and a clowde:
She was as milde as playfull childre,
But he was ferce and proude.

And loved he her, as well he might,
For deefie she lovde him:
She doted on his brow of night,
And on each swarthie limbe.
Othello was this noble Moore,
A Souldier often tride,
Who many victories did procure
To swell Venetian pride.

Faire Desdemona was the name
This lovelie ladie bare:
Her father had great wealth and fame,
And she his onclie heire.

Therefore, when he at length found out
 His daughter thus was wed,
 To breake their bonds he cast about,
 But onelie firmer made.

And much rejoiced he to know,
 And to that end did worke,
 The State his wife would part him fro
 To fight against the Turke.
 But she ne would remaine behinde,
 For that she did not wed;
 She'd live and die with one so kinde,
 And soe she plainlie said.

The Turkes the while did threat the Isle
 Of Cyprus with a fray,
 And thither must Othello speede
 And that without delaye.
 To Cyprus steere they both, nor feare
 Could touch the lady's hart;
 The Lord she lovde she knew was neare,
 Whom death should not depart.

But when they came to Cyprus Isle
 To her great joye they found,
 That heaven had fought the fight the while
 The Turkes were sunk and drownd.
 A storme had late assailde their fleete,
 That most of them were lost:
 And you will owne it was most meete
 The crescent should be crost.

Now, while upon the Isle they stayde,
 The luckelesse lotte befell,
 By a false Spaniard's wicked ayde,
 Which I am now to tell.
 He was the Antient to the Moore
 For he so closelie wrought,
 He held him honest, trusty, sure,
 Until he found him nought.

Iago was the monster's name,
 Who lovde the lady long;
 But she denied his sute and claime,
 Though with a gentle tongue.
 For this he silent vengeance vowd
 Upon the happie Moore,
 And took a way without delay
 To make his vengeance sure.

There was a Captain of the band,
 And Cassio was his name,
 In happie moode by nature pland,
 Of strong and lustie frame:
 He was Lieftenant to the Moore,
 A post of trust and weight,
 And therefore he must partner bee
 Of the foule traitor's hate.

He whisper'd at Othelloe's backe
 His wife had chaungde her minde,
 And did not like his sootie blacke,
 As he full soone would finde;

APPENDIX

But much preferd the ruddie dye
Of her owne countrey men;
And bade him keepe a warie eye
On her deportment then.

Tut, tut, then quoth the hastie Moore,
Deepe as the throat you lye.
I wish I did, quoth he, for sure
Much liefer would I die,
Then see what I my selfe have scene.
What have yu scene? he cride—
What onelie would become a queane,
Not my deare general's bride.

He heare no more, Othello said:
That I am blacke is true,
And she is faire as morning ayre
But that she always knew.
Well onelie keepe a warie eye
Upon her actions now:
Cassio's the man, I do not lye,
As you will soone allowe.

You thought she lovde you, that she came
With you to this hot Isle:
Cassio was with you, and the dame
On him did closelie smile.
I needes must grieve to see my Lord
So wantonly deceived:
Thus far I prithe take my word,
It is to be believed.

O god, what prooffe hast thou of this
What prooffe that she is foule?
Prooffe you would have—tis not amis,
He give it on my soule.

Cassio will talke you in his sleepe,
And speakes then of your wife.
He cannot anie secret keepe
An it would save his life
This shoves that he may love my wife,
The doubting Moore replied;
And if tis true she loves him too,
Better they both had died.

Behold, my Lord, Iago said,
Know you this token true?
And then a handkerchief displaid,
Which well Othello knewe.
Twas one he Desdemona gave
When they were wedded first,
Wrought with embroiderie so brave:
With rage he well nie burst.

Whence got you that, whence got you that?
Tell me or instant die!
She gave it Cassio, but thereat
Why roll your yellow eye?
It is but one of tokens more
That he, I know, can bost;
And she has his, no doubt, good store,
I recke not which has most.

Now, this same well knowne handkerchete
 That very morne he stole,
 And thus the cruel vengeful theife
 Rackde brave Othelloes soule.
 His wife was true, and pure as dewe
 Upon the lillie white.
 No bounds his tameless passion knew
 But rushing from the sight,

He sought his lady as she layde
 Within her virgin bed,
 And there his hands of blackest shade
 He dyed to gory red :
 But first he chargde her with the crime,
 Which ever she denyed,
 And askt but for a little time
 To prove the traytor lyed.

O, twas a piteous sight to see
 A thing so meeke and faire,
 Torne with such salvage crueltie
 By her long lovelie haire.
 Then came the caitiffe to rejoyce
 His blacke hart with the viewe,
 But soone twas provide by many a voice
 The Ladie had beene true.

Twas provide the handkerchiefe he stole,
 And then the same he layde
 Where Cassio for a suertie came,
 That he might be betrayde.
 Othello stood as one distraught
 To heare what thus was showne,
 That Desdemona, even in thought,
 To sinne had never knowne.

He fomde, he stampd, he ravde, he tore,
 To thinke upon his deede
 Then struck Iago to the floore,
 But onelie made him bleede.
 For deadliest tortures he was savde,
 And suffering them he dide :
 A lesson milde to traytors vilde,
 May such them still betide.

Upon his Desdemona's coarse Othello cast him than,
 In agonie of deepe remorse,
 A broken harted man.
 With charitie, he said, relate
 What you this day have seene,
 Think once how well I servde the State,
 And what I once have beene.

Then with the dagger, that was wet
 With his dear Ladies bloud,
 He stabde him selfe and thus out let
 His soule in gory floud.
 This storie true you oft times knew,
 By actors playde for meede ;
 But still so well, twas hard to tell
 If twas not truth in deede.

Dicke Burbidge, that most famous man,
 That actor without peere,
 With this same part his course began,
 And kept it manie a yeare.
 Shakespeare was fortunate, I trow,
 That such an actor had.
 If we had but his equall now
 For one I should be glad.

Finis.

[In a foot-note on the fourth line of the last stanza, Collier says:] 'As Burbage "began his course" as an actor many years before Othello was written, the meaning of the author of this ballad may be that Burbage played the part of Othello originally, and retained it until his death. Otherwise, we must take it as a mere guess, and not a happy one, that Burbage commenced as an actor in Othello. The great probability is, that Burbage was upon the stage, as a boy, when Shakespeare first joined the company in 1586 or 1587.' [Collier reiterates in the text that] 'Burbage was, of course, dead, and it is certainly a mistake to assert that he began his course with Othello.' [Some of the other ballads in this volume have been held to be spurious, and, I suppose, on the principle of noscitur ex sociis, doubts have been cast on the foregoing. Indeed, INGLEBY publicly challenged its genuineness in The Academy in 1876. The stanza which he selected as proving its 'very modern composition' is the tenth, and the line which he therein italicised is, 'He whisper'd at Othello's backe'; he also italicised, in the same stanza, the words 'much preferred.' He then justifies his challenge and marshals his proof that the whole ballad is a forgery, as follows: 'The first line of this stanza [viz. the line just quoted in Italics] might have been suggested by the second of Retsch's Outlines to Schiller's Fridolin, of which Mr Collier published a translation of great merit in 1824.' This is all the proof, which I can find, that he adduces. That a scholar so eminent and a critic so keen should, with apparent gravity, give us this hypothetical pluperfect subjunctive might have been, after whetting our appetites for a downright perfect indicative was, lay beyond my comprehension, till my eye caught the date of the Number of The Academy—the First of April!—ED.]

SAMUEL PEPYS, 1660, October 11.—Here, in the Park, we met with Mr Salisbury, who took Mr Creed and me to the Cockpit to see 'The Moor of Venice,' which was well done. Burt acted the Moor; by the same token, a very pretty lady that sat by me, called out, to see Desdemona smothered.

1666, August 20.—To Deptford by water, reading 'Othello, Moor of Venice,' which I ever heretofore esteemed a mighty good play; but having so lately read 'The Adventures of Five Houres,' it seems a mean thing.

1668, February 6.—To the King's playhouse, and there . . . did see 'The Moor of Venice' but ill acted in most parts; Mohun, which did a little surprise me, not acting Iago's part by much so well as Clun used to do; nor another Hart's, which was Cassio's; nor, indeed, Burt doing the Moor's so well as I once thought he did.*

Hawkins (Life of Kean, ii, 379): On the 25th of March, 1833, KEAN made his last appearance, as it proved, in Othello, Charles Kean being the Iago and Ellen Tree the Desdemona. There had been no rehearsal. He was assisted from his carriage into the dressing-room, where he sank, drooping and nerveless, into a chair. 'Tell my boy,' he said to Charles Kemble, with whom he had become reconciled, 'that I want to see him.' When Charles entered the dressing-room, he found his father so weak that he deemed it advisable to ask Mr Warde to be in readiness to proceed with the part in case of an emergency. 'I am very ill,' Kean murmured; 'I am afraid I shall not be able to go on.' Cheered up by Charles Kemble, who stood by his side with a glass of very hot brandy-and-water, he dressed himself with difficulty. Charles led his father from the dressing-room to the wing, and as the Scene opened they went on. 'The Scene in which the Moor appeared, followed by mine Ancient,' says a writer in Fraser's Magazine three months afterwards, 'can never be forgotten by those who beheld it. The applause was tumultuous,—the spirit of enthusiasm pervaded all,—and never more, perhaps, were the generous sympathies of an audience displayed more vividly than at this moment. It may well be considered an era in the annals of the Stage, for we might vainly trace through those annals for a parallel to that scene. It was not merely the fact of a father and son having attained to such excellence in the histrionic art as to be thus qualified to assume, in the same play and on the same occasion, the two most difficult characters in the whole range of the tragic drama, unprecedented as that fact really is,—it was not the mere novelty of a new Iago; but there stood Edmund Kean, the only Othello of the modern stage, no longer opposing the bent of his son's genius, but sacrificing all his repugnance to that son's adoption of his profession, and entering with him upon a trial of skill in that play in which so many an Iago had proved but a foil. It was a spectacle never to be forgotten, to see the great tragedian leading forward his son,—attesting, with a father's pride, their perfect reconciliation,—enjoying the paternal triumph which his success at so early an age could not fail to excite in such a heart as Kean's.' The performance progressed. Noble as ever was his quiet rebuke of Cassio,—'How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?' majestic and portentous as ever was his dismissal of the offender. Before the great Third Act commenced he found that his strength was rapidly sinking, and he anxiously enjoined his son,—'Mind, Charley, that you keep before me; don't get behind me in this Act. I don't know that I shall be able to kneel; but, if I do, be sure that you lift me up.' He went on; his determination seemed more than a match for his weakness; and as Iago distilled the first drops of poison into his ear, the force, beauty, and truth of his acting exhibited the evidence of the unfading charm within. He came off with Desdemona, and as he seated himself in a chair near one of the wings, he said, with obvious gratification, 'Charles is getting on to-night; he's acting very well. I suppose that is because he is playing with me.' When he re-entered with 'What, false to me!' &c., it was with difficulty that he succeeded in keeping his footing, but the stillness of the immense auditory in front seemed to make him think that something must be done, and he shone out brilliantly in the authoritative repulsion of Iago, 'Avaunt, begone,' and the whirlwind of passion with which he continued to accompany, 'I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips.' This exertion cost him dear, as his increasing feebleness showed; but the 'Farewell' apostrophe was as sweet, as musical, as unutterably pathetic as of old. For the last time the melodiousness of his unexerted tones 'came over the spirit like the desolate moaning of the blast that precedes the thunderstorm,' or like 'the hollow and not unmusical murmur of the midnight sea after the tempest had raved itself to rest'; for the last time those tones 'sank into the heart like the sighing of the gentle breeze among the strings of an æolian harp, or among the branches of a cypress grove,'—farewell! 'Is it possible?—my lord!' and then as he endeavoured to abandon himself to the overwhelming storm of passion which followed this calm,—rage, hatred, intervening doubts,—all the Moorish fire and passionateness which blazed out as he turned upon Iago,—a marked change came over the tragedian,

* All of Pepys's allusions to Shakespeare's plays are collected in INGLEBY's admirable Centuries of Plays; from which those only which refer to Othello are here given.—ED.

—he trembled,—stopped,—tottered,—reeled; Charles, fearing the worst, went forward and extended his arms; the father made another effort and advanced towards his son with, ‘Villain, be sure,’ &c., but it was of no use, and with a whispered moan, ‘I am dying,—speak to them for me,’ he sank insensible into Charles’s arms.’ A saddening conviction that the acting of Edmund Kean was at an end impressed itself upon the hearts of all; amidst earnest and sympathizing applause he was gently removed from the sight of those whom he had so often moved to admiration, to terror, to wonder, and to tears; and with a delicacy rarely indeed displayed in a theatre, the major part of the audience, not waiting to see the play finished, went away. [Three weeks later, on the 15th of May, Kean died.]

COSTUME

MURPHY (Life of Garrick, i, 105): Garrick’s benefit was announced in the month of March, for that night he was prepared to act the Moor of Venice. He was aware that his stature was inferior to that of his predecessors, and, to assist his figure, he chose to appear in a Venetian dress.

[It may be rash to say it, but I doubt if this ‘Venetian dress’ amounted to anything more than a high Oriental turban with a plume on it; my reason for this supposition is, that it was this costume which gave rise to a witticism which has been variously attributed to Quin, to Foote, and to Garrick himself, and which would lose its point if the costume were wholly Venetian or wholly Oriental. Hogarth’s series of pictures, with which we are all familiar, ‘The Harlot’s Progress,’ were at that time in the height of their popularity; ladies’ fans were decorated with copies of them, and the series had even been put on the stage, I believe, as tableaux. One of the series represents the heroine upsetting the breakfast table, just as a little Negro page is bringing in the tea-kettle. The boy is jet black with rolling white eyes, and dressed in laced coat and knee-breeches, and with a disproportionately large turban on his head surmounted by an aigret. When Garrick, then, appeared on the stage in his novel costume as Othello, it is said that Quin exclaimed to his neighbour, ‘Here’s Pompey,—but where’s the tea-kettle?’ Garrick’s dress, therefore, must have been the same as Pompey’s, or there would have been no laugh. Although both Quin and Foote were fully clever enough, and more than cruel enough, to make the speech, yet I prefer to think that it was Garrick himself, as I have seen it somewhere stated, who said when he was dressing for the stage: ‘I suppose Quin will say when he sees me, “Here’s Pompey, but where’s the tea-kettle?”’ To this is sometimes added, ‘the tea-kettle and the lamp,’ which I am afraid reveals an unfamiliarity, on the part of the narrator, with the source of the witticism. Fitzgerald (Life of Garrick, i, 153) distinctly says, that on this occasion Garrick was dressed in a ‘bright scarlet officer’s coat.’—ED.]

RUSSELL (Representative Actors, p. 128): In his autobiography, F. Reynolds tells us he remembers seeing Barry act Othello ‘in a full suit of gold-laced scarlet, a small cocked hat, knee-breeches, and silk stockings, conspicuously displaying a pair of gouty legs.’

BOADEN (Life of Kemble, i, 256): In March, 1785, Othello was acted at Drury-Lane Theatre; Othello by Mr Kemble—Desdemona, Mrs Siddons. The dress of the Moor at that time was a British general officer’s uniform, equally improper with the Moorish jacket and trousers of modern times. The general of an Italian State would wear its uniform; he would never be indulged with a privilege of strutting about like ‘a malignant and a turbaned Turk' at the head of a Christian army. Mr Kemble always played parts of this character very finely. He was grand, and awful, and pathetic. But he was a European; there seemed to be philosophy in his bearing; there was reason in his rage; he acted as if Othello truly described himself when he calls himself 'one not easily jealous.' He had never, I think, so completely worked himself into the character as to be identified with it, as was surely the case in his Hamlet, his Macbeth, his King John.

KNIGHT: It has been maintained that, as General of the Venetian army, Othello should wear a Venetian dress; while, on the other hand, it has been contended that the Moorish garb was the more correct, as well as more effective. That Othello was a Christian may be inferred from his marriage with a Christian, and we have, moreover, Iago's express testimony, where, in II, iii, he speaks of Othello as ready, for Desdemona's sake, to renounce 'his baptism, All seals and symbols of redeemed sin.' There ought, therefore, to be no question as to which habit is more correct; the convert would indubitably put off his turban with his faith, and assume the dress of that Republic whose religion he had adopted and whose officer he had become. Indeed, from the commencement of Act II, there can be neither doubt nor choice allowed on the subject, as the General of the Venetian forces, to whatever nation he might trace his birth (and he was always a foreigner) [see I, iii, 61], assumed, on the day of his election, a peculiar habit, consisting of a full gown of crimson velvet, with loose sleeves, over which was worn a mantle of cloth of gold, buttoned upon the right shoulder with massy gold buttons. The cap was of crimson velvet, and the baton of office was of silver, ensigned with the winged lion of St. Mark [Knight gives an engraving of this dress from Vecellio]. Of the 'Italian foot' Vecellio gives us a specimen. His defensive armour consists of a back and breast-plate, mail sleeves, and that peculiar species of head-piece called a morion. The 'lads of Cyprus' may, with great probability, be supposed to have belonged to the body of Greek cavalry, first employed by the Venetians. Vecellio presents us with the costume of a 'soldato disarmato,' which would be that of Cassio and Iago when off guard. Its characteristics are the buff jerkin and the scarf of company. See V, i, 29. The scarf was the only uniform then known amongst officers; it bore the colours of the captain under whom they served, and is the origin of the modern sash.

Coryat, who travelled in 1608, says, in his Crudities [ii, 19, ed. 1776]: 'I saw the Duke [i. e., Doge] in some of his richest ornaments. . . . He wore two very rich robes, or long garments, whereof the vppermost was white, of cloth of silver, with great massy buttons of gold; the other cloth of silver also, but adorned with many curious workes made in colours with needleworke. [His train was then holden up by two Gentlemen.]' Howell, in his Survey of the Signorie of Venice, 1651, after telling us that the Duke 'always goes clad in silk and purple,' observes that 'sometimes he shows himself to the public in a robe of cloth of gold, and a white mantle; he hath his head covered with a thin coif, and on his forehead he wears a crimson kind of mitre, with a gold border, and, behind, it turns up in form of a horn; on his shoulders he carries ermine skins to the middle, which is still a badge of the Consuls habit; on his feet he wears embroidered sandals' (Vecellio says 'slippers') 'tied with gold buttons; and about his middle a most rich belt, embroidered with costly jewels.' The chiefs of the Council of Ten wore 'red gowns with long sleeves, either of cloth, camlet, or damask, according to the weather, with a flap of the same colour over their left shoulders, red stockings and slippers.' The rest of 'The Tenne,' according to Coryat [p. 33], wore 'blacke chamlet gownes with maruellous long sleeves, that reach almost downe to the ground.' The 'clarissimoes' generally wore 'gownes of blacke cloth, and ouer their left shoulder they haue a flappe made of the same cloth, and edged with black taffata'; and all these 'gowned men,' says the same author, 'doe weare marueilous little blacke caps of felt, without any brimmes at all, and very diminutive falling bands, no ruffes at all, which are so shallow, that I haue seene many of them not aboute a little inch deepe.' The colour of their under-garments was also generally black, and consisted of a 'slender doublet made close to the body, without much quilting or bombast, and long hose plaine, without those new fangled curiosities and ridiculous superfluities of panes, plaits, and other light toyes vsed with vs English men.' 'Young lovers,' says Vecellio, 'wear generally a doublet and breeches of satin, tabby, or other silk, cut or slashed in the form of crosses or stars, through which slashes is seen the lining of coloured taffata; gold buttons, a lace ruff, a bonnet of rich velvet, or silk, with an ornamental band, a silk cloak, and silk stockings, Spanish morocco shoes, a flower in one hand, and their gloves and handkerchief in the other.' Speaking of the ladies of Venice, Coryat [p. 35] says: 'Most of the women, when they walke abroad, especially to Church, are vailed with long vailles, whereof some doe reach almost to the ground behinde. These vailles are eyther blacke, or white, or yellowish. The blacke eyther wiues or widowes do weare; the white, maides, and so the yellowish also; but they weare more white then yellowish. It is the custome of these maydes, when they walke in the streetes, to couer their faces with their vailles, ueracundia causa, the stuffe being so thin and slight, that they may easily looke through it. For it is made of a pretty slender silke, and very finely curled. . . . Now whereas I said before, that only maydes do weare white vailles, and none else, I meane these white silk curled vailles, which (as they tolde me) none doe weare but maydes. But other white vailles wiues doe much weare, such as are made of holland, whereas the greatest part is handsomely edged with great and very faire bone lace.' Vecellio states that courtesans wore black veils in imitation of women of character. We must not forget that singular portion of a Venetian lady's costume at this period, 'the Chioppine.' [See notes on Ham. II, ii, 407.]

The following costumes are given in BOOTH'S Prompt Book, p. 120: OTHELLO,—First Dress: A long gown of cashmere, wrought with gold and various colours. This is looped up to the hip, on the left side, with jewels. A Moorish burnoose, striped with purple and gold. Purple velvet shoes, embroidered with gold and pearl. A sash of green and gold. A jewelled chain. Second Dress: Steel-plate armour. A white burnoose made of African goat's hair. Third Dress: A long, white gown, Moorish, with hood, and with scarlet trimmings. A white sash made of goat's hair. Scarlet velvet shoes. Pearl ear-rings. (These dresses, although conformable to Christian ideas, are devised with a view to express the gorgeous barbaric taste of the Moor.) DESDEMONA,—First Dress: White satin train, trimmed with illusion and pearls. High, pointed corsage, with ruff. Long, puffed sleeves; pearls between puffs. Stomacher, elaborately embroidered with pearls. Girdle of the same. Diamond ear-rings, cross, and pin. Mary Stuart cap made of white satin and pearls. Second Dress: Drab satin train, embroidered with gold. Blue satin poncha, embroidered with gold. Blue satin Mary Stuart cap, trimmed with gold leaves. Third Dress: Rose-coloured satin train; the front breadth of white satin, trimmed with three point-lace flounces, headed by a pearl fringe. High, pointed corsage, with ruff. White, pointed stomacher, embroidered with pearls. Pearl girdle. Sleeves puffed with white satin. Bands of rose and pearls between puffs. Mary Stuart cap of rose satin, trimmed with pearls.

WILHELM OECHELHÄUSER (Einleitung, p. 28): There is, strictly speaking, no one scene imaginable upon which Cassio's interview with Desdemona, Othello's great scene with Iago, the loss of the handkerchief, Iago's conversation with Emilia, the second interview of Othello with Iago, Desdemona's with Othello and Emilia, and in addition the appearance of Bianca and her dialogue with Cassio, could be acted one after the other. I suggest a terrace, therefore, connected by a colonnade, with the castle in view, and to be entered thence as from the street. There is, however, no serious objection to use the hall [usually set for II, iii, in ordinary Acting Copies], with perhaps an elevated background and colonnade; so that then half the piece from the Second [Third] Scene of Act II to the last Scene of Act IV, inclusive, might be acted without change.

The costume should be that of the period of the Renaissance, as it was in Venice. The architecture is, for Venice, partly Gothic in its combination with Byzantine motives, and partly of the early Renaissance style; in Cyprus, it has an Oriental character.

E. W. GODWIN contributed to The Architect a valuable series of suggestive and instructive papers on The Architecture and Costume of Shakspeare's Plays. The issue of 15 March, 1875, was devoted to Othello.

ENGLISH CRITICISMS

DR JOHNSON: The beauties of this play impress themselves so strongly upon the attention of the reader, that they can draw no aid from critical illustration. The fiery openness of Othello, magnanimous, artless, and credulous, boundless in his confidence, ardent in his affection, inflexible in his resolution, and obdurate in his revenge; the cool malignity of Iago, silent in his resentment, subtle in his designs, and studious at once of his interest and his vengeance; the soft simplicity of Desdemona, confident of merit, and conscious of innocence, her artless perseverance in her suit, and her slowness to suspect that she can be suspected, are such proofs of Shakespeare's skill in human nature as, I suppose, it is in vain to seek in any modern writer. The gradual progress which Iago makes in the Moor's conviction, and the circumstances which he employs to enflame him, are so artfully natural, that, though it will perhaps not be said of him [Othello] as he says of himself, that he is 'a man not easily jealous,' yet we cannot but pity him, when at last we find him 'perplexed in the extreme.'

There is always danger lest wickedness, conjoined with abilities, should steal upon esteem, though it misses of approbation; but the character of Iago is so conducted, that he is from the first Scene to the last hated and despised. Even the inferior characters of this play would be very conspicuous in any other piece, not only for their justness, but their strength. Cassio is brave, benevolent, and honest, ruined only by his want of stubbornness to resist an insidious invitation. Roderigo's suspicious credulity and impatient submission to the cheats which he sees practised upon him, and which by persuasion he suffers to be repeated, exhibit a strong picture of a weak mind betrayed by unlawful desires to a false friend; and the virtue of Emilia is such as we often find, worn loosely, but not cast off, easy to commit small crimes, but quickened and alarmed at atrocious villainies. The Scenes from the beginning to the end are busy, varied by happy interchanges, and regularly promoting the progression of the story; and the narrative in the end, though it tells but what is already known, yet is necessary to produce the death of Othello. Had the scene opened in Cyprus, and the preceding incidents been occasionally related, there had been little wanting to a drama of the most exact and scrupulous regularity.

MALONE: I cannot forbear to conclude our commentaries on this transcendent poet with the fine eulogy which the judicious and learned Lowth has pronounced on him, with a particular reference to this tragedy, perhaps the most perfect of all his works:

'In his viris [tragediæ Græcæ scilicet scriptoribus] accessio quædam Philosophiæ erat Poetica facultas: neque sane quisquam adhuc Poesin ad fastigium suum ac culmen evexit, nisi qui prius in intima Philosophia artis suæ fundamenta jecerit.

'Quod si quis objiciat, nonnullos in hoc ipso poeseos genere excelluisse, qui nunquam habiti sunt Philosophi, ac ne literis quidem præter cæteros imbuti; sciat is, me rem ipsam querere, non de vulgari opinione, aut de verbo laborare: qui autem tantum ingenio consecutus est, ut naturas hominum, vimque omnem humanitatis, causasque eas, quibus aut incitatur mentis impetus aut retunditur, penitus perspectas habeat, ejusque omnes motus oratione non modo explicet, sed effingat, planeque oculis subjiciat, sed excitet, regat, commoveat, moderetur; cum, etsi disciplinarum instrumento minus adjutum, eximie tamen esse Philosophum arbitrari. Quo in genere affectum Zelotypiæ, ejusque causas, adjuncta, progressiones, effectus, in una Shakspeari nostri fabula, copiosius, subtilius, accuratius etiam veriusque pertractari existimo, quam ab omnibus omnium Philosophorum scholis in simili argumento est unquam disputatum' (Praelectio prima, edit. 1763, p. 8). VERPLANCK: The remarkable criticism of Bishop Lowth, often before quoted in its original exquisite Latinity, deserves to be more familiarly known to the English reader: 'He whose genius has unfolded to him the knowledge of man's nature and the force of his passions; has taught him the causes by which the soul is moved to strong emotions, or calmed to rest; has enabled him not only to explain in words those emotions, but to exhibit them vividly to other eyes; thus ruling, exciting, distracting, soothing our feelings,—this man, however little aided by the discipline of learning, is, in my judgement, a philosopher of the highest rank. In this manner, in a single dramatic fable of our own Shakespeare, the passion of jealousy, its causes, progress, incidents, and effects, have been more truly, more acutely, more copiously, and more impressively delineated than has been done by all the disquisitions of all the philosophers who have treated on this dark argument.'

In 1796, at Exeter, England, appeared a volume of Essays, by a Society of Gentlemen, wherein, on pp. 395–409, is found: An Apology for the Character and Conduct of Iago. The anonymous writer urges as palliations of Iago's conduct: first, his being supplanted, through Othello's insensibility and unkindness, by Cassio, and the writer thereupon 'appeals with safety to the officers of the British army' to know if Iago's hostility were not excusable; second, he suspects Othello's relations with Emilia; third (and this is quite original), 'Iago having a right to expect promotion, had lived, it may naturally be concluded, more profusely than he would otherwise have done; had involved himself in difficulties, or, as Emilia expresses it, had "scanted his former havings"; another cause for chagrin and anger against Othello, whose cruel neglect had obliged him to stoop to meannesses he would otherwise have detested.' Fourth, he suspected Cassio had played him false at home. Fifth, he was by no means convinced of Desdemona's virtue and purity; 'his suspicions of his wife had soured his temper and excited in him a general aversion to the female sex.' Lastly, the writer, who trusts that 'if he has not wholly washed the blackamoor white, he has at least taken a shade from his colour,' in showing that Iago's conduct admits of much palliation, thus sums up: 'On the whole, his conduct to Roderigo, concerning which no accusation has been preferred, appears to be the least excusable. To him he was indebted for pecuniary obligations, but for none of any kind to either of the other characters. On the contrary, from the first of them he had, most decidedly and incontrovertibly, received injuries of the severest kind. He had no trivial cause for his aversion to Cassio. Desdemona, as being a woman, was not an object of his regard; as the friend of Cassio and Emilia she appeared to him in a disgusting light, and more so probably considered as the wife of Othello. In order to distress him, however, not to gratify any aversion towards Desdemona, he contrives her death: she is merely an instrument to effectuate his vengeance; and if vengeance can be vindicated by an accumulation of injuries, Iago's, though exorbitant, was just.'

COLERIDGE (Notes, 252): Dr Johnson has remarked that little or nothing is wanting to render Othello a regular tragedy but to have opened the play with the arrival of Othello at Cyprus, and to have thrown the preceding Act into the form of narration. Here, then, is the place to determine whether such a change would or would not be an improvement; nay (to throw down the glove with a full challenge), whether the tragedy would or would not, by such an arrangement, become more regular,—that is, more consonant with the rules dictated by universal reason, on the true common-sense of mankind, in its application to the particular case. For in all acts of judgement, it can never be too often recollected, and scarcely too often repeated, that rules are means to ends, and, consequently, that the end must be determined and understood before it can be known what the rules are or ought to be. Now, from a certain species of drama, proposing to itself the accomplishment of certain ends,—these partly arising from the idea of the species itself, but in part, likewise, forced upon the dramatist by accidental circumstances beyond his power to remove or control,—three rules have been abstracted; in other words, the means most conducive to the attainment of the proposed ends have been generalized, and prescribed under the names of the three Unities,—the unity of time, the unity of place, and the unity of action,—which last would, perhaps, have been as appropriately, as well as more intelligibly, entitled the unity of interest. With this last the present question has no immediate concern; in fact, its conjunction with the former two is a mere delusion of words. It is not properly a rule, but in itself the great end not only of the drama, but of the epic poem, the lyric ode, of all poetry, down to the candle-flame cone of an epigram,—nay, of poesy in general, as the proper generic term inclusive of all the fine arts as its species. But of the unities of time and place, which alone are entitled to the name of rules, the history of their origin will be their best criterion. You might take the Greek chorus to a place, but you could not bring a place to them without as palpable an equivocal as bringing Birnam wood to Macbeth at Dunsinane. It was the same, though in a less degree, with regard to the unity of time; the positive fact, not for a moment removed from the senses, the presence, I mean, of the same identical chorus, was a continued measure of time; and although the imagination may supersede perception, yet it must be granted to be an imperfection, however easily tolerated, to place the two in broad contradiction to each other. In truth, it is a mere accident of terms; for the Trilogy of the Greek theatre was a drama in three Acts, and, notwithstanding this, what strange contrivances as to place there are in the Aristophanic Frogs. Besides, if the law of mere actual perception is once violated, as it repeatedly is, even in the Greek tragedies, why is it more difficult to imagine three hours to be three years than to be a whole day and night?

WORDSWORTH: Wings have we,—and as far as we can go
 We may find pleasure; wilderness and wood,
 Blank ocean and mere sky, support that mood
 Which with the lofty sanctifies the low.
 Dreams, Books, are each a world; and books, we know,
 Are a substantial world, both pure and good;
 Round these, with tendrils strong as flesh and blood,
 Our pastime and our happiness will grow.
 There find I personal themes, a plenteous store,
 Matter wherein right voluble I am,
 To which I listen with a ready ear;
 Two shall be named pre-eminently dear,—
 The gentle Lady married to the Moor;
 And heavenly Una, with her milk-white Lamb.
 —Personal Talk, III, 1807.
 (Vol. iv, p. 25, ed. Knight, 1883.)

LAMB (Works, London, 1870, iii, 102; published originally in Hunt's Reflector, circa 1810): How many dramatic personages are there in Shakespeare, which, from some circumstance, some adjunct to their character, are improper to be shown to our bodily eye! Othello, for instance. Nothing can be more soothing, more flattering to the nobler parts of our natures, than to read of a young Venetian lady of highest extraction, through the force of love and from a sense of merit in him whom she loved, laying aside every consideration of kindred, and country, and colour, and wedding with a coal-black Moor,—(for such he is represented, in the imperfect state of knowledge respecting foreign countries in those days, compared with our own, or in compliance with popular notions, though the Moors are now well enough known to be many shades less unworthy of a white woman's fancy)—it is the perfect triumph of virtue over accidents, of the imagination over the senses. She sees Othello's colour in his mind. But upon the stage, when the imagination is no longer the ruling faculty, but we are left to our poor, unassisted senses, I appeal to every one that has seen Othello played, whether he did not, on the contrary, sink Othello's mind in his colour; whether he did not find something extremely revolting in the courtship and wedded caresses of Othello and Desdemona; and whether the actual sight of the thing did not overweigh all that beautiful compromise which we make in reading. And the reason is should do so is obvious, because there is just so much reality presented to our senses as to give a perception of disagreement, with not enough of belief in the internal motives,—all that which is unseen,—to overpower and reconcile the first and obvious prejudices. What we see upon a stage is body and bodily action; what we are conscious of in reading is almost exclusively the mind, and its movements; and this, I think, may sufficiently account for the very different sort of delight with which the same play so often affects us in the reading and the seeing.

[Foot-note]: The error of supposing that because Othello's colour does not offend us in the reading, it should also not offend us in the seeing, is just such a fallacy as supposing that an Adam and Eve in a picture shall affect us just as they do in the poem. But in the poem we have for a while Paradisaical senses given us, which vanish when we see a man and his wife without clothes in the picture. The painters themselves feel this, as is apparent by the awkward shifts they have recourse to, to make them look not quite naked; by a sort of prophetic anachronism, antedating the invention of fig-leaves. So in the reading of the play, we see with Desdemona's eyes; in the seeing of it, we are forced to look with our own.

HAZLITT (Characters of Shakespeare's Plays, London, 1817, p. 54): The character of Iago is one of the 'supererogations' of Shakespeare's genius. Some persons, more nice than wise, have thought this whole character unnatural, because his villainy is without a sufficient motive. Shakespeare, who was as good a philosopher as he was a poet, thought otherwise. He knew that the love of power, which is another name for the love of mischief, is natural to man. He would know this as well or better than if it had been demonstrated to him by a logical diagram, merely from seeing children paddle in the dirt or kill flies for sport. Iago, in fact, belongs to a class of characters, common to Shakespeare and at the same time peculiar to him; whose heads are as acute and active as their hearts are hard and callous. Iago is to be sure an extreme instance of the kind; that is to say, of diseased intellectual activity, with an almost perfect indifference to moral good or evil, or rather with a decided preference of the latter, because it falls more readily in with his favourite propensity, gives greater zest to his thoughts and scope to his actions. He is quite or nearly as indifferent to his own fate as to that of others; he runs all risks for a trifling and doubtful advantage; and is himself the dupe and victim of his ruling passion—an insatiable craving after action of the most difficult and dangerous kind. 'Our antient' is a philosopher, who fancies that a lie that kills has more point in it than an alliteration or an antithesis; who thinks a fatal experiment on the peace of a family a better thing than watching the palpitations in the heart of a flea in a microscope; who plots the ruin of his friends as an exercise for his ingenuity, and stabs men in the dark to prevent ennui. His gayety, such as it is, arises from the success of his treachery; his ease from the torture he has inflicted on others. He is an amateur of tragedy in real life; and instead of employing his invention on imaginary characters or long-forgotten incidents, he takes the bolder and more desperate course of getting up his plot at home, casts the principal parts among his nearest friends and connections, and rehearses it in downright earnest with steady nerves and unabated resolution. . . . The habitual licentiousness of Iago's conversation is not to be traced to the pleasure he takes in gross or lascivious images, but to his desire of finding out the worst side of everything, and of proving himself an overmatch for appearances. He has none of 'the milk of human kindness' in his composition. His imagination rejects everything that has not a strong infusion of the most unpalatable ingredients; his mind digests only poisons. Virtue or goodness, or whatever has the least 'relish of salvation in it,' is, to his depraved appetite, sickly and insipid; and he even resents the good opinion entertained of his own integrity, as if it were an affront cast on the masculine sense and spirit of his character. Thus at the meeting between Othello and Desdemona, he exclaims: 'O, you are well tun'd now! But I'll set down the pegs that make this music, As honest as I am'—his character of bonhomie not sitting at all easily upon him. In the scenes where he tries to work Othello to his purpose he is proportionably guarded, insidious, dark, and deliberate. We believe nothing ever came up to the profound dissimulation and dexterous artifice of the well-known dialogue in the Third Act, where he first enters upon the execution of his design (III, iii, 107-128). The stops and breaks, the deep workings of treachery under the mask of love and honesty, the anxious watchfulness, the cool earnestness, and, if we may so say, the passion of hypocrisy marked in every line, receive their last finishing in that inconceivable burst of pretended indignation at Othello's doubts of his sincerity: 'O grace! O Heaven forgive me!' (Ib. 430-437.)

If Iago is detestable enough when he has business on his hands and all his engines at work, he is still worse when he has nothing to do, and we only see into the hollowness of his heart. His indifference when Othello falls into a swoon is perfectly diabolical. The part, indeed, would hardly be tolerated, even as a foil to the virtue and generosity of the other characters in the play, but for its indefatigable industry and inexhaustible resources, which divert the attention of the spectator (as well as his own) from the end he has in view to the means by which it must be accomplished.*

MACAULAY in his Essay on Dante (Knight's Quarterly Magazine, Jan., 1824), alludes to the little impression the forms of the external world appear to have made on Dante's mind. 'The feeling of the present age,' he goes on to say, 'has taken a direction diametrically opposite. The magnificence of the physical world, and its influence on the human mind, have been the favorite themes of our most eminent poets. . . . The orthodox poetical creed is more catholic. The noblest earthly object of the contemplation of man is man himself. The universe, and all its fair and glorious forms, are indeed included in the wide empire of imagination; but she has placed her home and her sanctuary amidst the inexhaustible varieties and the impenetrable mysteries of the mind. Othello is, perhaps, the greatest work in the world. From what does it derive its power? From the clouds? From the ocean? From the mountains? Or from love strong as death, and jealousy cruel as the grave! What is it we go forth to see in Hamlet? Is it a reed shaken with the wind? A small celandine? A bed of daffodils? Or is it to contemplate a mighty and wayward mind laid bare before us to the inmost recesses?'

MACAULAY (Edinburgh Review, 1827, vol. xlv, p. 272): Othello murders his wife; he gives orders for the murder of his lieutenant; he ends by murdering himself. Yet he never loses the esteem and affection of a Northern reader—his intrepid and ardent spirit redeeming everything. The unsuspecting confidence with which he listens to his adviser, the agony with which he shrinks from the thought of shame, the tempest of passion with which he commits his crimes, and the haughty fearlessness with which he avows them, give an extraordinary interest to his character. Iago, on the contrary, is the object of universal loathing. Many are inclined to suspect that Shakespeare has been seduced into an exaggeration unusual with him, and has drawn a monster who has no archetype in human nature. Now we suspect that an Italian audience, in the fifteenth century, would have felt very differently. Othello would have inspired nothing but detestation and contempt. The folly with which he trusts to the friendly professions of a man whose promotion he had obstructed,—the credulity with which he takes unsupported assertions and trivial circumstances for unanswerable proofs,—the violence with which he silences the exculpation till the exculpation can only aggravate his misery, would have excited the abhorrence and disgust of the spectators. The conduct of Iago they would assuredly have condemned; but they would have condemned it as we condemn that of his victim. Something of interest and respect would have mingled with their disapprobation. The readiness of his wit, the clearness of his judgement, the skill with which he penetrates the dispositions of others and conceals his own, would have ensured to him a certain portion of their esteem.

* The criticism from which these extracts have been made originally appeared substantially in The Examiner, 23 July, 1814, as we learn from a foot-note by W. C. Hazlitt, p. 20, in The Round Table, 1881.—ED.

MRS JAMESON (Characteristics of Women, London, 1833, 2nd ed., ii, 31): The character of Hermione is addressed more to the imagination,—that of Desdemona to the feelings. All that can render sorrow majestic is gathered round Hermione; all that can render misery heart-breaking is assembled round Desdemona. The wronged but self-sustained virtue of Hermione commands our veneration; the injured and defenceless innocence of Desdemona so wrings the soul 'that all for pity we could die.' Desdemona, as a character, comes nearest to Miranda, both in herself as a woman, and in the perfect simplicity and unity of the delineation; the figures are differently draped,—the proportions are the same. There is the same modesty, tenderness, and grace; the same artless devotion in the affections, the same predisposition to wonder, to pity, to admire; the same almost ethereal refinement and delicacy; but all is pure poetic nature within Miranda and around her; Desdemona is more associated with the palpable realities of every-day existence, and we see the forms and habits of society tinting her language and deportment; no two beings can be more alike in character, nor more distinct as individuals.

(P. 35.) The confession and the excuse for her love are well placed in the mouth of Desdemona, while the history of the rise of that love, and of his course of wooing, is, with the most graceful propriety, as far as she is concerned, spoken by Othello, and in her absence. The last two lines summing up the whole,—'She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd, And I lov'd her that she did pity them'—comprise whole volumes of sentiment and metaphysics.

(P. 39.) With the most perfect artlessness, she has something of the instinctive, unconscious address of her sex; as when she appeals to her father:—'So much duty as my mother show'd To you, preferring you before her father, So much I challenge, that I may profess Due to the Moor, my lord.' And when she is pleading for Cassio:—'What! Michael Cassio! That came a wooing with you; and many a time, When I have spoken of you disparagingly [sic] Hath ta'en your part?' In persons who unite great sensibility and lively fancy, I have often observed this particular species of address, which is always unconscious of itself, and consists in the power of placing ourselves in the position of another, and imagining, rather than perceiving, what is in their hearts. We women have this address (if so it can be called) naturally, but I have seldom met with it in men. It is not inconsistent with extreme simplicity of character, and quite distinct from that kind of art which is the result of natural acuteness and habits of observation,—quick to perceive the foibles of others, and as quick to turn them to its own purposes; which is always conscious of itself, and if united with strong intellect, seldom perceptible to others. In the mention of her mother, and the appeal to Othello's self-love, Desdemona has no design formed on conclusions previously drawn; but her intuitive quickness of feeling, added to her imagination, leads her more safely to the same results, and the distinction is as truly as it is delicately drawn.

(P. 43.) There is another peculiarity which, in reading the play of Othello, we rather feel than perceive: through the whole of the dialogue appropriated to Desdemona there is not one general observation. Words are with her the vehicle of sentiment, and never of reflection; so that I cannot find throughout a sentence of general application. The same remark applies to Miranda; and to no other female character of any importance or interest—not even to Ophelia.

The rest of what I wished to say of Desdemona has been anticipated by an anonymous critic, and so beautifully, so justly, so eloquently expressed, that I with pleasure erase my own page, to make room for his:

'Othello,' observes this writer, 'is no love-story; all that is below tragedy in the passion of love, is taken away at once by the awful character of Othello; for such he seems to us to be designed to be. He appears never as a lover, but at once as a husband; and the relation of his love made dignified, as it is a husband's justification of his marriage, is also dignified, as it is a soldier's relation of his stern and perilous life. His love itself, as long as it is happy, is perfectly calm and serene,—the protecting tenderness of a husband. It is not till it is disordered that it appears as a passion: then is shown a power in contention with itself,—a mighty being struck with death, and bringing up from all the depths of life convulsions and agonies. It is no exhibition of the power of the passion of love, but of the passion of life, vitally wounded, and self-overmastering. If Desdemona had been really guilty, the greatness would have been destroyed, because his love would have been unworthy, false. But she is good, and his love is most perfect, just, and good. That a man should place his perfect love on a wretched thing is miserably debasing, and shocking to thought; but that loving perfectly and well, he should by hellish human circumvention be brought to distrust and dread, and abjure his own perfect love, is most mournful indeed,—it is the infirmity of our good nature wrestling in vain with the strong powers of evil. Moreover, he would, had Desdemona been false, have been the mere victim of fate; whereas he is now in a manner his own victim. His happy love was heroic tenderness; his injured love is terrible passion; and disordered power, engendered within itself to its own destruction, is the height of all tragedy.'

'The character of Othello is, perhaps, the most greatly drawn, the most heroic, of any of Shakespeare's actors; but it is, perhaps, that one also of which his reader last acquires the intelligence. The intellectual and warlike energy of his mind, his tenderness of affection, his loftiness of spirit, his frank, generous magnanimity, impetuosity like a thunderbolt, and that dark, fierce flood of boiling passion, polluting even his imagination, compose a character entirely original, most difficult to delineate, but perfectly delineated.'

Emilia in this play is a perfect portrait from common life, a masterpiece in the Flemish style; and, though not necessary as a contrast, it cannot be but that the thorough vulgarity, the loose principles of this plebeian woman, united to a high degree of spirit, energetic feeling, strong sense, and low cunning, serve to place in brighter relief the exquisite refinement, the moral grace, the unblemished truth, and the soft submission of Desdemona.

(P. 47.) I will only add that the source of the pathos throughout,—of that pathos which at once softens and deepens the tragic effect,—lies in the character of Desdemona. No woman, differently constituted, could have excited the same intense and painful compassion without losing something of that exalted charm which invests her from beginning to end, which we are apt to impute to the interest of the situation, and to the poetical colouring; but which lies, in fact, in the very essence of the character. Desdemona, with all her timid flexibility and soft acquiescence, is not weak; for the negative alone is weak, and the mere presence of goodness and affection implies in itself a species of power;—power without consciousness, power without effort, power with repose,—that soul of grace!

I know a Desdemona in real life, one in whom the absence of intellectual power is never felt as a deficiency, nor the absence of energy of will as impairing the dignity, nor the most imperturbable serenity as a want of feeling; one in whom thoughts appear mere instincts, the sentiment of rectitude supplies the principle, and virtue itself seems rather a necessary state of being than an imposed law. No shade of sin or vanity has yet stolen over that bright innocence. No discord within has marred the loveliness without, no strife of the factitious world without has disturbed the harmony within. The comprehension of evil appears for ever shut out, as if goodness had converted all things to itself; and all to the pure in heart must necessarily be pure. The impression produced is exactly that of the character of Desdemona; genius is a rare thing, but abstract goodness is rarer. In Desdemona we cannot but feel that the slightest manifestation of intellectual power or active will would have injured the dramatic effect. She is a victim consecrated from the first, 'an offering without blemish,' alone worthy of the grand final sacrifice; all harmony, all grace, all purity, all tenderness, all truth! But, alas! to see her fluttering like a cherub, in the talons of a fiend!—to see her—O poor Desdemona!

MAGINN (Shakespeare Papers, London, 1860, p. 257): What appears to me to be the distinguishing feature of Shakespeare is, that his characters are real men and women, not mere abstractions. In the best of us all there are many blots; in the worst there are many traces of goodness. There is no such thing as angels or devils in the world. We have passions and feelings, hopes and fears, joys and sorrows pretty evenly distributed among us; and that which actuates the highest and the lowest, the most virtuous and the most profligate, the bravest and the meanest, must, in its original elements, be the same. People do not commit wicked actions from the mere love of wickedness; there must always be an incentive of precisely the same kind as that which stimulates to the noblest actions,—ambition, love of adventure, passion, necessity. All our virtues closely border upon vices, and are not unfrequently blended. The robber may be generous,—the miser, just,—the cruel man, conscientious,—the rake, honourable,—the fop, brave. In various relations of life, the same man may play many characters as distinct from one another as day from night. . . . It is necessary for a critical investigation of character, not to be content with taking things merely as they seem. We must endeavour to strip off the covering with which habit or necessity has enveloped the human mind, and to inquire after motives as well as to look to actions. . . .

As Shakespeare, therefore, draws men, and not one-sided sketches of character, it is always possible to treat his personages as if they were actually existing people; and there is always some redeeming point. The bloody Macbeth is kind and gentle to his wife; the gore-stained Richard, gallant and daring; Shylock is an affectionate father and a good-natured master; Claudius, in Hamlet, is fond of his foully-won queen, and exhibits, at least, remorse for his deed in heart-rending soliloquies; Angelo is upright in public life, though yielding to sore temptation in private; Cloten is brutal and insulting, but brave; the ladies are either wholly without blemishes, or have merits to redeem them. . . .

But Iago! Ay! there's the rub. Well may poor Othello look down to his feet, and not seeing them different from those of others, feel convinced that it is a fable which attributes a cloven hoof to the devil. Nor is it wonderful that the parting instruction of Lodovico to Cassio [sic] should be to enforce the most cunning cruelty of torture on the hellish villain, or that all the party should vie with each other in heaping upon him words of contumely and execration. His determination to keep silence when questioned, was at least judicious; for with his utmost ingenuity he could hardly find anything to say for himself. Is there nothing, then, to be said for him by anybody else?

No more than this. He is the sole exemplar of studied personal revenge in the plays. The philosophical mind of Hamlet ponders too deeply, and sees both sides of the question too clearly, to be able to carry any plan of vengeance into execution. Romeo's revenge on Tybalt for the death of Mercutio is a sudden gust of ungovernable rage. The vengeance in the Historical Plays are those of war or statecraft. In Shylock, the passion is hardly personal against his intended victim. A swaggering Christian is at the mercy of a despised and insulted Jew. The hatred is national and sectarian. Had Bassanio or Gratiano, or any other of their creed, been in his power, he would have been equally relentless. He is only retorting the wrongs and insults of his tribe in demanding full satisfaction, and imitating the hated Christians in their own practices. It is, on the whole, a passion remarkably seldom exhibited in Shakespeare in any form. Iago, as I have said, is its only example as directed against an individual. Iago had been affronted in the tenderest point. He felt that he had strong claims on the office of lieutenant to Othello. The greatest exertion was made to procure it for him, and yet he was refused. What is still worse, the grounds of the refusal are military; Othello assigns to the civilians reasons for passing over Iago, drawn from his own trade, of which they, of course, could not pretend to be adequate judges. And worst of all, when this practised military man is for military reasons set aside, who is appointed? Some man of greater renown and skill in arms? That might be borne; but it is no such thing. We will find in many professional periodical works the complaint reiterated that 'Preferment goes by letter and affection, Not by old gradation,' and many a curse, loud and deep, is inflicted on that account upon the Horse Guards and Admiralty, who, fortunately, have no individual responsibilities on which disappointed Ancients can fasten. I am sure no British soldier or sailor would carry his anger farther than a passing growl, but the example of Bellingham shows that even in our assassin-hating nation a feeling of injustice done by a superior will drive a man to satiate his vengeance even upon those who have not done him wrong. In the country of Iago, whether from his name we conclude it to be Spain, or from his service, Italy, none of the scruples, or, rather, principles, which actuate or restrain English gentlemen, existed. Least of all were they to be found in the motley armies of adventurers gathered from all quarters, and Iago could not be expected to be very scrupulous as to his method of compassing his revenge. But how effect it? He is obliged to admit that Othello's standing in the state is too important to render it possible that public injury could be done him. In his unhoused condition no point of vantage presented itself whence harm could be wrought. Just then, when Iago's heart was filled with rage, and his head busily, but vainly, occupied in devising means for avenging himself on the man by whom that rage was excited,—just then At, the Goddess of Mischief, supplies him with all that deepest malignity could desire, by the hasty, ill-mated, and unlooked-for marriage of Othello. It was a devil-send that the most sanguine spirit could not have anticipated, and Iago clutched it accordingly with passionate eagerness. He was tempted and he fell.

When he first conceived his hatred against Othello, he had no notion that it would be pushed to such dire extremity. Revenge is generally accompanied by vanity, indeed there must be always a spice of vanity in a revengeful disposition. He who so keenly feels and deeply resents personal injury or affront must set no small value upon himself. The proud are seldom revengeful, the great never. We accordingly find that Iago engages in his hostilities against Othello more to show his talents than for any other purpose. He proudly lauds his own powers of dissimulation, which are to be now displayed with so much ability (I, i, 64-68). He fancies himself superior to all around in art and knowledge of the world. Roderigo is a mere gull (I, iii, 409). Cassio he considers to be not merely unskilled in war, but a fool (II, ii, 384). Othello is an ass in his estimation (I, iii, 426). The 'inclining' Desdemona he utterly despises, as one who fell in love with the Moor merely for his bragging and telling fantastical lies. His wife he calls a fool; and with these opinions of his great superiority of wisdom and intellect, he commences operations to enmesh them all, as if they were so many puppets. It would be a strange thing, indeed, he reflects, if I were to permit myself to be insulted and my rights withheld by such a set of idiots, whom I can wind round my finger as I please.

He seated him in the seat of the scorner, a character which he who is accounted the wisest of men continually opposes to that of true wisdom. 'Seest thou,' says Solomon, in the Proverbs copied out by the men of Hezekiah, King of Judah, which, whether they be inspired or not, are aphorisms of profound and concentrated wisdom,—'Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him.'

And the career of Iago ends with his own destruction, amid the abomination set down in another chapter of Proverbs as the lot of the scorner. The jealousy of Othello is not more gradually and skilfully raised and developed than the vengeance of Iago. At first angry enough, no doubt; but he has no defined project. He follows the Moor to take advantage of circumstances to turn them to his own use. Nothing of peculiar malignity is thought upon: if he can get Cassio's place, he will be satisfied (I, iii, 417). The marriage and the sight of Desdemona point out to him a ready way of accomplishing this object. The thought occurs suddenly, and he is somewhat startled at first. He asks himself with eager repetition, 'How? how?' and pauses to think,—'Let me see—' It is soon settled. 'After some time, to abuse Othello's ear, That he is too familiar with his wife.' But it still alarms him: 'I have it—It's engendered: Hell and night Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.'

The plot is not matured even when they all arrive at Cyprus. 'Tis here, but yet confused—Knavery's plain face is never seen till used.' When once fairly entered upon, however, it progresses with unchecked rapidity. He is himself hurried resistlessly forward by the current of deceit and iniquity in which he has embarked. He is as much a tool or passive instrument as those whom he is using as such.

Some critics pronounce his character unnatural, as not having sufficient motive for the crimes he commits. This is not wise. He could not help committing them. Merely to put money in his purse, he gulled Roderigo into a belief that he could assist the poor dupe in his suit for Desdemona. There is no remarkable crime in this. Nor can we blame him for being angry at being somewhat scornfully passed over; we can, at all events, enter into his feelings when he wishes to undermine one whom he considers to be unworthily preferred to him, and to obtain a place which he thinks should be his own, if patronage had been justly dispensed. It was a base thing, indeed, to malign a lady, and possess her husband with jealousy; but he could not have calculated on the harvest of death and crime which the seed of suspicion that he was sowing was destined to bring up. When he makes Cassio drunk, he only anticipates that he will put him in such action as may offend the isle. When framing the device that is to destroy the lieutenant, no thoughts of murder arise before him.

He has no regard for the feelings of Othello, but dreams not that he will kill Desdemona, whom he says he loves. As for the lady herself, his low estimation of woman would, of course, lead him to think but little about her peace and quiet. He excuses himself, besides, by referring to the rumour that Othello had given him cause to be jealous. It is plain that he does not pretend to lay any great stress upon this; nor can we suppose that, even if it were true, it would deeply affect him; but he thinks lightly of women in general, and has no respect whatever for his wife. Indeed, Othello does not hold Emilia in much esteem; and her own conversation with Desdemona, as she is undressing her for bed (IV, iii), shows that her virtue was not impregnable. The injury, therefore, Iago was about to do Desdemona, in lessening her in the respect of her husband by accusing her of such an ordinary offence as a deviation from chastity, and one which he did not visit with any particular severity on his own wife, must have seemed trivial. He could not have been prepared for the dire tempest of fury which his first hint of her unfaithfulness aroused in the bosom of Othello. Up to that moment he had done nothing more than gull a blockhead, and endeavour, by unworthy means, to undermine a rival; trickery and slander, though not very honourable qualities, are not of such rare occurrence in the world as to call for the expression of any peculiar indignation when we find them displayed by a clever and plotting Italian.

They have, however, led him to the plain and wide path of damnation. He cannot retract his insinuations. Even if he desired, Othello will not let him. Iago, therefore, had no choice but to go forward. He was evidently not prepared for this furious outburst; and we may acquit him of hypocrisy when he prays Othello to let her live. But Cassio must die:—‘He hath a daily beauty in his life That makes me ugly.’ A more urgent reason immediately suggests itself:—‘And beside, the Moor May unfold me to him: then stand I in much peril. No—he must die.’ The death of Desdemona involves that of Roderigo:—‘Live Roderigo? He calls me to a restitution large Of gold and jewels, that I bobb’d from him As gifts to Desdemona. It must not be.’

Here is the direct agency of necessity. He must remove these men. Shortly after, to silence the clamorous testimony of his wife, he must kill her. He is doomed to blood.

EDINBURGH REVIEW (Recent Shakespearian Literature, July, 1840, p. 491): But of all Shakespeare’s tragic dramas, that which most closely resembles the classical models in the simplicity and obviously comprehended perfection of its plan, is also that which, in its catastrophe and its general impression on the mind, approaches most nearly to the spirit of heathen classicism. Othello has in it, not indeed in reality but in appearance, much of the terrific fatalism which overshadows the beautiful in the Attic tragedy; the idea of power, irresistible, irresponsible, unfathomable, consigning humanity to utter destruction. Almost all votaries of Shakespeare seem to have felt, at one stage or another, in their study of this magnificent and most passionate drama, an abased, passive, hopeless weight, which no other of his works leaves behind. The source of this feeling does not lie in the sad fate of Desdemona; for, though that is one of the elements, it is not the principal; the effect of her touching death-scene is skilfully softened, and kept in strict subordination to the leading purpose; and the eyes that weep for the gentle lady's fate look up through their tears with reviving hope to heaven. But the terrible force lies in the catastrophe which follows. Othello falls by his own hand, a consummation which Shakespeare has nowhere else given to any of his tragic characters, except in Lear and in one or two of the Roman plays; all the three having their scene in heathenism. And even the suicide is less harrowing than the prostration of soul which has preceded it; a despair which annihilates every thought and feeling except the consciousness of unendurable misery. Nor does any after-scene alleviate the gloom; 'the object poisons sight,' but it is hid from us only by the dropping of the curtain; and the Moor has scarcely expired when the drama closes. When, again, when we look back on the causes which have produced this profoundly tragic catastrophe, we seem, at the first glance, to discover nothing that can impart a moral justification of its horror. The bower of wedded happiness seemed guarded by love and honour; and its inhabitants, though frail because mortal, seemed to be stained by no such guilt as should have condemned them to an end like this. Yet into such a scene of peace the tempter has crept, seducing the hand of man himself to lay desolate his home. All critics of name have felt, more or less strongly, the perplexity of the moral enigma which lies under this tragic tale; but the character of the Moor, in which the explication must be sought, has been interpreted more contradictorily than any other in the range of the poet's works, Hamlet itself not excepted.

In truth this drama, if we were able to penetrate wholly into its mysteries of conception, would not be what it is: the work in which the poet has united more admirably than in any other the two great elements of dramatic art. Lear is at once more original in invention, more active in imagination, more softly pathetic in feeling; Romeo and Juliet has more of true poetry; Macbeth, a closer amalgamation of tragic action with thought properly ethical; and Hamlet traverses a world of thought in which all other existing dramas linger at the frontier. But Othello, above every other drama, unites vehemence and nature in tragic emotion, with truth and vigour in the delineation of character. This play, above all others, harmonizes those two elements, and makes each the counterpart, the supplement, the condition of the existence, of the other.

And as even those feel who have considered as a defect the unsoftened sternness of the closing impression, that impression is not one which, thus unsoftened and unrelieved, lingers long in the mind. As the closing images fade into distance in the memory, and the earlier groups come successively into the foregrounds, a picture is gradually formed in which we recognize with reverential wonder, though with incapacity to account for all its effects, a solemn representation of human life in its most awful relations. If philosophy, if observation of the world, if reflection on the destiny of man, as that destiny appears to him in his natural blindness, furnish no key-note to harmonize this song of tragic import, religious contemplation opens a view in which all becomes deeply and truly significant. We glance backward upon the mysteriously revealed leaves of the book of Time, in which is written the sin that has made the earth barren. We gaze forward through darkness, yet not without hope, on that great journey of the soul in which mortal life is but a step. We behold the principle of evil walking the earth for a time in human shape, and allowed to convert into agents of destruction all the finest of those qualities whose union makes up the compound nature of man; counting him alike with angelic fellow-creatures, and with the cold clay which imprisons his immortal spirit. When the tempted has become a murderer, the work of the temptation is but half accomplished. The mind of the victim is not yet wholly poisoned, his heart not yet wholly crushed. He must behold—and how does his very soul recoil from himself at the discovery!—he must behold the unmasked visage of the fiend whom he has served; he must learn that all which he has done has been worse than done in vain. In one deep silent pause the events of a lifetime pass across his mind, and he awakens from the trance a broken-hearted man. Every principle which once made his character strong and lofty is annihilated within him; love, imagination, pride of honour and of intellect, all are wrecked in one tremendous shock. The soldier feels his courage broken like a rush; the man whose better nature passion could not shake, weeps like a child; the last effort of his overthrown will is but sufficient to consummate the triumph of evil and the noble Moor dies the most awful of deaths.

CAMPBELL (Remarks on the Life and Writings of Shakespeare): Some allege that Iago is too villainous to be a natural character, but those allegers are simpleton judges of human nature: Fletcher of Saltoun has said that there is many a brave soldier who never wore a sword; in like manner, there is many an Iago in the world who never committed murder. Iago's 'LEARNED SPIRIT' and exquisite intellect, happily ending in his own destruction, were as requisite for the moral of the piece as for the sustaining of Othello's high character; for we should have despised the Moor if he had been deceived by a less consummate villain than 'honest Iago.' The latter is a true character, and the philosophical truth of this tragedy makes it terrible to peruse, in spite of its beautiful poetry. Why has Aristotle said that tragedy purifies the passions? for our last wish and hope in reading Othello is that the villain Iago may be well tortured.

This drama, by itself, would have immortalized any poet; what, then, are we to think of Shakespeare, when we may hesitate to pronounce it the best of his plays! Certainly, however, it has no superior in his own theatre, and no rival in any other. The Moor is at once one of the most complex and astonishing, and yet most intelligible pictures, that fiction ever portrayed of human character. His grandeur of soul is natural, and we admire it; his gentleness is equally natural, and we love him for it; his appearance we cannot but conceive to be majestic, and his physiognomy benevolent. The Indian Prince Ramohun Roy, who delighted all hearts in London a few years ago, and who died to our sorrow, was the only living being I ever saw who came up to my conception of Othello's appearance. But the Moor had been bred a barbarian, and though his bland nature and intercourse with the more civilized world had long warred against and conquered the half-natural habits of barbarism, yet those habits at last broke out, and prevailed in the moments of his jealousy. He is not a jealous man by nature, but, being once made jealous, he reverts to savageness, and becomes as terrible as he had before been tender. This contrast in his conduct, however, is not an Ovidian metamorphosis, but a transition so probably managed as to seem unavoidable; yet, the naturalness of the change prevents neither our terror nor pity; on the contrary, the sweetness of his character before its fall is the smoothness of the stream before its cataract; and his bland dispositions, heretofore displayed, appear, like a rich autumnal day, contrasted with the thunder-storm of its evening.

The terrors of the storm are also made striking to our imagination by the gentleness of the victim on which they fall,—Desdemona. Had one symptom of an angry spirit appeared in that lovely martyr, our sympathy with her would have been endangered; but Shakespeare knew better.

EDINBURGH REVIEW (Shakespeare's Critics, &c., July, 1849, p. 43): An ordinary man can model a rude figure out of clay; but to bend the marble to the slightest caprices of the mind, to make its stubborn material plastic to the most airy and delicate conceptions, is the work only of a great artist. To take an example from the dramatic representation of Character: However much we may delight in delineations of character for their own sake, it must be remembered that the art of the dramatist is not shown in the mere portrayal of mental states, but in the adaptation of those mental states to the purposes of the drama. A character may be drawn with skill, and yet not be dramatic. All the traits which do not assist the fuller comprehension of the story are superfluous and inartistic. Suppose jealousy be the passion of the play, as in Othello. For simple theatrical purposes the writer may confine himself almost exclusively to this passion, and only exhibit in Othello the jealous husband. It is obvious, however, that our sympathies will not be greatly stirred, unless in this jealous husband we recognize other passions and other traits of human nature; and the great problem is, so to contrive and combine these additional features as not only to make the character individual and engaging, but to help forward the action and interest of the piece. An ordinary Moor, in a paroxysm of jealousy, would be a far less touching sight than that of the high-minded, chivalric, open, affectionate Othello. The art of the poet is, therefore, to delineate these other qualities; and the art of the dramatist is to make them dramatic agents in the development of his story. Accordingly, all that we see and hear of Othello are not simply preparations for the exhibition of his jealousy and wrath, but are circumstances skilfully adapted for bringing out the story. We thus learn both how the gentle Desdemona was justified in her love, and how Iago found him so easy a victim; so that at last we listen not only with patience, but compassion, to the noble speech in which, at the moment of executing his stern sentence on himself, he seeks to show that he was worthy of a better fate. Had Shakespeare introduced traits into this portrait which, though consistent in themselves, yet had no bearing on the general picture, he would have ruined its dramatic interest. People do not go to the theatre to learn Moorish customs or to analyse character, but to see a drama; and a drama is not a mirror of life in all its fulness and in all its details. It is an episode in life, and must be so circumscribed.

EDINBURGH REVIEW (Thackeray's Works, Jan., 1854, p. 223): For the perfection of the inconsistent character (as, indeed, for the perfection of every other) we must go to Shakespeare. One of the finest, among the many that he has drawn, is Othello. He is a union not merely of dissimilar qualities, but of dissimilar natures. He is a civilized barbarian. All that we know of his birth is that it is 'fetched from men of royal siege.' How or when he became a Christian we are not told; but it is certain that he must have passed his childhood in a harem, acquiring with his earliest impressions the jealousy and suspicion respecting women, and the domestic despotism of a Mahometan court. His youth and manhood are military; and we find him, at the opening of the play, somewhat declined into the vale of years, a grave and dignified soldier. All the barbarian is obliterated during the first two Acts. Nothing can be more calm or more polished. He does not resent the contumely or even the violence of Brabantio; he pleads his cause with consummate moderation and skill. The suspicion, aroused on the very morning after the arrival in Cyprus, by Iago's dark hints, acts on Othello like a specific poison. It sets on fire all the old Mahometan tendency to jealousy which a European life seemed to have eradicated. His barbarian nature reappears. At first his habits of civilization combat it. He proposes to act as becomes a great Venetian noble; to inquire into his wife's conduct, and, if Iago's suspicions prove unfounded, to forget them; if they are confirmed, to separate himself from Desdemona: 'If I do prove her haggard, I'll whistle her off,' &c. [Iago's lying representations of Cassio's guilty revelations when asleep] Othello swallows with savage credulity. He no longer thinks of inquiry or separation. He is again the Arab or the Bedouin of his youth, and no conduct, except such as might fit a Bedouin or an Arab, occurs to him. He cries, 'Oh blood, Iago, blood! Within these three days let me hear thee say, That Cassio's not alive. . . . Now art thou my lieutenant.' The last words are remarkable. Othello has so thoroughly forgotten the habits of civilised life, that he does not see that, after having murdered his wife, the daughter of a Venetian senator, and assassinated Cassio, a man of high rank in the Republic, he cannot remain governor of Cyprus. From thence until the very last Scene the savage reigns triumphant. He does not preserve even the outward proprieties of his station, but insults and strikes his wife in the presence of the envoy from the Senate.

But the instant that he has satiated his revenge, the spirit from the desert seems to be appeased by the sacrifice and quits him. He now 'knows that his act shows horrible and grim.'

[In his remarks on 'Now art thou my Lieutenant,' the Reviewer has been anticipated by Professor WILSON in his Christopher under Canvas, for April, 1850, 'What did Othello intend to do,' asks North, 'after all was accomplished? He was stone-blind to the future. What does he expect? that when he has killed his wife, everything is to go on as smoothly as before? That no notice will be taken of it? or that he will have to make another speech to the Senate? He has told them how he married her,—the counterpart will be to relate 'a plain, unvarnished tale of my whole course' of smothering and stabbing her with bolster and dagger. 'Now thou art my lieutenant' shows—if not stone-blindness,—a singular confidence in the future.'—ED.]

J. A. HERAUD (Shakspeare, His Inner Life, London, 1865, p. 268): The credulous Moor of Cinthio is very unlike the loving Othello of the play, and his tempter is moved to his infamous course by his illicit love for Desdemona. This weak passion is, in the play, transferred to Roderigo,—a creation of Shakspeare's own, partly as a comic relief to the tragic action and partly as a link of sympathy with the audience. Iago is the really jealous person, and, suspecting Othello with his own wife, hates him accordingly and determines on revenge. . . . A perfect hero cannot be made interesting, and Shakespeare gives to all his heroes, whatever may be their abstract qualities, some human infirmity by which they secure our sympathy. Perfect love, such as would belong to a perfect soul, would 'cast out all fear,' and that of Othello is so perfect in its degree that it is 'not easily jealous,' nor is it naturally suspicious. But it can be 'wrought,' and therefore there is in his otherwise perfect character a peccant part. From his scene with Emilia, when he throws her the purse as the portress of Hell's gate, he shows that he has 'poured his treasures into foreign laps'; and from the revelation which Emilia makes of her own character to her mistress, it is not impossible that her husband's ugly suspicions were not ill-founded. Othello had been no celibate, nor pretended to be such, and previous to his acquaintance with Desdemona had cultivated some experiences by which his virtue had not been strengthened. There was this flaw in his conduct, and by this inlet both suspicion and jealousy might enter; neither could have found a thoroughfare in a perfectly innocent character. Even the 'perfect soul,' living the life of camps, had found the preservation of its innocence impossible. In proportion that it had sinned it had become weak, and thus Othello was laid open to the temptation of Iago, and liable to a further fall. All mankind we, in some respect or other, similarly exposed from similar causes to evil communication; and our conscience, therefore, leads us to pity and forgive the noble Moor for his obvious fault and the fatal consequences. These reasons are philosophical and true; and therefore we must not accept Othello as an absolute and direct affirmation of a perfect loving soul, but as a negative instance approximating perfection as near as possible, yet fallible because it could not be identified with it. This view,—all but the highest,—simply because it is not the highest, makes the character and the tragedy possible. . . .

The theme of the play is Love. In Romeo and Juliet, Love before marriage was the argument, now it is Love after. The common Idea is differently conceived by the persons of the drama. . . . Othello and Iago divide the moral and intellectual view, and the real debate is between the two principals. The latter is naturally a jealous hus- band, and the revenge which he seeks is to infect his enemy with the same plague. Unfortunately for his victim, there is a joint in his armour loose, as in that of every man, and there enters the poisoned point of his foeman's spear. The tragedy, how- ever, might not have been possible at all but for a defect in Desdemona's character. Her passion was romantic, and there exists fiction in whatever is romantic. She suffers from illusion and loves to be deluded. If she is self-deceived, she likewise deceives others. It is on this ground that Brabantio warns Othello: 'She has deceived her father, and may thee.' In word, deed, thought, she must have been guilty of false- hood; and, virtuous as she otherwise is, we find in the development of the drama that she has one foible. It is the slightest of foibles, but one frequently fatal,—a habit of fibbing. From a timidity of disposition she frequently evades the truth, when attention to its strict letter would raise a difficulty. Practically, too, she dallies with falsehood: 'I am not merry, but I do beguile The thing I am by seeming otherwise.' To seem otherwise than she is, in order to obtain her end, is at all times lawful in her estimation; not meaning ill, but to make matters easy. Reticent as Hero,—perhaps more so, because her conduct suppressed the truth when it did not falsify it,—there was always an amount of 'seeming' in it which misled observers: 'A maiden never bold; Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion Blushed at herself.' Yet, all the time, she was carrying on a love-intrigue with a man of another race and colour, in which she was 'half the wooer.' When this fact is pointed out to Othello, it naturally raises suspicion. One so accustomed to deport herself gives no certain index in her behaviour by which her mental or her moral state may be judged of. All this proceeds not from criminality of disposition, but indolence or susceptibility of temper. Iago practises on the quality: 'For 'tis most easy The inclining Desdemona to subdue In any honest suit.' And, even so, she readily undertakes the cause of Cassio, and assures him of success. With her the end consecrates the means, and she regards nothing but the success of her enterprise. How she pleads with Othello for Cassio we know. With characteristic lenity she makes light of his fault, falsely arguing, not unconsciously: 'Save that they say, the wars must make examples,' &c. And immediately gives us an insight into her little foible, and how habitually she was induced to indulge in it: 'What! Michael Cassio, That came a-wooing with you, and many a time When I have spoke of you dis- praisingly Hath,' &c. So that Desdemona had not only disguised her sentiments from her father, but had idly sought to do the same from Cassio, who was in the secret. Iago might have, indeed, inferred from this conduct that the 'super-supple Venetian,' his mistress, was willing to regard the lieutenant with special favour. As she warms in her advocacy with Othello, she puts a further false colouring on the transaction, pre- tending to disparage the importance to her of the suit she was promoting: 'Nay, when I have a suit Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed, It shall be full of poise and difficult weight, And fearful to be granted.' No lawyer for a fee pleaded more intrepidly in behalf of a criminal client, whose acquittal he desired in the face of the clearest evidence. And in the affair of the handkerchief we find in her the same indifference to truth. She had dropped it in a moment of excitement, and probably forgot the fact; but she is at no pains to recollect, and finds it easier to feign an excuse for the nonce, than to cast about for the true reason. She had certainly questioned Emilia about it, and recognized its importance, if Othello were a jealous person; but as he is not, she will not think too much about it. When Othello asks for it, she is frightened into a direct lie. If at this critical moment Desdemona had confessed the truth, the tragedy would have been prevented and Iago's plot nipped in the bud. Even on her death-bed the case is the same. She tells Emilia that she had killed herself. . . . The truth is, that the lady's faults only render her more womanly. They are mainly those of her sex, ay, and of the most amiable of her sex. Desdemona is not a strong-minded, rationalistic woman; but a tender, loving, and devoted one, brought up in the lap of luxury and swayed by her feelings rather than by her reason. Nevertheless, we should not conceal from ourselves that there is even in this a defect, and that therefrom a number of injurious effects ensue which may end fatally.

['I should have mentioned the very impolite behaviour of Mr Burchell, who, during this discourse, sat with his face turned to the fire, and at the conclusion of every sentence would cry out "Fudge!"']—Vicar of Wakefield.—ED.]

EDWARD DOWDEN (Shakspeare—His Mind and Art, London, 1875, p. 226): There are certain problems which Shakspeare at once pronounces insoluble. He does not, like Milton, propose to give any account of the origin of evil. He does not, like Dante, pursue the soul of man through circles of unending torture, or spheres made radiant with the eternal presence of God. Satan, in Shakspeare's poems, does not come voyaging on gigantic vans across Chaos to find the earth. No great deliverer of mankind descends from the heavens. Here, upon the earth, evil ~~is~~—such was Shakspeare's declaration in the most emphatic accent. Iago actually exists. There is also on the earth a sacred passion of deliverance, a pure redeeming ardour. Cordelia exists. This, Shakspeare can tell for certain. But how Iago can be, and why Cordelia lies strangled across the breast of Lear—are these questions which you go on to ask? Something has been already said of the severity of Shakspeare. It is a portion of his severity to decline all answers to questions such as these. Is ignorance painful? Well, then, it is painful. Little solutions of your large difficulties can readily be obtained from priest or philosophe. Shakspeare prefers to let you remain in the solemn presence of a mystery. He does not invite you into his little church or his little library brilliantly illuminated by philosophical or theological rushlights. You remain in the darkness. But you remain in the vital air. And the great night is overhead. . . .

If the same unknowable force which manifests itself through man, manifests itself likewise through the animal world, we might suppose that there were some special affinities between the soul of Othello and the lion of his ancestral desert. Assuredly the same malignant power that lurks in the eye and that fills with venom the fang of the serpent, would seem to have brought into existence Iago. 'It is the strength of the base element that is so dreadful in the serpent; it is the very omnipotence of the earth. . . . It scarcely breathes with its one lung (the other shrivelled and abortive); it is passive to the sun and shade, and is cold or hot like a stone; yet "it can outclimb the monkey, outswim the fish, outleap the zebra, outwrestle the athlete, and crush the tiger." It is a divine hieroglyph of the demoniac power of the earth,—of the entire earthly nature.' * Such is the serpent Iago.

(P. 242.) Of the tragic story, what is the final issue? The central point of its spiritual import lies in the contrast between the two men, Iago and his victim. Iago, with keen intellectual faculties and manifold culture in Italian vice, lives and thrives after his fashion in a world from which all virtue and beauty are absent. Othello, with his barbaric innocence and regal magnificence of soul, must cease to live the moment he ceases to retain faith in the purity and goodness which were to him the highest and most real things upon earth. Or, if he live, life must become to him a cruel agony. Shakspeare compels us to acknowledge that self-slaughter is a rapturous energy,—that such prolonged agony is joy in comparison with the earthy life-in-death of such a soul as that of Iago. The noble nature is taken in the toils because it is noble. Iago suspects his wife of every baseness, but the suspicion has no other effect than to intensify his malignity. Iago could not be captured and constrained to heroic suffering and rage. The shame of every being who bears the name of woman is credible to Iago, and yet he can grate from his throat the jarring music: 'And let me the canakin clink, clink! And let me the canakin clink!' There is therefore, Shakspeare would have us understand, something more inimical to humanity than suffering,—namely, an incapacity for noble pain. To die as Othello dies is indeed grievous. But to live as Iago lives, devouring the dust and stinging—this is more appalling.

Such is the spiritual motive that controls the tragedy. And the validity of this truth is demonstrable to every sound conscience. No supernatural authority needs to be summoned to bear witness to this reality of human life. No pallid flame of hell, no splendour of dawning heaven, needs show itself beyond the verge of earth to illumine this truth. It is a portion of the ascertained fact of human nature, and of this our mortal existence. We look upon 'the tragic loading of the bed,' and we see Iago in presence of the ruin he has wrought. We are not compelled to seek for any resolution of these apparent discords in any alleged life to come. That may also be; we shall accept it, if it be. But looking sternly and strictly at what is now actual and present to our sight, we yet rise above despair. Desdemona's adhesion to her husband and to love survived the ultimate trial. Othello dies 'upon a kiss.' He perceives his own calamitous error, and he recognizes Desdemona pure and loyal as she was. Goodness is justified of her child. It is evil which suffers defeat. It is Iago whose whole existence has been most blind, purposeless, and miserable—a struggle against the virtuous powers of the world, by which at last he stands convicted and condemned.

D. J. SNIDER (System of Shakspeare's Dramas, St. Louis, 1877, ii, 97): In Othello there are three essential divisions or movements of the entire action. The First is the external conflict in the Family. The right of the daughter to choose a Moor for her husband is asserted against the will of the parent. Both sides appeal to the State, which decides in favour of the marriage, and Othello carries off his bride in triumph. The guilt of Desdemona is here indicated. The Second movement shows the internal conflict in the Family between husband and wife. The married pair, though successful in their external struggle with the father, are now rent asunder; for between such characters no secure, permanent ethical union is possible. Jealousy must arise. Iago seized only what was already prepared, and used it for his own purposes. The guilt of Othello and his Ancient is here shown. ³¹ The Third movement is the retribution, which brings home to every person the consequences of his deed.

* Quoted from Richard Owen by Ruskin, The Queen of the Air, p. 83.

[It is in the Second movement that Snider is obliged to put forth his strength, and in order to account for the existence of jealousy in a 'character fundamentally free from jealousy,' or to explain how 'an unsuspicious person becomes filled with the most deadly suspicion,' he follows the line of argument set forth by Heraud, but urges it with an emphasis which no one else has ventured, or been sufficiently skilful, to give. As I differ from him, toto calo, I shall do my best, by copious extracts, omitting no single essential sentence, to set forth his position with entire fairness. I think no one can read even these extracts, let alone the two volumes from which they are taken, without respect for the earnestness and admiration for the ingenuity with which this Ethical view of Shakespeare's dramas is elaborated,—the subject is evidently in an adept's hand. At the close of these extracts from Snider's volume, I shall not repeat the quotation from Goldsmith which I appended to Heraud, however fitly it may express my feelings; after Snider's more vigorous attack I am afraid it might be construed as a tribute to his force and as the resort of feebleness where sturdy arguments are lacking.—ED.]

(P. 111.) The character of the Moor is a contradiction,—and, hence, an impossibility,—without some adequate ground for the great change which it undergoes. If he were naturally jealous, there would be needed no motive for his conduct; but the difficult point lies in the fact that he is naturally without jealousy. His characterization, as well as that of Iago, has been pronounced unnatural; and so it is, unless some adequate impelling principle can be given to account for the total inversion of his nature. (P. 112.) Iago's disbelief in the honour of woman must be regarded as the result of his own experience. Married life has for him brought forth only its bitterest fruits. . . . That his opinion of Emilia is true is very plainly indicated in the last Scene of Act IV. Othello is also well acquainted with her character. He knows her falsehood and infidelity; he will not believe any of her statements, and loads her with the most opprobrious epithets.

We are now brought face to face with a question which it is by no means pleasant to consider, but which has to be discussed if we wish to comprehend the Poet's work. Must we regard the Moor as guilty of what Iago suspects him? There is nothing in the play which shows that Othello was innocent of the charge, but there is much which shows that he was not innocent. The very fact that this suspicion is cast upon him almost at the beginning, and is nowhere removed, seems sufficient to raise the presumption of guilt. It hangs over him like a cloud which will not pass away. Then Emilia's character, instead of precluding, strengthens the supposition of criminal intercourse, and the notion is still further upheld by the knowledge of her habits which Othello betrays. But the veil is never wholly removed. Why does not the Poet openly state the offence, so as to leave no doubt? It is evident that he does not wish to soil the union with Desdemona by dwelling on Othello's incontinence, nor does he desire to throw into the background the difference of race as the leading motive of the play. Still, he would not have us forget the dark surmise; there it remains suspended over the Moor to the last. Iago, to be sure, is a liar; but his lies are meant for others, and not for himself. Besides, Iago is not more certain at first than we, his readers and hearers, are; but the complete success of his plan, which is based on the Moor's guilt, confirms, both for him and for us, the truth of the suspicion.

So much is indicated in the course of the play; but, if the deeper motives of the various characters are carefully examined, this conclusion would seem to become irresistible. Iago is manifestly assailed with the same burning jealousy which afterwards wrought such terrific effects in Othello. Now, what will be the manner of his revenge? The most logical and adequate would be, 'wife for wife,' hence his first thought is to debauch Desdemona. But nothing more is heard of this plan, for it could not possibly be successful. Then comes his most shrewd and peculiar method of avenging his wrong. If he cannot dishonour Othello in reality, he can do it in appearance, with almost the same results. His purpose is to make Othello believe that Desdemona is untrue. This will be a revenge sufficient for his end. It will destroy Othello's happiness and peace of mind just as well as the truth; it will bring upon Othello that which he has brought upon Iago. Another phase of the question now comes up for solution: How far was it possible to excite such a passion in a character like that of Othello? The free, open, unsuspecting nature of the Moor is noted by Iago himself; his noble and heroic disposition would appear least likely to be subject to jealousy. Yet this is the very form of revenge chosen by Iago with surpassing skill. This is, therefore, just the weak side of Othello's character. Why? The solution of the problem lies in the fact above mentioned,—that Iago's suspicion concerning Emilia is true. Othello has been guilty of adultery; he is, therefore, aware that the infidelity of wives is a fact. Here lies the germ of his belief in the faithlessness of Desdemona. His own act thus comes home to him and renders him accursed; his faith in justice can only make him more ready to think that he will be punished through his wife, since that is the mode which his own guilt suggests. Such is the initial point of the fearful jealousy of the Moor, which Iago knows exactly how to reach, since it is a matter lying wholly within his own experience; and he knows also that Othello, on account of previous criminality, must be as capable of this passion as himself. Both the revenge of Iago and the jealousy of Othello, therefore, can be adequately motivated only by the guilty conduct of the Moor towards the Ancient's wife.

Moreover, there is no other ground for the relation of marriage between Iago and Emilia, except as a basis for these two main motives of the drama. Thus, too, we see one of the fundamental rules of Shakespeare vindicated,—that man cannot escape his own deed; hence Othello is the author of his own fate, since by his guilt he has called up the avenger who will destroy him and his family; while, without the view above developed, he must appear as an innocent sufferer deceived by a malicious villain. It will, therefore, be seen that two things of the greatest importance have their sole explanation in this view; namely, the manner of Iago's revenge, and his knowledge of the assailable point in Othello's character. Here, also, we find the solution of the Moor's contradictory nature. He is, in general, unsuspecting; but, on account of his guilt, he is capable of one suspicion; namely, that wives may be faithless. The Poet has thus added to the distinction of race,—for which the Moor could not be blamed,—a second motive, the criminal deed, of which he must take the responsibility. The military life of Othello will furnish the third principle,—that of honour, which will impel him to destroy the wife whom he thinks to have violated it in its deepest and most tender part.

[Iago's plans being thus unfolded, Snider shows that his instruments are: First, Roderigo; Second, Cassio, 'an open and notorious libertine,' whom Iago also suspects of undue familiarity with Emilia,—a suspicion which is not confirmed in the play. But to remove all doubt of Cassio's moral weaknesses, Bianca is introduced by the Poet. 'There is no other ground why such an offensive relation should be dragged into the drama.' Emilia is the Third instrument.]

(P. 118.) Such are the instruments; but Iago himself has to manage the far more difficult case of Othello in his relation to Desdemona. This brings us now to the main development of the drama, and, perhaps, the most complete psychological portraiture in Shakespeare. Iago begins the manipulation of Othello's mind through a series of influences adapted exactly to the shifting phases of the Moor's disposition, and increasing in intensity to the end. Given a noble, unsuspecting character, the design is to portray those causes which not only turn it into the opposite of itself, but make it destroy its most beloved object. The primal basis to work upon lies in Othello's own consciousness of guilt. The first point is to faintly touch his suspicion, which is accomplished most easily, for he readily believes what he himself has done to others may happen in his own case. We see how the slightest hint from Iago casts a shadow over his whole being. 'Iago. Ha! I like not that. Othello. What dost thou say? Iago. Nothing, my lord, or if—I know not what. Othello. Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?' etc. A word from Desdemona is sufficient, however, to allay his mistrust, but another word from Iago is sufficient to arouse it anew in all its intensity. Can any one doubt that this hasty suspicion, on the part of an unsuspecting character, can have any other ground than the consciousness of the same kind of guilt which he is so ready to suspect in another? Iago's artifices are unquestionably skilful, but he found a most fruitful and well-prepared soil; and, besides, his very skilfulness rests upon his comprehending and utilizing so thoroughly the psychological effects of Othello's crime. It is impossible to think that an honest and innocent man could have been so easily led astray. . . . [In the dialogue where Iago cautions Othello to beware of jealousy, Iago has a twofold purpose,—viz., to inspire Othello with suspicion, and yet to shun any suspicion directed against himself.] (P. 121.) Othello is caught, the reason is manifest. A universally suspicious nature could not have been thus entrapped; it must have suspected the purpose of Iago also, with all his adroitness. Othello is, however, naturally unsuspecting. But guilt has furnished the most fruitful soil for one kind of suspicion; that soil Iago cultivates. Hence the Moor is afraid of only one thing,—the infidelity of his wife; the tricks of Iago lie outside of the horizon of his suspicion. On the other hand, a completely innocent nature could not have been thus entrapped; the psychological basis would have been wholly wanting. Here is seen the reason for the marked outlines of Othello's character. He is not naturally suspicious, otherwise he must have suspected the purpose of Iago; nor is he guiltless, for, if he were, his jealousy could not have been reached by any such artifice.

EDWARD ROSE (Sudden Emotion: Its Effect upon Different Characters as Shown by Shakspeare—New Shakspeare Society, Transactions, 1880-82, p. 1).^{*} [The different characters upon which Rose proposes to note the effect of sudden emotions are 'essentially two: the men who are habitually self-conscious, given to analyse their own minds and deeds, and the men who are not.' After proposing as types of the former some modern poets, such as Tennyson, Browning, and Clough, men who constantly look into their own minds and examine their own motives; and as types of the latter, men like Darwin and the Duke of Wellington, who act from obvious motives and with a minimum of self-consciousness,—Rose proceeds:]

With this prelude, let me state my theory as to the effect of sudden emotion—I mean sudden emotion of the most intense kind—upon characters of these two opposing types,

^{*} I cannot refrain from expressing my admiration of this thoughtful Essay, and regret that I cannot reproduce it all here. Had the New Shakspeare Society done no other sterling work in that year, the appearance of this and a following Essay by Mr Rose would have been sufficient to justify its existence.—ED.

as shown by Shakspeare. A man of simple nature sees a fact and realizes it: a man in whom the reflective intellect predominates thinks about it. Therefore, a great sudden emotion stuns the one, makes him helpless for the time: the other does not realize it so intensely,—it is more, as I have said, a great deal of new matter to think about, and his intellect is thus stimulated to think twice as fast as usual. Or I might put it thus: our moral nature takes a thing as a whole, our intellect examines, dissects it; therefore a great event awes our moral nature, but sets our intellect hard at work, and, therefore, men in whom the moral nature predominates are stunned, while men chiefly intellectual are stimulated, by a sudden occurrence of the highest joy or sorrow.

That Shakspeare held this theory was suggested to me by two parallel passages: those in which are shown the effects of the Ghost's revelation upon Hamlet, and of the murder of Duncan upon Macbeth. [Here follows the confirmation of his theory in these passages, and on p. 10 we resume:] I will now take some extreme instances of the opposite type of character—Othello, Desdemona, Macduff—that no intermediate gradations may make the contrast less striking. But first I must point out that the most intense emotion of these simpler characters is not so easily put into words by the dramatist, for the reason that its typical expression is silence, or inarticulate sounds of grief or joy. The poet must either leave these to the actor, or give a verbal picture, not strictly dramatic, of a mind which, in reality, would be stunned and speechless. The former alternative is a dangerous one, which Shakspeare has rarely adopted,—perhaps the example most nearly perfect is that of Helena, in the Second Act of All's Well that Ends Well, who makes only one speech of a dozen words after Bertram has refused to marry her. In the alternative which he generally chose, of giving to intense emotion words more coherent than those of nature would be, there is, I think, a rule by which we can distinguish these utterances from such perfectly dramatic speeches as those of Hamlet and Macbeth: the latter are rich in intellect, filled with varied thoughts variously expressed; the former are little more than repetitions of the one crushing conception, in words often curiously monotonous. Thus, Macduff's 'All my pretty ones? Did you say all? O hell-kite! All? What, all my pretty chickens and their dam At one fell swoop?' We see so little of Macduff that it is scarcely possible to sum up his character; but all his one chief scene,—with Malcolm first, and then with Ross,—indicates a man of strong and simple feelings. The words he forces out are only spoken at the urging of his companion, who, indeed, expresses in one phrase Shakspeare's theory as to the crushing effect of emotion on those characters who allow themselves to realize it completely and immediately:—'The grief that does not speak Whispers the o'erfraught heart and bids it break.'

Desdemona, the most lovable, I think, of Shakespeare's women, is, perhaps, the strongest example of the rule I have proposed. Othello's attack at once stuns her; she is brave, and denies his accusation as soon as he speaks it clearly, but the effort is almost too much for her. When, a moment later, Emilia asks her how she does, she can answer only, 'Faith, half asleep.' [See IV, ii, 113-134.]

And, after she has roused herself to one great protest against her lord's suspicion, her mind relapses into bewildered helplessness for the short remainder of her life. She goes over again and again the one thought that she can take in,—the enormous, utterly impossible crime of which she is accused. She realizes only the accusation; she cannot even think the existence of the sin. An exquisitely subtle touch shows how she tries, with her perfect innocence, to imagine what guilt is. She sees Lodovico, a young and handsome man, and wonders if it could be possible for her, another's wife, to love him. She resolves that she 'could not do such a deed for the whole world.' In the last scene of all there is no spring, no elasticity about her mind; no reflection, one might say no thought. In almost all other cases Shakspeare shows how strangely the brain does its work in moments of great emotion. Here, by exception, he shows a perfectly simple nature beaten down by terrible reality. At the end her words have the directness and the oneness of a child's begging helplessly for delay of punishment:—'O banish me, my lord, but kill me not!—Kill me to-morrow: let me live to-night!—But half an hour!—But while I say one prayer!'

Hero, by the way, in Much Ado About Nothing, is but an early sketch of Desdemona: when she is similarly accused, after a few sentences of simple answers and ejaculations, she falls in a swoon.

The great character of Othello undoubtedly belongs to this class. He has a strong and healthy mind and a vivid imagination, but they deal entirely with first impressions, with obvious facts. If he trusts a man, he trusts him without the faintest shadow of reserve. Iago's suggestion that Desdemona is false comes upon him like a thunder-bolt. He knows this man to be honest, his every word the absolute truth. He is stunned, and his mind accepts specious reasonings passively and without examination. Yet his love is so intense that he struggles against his own nature, and for a time compels himself to think, though not upon the great question whether she is false. He cannot bring his intellect to attack Iago's conclusions, and only argues the minor point: Why is she false? But even this effort is too much for him. It is, I have said, against nature; and nature, after the struggle has been carried on unceasingly for hours, revenges herself—he falls into a fit. That this is the legitimate climax of overpowering emotion on an intensely real and single character is plain. This obstruction and chaos of the faculties is the absolute opposite of the brilliant life into which Hamlet's intellect leaps on its contact with tremendous realities.

The soliloquy at the end of Othello's first scene with Iago may appear to make rather against my theory; it does not merely repeat one thought, it goes from point to point: 'If I do prove her haggard I'll whistle her off. Haply that I am black—or, for I am declined into the vale of years—yet that's not much. My relief must be to loathe her. 'Tis the plague of great ones.' But this contradiction, I fancy, is only apparent. He is trying to force his mind to work, as I have said, and it flutters helplessly from one minor point to another; moreover, jealousy is a mean and worrying passion, attaching itself to details, not grand and broad like the greatest love, hate, or ambition. My theory, by the way, may help to account for what has always troubled critics—the extraordinary quickness with which Othello's faith in Desdemona yields to Iago's insinuations. Sudden and intense emotion stuns his nature, and makes it incapable of resistance.

GERMAN CRITICISMS

JOHANN HEINRICH VOSS (Shakespeare's Othello, uebersetzt, Jena, 1806, p. vi): For several years it was the wish of Schiller to see Othello put upon our stage, but he was too busy with his own creations to undertake the humbler task of translation. Accordingly, when I became more intimate with him I complied with his proposal, and engaged in the agreeable task of working at a translation of this masterpiece of the Muse of Shakspeare. To it I devoted all my leisure hours, and at the beginning of 1805 handed to Schiller the first draft of a faithful translation. We went through it together, discussing with critical nicety the difficult passages until finally the work received its present form. Schiller proposed in the warmer coming days of Spring to have the piece put upon the stage and to superintend the rehearsal. This he did not live to do; the day of his death came sooner than the first of Spring!

The unusual length of the play, and the changes which the centuries, since Shakspeare's time, had produced not only in the demands of the Stage but of the public rendered certain important modifications necessary, which Schiller effected with as sparing a hand as possible. He regretted the necessity of striking out the beginning of Act II, where Iago gives utterance to that hatred of the other sex which he subsequently puts into practice. Schiller was less sparing in other places, where Shakspeare out of the inexhaustible wealth of his genius lavishes it with full hands more plenteously than was necessary. The character of Bianca,—a rôle indispensable, in order, through the introduction of the handkerchief, to excite the frenzy of Othello to the highest degree,—has been in some respects refined, wherefor there was no essential but only a superficial reason. Act IV Schiller began with the swooning of Othello, which is sufficiently explained by Iago's words: 'Work on! My medicine works.' From a fearful effect a fearful cause might be inferred, and this we decided to be better than to have, as in the original, both the cause and the effect before our eyes. In the undressing scene, the noble Desdemona, while Emilia makes her coarse speech, stands with out listening to her, sunk in her misgivings, and strikes in with the last verse of the willow-song.

These are the most important changes made by the immortal man. It was his last work!

A. W. SCHLEGEL (Lectures on Dramatic Art and Literature. Translated by John Black, London, 1815, vol. ii, p. 189): If Romeo and Juliet shines with the colours of the dawn of morning, but a dawn whose purple clouds already announce the thunder of a sultry day, Othello is, on the other hand, a strongly-shaded picture; we might call it a tragical Rembrandt. What a fortunate mistake that the Moor, under which name a baptized Saracen of the northern coast of Africa was unquestionably meant in the novel, has been made by Shakespeare, in every respect, a negro! We recognize in Othello the wild nature of that glowing zone which generates the most raging beasts of prey and the most deadly poisons, tamed only in appearance by the desire of fame, by foreign laws of honor, and by nobler and milder manners. His jealousy is not the jealousy of the heart, which is incompatible with the tenderest feeling and adoration of the beloved object; it is of that sensual kind from which, in burning climes, has sprung the disgraceful ill-treatment of women and many other unnatural usages. A drop of this poison flows in his veins, and sets his whole blood in the most disorderly fermentation. The Moor seems noble, frank, confiding, grateful for the love shown him; and he is all this, and, moreover, a hero that spurns at danger, a worthy leader of an army, a faithful servant of the state; but the mere physical force of passion puts to flight in one moment all his acquired and accustomed virtues, and gives the upper hand to the savage in him over the moral man. The tyranny of the blood over the will betrays itself even in the expression of his desire of revenge against Cassio. In his repentance when he views the evidence of the deed, a genuine tenderness for his murdered wife, and the painful feeling of his annihilated honour, at last burst forth; and he every now and then assails himself with the rage a despot shows in punishing a runaway slave. He suffers as a double man; at once in the higher and lower sphere into which his being was divided. While the Moor bears only the nightly colour of suspicion and deceit on his visage, Iago is black within. He pursues Othello like his evil spirit, and with his light, and therefore the more dangerous, insinuations, he leaves him no rest; it is as if by means of an unfortunate affinity, founded, however, in nature, this influence was, by necessity, more powerful over him than the voice of his good angel Desdemona. A more artful villain than this Iago has never been portrayed; he spreads his net with a skill which nothing can escape. The repugnance inspired by his aims becomes supportable from the attention of the spectators being directed to his means; they furnish infinite employment to the understanding. Cool, discontented, and morose, arrogant where he dare be so, but humble and insinuating when it suits his purpose, he is a complete master in the art of dissimulation; accessible only to selfish emotions, he is thoroughly skilled in rousing the passions of others, and of availing himself of every opening which they give him: he is as excellent an observer of men as any one can be who is unacquainted with higher motives of action from his own experience; there is always some truth in his malicious observations on them. He does not merely pretend to an obdurate incredulity as to the virtue of women, he actually entertains it; and this, too, falls in with his whole way of thinking, and makes him the more fit for the execution of his purposes. As in everything he sees merely the hateful side, he dissolves in the rudest manner the charm which the imagination casts over the relation between the two sexes; he does so for the purpose of throwing into commotion the senses of Othello, whom his heart might easily have convinced of the innocence of Desdemona. This must serve as an excuse for the numerous expressions in the speeches of Iago from which modesty shrinks back. If Shakespeare had written in our days he would not, perhaps, have dared to hazard them; but this must certainly have injured the truth of the picture. Desdemona is an offering without blemish. She is not, it is true, a high ideal representation of sweetness and enthusiastic passion like Juliet; full of simplicity, softness, and humility, and so innocent that she can hardly form to herself an idea of the possibility of infidelity, she seems calculated to make the most yielding and tender wife. The female propensity wholly to follow a foreign destiny has led her into the only error she ever committed,—that of marrying without the consent of her father. Her choice seems wrong; and yet she has been gained over to Othello by that which induces the female to honour in man her protector and guide, admiration of his determined heroism, and compassion for the sufferings which he had undergone. With great art it is so contrived that from the very circumstance that the possibility of a suspicion of herself never once enters her mind, she is the less reserved in her solicitation for Cassio, by which she more and more heightens the jealousy of the Moor. To give still greater effect to the angelic purity of Desdemona, Shakspeare has in Emilia associated with her a companion of doubtful virtue. From the sinful levity of this woman, it is also conceivable that she should not confess the abstraction of the handkerchief when Othello violently demands it back.

this would otherwise be the circumstance in the whole piece the most difficult to justify. Cassio is portrayed exactly as he ought to be to excite suspicion without actual guilt, amiable and nobly disposed, but easily seduced. The public events of the first two Acts show us Othello in his most glorious aspect, as the support of Venice and the terror of the Turks; they serve to withdraw the story from the mere domestic circle, which is done in Romeo and Juliet by the dissensions between the houses of Montague and Capulet. No eloquence is capable of painting the overwhelming force of the catastrophe in Othello, the pressure of feelings which measure out in a moment the abysses of eternity.

FRANZ HORN (Shakespeare's Schauspiele erläutert, Leipzig, 1823, ii, 336): Nothing in poetry has ever been written more pathetic than the scene preceding Desdemona's death; I confess I almost always turn away my eyes from the poor girl with her infinitely touching song of 'Willow, willow, willow,' and I would fain ask the Poet whether his tragic arrow, which always hits the mark, does not here pierce almost too deeply. I would not call the last word with which she dies a lie, or even a 'noble' lie; this qualification has been wretchedly misused. The lie with which Desdemona dies is divine truth, too good to come within the compass of an earthy moral code.

As already said, all these scenes reach the supreme degree of the pathetic as no other Poet has ever reached it; and here a question may, perhaps, be permitted that seems almost paradoxical: who is there who could have aided the poor dear child Desdemona? To my thinking, the best and surest would have been Portia of Belmont, who cut short all idea of love for the Prince of Morocco with the bare thought that he was black; but then Desdemona would not have been Desdemona.

ULRICI (Shakespeare's dramatische Kunst, Leipzig, 1847, 2te Afge, 1ste Abt., p. 379. Translated for Bohn's Library by Miss L. Dora Schmitz, London, 1876, vol. i, p. 418): The main springs of the action consequently lie in the characters of the persons represented, and yet the tragic catastrophe arises only indirectly, not directly, out of the disposition and the mode of action of the tragic heroes. The construction of the piece, in this, differs distinctly from that of Shakespeare's other tragedies. In Romeo and Juliet, Hamlet, King Lear, and Macbeth, nay, even in his Historical Tragedies, the poet, in the first place, exhibits a certain position of affairs; he describes the circumstances, relations, and situations, as well as the characters of the surrounding persons among whom his tragic heroes live; in other words, he first lays the foundation upon which the edifice is to be raised, but whose construction it is directly to affect only in so far as the fortunes of his heroes proceed, it is true, from this foundation, but, in the first place and directly, from their own characters, their own actions, their freedom, and self-determination. Thus, to give an example: in Romeo and Juliet the furious hatred between the Capulets and Montagues does, indeed, form the basis of the tragic catastrophe, but this relation is a positive one to the two lovers; they, therefore, are aware of it, and if they nevertheless follow the impulse of their passionate love,—out of which alone their tragic ruin is developed,—then it is their own will or the necessary consequence of their own characters. The relations and circumstances, as well as the secondary persons who surround them, certainly do help on their fate, but the primary cause of it is, nevertheless, the state of their own minds and the manner of their own action. It is different with our present drama. Othello does not know of Iago's hatred, of his revengeful spirit, of his wickedness and cunning; he does not see the cliffs upon which his life is to be wrecked, hence he cannot order his purposes and actions in accordance with them. His mode of action, therefore, does not only not arise from his freedom, but, directly, not even from his character; it is rather caused by an inconceivable imposition practised upon him by another person; without this imposition there is in Othello's whole being not even the smallest corner from which such monstrous deeds could burst forth. It is only this external influence which first, as it were, breaks down his whole character, and turns the lowest portion of it uppermost. That he allows himself to be deceived arises, it is true, from his own individuality, but only partially. For, on the other hand, the deceit is so cunningly contrived, so favored by circumstances, that even the most cautious and most circumspect person would have been deceived by it. In short, the distinguishing peculiarity of our drama consists in its being a tragedy of intrigue, whereas all Shakespeare's other tragedies are rather tragedies of character.

This distinction, which has long been recognized in the domain of comedy, has hitherto not found place in the aesthetic criticism of tragedy, owing to the very good reason that, in reality, the predominance of intrigue is opposed to the nature of tragedy. Intrigue, because invariably based upon the special objects of a single individual, necessarily has the stamp of accident and caprice. If, therefore, it is made the lever of the action, the primary cause of the tragic catastrophe, the tragedy loses its character of grandeur and sublimity; it is precipitated from the region of a higher necessity, of a fate,—which, indeed, lies in the inmost nature of man himself and proceeds from it, but then overpowers and masters him,—into the lower sphere of every-day life, in which only the limited interests and purposes of single individuals mutually combat and outwit one another. The downfall of human greatness and beauty which is not founded upon its own immediate weakness or one-sidedness, but, though not altogether, yet chiefly, occasioned by the cunning and the power of the evil which opposes it, is something revolting; it offends the human sense of justice, and calls forth a doubt of the divine order in the world. In short, it disturbs the impression of what is tragic, because it places the contradictions of human existence in the sharpest dissonance without indicating their dénoûment, or revealing that reconciling power which lies under all events ordained by God.

From the predominance of intrigue, it follows as a matter of course that chance also plays an important part, and that in a certain sense it assumes the character of intrigue. For chance is, in fact, but objective caprice, the caprice of subjective chance; both correspond with one another because they are internally of one nature. Now, chance is to be as little excluded from tragedy as intrigue; both are essential elements of human life, and, therefore, have a perfect right to be represented in all human actions and fortunes. And yet it is only in the field of comedy that they have a right to be a principal power in the dramatic development; they may predominate only in comedy. In tragedy, on the other hand, they must be employed only as an additional means to further the development, or as the echo of the outer world, which merely answers to the hero's disposition and mode of action; whereas the actual cause of the tragic fate must be in the character and actions of the hero himself. Regarded in this light, chance, as we have already seen in Romeo and Juliet, represents, so to say, the invisible hand of Providence, which leads the tragic complication to its necessary goal; used in this way, it can produce the greatest tragic effect. In Othello the catastrophe is first introduced and occasioned by chance. Othello, 'the noble nature whom passion could not shake,' who, in fact, is vulnerable only in the one point, in his love for Desdemona, is first plunged into the heat of passion by Iago's villainy and by the play of chance which favours it, and is thus thrown out of the centre of his existence and brought to ruin. The first accident is the circumstance of Desdemona's losing her handkerchief,—which is as much accident as carelessness; the second is that Emilia finds the handkerchief; the third, that Cassio gives it to Bianca to have the embroidery copied; the fourth, that Othello sees it in Cassio's hand; the fifth, that Bianca happens to be at hand to help in deceiving Othello by Cassio's conduct in conversation with Iago;—it is all these accidents which help to convince Othello of Desdemona's infidelity, and which thus effect the complete ruin of his character. They are, therefore, pre-eminently the levers of the action. Of course, on the other hand, it is indeed highly tragic that human virtue is not able to hold its own against blind chance and common intrigue; but it is tragic only on condition that it is founded upon the insufficiency of the power of the good itself. If, however, the powers of evil are called forth only by accident and intrigue, if, accordingly, the moral force is broken only so far that it is no longer able to defend itself, then the tragic pathos is carried beyond itself, up to a point where it becomes converted into what is hideous and horrible.

The chief motives of the action—which, accordingly, lie but partly in the characters of the dramatic personages, for the most part in the outward accidental circumstances—in our present drama again naturally determine the composition of the piece, and, moreover, in the first place, the external composition; that is, the interdependence of the separate scenes, the development of the characters in a definite succession of actions and situations, and the order in which the incidents of the action are presented to the spectator. Beauty of composition—like every other formal beauty—demands, above all things, harmony, clearness, and design; that is, it demands that the final aim of the action, the point to which the dramatic development finally leads, should, from beginning to end, be perceptible through the separate scenes, and that the characters, the action, and the plot should be developed as rapidly as clearly. This beauty of arrangement is exhibited in the highest perfection in Othello. Even the exposition (the First Scene of the First Act) is a proof of this: Roderigo's conversation with Iago not only makes us acquainted with the characters of both, but Iago's hatred, jealousy, and revenge at once reveal the chief motive of the whole action; whereas Brabantio's appearance, his grief and rage,—representing the right of the family which is violated in him,—throws a dark, tragic shadow over Othello's and Desdemona's love at the very commencement of the piece. The following scenes show us, partly Othello's heroic figure in the zenith of his fame and renown, and partly describe his relation to Desdemona, the origin, the deep intensity, purity, and truth of their love, and then once more point to the storm which threatens their union. The Second Act shows us the threads out of which the complication of the Third Act is woven; first, Othello's arrival in Cyprus, the description of his position in the still restless and agitated country, which again is the reason of his subsequent severity towards Cassio; then Iago's opinions of the female sex, which throw a significant light upon Emilia's character as well as upon his marriage with her; thereupon we have the announcement of the festival, which forms the basis of the following and closing scene; lastly, we have Cassio's drunkenness, his quarrel with Roderigo and Montano, his deposition, and Iago's advice to him to entreat Desdemona's intercession. The Third Act then weaves the given threads into the net which Othello, in his vehemence, draws over his own head. It is easily seen that from this point everything runs on in a straight line, without digression, towards the one goal. It is only the Second Scene of the Third Act that seems to be a makeshift, which might well be dispensed with. But to make up for this, the conclusion of the same Act, as well as of the Fourth and Fifth Acts, are the more masterly in composition. With flash upon flash the tragic thunder-cloud relieves itself of its lightnings; with every word, with every turn of the representation, the course of the action makes an important advance; from every quarter we see but the one goal; and yet everything glides on in a natural flow without disturbance and force. As rapidly and naturally does the path, in the end, run down from its highest summit; the way in which Othello is undeceived, Iago unmasked and brought to confession, is a true masterpiece of dramatic development.

And yet the external composition, were it ever so perfect, does not make the work of art an organic whole; it is, rather, only the mechanical side, the external, formal beauty of lines and outlines, extremely important for rendering the work intelligible and as regards effect, but a merit shared by every well-devised piece of machinery. The drama first becomes a living organism by its internal unity, from which all its members and parts grow forth as from a fructified germ and develop in accordance with their destiny, in which unity life has its inmost source, and necessarily determines the external form, as well as the internal arrangement and formation, of the whole.

G. G. GERVINUS (Shakespeare, Leipzig, 1849. Translated by F. E. Bunnett, London, 1863, ii, 48): Whoever has had opportunity of drawing frequent experience from family and married life, will find that no other of Shakespeare's Plays presents such rich and striking application to the actual, oft-recurring circumstances of life,—to circumstances and experiences which attest that the tragedy brought about by parental tyranny is often exceeded by that which arises from the wilfulness of the child. With however good reason we assume to ourselves the freedom of the marriage choice and the right of the child, yet the counter-claim which Shakespeare makes in the Winter's Tale is the justest and the most natural which can be advanced: in making this choice the father should be at least heard. However independently the newly-founded family ought to enter upon life, universal experience tells us that there is no security when it has forcibly sundered itself from the elder families out of which it arose. Men who from caprice or wilfulness disturb the peace of a family, are little qualified to maintain peace in their own. The first transgression makes the way easy for another; the deceitful act makes even him mistrustful against whom deceit was practised in love; the passion which once forsakes the path of discretion destroys the belief in self-command and in the power of virtue. And where doubts of this kind are once planted in the mind, unhappiness and discord are necessarily the bitter fruit.

(P. 51.) The task lay before the Poet to exhibit the passions of jealousy to that extent in which the lover can be thought capable of destroying the object of his love. We think a man of inflamed sensibility, of heated blood, of the most violent irritability, especially capable of such a deed; and even him only in the frenzy of intoxication, in the sudden incentive of opportunity, in the feverish excitement of a fit of rage. But such a deed would never be a subject for art; such a man, acting in an irresponsible condition, would never win our sympathy for his tragic fate. But could it be conceivable that such a deed could ever be committed by a man of fixed character and steadfast disposition, who, indeed, before the act had captivated our interest? in whom this passion, one of the lowest which actuate a man, could appear so ennobled that he, even in spite of and after such a deed, could engage our sympathy, ay, even excite our pity? It would appear improbable. And yet the poet, in Othello, has made such a man commit such a deed; or, rather, he has made it even there be committed by a man who united two natures, calmness with ardour, rashness with circumspection, the traits which make the murder possible, and those which allow us to admire and pity the murderer.

(P. 103.) 'I am glad thy father's dead,' says Gratiano; 'this sight would make him do him a desperate turn.' But this sentence is also true in its reverse sense. If Desdemona had lived to know it, not the death of her father, but the cause of his death would have been an experience to her just as fearfully undeceiving as the lost confidence of Othello. For just as she had no foreboding of this, she had none also of the effect which her independent step had had upon her father. The same nature and qualities were at work in her when she gave the fatal blow to the life of her father and when she gave occasion for the suspicion of her husband. The same innocence of heart, the same lack of suspicion, the same inability to intend any harm to any one, allowed no touch of bashfulness to appear in her, in the first instance, before the public council, and placed on her lips, subsequently, the dangerous intercession in behalf of Cassio. In both cases she intended to do right and good, and from the very purity of her consciousness arose her misconstrued actions. Like Othello, like Romeo and Juliet, she falls a sacrifice to her own nature, and not to the law of any arbitrary and unjust moral statute; to a nature which, in the strength of that directness and originality which interests us all, oversteps the limits of social custom, unites guilt and innocence in strange combination, which brings down death upon itself as a punishment, and endures death as a triumph,—a nature which divides our feelings between admiration and pity. It seems as if here perfect satisfaction is afforded to all the demands of tragedy. It seems, also, that this performance is consistent with the freest moral view. For the Poet, by this conclusion, has not once for all condemned every unequal marriage, nor every secret union, just as little as in Romeo and Juliet he has condemned all passionate love. With such partiality Shakespeare has never and nowhere meditated upon moral problems. Otherwise, in All's Well that Ends Well he would not have carried an unequal marriage to a prosperous end through so many difficulties; he would not in Cymbeline have suffered a secret union to turn out for good; nor in the Merchant of Venice would he have justified the abduction of a child and a self-willed marriage. Not the letter of the law, but the circumstances and nature of men, are, in the poet's wise opinion, the spring from which good and evil, happiness and unhappiness, arise. These furnish also the line of conduct according to which both must be measured. In proportion to the circumstance and nature of the man, evil often becomes a source of good, and good a source of evil, apparent happiness a misfortune, and misfortune a happiness. And this is with conscious intention observed and carried out in this play, in which the noble Desdemona falls into sin through innocence and goodness, and by a sinful lie commits the most beautiful act of forgiveness.

OTTO LUDWIG (Shakespeare-Studien, Leipzig, 1872, p. 116): Strange is it that, at a time when our modern tragedies are no longer tolerated and we hear it said that the age for tragedies is past, the tragedies of Shakespeare still continue popular, and not alone among those who study him or perhaps extol his plays merely on account of his name and in order not to lose their reputation among the leaders of opinion. His tragedies deal with the most frightful subjects, with events terrible beyond our conception, with the most violent passions represented as in the common order of things. What are the reasons that these works give pleasure even to our sophisticated age? I believe:

1. That as to their subjects, the reason may be found in Shakespeare's sound moral judgement of men and things.

2. And as concerns the mode of representation, the reason lies in the subdued moderation of great power, the grand repose of great vitality, the avoidance not of the violent, but of violence in the representation thereof. Shakespeare portrays the violent, but not violently. It lies in the breadth with which he sets forth his characters and their manifestations,—the constant keeping in mind that it is not reality but art that we have before us, in the richly picturesque, elevated speech, which always avoids the poor, the hasty, the abrupt, which a direct expression of the matter in hand would have the appearance of in reality; the interlacing of allied devices, the methodical movement.—The thought is with Shakespeare immediate, as well as the feeling and action, but the rhythm, although representative, is always in due artistic moderation.—The correct relation between strength and weakness, where, as with Michael Angelo, even the subordinate figures are still beyond the medium fulness of the real.—Then the shortness of the Scenes, the restrictions set to the different movements, often indeed, in the progress of the action the simple pause and physical relief of the change of Scenes.—The avoidance of all material means of straining the attention; the importance of time and place to the good or bad result is only hinted at, never dwelt upon. Furthermore, the brilliant rôles by which admiration of the art of the great actor helps to act against the involuntary delusion of the spectator; then the wealth of the action, which does not permit us to dwell too long upon any one part; the fulness of poetry; the ideality of the characters; the moral considerations,—all these characteristics of the Poet make him for ever popular.—Desdemona's fault is a negative, unconscious one, a lack of foresight resulting from her character. Why, nevertheless, has her fearful ending nothing of the horrible? Because, I believe, her suffering gives her occasion to show such perfect, spiritual beauty, that one forgets the cause and almost the suffering even; nay, we are even thankful therefor. Then through the sympathetic effect of her ideal repose; because the creature in her, struggles not; she fascinates us with her sweet submission to her suffering, caring more for her murderer than for herself. Then there is the artistic beauty and repose of the representation itself. Then there is the harmony of the deed with the plot,—for Othello is really the one to be most pitied. Here hints may be found for the representation of the ideal,—Othello has declared his murderous resolve. He bids Desdemona to get to bed and to dismiss Emilia. Next the preparation for the deed by the attack on Cassio; a second time Othello's resolve declared. The Scene ends, a change follows; Desdemona asleep alone,—a light,—Othello enters. His solemn, judicial bearing! Thus the murder and its relation to both parties make a much deeper impression because we are not terrified, and for the same reason the effect is much more artistic and softened. And further, there is a retarding, alleviating element in Desdemona's repose of character. Thus we have the deed itself, without any of the repulsive accidents which such a deed would have in reality. The poet who knows how to treat it so humanly may well venture to deal with the most terrible subjects.

(P. 119.) Fatalism in Tragedy.—In tragedies of character and of passion there is always something fatalistic. We may always say: To such and such, this or that ought not to have happened. The mingle of freedom and necessity which is in our thinking, in our desires, and in our action, exists also in our fate. The best part of poetic impression, of the tragic, lies in the feeling of this insoluble mixture. We may see the necessity of consequences, but not of causes. That there may be such a man in such circumstances, this we see, but not why he is such as he is nor why he is placed in such circumstances.

(P. 121.) In every character of every play of Shakespeare's the punishment is in proportion to the wrong-doing. How mild is the punishment of Desdemona, of Cordelia for a slight wrong; how fearful that of Macbeth,—every moment from the commission of his crime to his death, he suffers more than all the suffering of these two women. His deliberate crime belongs to the cold passions; as the deed is done with forethought and in cold blood, so it is avenged by the long-continued tortures of conscience.

(P. 127.) How wonderfully is the Motive of the play devised in the First Act of Othello! The whole movement is so conducted as to show us the fuel which lies in the characters themselves, and in the circumstances of the marriage. And what wealth of causes or motives for jealousy is made to appear in the course of the remaining Acts. True it is that at the first seeing or reading of the play, the corporeal life of the action obscures the force and number of the motives; but the oftener and the more connectedly the tragedy is seen or read, so much the more convincing they become. Herein lies the warrant for the immortality of this work of Shakespeare's. The other plays, the oftener they are read, lose their probability and necessity; but this play gains in these respects upon a more intimate acquaintance. We here may learn, First: The art of devising motives. For even from what has happened before the play opens, as well as from what happens in the First Act, we know the reason why, and also the story how. Second: We learn construction of the dialogue, whereby the motives hinted at become possible. The dialogue is natural, unforced; everything tending to betray the intention is avoided.—What completeness! Through the lively, impressive movement, through the ideality of the characters, through the abounding dicta of experience, through sympathy with Iago's savoir faire and superior intellect, through his expectant tone, and through the purposes which he betrays, how perfectly are the senses, the heart, and the understanding engrossed and kept busy! Into what a free, poetic region is the ordinary stuff for tragedy elevated by the imposing background of Venice! What a theatre-setting for all the characters! What sharply-drawn forms, rendered all the sharper by contrast! How richly is a simple story transfigured! The whole First Act might have been compressed into one Scene. A few questions and answers might have served to tell the whole story. But if the purpose was to model and mould his characters to render a sufficing motive for the whole, past, present, and future, then three Scenes had to be made out of one. And from the way in which he has carried them out, there is no desire on the part of the spectator to have them compressed. I perceive ever more plainly that Shakespeare's form for the most perfect tragedy is indispensable; that it is no license, but a law. How much of real, corporeal life, how much of the relationship between Othello and Iago Brabantio and Roderigo, would have been lost by the concentration of these three Scenes into one! What a scenic measure would there have been created thereby, from which the succeeding Acts would have suffered! By the way, how wise it is in Shakespeare not to let Othello alone go blindly into Iago's snares; that all are equally ready to be deceived by him makes Othello's confidence in him not only probable, but even excusable. Othello thereby loses the look of folly which would otherwise have been the case. Everything here is merely an unfolding of the plot by means of the action. All the distracted life, the rousing of Brabantio, his search for Othello, their meeting,—all these are nothing but helps to give a living exposition of the preface to the story of the character and utter unnaturalness of this mesalliance, and of whatever can serve to awaken jealousy.—The characters and incidents are taken out of the sphere of ordinary reality. Whatever in and of them is not exclusively related to the object of the action represented, whatever is not a necessary member thereof, is entirely stripped away. This it is which Lessing terms the simplification of the stuff, by which the dramatic action is made to serve the ideal. Thus the action stands like a group in sculpture, everywhere transparent and rounded, not merely in relief or only half free. In Othello, Shakespeare, more than elsewhere, gives us an epitome of Nature, a symbol of the laws that rule the course of the world; the science of jealousy, its natural history illustrated by concrete example. But it is only one kind of jealousy, the noblest, born not of the offended senses, but of wounded honour; so to speak, moral, spiritual jealousy.*

FRIEDERICH BODENSTEDT (Jahrbuch d. deutschen Sh. Gesellschaft, 1867, p. 258): 'That Desdemona left her father for the Moor involves no crime,' says Vischer. 'The foolish, irascible man deserves no better. Her love for her father and her love for her husband were not to be reconciled.' This opinion appears to me to be more bold than correct. Let us come to an understanding by taking into consideration this act with its immediate consequences. A tenderly beloved daughter breaks the heart of her father by a secret marriage, without having even made the attempt to obtain his consent. She forsakes the old man, whom she has sorely wounded, without one tender word; deprecates his displeasure without imploring his blessing. She speaks to him not as a child to a father, but like an advocate addressing his reason, not appealing to his heart; or, like a debtor settling with his creditors,—so much is due to one, so much to another, and so much to a third.

If such an attitude of a child to a father, whose whole heart is bound up in that child, involves no fault, then this word has lost its meaning. I am sure that here, as in Lear, it was the earnest purpose of Shakespeare to represent a serious wrong done by a child to a father, and that the popular feeling, to which Vischer himself, in another place as well as in this instance, appeals, will find Desdemona guilty. Her sin lies not in the fact that she loves the Moor, and for love of him forsakes her father, but that in this, the most critical step in her life, she has no consideration for her father, but justifies herself in terms as rude as if he were to her the most indifferent person in the world. She insists as coolly upon her right as Shylock upon his bond. We can readily imagine that Desdemona knew that it was impossible to obtain her proud father's consent. We can suppose, also, that Othello, in order to avoid the humiliation of a rejection, encouraged her in secretly consummating her hastily formed determination; but nothing of this kind appears in the text, and it is just the care which the Poet takes to avoid every hint in this direction that shows, in the plainest manner possible, his intention to emphasize in the sharpest way Desdemona's lack of filial affection. . . . It is this lack of filial piety, as well as the fact that Desdemona, having grown up without a mother's tender care and without brother or sister, had early learned to depend upon herself, that explains her indifference to the opinion of the world, the marked self-dependence of her character, and the unbending determination with which, in the weightiest step of her life, she takes counsel only of her own heart. In a city where wealth and luxury flourished in their fullest bloom there is such a lack of able men that the lead in war is given to an adventurer, to a Moor,—this it is that wins her heart. She is light, airy, like a sunny May day; he is black and ugly as an overclouded day in autumn, and, withal, so little blinded to his own repulsive exterior that he never would have ventured to woo Desdemona had not she made advances towards him. She is touched by his lofty, manly qualities, by his frank, noble character. . . . The noblest impulses have brought together two pure hearts; we feel that they are worthy each of the other, and yet we cannot, from the first, evade the fear, that presses involuntarily upon us, of the consequences of this union. We see before us perfect womanhood in the most graceful shape, and perfect manhood in a form most repulsive; and it is as if day and night came together; the two cannot unite!

* These notes of LUDWIG are to me always interesting (whether I agree with them or not is another matter), as the memoranda and jottings for his own use of a professional dramatist, who was considered one of the most promising of recent times in Germany. Their occasional obscurity and fragmentary style are doubtless due to the fact that their publication was, unfortunately, posthumous.—ED.

This remark seems to lead us away from the tragic motive of the play which we have indicated above; but, in reality, it only results therefrom, pointing back to it as its source. For what else is it than a sorrowful conviction that from such a singular union,—a union so unnatural that in the eyes of Brabantio, no happiness could come to his daughter,—what but this feeling caused his opposition, and broke his heart when the union became unalterable? A large share of wounded pride and indignant pain at the disregard shown for his paternal authority may be taken into account, but the essential thing with him is to be found in his concern for his child. And so long as family ties are held sacred, Desdemona will be held guilty towards her father by every healthy mind. Without keeping in mind this wrong, in which Othello shares, done by the heroine, otherwise so lovely, the drama loses its sacredly tragic character, and degenerates into a mere intrigue. For that such a finished villain as Iago should destroy the happiness of two such excellent persons as Othello and Desdemona, without at the same time, consciously or unconsciously, serving higher purposes, can make an impression which is only sorrowful, not tragic. It is otherwise when we take things as they are and keep strictly to the Poet's own words, putting nothing into the play, but explaining everything by what is in it. Then Desdemona's tragic fate affects us because we see that she is the fate herself which prepares the soil whereon Iago sows the seed of his deadly mischief. She voluntarily exchanges the peace of her father's house for the stormy life which she must see before her as the wife of Othello. She is fully aware of the fatal meaning of the step she takes, and is so little forced to it that she bids defiance to the whole world in taking it. She breaks her father's heart to follow her own heart. She takes upon herself the whole responsibility and all the consequences of her act. After such a beginning no healthy temperament can look for a happy ending.

(P. 264.) It is touching now to see how the love, which brings them together, unfolds ever more nobly the farther apart they are sundered by an unhappy fate. One would suffer like them to be so beloved! A moment of such love outweighs the longest ordinary life. Herein is to be found that inner spiritual compensation for the bitter tragedy of their outward life.

(Einleitung zu der Uebersetzung des Othello, p. vii): Commentators have considered it cruel in Shakespeare to permit two such thoroughly noble natures as Othello and Desdemona to be the victims of such a wretch as Iago. Whoever fails to understand in Shakespeare's tragic characters the relation between sin and punishment, may regard the former, in this case, light in comparison with the latter; for with the Poet the wrongdoing is not always a crime, popularly considered, but often a mere lack of prudence or thoughtfulness, or the predominance of feeling over prudence and reason. So also with him death is not always to be taken as a punishment, but often as a release from a blasted life or as a rescue from an unhappy future.

WILHELM OECHELHÄUSER (Othello, für die deutsche Bühne bearbeitet, Weimar 1876. Einleitung, p. 13): Othello is above all things hero and warrior. Before Desdemona's charms had kindled the flame of love in his heart, warlike exploits, battles, and adventures, were the element in which he lived. The African retired into the background behind his position in the military service of the Christian Republic of Venice, to which he was devoted body and soul; to have vindicated the honor of which was his last proud recollection before death. When, therefore, actors, as many do, seek to give to the personation a dash of Muli Hassan, and to make the African blood of Othello a prominent quality, it is an error, mere clap-trap. Only in the Third and in the beginning of the Fourth Act, where Iago with cynical calculation speculates upon the warmth of his senses, the southern passion of Othello may be, somewhat beyond our European limits, moderately personated. For the rest, he who forgets his paint represents Othello best. It is not the design of the tragedy to illustrate the Moorish character; every European of like quality would, in like circumstances, do just as Othello did. It is not the peculiar jealousy of a Moor, but jealousy in a character little disposed to it, that the poet depicts. He did not make Othello a Moor (or, as Schlegel thinks, he mistook the Saracen of novels for a Moor) in order to mark the representation of him with the stamp of his race. He had a far deeper ethical aim, namely, to contrast the greatness of Othello's character with the ideal purity of Desdemona's love.

Othello, then, should be personated not with the bizarre hastiness and vivacity of the African, but with the quiet, nay aristocratic bearing of the hero, of the mature man of high position, who has 'declined into the vale of years.' Such is the manner in which he presents himself before us in the beginning of the piece; the dignity and repose with which he confronts the enraged father, the manly self-consciousness, and the noble modesty and simplicity which mark his story of his love, reveal to us the essential qualities of his character. In Othello there is no trace of the parvenu, who feels himself uncertain of the high position which he has reached, alternating between bullying and cringing, as is often witnessed in real life. He is conscious of his royal descent and of his services, and with just pride takes for granted their silent recognition, without any thought of forcing it by boasting and importunity.

(P. 20.) The direct opposite to the part of Othello must stand boldly out in the thoroughly plebeian bearing of Iago. Othello is an aristocrat and a gentleman; Iago, from crown to sole, a plebeian, no trim, knightly villain like Edmund. His vulgar bearing, with which his dress even should be in accord, must be represented as auxiliary to his cunning. Herein is the point where most personators of Iago entirely fail,—the like is most frequently the case in the personation of Richard III,—namely, in the skilful wearing of the mask of an honest man. . . . A plebeian, countrified behaviour, a homely, careless dress, a tone, now of broad cynicism and soldierly jest, and then of honesty, of fellow-feeling, of unselfish friendship (a masterpiece in this respect is the great Act III, Scene iii) must illustrate the personation of this rôle. Admirably does he hit the right tone for every person and every situation; the keenest knowledge of men underlies his diabolical speculations on the weakness of every individual. His long and frequent dialogues with Roderigo show us an original nuance of his ordinary bearing. To all others he is always on the qui vive; only with this gull has he an easier task. He ill-treats and plucks this pigeon with the keenest humour, as if to refresh himself, all in the tone of the consideration of a well-meaning older friend. Humour and sarcasm form the salient qualities of his character; he takes thorough delight in his devil's work, which breaks out in his humour.

(P. 11.) Iago is to be represented as at least of the same age as Othello,—that is, as of ripe manhood.

(P. 26.) Generally speaking, too little attention is paid to the part of Emilia, the wife of the infamous Ensign. Most of the adaptations for the stage omit too large a portion of her rôle; and stage managers assign it to inferior talent, as if any soubrette of the theatre were equal to it. The important part which Emilia takes in the catastrophe, her touching devotion to her mistress, the moral courage with which she confronts the deluded Moor and her guilty husband, should indicate that here is work for a skilful and gifted artist. Emilia, in the drama, is in the position of a servant; in Cinthio's novel she appears more as a friend. On the stage she should be represented in a character between the two, as this finds its justification in Italian manners at that period. Her notions of conjugal fidelity, as she airs them in the last Scene of the Fourth Act, are of no account, and stand in sharpest contrast with the ideal which her infinitely finer natured mistress has of the marital relations. But nowhere is there found any ground for supposing, as Schlegel does, that Emilia's practice was in accordance with her loose talk. Cinthio in the novel calls her 'a beautiful and honourable person.' How often do women talk in a light-minded fashion, which authorizes no unfavourable inferences as to their actual characters.

In her whole conduct Emilia is chargeable with only one fatal weakness: obtaining at her husband's wish the lost handkerchief upon which hangs such a fearful tragedy. She certainly had no suspicion of the evil purpose of Iago, to whom she stands in a relation of cold indifference. Putting this one error out of sight, she is the faithful, devoted servant and friend of Desdemona, the unterrified asserter of her innocence, even when she is threatened with death; first by the Moor, and then by her husband, showing therein great moral courage. Her position in the last Scene can be made of commanding importance.—Emilia is to be represented as young, but certainly older than Desdemona.

HERM. FREIH. VON FRIESEN (Shakspeare-Studien, Wien, 1876, iii, 132): In connection with the character of Othello, composed as it is of so many elements, there comes the question whether this drama, in opposition to the other works of Shakspeare, is to be regarded as illustrative of character or of intrigue. It must be granted that if the fate of Othello and Desdemona is determined by Iago's intrigues, then the essential element of a tragedy,—namely, the tragic fault of the sufferers,—is wanting, and the Poet is exposed to an undeniable reproach. Apparently, the predominance of intrigue over the whole development of the action of the play is not to be questioned. We must, first of all, agree as to what is to be understood by intrigue, if it is to be rejected as a motive power to a tragic result. Under all circumstances it is indispensable that, in a true tragedy, the person in whom the interest centres must be led to his fate without loss of his free will and choice. Certainly, then, the voluntary and deliberate proceedings of one or more persons, by which another individual is deprived of his freedom of thought and action, and is thereby doomed to destruction, excludes the tragic fault. But it does not follow that in tragedy the cunning, lies, and plots of one individual practised upon another are not to be introduced. Only the influence of these must be so related to the character of the person suffering under it that he shall be driven to his fate, not irresistibly, but only through the passion which has already shaken his freedom to the utmost, so that in truth he yields only to the impulse of his own will.

This being premised in regard to Iago's influence upon the fate of Othello, no one will be disposed to deny the power of Iago. Yet there is still the question whether the criminality of the intrigue and its fatal effect rests only upon Iago, or whether the actual ground of this effect lies not in Othello's personal character. (P. 135.) Notwithstanding the righteous indignation with which we regard Iago, upon Othello's head falls the chief fault. The right to lay it to his account begins in the natural qualities of his character, and gains in weight, by the circumstances just mentioned, from the wonderful, or at least unusual, excitement of his mind. As in all Shakspeare's creations, we cannot help confessing that such an individuality as Othello's,—not only endowed with the most distinguished gifts, but having qualities and ways of thought even antagonistic,—that such a character, and such a character alone, would lie open to the diabolical influence of Iago. All so happens as to remind us, step by step, that for any other to ward off Iago's assaults would have been easy; and if, full of sympathy for Othello and full of indignation at Iago, we are blind to this possibility, and seem to see Othello helplessly entangled in the net which Iago weaves, the reason of it is in the impression which the finished work of the Poet makes on us, in the brilliancy of Othello's speeches, in the poetic force of the emotions which gush involuntarily from within him, contrasted with the coarse hints of Iago, sounding, as it were, from the nether world. While the former delights us and the latter stirs our indignation, we take sides and pardonably overlook the Poet's hint that, although Othello is caught in an almost inextricable net, he has not lost his freedom. With what skill does the Poet use, among other circumstances, everything which he found in the novel! In the novel, Cassio steals away from Othello's sight when he knocks secretly at the back door of the house to return the handkerchief to Desdemona, which is sufficient to increase the jealousy of Othello after it has already been awakened by Iago. In the drama (III, iii) his withdrawal from Desdemona's presence at the appearance of Othello is suspicious, and only on this account affords Iago a circumstance for the first step in his plot because the mind of the Moor is in a state of intense excitement. Furthermore, how narrowly Othello escaped hearing what Iago and Cassio are talking about (IV, i). A word that he might have caught would have been enough to convince him of Iago's treachery. Even the way in which the fatal handkerchief makes its appearance is, in the drama, with fine poetic instinct, entirely different from that of the novel. In the novel, a counterfeit of it is shown to Othello through a window. Thus, Othello was not at all in a position to penetrate the deception, while here he has only to demand an explanation to rend the whole plot to pieces. Equally ingenious is it that the handkerchief in the drama is lost through Othello's and Desdemona's carelessness; while in the novel, Iago gets possession of it by cunning. The whole development of the tragic result hangs upon the finest threads. And here it is especially that the connection of Iago's relation to Roderigo appears of the greatest significance. That in the first examination of Cassio the inquiry into the disturbance does not extend to the question who the man was whom Cassio had beaten, and what cause he had given therefor, is a circumstance only possible from Othello's unsuspecting disposition; while, had the inquiry been pushed that far, Iago's villainy would have been laid bare at the outset. In what danger Iago was in this respect we can surmise when Roderigo (IV, ii), in his distrust of Iago, threatens to go directly to Desdemona. A spark of this distrust in the soul of Othello would have saved him and Desdemona. The struggle of Othello before the murder is at once most significant and most touching. Throughout, the tragic event tends to a catastrophe which results not from accident or the overpowering force of another person, but only from a destiny originating in the inmost nature of the individual. To the very last moment of this fearful scene the threads are not severed by which Othello and Desdemona might be saved. This possibility, presented before our eyes with masterly power, is what moves us most painfully with mingled emotions of fear and sympathy. Let the calm judgement of the spectator be blinded and overcome by the powerful tones which the Poet draws forth from the instrument of his genius; I yet venture to maintain that the catastrophe finds its necessity in the nature of Othello. Even if the demoniac power of Iago drove him to the fatal act, the ground therefor lies only in Othello's personal nature and disposition. In the freedom with which the Poet changes the catastrophe as it is in the novel, we have an unquestionable proof of his poetic art in this direction.

O. F. GENSICHEN (Studienblätter, Berlin, 1881, p. 67): In the last Act, after the heart-breaking scene in which the whole fabric of her happiness falls in ruins before her, Desdemona can with the guileless innocence of a child,—fall asleep.

Wonderful, indeed, appears this sleep. No reconciling word between herself and Othello has been spoken; she knows that Othello will appear again in a moment, that he wishes to speak with her alone, and for that reason Emilia is dismissed. His coming must explain the terrible change that came over him,—why his love and reverence have been turned into contempt and rage. Desdemona, whose perfect devotion finds that even the stubbornness, the checks, the frowns of her husband 'have grace and favour,' must await with the most painful impatience this critical interview; what rest could she find before peace was restored between her and Othello? And yet she can fall asleep, and so profound is her slumber that she is disturbed neither by the tumult in the street nor by the entrance of Othello into her chamber. Even his kisses fail to awaken her.

Here we see the contrast between her genuine woman's nature and the full man's nature in Othello. His 'bloody passion shakes his very frame,' his 'eye rolls,' he 'gnaws his nether lip'; Desdemona peacefully sleeps, and awakes to receive him with, 'Will you come to bed, my lord?' instead of seeking to deliver him from his unworthy suspicions. Here, too, we find that lovely freedom from care which, in the consciousness of her purity, takes not upon itself the trouble of considering the individual difference of temperament. And it is just this point which renders intelligible the possibility of a rupture of her relation to Othello.

[In their zealous and praiseworthy pursuit of 'the tragic fault' which shall, by referring all our misfortunes to our own misdeeds, harmonize Shakespeare's tragedies with human life, some of our German brothers are inclined to push the search to its remotest bounds. Thus GENSICHEN finds that the tragic termination of Othello's wedded life might have been avoided had he only kept up such observances as fit the bridal. 'Had Othello retained a trace,' he says (p. 83), 'of the gallantry of a lover, he would have picked up the handkerchief which Desdemona let fall when she tenderly wished to bind it round his forehead. It was through this neglect of a courteous act that Othello himself provided Iago with the weightiest proof of his wife's infidelity.'—ED.]

HEINRICH BULTHAUPT (Dramaturgie der Classiker, Oldenburg, 1883, p. 222): A villainous knavery, a combination of accidents, is Desdemona's ruin. Her horrible and unmerited end excites the most painful emotion. Cordelia's moral elevation, her nature,—which, notwithstanding her womanly tenderness, so far from shrinking from the conflict with life, advances to meet it,—stands in a much more intimate relation to the dark powers of Fate than this fine, sensuous character of Desdemona, made, as she is, for the fullest enjoyment of life. Cordelia's death affects us tragically. Desdemona's is simply horrible. Can any one who is not infatuated take, with Otto Ludwig, a different view? Can it be seriously maintained that sin and punishment are, in her case, skilfully proportioned, and that her punishment for no heinous fault was 'mild'? Mild,—this horrible death? Granting that mere physical destruction by murder amounts to nothing, but, for this young creature, who is pure love, pure devotion, can anything be more terrible than to find herself treated as a harlot, and to be deliberately strangled by the hands of that man for whom she had sacrificed everything? In her last moments, from her awaking to her death, did not a whole hell yawn before her? How is it possible to misunderstand this awful martyrdom! The very circumstance that there is no proportion between her fate and her fault affects us only the more profoundly. This unmerited suffering ennobles her, creates the deepest sympathy, and wins every heart. We forget every error that, in the thoughtlessness of youth, she may have committed. We can only bend the knee before her. Her loveliness, like a saint's, is transfigured by her tears, by her death. From the same source from which has come all that she has done, or left undone, comes her last word, 'Farewell! Commend me to my kind lord.' Her kind lord! Him who has murdered her! This unconquerable love, to my feeling, is apparent in a slight, thoroughly Shakespearian touch, than which nothing can be more beautiful. When the Willow Song of poor Barbara occurs to her, when her heart is full to overflowing of suffering, she suddenly remarks, apparently without connection, 'Lodovico is a proper man.' The whole scene of her ill-treatment at the hand of her husband, the coming of her relative, like a true knight, to her defence,—all is present to her again and to us. But she will not complain of her loved husband, who has done the worst to her, who has struck her. She thinks, as the memory of the bitter scene fills her mind with grief and her eyes with tears, only of him who had so kindly taken her part, 'He is a proper man!' 'And he speaks well!' she adds.

FRENCH CRITICISMS.

IN Zaïre, VOLTAIRE imitated the ground-plan of Othello; that is, Othello's Oriental blood was repeated in Orosmane, the Soldan of Jerusalem, for the handkerchief was substituted an intercepted letter whose innocent contents were misinterpreted; Zaïre dies by the hands of Orosmane, who in turn kills himself. For a full comparison of these two tragedies, I must refer all who are interested to that admirable Mémoire, 'couronné au Concours institué par le Gouvernement Belge entre les Universités du Royaume,' Histoire de l'Influence de Shakespeare sur le Théâtre Français, par ALBERT LACROIX, Bruxelles, 1856, pp. 53-70; or to GUIZOT's comparison in the Preface to his translation of Othello. See also the Introductions to the admirable editions of Othello, edited for schools, by GÉRARD, and D'HUGUES, in 1883, and by MOREL in 1884.—ED.

J. F. DUCIS (Othello. Représenté pour la première fois en 1792. Avertissement.) La tragédie d'Othello est une des plus touchantes et des plus terribles productions dramatiques qu'ait enfantées le génie vraiment créateur de ce grand homme. L'excitable caractère de Jago y est exprimé surtout avec une vigueur de pinceau extraordinaire. Avec quelle souplesse effrayante, sous combien de formes trompeuses, ce serpent caresse et séduit le généreux et trop confiant Othello! Comme il l'infecte de tous ses poisons! comme il l'enveloppe de tous ses replis! enfin, comme il le serre, comme il l'étouffe et le déchire dans sa rage! Je suis bien persuadé que si les Anglais peuvent observer tranquillement les manœuvres d'un pareil monstre sur la scène, les Français ne pourraient jamais un moment y souffrir sa présence, encore moins l'y voir développer toute l'étendue et toute la profondeur de sa scélératesse. C'est ce qui m'a engagé à ne faire connaître le personnage qui le remplace si faiblement dans ma pièce, que tout à la fin du dénouement, lorsque le malheur d'Othello est consommé par la mort de la plus fidèle, de la plus tendre amante, qu'il vient d'immoler aux aveugles transports de sa jalousie. Je me suis bien gardé de le faire paraître du moment qu'il est connu, du moment que je révéla au public le secret affreux de son caractère. Je n'ai pas manqué non plus, dès que je l'ai pu, dans un court récit, d'instruire ce même public de sa punition, de sa mort cruelle dans les tortures. J'ai pensé même que si le spectateur avait pu, dans le cours de la tragédie, le soupçonner seulement, au travers de son masque, d'être le plus scélérat des hommes, puisqu'il est le plus perfide des amis, c'en était fait du sort de tout l'ouvrage, et que l'impression prédominante d'horreur qu'il eût inspirée aurait certainement amorti l'intérêt et la compassion que je voulais appeler sur l'amante d'Othello et sur ce brave et malheureux Africain. Aussi est-ce avec une intention très-déterminée que j'ai caché soigneusement à mes spectateurs ce caractère atroce, pour ne pas les révolter.

Quant à la couleur d'Othello, j'ai cru pouvoir me dispenser de lui donner un visage noir, en m'écartant sur ce point de l'usage du théâtre de Londres. J'ai pensé que le teint jaune et cuivré, pouvant d'ailleurs convenir aussi à un Africain, aurait l'avantage de ne point révolter l'œil du public, et surtout celui des femmes, et que cette couleur leur permettrait bien mieux de jouir de ce qu'il y a de plus délicieux au théâtre, c'est-à-dire de tout le charme que la force, la variété et le jeu des passions répandent sur le visage mobile et animé d'un jeune acteur, bouillant, sensible et enivré de jalousie et d'amour. . . .

J'ai maintenant à parler de mon dénoûment. Jamais impression ne fut plus terrible. Toute l'assemblée se leva, et ne poussa qu'un cri. Plusieurs femmes s'évanouirent. On eût dit que le poignard dont Othello venait de frapper son amante était entré dans tous les cœurs. Mais aux applaudissemens que l'on continuait de donner à l'ouvrage se mêlaient des improbations, des murmures, et enfin même une espèce de soulèvement. J'ai cru un moment que la toile allait se baisser. D'où pouvait naître une impression si extraordinaire, une agitation si tumultueuse? Me tromperais-je, en croyant qu'elle venait de l'extrême intérêt que j'avais inspiré pour Hédelmone [Desdemona]; de ce que mon spectateur avait désiré trop passionnément qu'elle pût désabuser Othello de son erreur; de ce que je l'avais tenu trop long-temps dans les angoisses de la terreur et de l'espérance; de ce que son désir, trompé au moment du coup de poignard, s'était tourné en une sorte de désespoir, et avait révolté sa douleur même contre l'auteur de l'ouvrage?

Comment se fait-il cependant que le public, après avoir eu tant de peine à me pardonner mon dénoûment, soit revenu le voir encore pendant le cours de douze représentations? Ne serait-ce pas qu'il a été averti par la réflexion qu' Othello n'est point un homme féroce, mais un amant égaré, un Africain jaloux, un More, qui frappe ce qu'il a de plus cher, et qui ne survivra pas à sa victime? Ne serait-ce pas qu'il a senti par instinct que les naturels les plus tendres et les plus sensibles, une fois poussés dans les excès, sont quelquefois les plus près de la barbarie, par la raison peut-être qu'ils en étaient les plus éloignés?

Cependant quoique le public ait le droit, sous tous les climats, de tracer aux auteurs les limites de la terreur et de la pitié, ces limites pourtant sont plus ou moins reculées selon le caractère des différentes nations. Mon dénoûment a eu de la peine à passer à Paris; et à Londres, les Anglais soutiennent très-bien celui de Shakespeare. Ce n'est point avec un poignard qu' Othello, sur leur théâtre, immole son innocente victime; il lui presse, dans son lit, et avec force, un oreiller sur la bouche, il le presse et le represse encore jusqu'à ce qu'elle expire. Voilà ce que des spectateurs français ne pourraient jamais supporter. Un poète tragique est donc obligé de se conformer au caractère de la nation devant laquelle il fait représenter ses ouvrages. C'est une vérité incontestable, puisque son principal but est de lui plaire. Aussi, pour satisfaire plusieurs de mes spectateurs, qui ont trouvé dans mon dénoûment le poids de la pitié et de la terreur excessif et trop pénible, ai-je profité de la disposition de ma pièce, qui me rendait ce changement très-facile, pour substituer un dénoûment heureux à celui qui les avait blessés; quoique le premier me paraisse toujours convenir beaucoup plus à la nature et à la moralité du sujet, et que je l'aie eu sans cesse en vue, comme il est facile de le remarquer dès le commencement et dans le cours de ma tragédie. Mais comme je l'ai fait imprimer avec les deux dénoûmens, les directeurs des théâtres seront les maîtres de choisir celui qu'il leur conviendra d'adopter.

[I think the limit of tolerance is reached in thus listening to Ducis himself. It is easy to be severe, and it is easier still to make fun. But we must remember that he lived in an age when the versions of Shakespeare which held the English stage were more discreditable to the taste of the English public than Ducis's versions to the taste of the admirers of Racine and Corneille. The name of Othello is the only one which Ducis retained among his Dramatis Personæ, which are as follows: Moncénigo, doge de Venise. Lorédan, fils de Moncénigo. Odalbert, sénateur vénitien. Hédelmone, fille d'Odalbert. Hermance, nourrice d'Hédelmone. Othello, général des troupes vénitiennes. Pèzare, Vénitien. La scène est à Venise.—Ed.]

GUIZOT, in the Notice sur Othello, which precedes his Translation, after speaking of the vivifying effect of Shakespeare's genius on the dry bones of Cinthio's novel, thus proceeds: Ainsi crée le poète, et tel est le génie poétique. Les événements, les situations même ne sont pas ce qui lui importe, ce qu'il se complait à inventer: sa puissance veut s'exercer autrement que dans la recherche d'incidents plus ou moins singuliers, d'aventures plus ou moins touchantes; c'est par la création de l'homme lui-même qu'elle se manifeste; et quand elle crée l'homme, elle le crée complet, armé de toutes pièces, tel qu'il doit être pour suffire à toutes les vicissitudes de la vie, et offrir en tous sens l'aspect de la réalité. Othello est bien autre chose qu'un mari jaloux et aveuglé, et que la jalousie pousse au meurtre; ce n'est là que sa situation pendant la pièce, et son caractère va fort au delà de sa situation. Le More brûlé du soleil, au sang ardent, à l'imagination vive et brutale, crédule par la violence de son tempérament aussi bien que par celle de sa passion; le soldat parvenu, fier de sa fortune, et de sa gloire, respectueux et soumis devant le pouvoir de qui il tient son rang, n'oubliant jamais, dans les transports de l'amour, les devoirs de la guerre, et regrettant avec amertume les joies de la guerre quand il perd tout le bonheur de l'amour; l'homme dont la vie a été dure, agitée, pour qui des plaisirs doux et tendres sont quelque chose de nouveau qui l'étonne en le charmant, et qui ne lui donne pas le sentiment de la sécurité, bien que son caractère soit plein de générosité et de confiance; Othello enfin, peint non-seulement dans les portions de lui-même qui sont en rapport présent et direct avec la situation accidentelle où il est placé, mais dans toute l'étendue de sa nature et tel que l'a fait l'ensemble de sa destinée; c'est là ce que Shakespeare nous fait voir. De même Iago n'est pas simplement un ennemi irrité et qui veut se venger, ou un scélérat ordinaire qui veut détruire un bonheur dont l'aspect l'importune; c'est un scélérat cynique et raisonneur, qui de l'égoïsme s'est fait une philosophie, et du crime une science; qui ne voit dans les hommes que des instruments ou des obstacles à ses intérêts personnels; qui méprise la vertu comme une absurdité et cependant la hait comme une injure; qui conserve, dans la conduite la plus servile, toute l'indépendance de sa pensée, et qui, au moment où ses crimes vont lui coûter la vie, jouit encore, avec un orgueil féroce, du mal qu'il a fait, comme d'une preuve de sa supériorité.

Qu'on appelle l'un après l'autre tous les personnages de la tragédie, depuis ses héros jusqu'aux moins considérables, Desdemona, Cassio, Emilia, Bianca; on les verra par ailleurs, non sous des apparences vagues, et avec les seuls traits qui correspondent à leur situation dramatique, mais avec des formes précises, complètes, et tout ce qui constitue la personnalité. Cassio n'est point là simplement pour devenir l'objet de la jalousie d'Othello, et comme une nécessité du drame, il a son caractère, ses penchants, ses qualités, ses défauts; et de là découle naturellement l'influence qu'il exerce sur ce qui arrive. Emilia n'est point une suivante employée par le poète comme instrument soit du nœud, soit de la découverte des perfidies qui amènent la catastrophe; elle est la femme de Iago qu'elle n'aime point, et à qui cependant elle obéit parce qu'elle le craint et quoiqu'elle s'en méfie; elle a même contracté, dans la société de cet homme, quelque chose de l'immoralité de son esprit; rien n'est pur dans ses pensées ni dans ses paroles; cependant elle est bonne, attachée à sa maîtresse; elle déteste le mal et la noirceur. Bianca elle-même a sa physionomie tout à fait indépendante du petit rôle qu'elle joue dans l'action. Oubliez les événements, sortez du drame; tous ces personnages demeureront réels, animés, distincts; ils sont vivants par eux-mêmes; leur existence ne s'évanouira point avec leur situation. C'est en eux que s'est déployé le pouvoir créateur du poète, et les faits ne sont, pour lui, que le théâtre sur lequel il leur ordonne de monter.'

It was with a translation of Othello that, over fifty years ago, in 1829, Le Comte ALFRED DE VIGNY undertook to break the Academic chains which enfeathered the French drama. His struggle and final triumph, aided by VICTOR HUGO, ÉMILE DESCHAMPS, LE DUC DE BROGLIE, CHARLES NODIER, BÉRANGER, and others, form an exceedingly instructive and interesting chapter in the History of the French Stage, but which scarcely comes within the scope of the present work. All that I can do here, is again to refer the student to LACROIX's admirable Mémoire, p. 292 et seq.; and to quote from De Vigny's Preface the terms of the problem which he submitted to the French public, from which an idea may be formed of the plan of the whole campaign.

‘Or, voici le fond de ce que j’avais à dire aux intelligences, le 24 octobre. 1820.

“Une simple question est à résoudre. La voici :

“La scène française s’ouvrira-t-elle, ou non, à une tragédie moderne produisant :—dans sa conception, un tableau large de la vie, au lieu du tableau resserré de la catastrophe d’une intrigue;—dans sa composition, des caractères, non des rôles, des scènes paisibles sans drame, mêlées à des scènes comiques et tragiques;—dans son exécution, un style familier, comique, tragique, et parfois épique?”’

It is not difficult to see what the result must have been when Othello was brought forward as an answer to these questions. Our Gallic brothers are not stocks and stones, and the contest was as short as it was sharp. Academic frigidity melted under the rays of a warmth which, springing from Nature, was directed by Art, Shakespeare's art, the finest the world has known.

In the following January, in 1830, an Article appeared in the Revue française by M. le duc DE BROGLIE, which I should like to transfer bodily to these pages. I admire it for its style, its boldness, its liberality, its admiration of Shakespeare even while confessing a fidelity to certain convictions which are opposed to Shakespeare. Herewith are passages which we cannot afford to overlook :

Le Théâtre Français s'est rendu, faute d'avoir été secouru à propos et ravitaillé en temps opportun. Dans la soirée du 25 octobre dernier, Attila-Shakespeare en a pris possession avec armes et bagages, enseignes déployées, au fracas de mille fanfares. Pauvres poètes de la vieille roche, qu'allez-vous devenir ? Il ne reste plus aux âmes faibles qu'à se rendre, à sacrifier sur l'autel des faux dieux, et aux vrais croyants qu'à s'envelopper la tête de leur manteau.

Plaisanterie à part, la révolution qui s'opère depuis quelque temps dans le goût du public est un phénomène curieux et singulièrement digne d'attention. Jamais plus notable changement ne s'est prononcé avec plus d'éclat et de rapidité.

(P. 53.) Que cet homme [Shakespeare] est un étonnant peintre de la nature humaine ! combien il est vrai qu'il a reçu d'en haut quelque chose de cette puissance créatrice qui souffle sur un peu de poussière, et qui l'anime pour la vie et l'éternité !

Dans l'entrevue avec Brabantio, Othello ne prononce pas quinze vers ; devant le sénat, Desdémona n'en profère pas vingt ; et pourtant déjà Othello existe tout entier, Desdémona existe tout entière ; ils sont là, l'un et l'autre, vivant sous nos yeux, se déployant sans contrainte, dans toute la grâce et la singularité de leur caractère, dans toute leur individualité naïve et impérissable. Supprimez le reste de la pièce, vous n'effacerez de notre mémoire ni Desdémona ni Othello ; placez-les à plaisir dans un autre ordre de circonstances ; allez, évertuez-vous : mais ne vous trompez pas, car nous les connaissons, nous savons d'avance ce qu'ils peuvent dire ou faire.

Et pourtant, dans ces caractères, que de complexité, que de contrastes, que de finesse et de nuances !

(P. 57.) Figurez-vous un homme qui n'aurait vécu depuis longtemps qu'à la clarté des bougies, des lampions ou des verres de couleur, qui n'aurait vu que des cascades d'opéra, des montagnes de toile peinte et des guirlandes de fleurs artificielles, et qui se trouverait transporté tout-à-coup, par une magnifique matinée du mois de juillet, au souffle de l'air le plus pur, sous les tranquilles et gracieux noyers d'Interlaken, en face des glaciers d'Oberland; et vous aurez une assez juste idée de la situation morale d'un habitué de nos premières, représentations lorsqu'il vient à se trouver, à l'improviste, en présence de ces beautés si simples, si grandes et si naturelles.

Un second point sur lequel le sentiment involontaire du public français s'est trouvé tout-à-fait en désaccord avec les admirateurs de Shakespeare, c'est le rôle d'Iago. Ce rôle, qui est la cheville ouvrière de la pièce, est grandement célèbre en Angleterre et ailleurs; tous les critiques sans exception, anglais, allemands ou français, ne tarissent pas dans leurs éloges. A la scène, il nous a paru déplaire généralement; déplaire d'une manière très-prononcée, et qui allait croissant d'acte en acte, tellement que, s'il eût été joué avec moins d'aplomb et de décision, il lui serait certainement arrivé malheur. Pourquoi a-t-il déplu?

Il était assez curieux, à la fin de chaque acte, d'entendre chaque spectateur donner la raison de sa répugnance, le motif de son aversion. Celui-ci trouvait Iago trop immoral; celui-là, au contraire, ne le trouvait pas assez habile hypocrite: on ne se vante pas ainsi de sa scélératesse, disait-il; un troisième était révolté de voir commettre le crime en plaisantant; ainsi de suite.

Selon nous, le rôle a déplu parce qu'il n'est pas bon; parce qu'il est, non pas inconséquent (quoi de plus naturel à l'homme que l'inconséquence?) mais incohérent, parce que les parties dont il se compose ne tiennent pas ensemble, et qu'à son égard, on ne sait vraiment à quelle idée se prendre. Telle est du moins notre manière de voir. Que les dévots à Shakespeare nous anathématisent, si c'est leur bon plaisir.

Qu'est-ce qu'Iago?

Est-ce le malin esprit, ou du moins son représentant sur la terre? Othello a-t-il raison quand il le regarde aux pieds pour voir s'il ne les aurait pas fourchus? Est-ce un être qui fait le mal pour l'amour du mal, et qui vient souffler des poisons sur l'union d'Othello et de Desdémona, par ce seul motif que Desdémona est une créature angélique et qu'Othello est un homme loyal, brave et généreux?

Alors pourquoi donner à Iago des motifs humains et intéressés? Pourquoi nous montrer en lui une basse cupidité, le ressentiment d'une injure faite à son honneur, l'envie d'un poste plus élevé que le sien? Pourquoi le voyons-nous dévaliser ce pauvre Roderigo, comme Scapin ou Sbrigani escamotent à un imbécile la bourse qu'il a dans son pourpoint? Ces passions de bas aloi détruisent tout le fantastique du rôle; le démon n'a ni humeur ni honneur; il n'a ni rancune, ni colère, ni convoitise; c'est un personnage désintéressé; il fait le mal parce que le mal est le mal, et qu'il est, lui, le malin.

Iago est-il, au contraire, comme il s'en fait gloire, le parfait égoïste, l'homme qui sait, au suprême degré, s'aimer lui-même, l'être qui sait subordonner hiérarchiquement ses désirs, selon leur degré d'importance, et disposer ensuite ses actions de manière à tendre invariablement à sa plus haute satisfaction, coûte que coûte à autrui, sans scrupule, sans remords, et aussi sans se laisser détourner par des velléités d'un ordre inférieur?

Alors pourquoi poursuit-il en même temps trois ou quatre buts distincts, et d'une importance pour lui très-inégaie? Pourquoi entreprend-il coup sur coup vingt projets différents qu'il abandonne l'un après l'autre? Pourquoi surtout prodigue-t-il, dans chaque occasion, cent fois plus de méchanceté que le besoin de la circonstance ne le comporte?

(P. 62.) Il [Iago] réussit, dira-t-on.

Il réussit, ainsi le veut l'auteur. Mais le bon sens, qu'en dit-il ?

L'auteur lui-même réussit, mais d'où vient ? C'est parce que telle est la profondeur et la vivacité de sa conception première que les invraisemblances les plus choquantes, les absurdités les plus inconcevables passent inaperçues ; c'est parce que personne n'a l'envie ni le loisir de regarder aux ressorts du drame. Autre chose est pourtant de nous donner ces absurdités pour des mérites.

Oui, cela est très-vrai ; depuis le premier moment où la première insinuation s'échappe des lèvres d'Iago pour atteindre l'oreille du More, depuis ces paroles fatales : ' Ah ! ceci me déplaît, ' jusqu' au moment solennel où le rideau tombe sur les cadavres des deux amants, le spectateur n'a pas la possibilité de respirer. Vous entendriez voler une mouche dans la salle, et bien maladroits sont les amis dont le zèle s'efforce d'interrompre par des applaudissements cette anxiété qui va croissant de minute en minute.

Dès le premier mot, tout est dit, tout est décidé.

Adieu pour jamais, Desdémone, adieu Othello. Desdémone n'apparaît plus que comme l'innocent oiseau qui se débat faiblement sous la serre d'un vautour, mais d'un vautour qui se débat lui-même en furieux sous la serre d'un autre vautour, et se venge, sur la pauvre victime, des effroyables tortures auxquelles il est en proie.

Le spectateur contemple ce tableau, non point avec cette curiosité inquiète qui passe tour à tour de la crainte à l'espoir, mais, s'il est permis de le dire, et en tenant compte de toutes les différences, avec quelque chose de cette angoisse inexprimable qui s'empare de nous lorsque, dans une cour de justice, nous assistons aux vains efforts de malheureux entraînés vers une condamnation fatale et indubitable.

(P. 69.) La scène où Desdémone se déshabille, avant de se mettre au lit, est donc bien véritablement, pour elle, ce quart d'heure de grâce que l'on accorde aux condamnés avant de les conduire au supplice ; en vain essaie-t-elle de donner le change à Emilia, de se faire illusion à elle-même, de détourner sa pensée sur quelque sujet frivole ; le plus intime de son âme reparait et surgit à chaque mot. Et telle est aussi cette scène pour le spectateur éperdu ; il compte les minutes ; il s'attache au moindre incident ; il se cramponne à la moindre chose ; il demande pourquoi pas encore ce nœud, pourquoi pas encore cette agrafe ; il voudrait, en quelque sorte, saisir Desdémone par sa robe et la retenir.

Poètes tragiques, voilà votre maître ; prenez leçon de lui, si vous savez en prendre.

VICTOR HUGO (William Shakespeare, Paris, 1864, p. 321) : Maintenant qu'est-ce qu'Othello ? C'est la nuit. Immense figure fatale. La nuit est amoureuse du jour. La noirceur aime l'aurore. L'africain adore la blanche. Othello a pour clarté et pour folie Desdémone. Aussi comme la jalousie lui est facile ! Il est grand, il est auguste, il est majestueux, il est au-dessus de toutes les têtes, il a pour cortège la bravoure, la bataille, la fanfare, la bannière, la renommée, la gloire, il a le rayonnement de vingt victoires, il est plein d'astres, cet Othello, mais il est noir. Aussi comme, jaloux, le héros est vite monstre ! le noir devient nègre. Comme la nuit a vite fait signe à la mort !

A côté d'Othello, qui est la nuit, il y a Iago, qui est le mal. Le mal, l'autre forme de l'ombre. La nuit n'est que la nuit du monde ; le mal est la nuit de l'âme. Quelle obscurité que la perfidie et le mensonge ! avoir dans les veines de l'encre ou la trahison, c'est la même chose. Quiconque a coudoyé l'imposture et le parjure, le sait ; on est à tâtons dans un fourbe. Versez l'hypocrisie sur le point du jour, vous éteindrez le soleil. C'est là, grâce aux fausses religions, ce qui arrive à Dieu.

Iago près d'Othello, c'est le précipice près du glissement. Par ici ! dit-il tout bas. Le piège conseille la cécité. Le ténébreux guide le noir. La tromperie se charge de l'éclaircissement qu'il faut à la nuit. La jalousie a le mensonge pour chien d'aveugle. Contre la blancheur et la candeur, Othello le negre, Iago le traître, quoi de plus terrible ! ces féroçités de l'ombre s'entendent. Ces deux incarnations de l'éclipse conspirent, l'une en rugissant, l'autre en ricanant, le tragique étouffement de la lumière.

Sondez cette chose profonde, Othello est la nuit. Et étant la nuit, et voulant tuer, qu'est-ce qu'il prend pour tuer ? le poison ? la massue ? la hache ? le couteau ? Non, l'oreiller. Tuer, c'est endormir. Shakespeare lui-même ne s'est peut-être pas rendu compte de ceci. Le créateur, quelquefois presque à son insu, obéit à son type, tant ce type est une puissance. Et c'est ainsi que Desdémona, épouse de l'homme Nuit, meurt étouffée par l'oreiller, qui a eu le premier baiser et qui a le dernier souffle.

H. TAINÉ (Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise, Paris, 1866, ii, 232) : Mais le trait qui Iago véritablement achève, et le range à côté de Méphistophélès, c'est la vérité atroce et le vigoureux raisonnement par lequel il égale sa scélératesse à la vertu. . . . Ajoutez à tous ces traits une verve diabolique, une invention intarissable d'images, de caricatures, de saletés, un ton de corps de garde, des gestes et des goûts brutaux de soldat, des habitudes de dissimulation, de sang-froid et de haine, de patience, contractées dans les périls et dans les ruses de la vie militaire, dans les misères continues d'un long abaissement et d'une espérance frustrée ; vous comprendrez comment Shakespeare a pu changer la perfidie abstraite en une figure réelle, et pourquoi l'atroce vengeance d'Iago n'est qu'une suite nécessaire de son naturel, de sa vie et de son éducation.

IN proof of the difficulties attending the translation of Shakespeare into German, I gave in Macbeth eighteen or twenty German versions of 'Double, double toil and trouble,' &c. ; which was well enough chosen as an instance where foreigners have to contend with a difficulty that might be termed merely technical. The lines, to English ears, convey but little definite meaning ; their vagueness, combined with the bubbling sound as of boiling, imparts the Abracadabra suggestion of a witch's charm. I am not sure that some of the versions there given do not fulfil the essential conditions of a translation where, as I have said, the difficulty is technical. A fairer test of translation is to be found in lines where words have a peculiar signification and an inherent charm to English ears, without which the whole passage is naught, and where, if a single word be changed, the spell is snapt, just as the fractured point of a Prince Rupert's tear reduces the crystal globule to sand. For instance, take those lines which Iago utters as he sees Othello approaching, after the first administration of the 'poisonous mineral' :

'Look where he comes : Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owd'st yesterday.'

It seems sheer impertinence to attempt to point out to English readers any especial charm where every phrase is full of beauty, but for my present purpose I must be pardoned for calling attention to three words here. Is there any other word in the English tongue that can be substituted for 'drowsy'? Sleepy certainly cannot. There is no resistance in sleepy. For sleep one composes his limbs, and repose is wooed. Narcotic is worse, it has a repulsive odor; and soporific is pedantic. But in 'drowsy' there is half-wakefulness, utter weariness, and nodding resistance to the potent drug. Thus, also, 'syrup,' which is not juice, or potion, or essence, or extract, nor anything but that heavy liquid sweetness whose very sluggishness suggests its power in reserve, whose inertness by contrast renders its essence more quick, and it is redolent of its home in the East. Lastly comes 'medicine,' with its suggestion of illness, and dis-ease, and restoration. Of course all the other words in these lines are exquisitely chosen, but then they are such as can be transferred readily from one language to another. The vague sonorosity of 'mandragora' speaks quite as powerfully, it may be supposed, to French or German or Italian ears as to ours. But the three words which I have specified, 'drowsy,' 'syrup,' and 'medicine,' must be felt, or the translation falls short; it may be through the fault of the translator or through the deficiency of his mother tongue.

Furthermore, in examining the following translations, another question suggests itself,—a question which I have never been able to answer satisfactorily. Should a translation of poetry be in prose or rhythm? A discussion of this far-reaching question is hardly germane here; my present purpose is fulfilled in calling attention to what seems to me to be the fact, that in the prose translations which follow, the suggestions of the original are reproduced somewhat more completely than in those in rhythm. But, alack the day, what does the passage amount to without the exquisite cadence of 'Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world'? which seems, in its undulation merely, to suggest the quiet 'unfurling' of twilight and the solemn tolling of the curfew. 'In every language,' said Southey, 'there is a magic of words as untranslatable as the Sesame in the Arabian tale,—you may retain the meaning, but if the words be changed the spell is lost.' Of course, this is true in German. Not while the world lasts will Gretchen's song be translated: 'Meine Ruh ist hin, Mein Herz ist schwer.'

LE TOURNEUR, Paris, 1776: Va, ni l'opium, ni la mandragore, ni toutes les potions assoupissantes de l'univers ne te rendront jamais ce doux sommeil que tu goûtas hier pour la dernière fois.

ALFRED DE VIGNY, Paris, 1829:

Va, déchire ton cœur! va, ni le feu, ni l'eau,
Les boissons de pavot, d'opium, de mandragore,
Ne pourront te guérir et te donner encore
Ce paisible sommeil que tu goûtas hier.

BENJAMIN LAROCHE, Paris, 1842: Le voici qui vient!—Ni les pavots, ni la mandragore, ni tous les sirops soporifiques du monde ne te rendront le doux sommeil que tu avais hier.

FRANÇOIS-VICTOR HUGO, Paris, 1862: Tenez, le voici qui vient! Ni le pavot, ni la mandragore,—ni tous les sirops narcotiques du monde—ne te rendront jamais ce doux sommeil—que tu avais hier.

M. ALCIDE CAYROU, Paris, 1876:

Va! recours au pavot comme à la mandragore,
Si tu le veux, choisis l'opium, l'ellébore:
Tu n'auras plus jamais, non, ce sommeil heureux
Que tu goûtais hier dans ton nid amoureux!

LOUIS DE GRAMMONT, Paris, 1882:

Othello vient. Ah! c'en est fait. Le plus puissant Narcotique jamais ne pourra rendre au More
Le sommeil qu'il goûtait hier. La mandragore
Et le pavot seront désormais superflus
Pour vaincre son angoisse: il ne dormira plus!

JEAN AICARD, Paris, 1882:

Il vient. . . . Je disais donc? . . . Mandragore ou pavots,
Va, rien ne saura plus te rendre le repos!

WIELAND, Zürich, 1766: Seht, da kommt er! Weder Mohn-Saamen, noch Mandragora, noch alle einschläfernde Säfte in der Welt zusammen genommen werden dir jemals diesen süssen Schlaf wiedergeben, den du gestern noch hattest.

ESCHENBURG, Mannheim, 1779: Sieh, da kömmt er!—Weder Mohnsamen, noch Mandragora, noch alle einschläfernde Säfte auf der Welt werden dir jemals den süssen Schlaf wieder schaffen, den du gestern noch hattest.

LUDEWIG SCHUBART, Leipzig, 1802: Sieh da kommt er wieder. Weder Mohnsaft, noch Alraun, noch alle einschläfernden Säfte der Welt, werden dir je den süssen Schlaf wieder verschaffen, den du noch gestern genossen.

DR JOHANN HEINRICH VOSS, Jena, 1806:

Da kommt er her! Nicht Mohn noch Mandragora
Noch alle Schlummersäfte der Natur
Erkünsteln je den süssen Schlaf dir wieder,
Den du noch gestern hattest.

JOHANN WILHELM OTTO BENDA, Leipzig, 1826:

Da kommt er! sieh! Nicht Mohn, Mandragora, noch alle andre Säfte für den Schlaf stell'n je den süssen Schlummer wieder her,
den du noch gestern schliefst.

PHILIPP KAUFMANN, Berlin, 1832:

Da kommt er schon! Kein Mohnsaft noch Alraun,
Noch alle Schlafgetränke in der Welt
Stell'n je dir wieder her den süssen Schlaf
Den du noch gestern hattest.

A. W. VON SCHLEGEL (? BAUDOUIN) Berlin, 1832:

Da kommt er. Nicht Mandragora noch Mohn,
Noch alle Schlummersäfte der Natur
Verhelfen je dir zu dem süßen Schlaf,
Der gestern dich erquickt.

ERNST ORTLEPP, Stuttgart, 1839:

Seh da, er kommt! Nicht Mohn, nicht Mandragora,
Noch alle Schlummersäfte der Natur
Sind fähig, dir den süßen Schlaf zurückzubehalten,
Den du noch gestern schließt.

MORIZ RAPP, Stuttgart, 1843:

Nicht Mohnsaft, noch ein Opium, noch was sonst
Von Specerei'n wirkt auf den goldnen Schlummer,
Nichts soll dir jemals mehr dazu verhelfen,
Wie du ihn gestern noch geschlummert hast.

DR F. JENCKEN, Mainz, 1854:

Da kommt er her! nicht Mohn noch Mandragora, [sic?]
Nicht irgend sonst ein tüchtig Schlummersäftchen,
Wird Deiner Nacht die sanfte Ruh mehr schaffen,
Wie sie Dir gestern noch vergönnt.

OSWALD MARRACH, Leipzig, 1864: •

Da kommt er! Ha, nimm Opium, mein Freund,
Nimm was du willst, für dich giebst keinen Trank,
Der den gesunden Schlaf dir wieder giebt
Den du bis heut gehabt.

W. JORDAN, Hildburghausen, 1867:

Da kommt er. Mohnsaft nicht, noch Mandragora,
Noch alle Schlummertränke der Natur
Verhelfen dir zum süßen Schlaf von gestern.

FRIEDERICH BODENSTEDT, Leipzig, 1867:

Da kommt er her. Nicht Mohn, noch Mandragora,
Noch alle Schlummersäfte dieser Welt
Verschaffen je den süßen Schlaf dir wieder,
Der gestern dein war.

I. TIECK (Bearbeitet von DR A. SCHMIDT. Herausgegeben durch die DEUTSCHE SHAKESPEARE-GESELLSCHAFT), Berlin, 1871:

Da kommt er. Mohnsaft nicht noch Hexenkrant,
Noch alle Schlummerkräfte der Natur,
Verhelfen je dir zu dem süßen Schlaf,
Den du noch gestern hattest.

MAX MOLTKE, Leipzig, n. d.:

Doch sieh, er kommt!—Nicht Mohn, nicht Mandragora,
 Noch alle Schlummersäfte von der Welt
 Verschaffen je den süßen Schlaf dir wieder
 Den du noch gestern schliefst.

ΙΩΑΝΝΗΣ Α. ΜΑΝΩΛΗ. ΕΝ ΚΩΝΣΤΑΝΤΙΝΟΥΠΟΛΕΙ. 1873.

Ἴδού ἐρχεται· καὶ οὔτε μήκων, οὔτε μανδραγόρας, καὶ οὐδὲ πάντα τὰ ἵπνωτικὰ ποτὲ τοῦ κόσμου θέλουν δυναθῇ νὰ σοὶ ἐπαναγάγῃσι τὸν γλυκὺν ἐκεῖνον ὕπνον, τοῦ ὁποῖου ἀπῆλυσες χθὲς διὰ τελευταίαν φορὰν.

ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΣ ΒΙΚΕΛΑ. ΕΝ ΑΘΗΝΑΙΣ. 1876.

Ἐρχεται.—Οὐτ' ἢ θερειακῇ, οὔτε ὁ μανδραγόρας, οὔτ' ὅλα τὰ ἵπνωτικὰ καὶ ἱατρικὰ τοῦ κόσμου δὲν ἔμποροῦν πλέον ποτὲ τὸν ὕπνον νὰ σοῦ δώσουν, ποῦ χθὲς γλυκοκοιμήθηκες.

Shakspeare vulgarizzate, &c., Firenze, 1801: Eccolo, ei viene; Nè il papavero, nè la mandragora, nè qualunque altra pozione sonnifera, potrà ridonarti quel dolce sonno, di cui jeri hai gustato.

IGNAZIO VALLETTA, Firenze, 1830: Guardate come viene! nè papavero, nè mandragola, nè tutti i soporiferi del mondo ti porgeran più quella grata medicina di sonno, che godevi jeri.

GIUNIO BAZZONI e GIACOMO SORMANI, Milano, 1830: Oh! eccolo che giugne. No, nè i papaveri, nè la mandragora, ne tutte le bevande soporifere dell' universo potranno giammai renderti quel dolce sonno di cui godesti la scorsa notte.

CARLO RUSCONI, 1831: Eccolo! Nè i papaveri, nè la mandragola, nè alcun soporifero di questo mondo potrà più renderti il dolce sonno che ieri ancora provasti.

GIULIO CARCANO, Milano, 1843-53 (used by SALVINI and ROSSI):

— Ve' ch' egli vien. Giammai
 Papavero o mandragora, nè quante
 Ha il mondo essenze soporose, darti
 Il rimedio potran di quel soave
 Sonno che jer gustasti.

ANDREA MAFFEI, Firenze, 1869:

— È qui! Non succo d'erbe,
 Non virtù di mandragora, nè d'altra
 Soporosa sostanza a te potranno
 Quel dolce sonno ridonar che gli occhi
 Jeri ancor ti velava.

JAIME CLARK, Madrid, n. d. (? 1873-74):

—Vedle allí. Ni adormidera
Beleño, ni mandrágora, ni todos
Los zumos soporíferos del mundo
Podrán apropiarte el dulce sueño
Que disfrutaste ayer.

Let me not be understood as citing these translations in any carping, critical spirit. They are all good, and some of them admirable, as exact and literal as is possible. Where they have failed, they have failed because they must.

I add the following, and, did space permit, could continue the series in Russian, in Polish, in Bohemian, and in Hebrew,—not, however, as examples of translation, for my having in these languages is a younger brother's revenue, but as illustrations of the universality of Shakespeare's presence in every land, and in every tongue:—

JURRIAAN MOULIN, Haarlem, 1857:

Daar komt hij, zie! Geen mankop of alruin,
Geen sluimerdrank ter wereld die uw oog
Ooit aan dien zoeten slaap weêr helpen zal,
Die gister u verkwikte.

DR L. A. J. BURGERSDIJK, Leiden, 1885:

Daar komt hij, zie! Geen heul- noch alruinsap,
Noch al der wereld sluimerdranken brengen
Den zoeten slaap u weder, die nog gist'ren
U eigen was.

CARL AUGUST HAGBERG, Lund, 1861:

Der kommer han.
Nu kan ej opium, mandragora
Och hela vida verldens slummer-droppar
Förhjelpa dig till lika ljuftig sömn,
Som den du sof i går.

EDV. LEMBCKE, Kjöbenhavn, 1866:

— der er han.
Nu skal ei Valmu, ei Alrunesaft, ei nogen Sovedrik i Verden vide dig mere dysse i saa sød en Søvn som den, du sov igaar.

LIST OF EDITIONS COLLATED IN THE TEXTUAL NOTES

THE FIRST QUARTO (Ashbee's Facsimile)	[Q ₁]	1622
THE FIRST FOLIO	[F ₁]	1623
THE SECOND QUARTO	[Q ₂]	1630
THE SECOND FOLIO	[F ₂]	1632
THE THIRD QUARTO	[Q ₃]	1655
THE THIRD FOLIO	[F ₃]	1664
THE FOURTH FOLIO	[F ₄]	1685
ROWE (First Edition)	[Rowe i]	1709
ROWE (Second Edition)	[Rowe ii]	1714
POPE (First Edition)	[Pope i]	1723
POPE (Second Edition)	[Pope ii]	1728
THEOBALD (First Edition)	[Theob. i]	1733
THEOBALD (Second Edition)	[Theob. ii]	1740
HANMER	[Han.]	1744
WARBURTON	[Warb.]	1747
JOHNSON	[Johns.]	1765
CAPELL	[Cap.]	1768
JENNENS	[Jen.]	1773
JOHNSON and STEEVENS	[Steev. '73]	1773
JOHNSON and STEEVENS	[Steev. '78]	1778
JOHNSON and STEEVENS	[Steev. '85]	1785
MALONE	[Mal.]	1790
STEEVENS	[Steev.]	1793
RANN	[Rann]	(?)	1794
REED'S STEEVENS	[Var. '03]	1803
REED'S STEEVENS	[Var. '13]	1813
BOSWELL'S MALONE	[Var.]	1821
KNIGHT	[Knt.]	1841
COLLIER (First Edition)	[Coll. i]	1843
SINGER (Second Edition)	[Sing. ii]	1856
DYCE (First Edition)	[Dyce i]	1857
COLLIER (Second Edition)	[Coll. ii]	1858
STAUNTON	[Sta.]	1860
R. GRANT WHITE (First Edition)	[Wh. i]	1861
THE GLOBE EDITION (CLARK and WRIGHT)	[Glo.]	1864
KEIGHTLEY	[Ktly]	1864

CHARLES and MARY COWDEN-CLARKE [Clarke]	(?)	1864
THE CAMBRIDGE EDITION (CLARK and WRIGHT)	[Cam.]	1866
HALLIWELL (Folio Edition)	[Hal.]	1865
DYCE (Second Edition)	[Dyce ii]	1866
DELIUS (Third Edition)	[Del.]	1872
DYCE (Third Edition)	[Dyce iii]	1875
COLLIER (Third Edition)	[Coll. iii]	1877
ROLFE	[Rlfe]	1879
HUDSON	[Huds.]	1881
R. GRANT WHITE (Second Edition)	[Wh. ii]	1883

In the Textual Notes the symbol Ff indicates the agreement of the Second, Third, and Fourth Folios. The agreement of the three Quartos is indicated by Qq.

The frequent omission of the apostrophe in the Second Folio, a peculiarity of that edition, is not generally noted.

The sign + indicates the agreement of ROWE, POPE, THEOBALD, HANMER, WARBURTON, and JOHNSON.

When WARBURTON precedes HANMER in the Textual Notes, it indicates that HANMER has followed a suggestion of WARBURTON's.

The words et cet. after any reading indicate that it is the reading of all other editions.

The abbreviation (subs.) indicates that the reading is substantially given, and that immaterial variations in spelling, punctuation, or stage directions are disregarded.

Coll. (MS) refers to COLLIER's annotated Second Folio.

Quincy (MS) refers to QUINCY's annotated Fourth Folio.

An Emendation or Conjecture which is discussed in the Commentary is not repeated in the Textual Notes; nor is 'conj.' added to any name in the Textual Notes unless it happens to be that of an editor, in which case its omission would be misleading.

All citations of Acts, Scenes, and Lines in Romeo and Juliet, Macbeth, Hamlet, and Lea refer to this edition of those plays; in citations from other plays the GLOBE EDITION is followed.

I have not called attention to every little misprint in the Folio. A reference to the Textual Notes will always show them to be misprints by the agreement of all the Editors in their correction.

Nor is notice taken of the first Editor who adopted the modern spelling, or who substituted commas for a parenthesis, or changed ? to !. At the same time some comparatively trifling peculiarities are noted, such as the use of hyphens, to which some Editors, Staunton, for instance, attach value. The variations in the spelling of the word 'murther,' where it occurs so frequently in Act V, is not noted. The spelling is almost uniformly murder in the Quartos, but in the Folios it is apparently arbitrary; in V, ii, 145, it is 'Murther,' and in the second line after, we have 'murder'd.'

Otherwise, even the most manifest misspellings in the Quartos and Folios are recorded, to supply what aid they may in estimating the value of the texts or their individuality; for instance, 'Cyprus' and 'Lieutenant' are almost invariably spelled, in the First Quarto, Cypres and Leutenant. I have tried always to record every instance in the Quartos, especially in the First, of any really intelligent punctuation.

It may well be conceived that no part of my labours is more onerous than this of collation; for which there is so little to show, and at which I do not suppose that one reader in a hundred, or in five hundred, ever even as much as glances. But the work has to be done, somebody must do it, and I seem to have drawn the unhappy lot. Wherefore let me say that, thus far, I have not flinched, but, to ensure accuracy, I have gone over every syllable of the collation, in these forty, and more, editions, twice, several months apart, and have arisen from the task with the conviction that I have, after all, by no means evaded the inexorable law of imperfection.

It once occurred to me that if I ever hereafter edit another play, which is very doubtful, I might abridge the labour by disregarding the successive editions put forth by the same editor, and take only his last edition, in which, presumably, his maturest judgement is to be found. But this attempt, I am afraid, would be vain. Editors have rights which those who collate them are bound to respect, and foremost among these rights is that of credit for precedence in emendation; this can be respected only by noting the first editions. If therefore of a modern Editor his first edition must be recorded, it is equally incumbent to note his last. Nigh twenty years of close study passed between Dyce's First Edition and his latest, over thirty-five between Collier's, and shall we take the sallow days and disregard the ripened judgement? Wherefore I see no chance to ease the task in this direction,—nor in any other. If this burdensome collation is to be done at all, it must be done so thoroughly that future students may begin where we leave off.

In the collation of the Quartos and Folios I have allowed myself no discretion; what has attracted my attention, I infer would attract any one else's. In these days, when Shakespeare's mood is to be detected in the number of syllables in his lines, I shrink from fathoming the issues which may depend on the spelling of a word.

I have taken no notice of the commentaries on the text given by ROBERT DEVKRELL in the annotated Othello contained in the Third Volume of his Hieroglyphics; of course they illustrate nothing but the midsummer madness of the poor fellow whose pure lunacy explains all difficulties by 'appearances in the moon.' For instance, I open the volume at random: 'There has been much question about the manner of pronouncing the line, "If I quench thee," &c.; but if the first part of it be referred to 'the taper only (as formed out of the streaks of light on Cassio's body), and the latter 'part not merely to the death of Desdemona (in character), but to the obscuration, or 'extinction rather, of the part of the moon which forms her prototype, the difficulty will 'be removed.' It is not easy at first to repress a smile,—it is impossible, over some of the many grotesque wood-cuts,—but the pathos of the jangled bells drowns all sense of the ludicrous, and we can only close the book with a sigh.

Although in the Preface I have referred to the notes which my friend EDWIN BOOTH prepared for me, and which enrich the foregoing pages, yet I wish again, for his sake, to emphasise the fact that their informal, off-hand style is due to the circumstances under which they were written, with no thought on his part that they were to be seen by any one but by him at whose request they were made. On the last page of the Prompt Book wherein they were written is the following note, which, I think should be given here, as it explains and justifies what I have just said: 'Some Notes for y^e Novice, H. H. F. I have jotted here some of the odd notions that flit through my head while acting. In cold blood 'tis difficult to recall them, but I think I've done pretty well. Much may be stale,—I've often found my 'original' ideas very well moth-eaten and musty with age, and 'tis long since I have overhauled the Commentators. I find that I've repeated myself often, and in my 'fidgets' have left out words in many sentences, while the grammar (which I abhor) will doubtless confuse you. However, I have kept my promise as best I can. I hope when you act Othello or Iago, or any other character in this play, that my suggestions may be of service.'

In the Commentary I have, in many a place, put ED. where I should much prefer to have omitted it. But I beg to have it understood that it is present not as a claimant, but as a safeguard, that upon none of my betters may be fathered my folly. Partly for the same reason, I have in my notes used the First Person Singular, but mainly because if anywhere we are restricted to the expression of our own individual opinions, it is in the interpretation of Shakespeare; there, as in the Republic of Letters, each man can speak but for himself alone, and the monarchical 'we' is an assumption of authority without the substance.

[In this closing hour of my labour, and since the foregoing has been put in type, the mail brings me the Facsimile of the First Quarto, 'publisht' by C. Praetorius in London, with an admirable Introduction by HERBERT A. EVANS, M. A., which gives, clearly and succinctly, all needful information in regard to this particular Text, and a comparison of it and the First Folio. This Facsimile is one of a series of all the Shakespearian Quartos, now issuing in London, whose excellence is to be paralleled but by its cheapness. If any word of mine can extend a knowledge of this most commendable publication, I can only wish that I were 'trumpet-tongued.'—ED.]

LIST OF BOOKS FROM WHICH EXTRACTS HAVE BEEN MADE

GIRALDI CINTHIO: Hecatommiti , Venegia	1566
HOLLAND: Translation of Plinie	1635
RYMER: Short View of Tragedy	1693
EARL OF SHAFTESBURY: Characteristics	1714
PECK: New Memoirs of Milton	1740
FIELDING: A Journey from this World to the Next	1743
UPTON: Observations	1746
WHALLEY: Enquiry into the Learning of Shakespeare	1748
GREY: Critical, Historical, and Explanatory Notes	1754
EDWARDS: Canons of Criticism	1765
PERCY: Reliques	1765
HEATH: Revisal, &c.	1765
TYRWHITT: Observations, &c.	1766
WARNER: Letter to Garrick	1768
GENTLEMAN: Dramatic Censor	1770
LE TOURNEUR: Shakespeare, traduit de l'Anglois, Paris	1776
WARTON: History of English Poetry , vol. iii	1781
RITSON: Remarks, &c.	1783
DAVIES: Dramatic Miscellanies	1784
M. MASON: Comments, &c.	1785
DUCIS: Œuvres , Paris (edition 1830)	1792
WHITER: Specimen of a Commentary, &c.	1794
PARR: Story of the Moor of Venice	1795
Essays by a Society of Gentlemen, Exeter	1796
DU BOIS: The Wreath	1799
CHALMERS: Supplemental Apology	1799
MURPHY: Life of Garrick	1801
WALDRON: Shakespearian Miscellany	1802
LORD CHEDWORTH: Notes, &c.	1805
VOSS: Othello, uebersetzt , Jena	1806
DOUCE: Illustrations	1807
PYE: Comments on the Commentators	1807
DEVERELL: Discoveries in Hieroglyphics, &c.	1813
MARTINUS SCRIBLERUS: Explanations, &c. , Edinburgh	1814
BECKET: Shakespeare's Himself Again	1815
SCHLEGEL: Lectures, translated by Black	1815
DRAKE: Shakespeare and his Times	1817
HAZLITT: Characters, &c.	1817

NICHOLS: Literary Illustrations, &c. , vol. ii	1817
ZACHARY JACKSON: Shakespeare's Genius Justified	1818
HORN: Shakespeare's Schauspiele erläutert , Leipzig	1823
BOADEN: Life of J. P. Kemble	1825
HAZLITT: Plain Speaker	1826
DRAKE: Memorials of Shakespeare	1828
DE BROGLIE: Sur Othello , Paris	1830
SIMROCK: Quellen des Shakespeare's , Berlin	1831
COLLIER: History of English Dramatic Poetry (ed. ii, 1879)	1831
GALT: Lives of the Players	1831
MRS JAMESON: Characteristics of Women	1832
COLLIER: New Facts	1835
COLLIER: New Particulars	1836
RAWDON BROWN: Ragguagli sulla Vita di Marin Sanuto, &c. , Venice	1837
CAMPBELL: Dramatic Works of Shakespeare	1838
GUEST: History of English Rhythms	1838
BROWN: Shakespeare's Autobiographical Poems	1838
COLLIER: Further Particulars	1839
SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY: The Revels Book	1842
COLLIER: Shakespeare's Library (New Edition by W. C. Hazlitt, 1875)	1843
DYCE: Remarks, &c.	1844
HUNTER: New Illustrations, &c.	1845
VERPLANCK: Shakespeare's Works , New York	1847
BRAND: Popular Antiquities, &c. (Bohn's edition, 1873)	1848
HALPIN: Dramatic Unities	1849
ROFFE: Ghost Belief of Shakespeare	1851
COLLIER: Notes and Emendations	1852
DYCE: Few Notes	1853
SINGER: Shakespeare's Text Vindicated	1853
PEPYS: Diary, &c. (Fifth Edition, London)	1854
QUINCY: MS Corrections in F₄ , Boston	1854
WHITE: Shakespeare's Scholar	1854
WALKER: Shakespeare's Versification	1854
TAYLOR: The Moor of Venice	1855
WOOD: Personal Recollections, &c. , Philadelphia	1855
COLLIER: Seven Lectures, &c.	1856
LLOYD: Essays (from Singer's Second Edition)	1858
LORD CAMPBELL: Shakespeare's Legal Acquirements	1859
WALKER: Critical Examination of the Text, &c.	1859
REED: Lectures on English History , London	1859
DYCE: Strictures, &c.	1859
BUCKNILL: Shakespeare's Medical Knowledge	1860
JERVIS: Proposed Emendations	1860
MAGINN: Shakespeare Papers	1860
FECHTER: Acting Edition	1861
OTTLEY: Fechter's Othello	1861
BAILEY: The Received Text	1862
GERVINUS: Commentaries (trans. by F. E. Bunnett), London	1863

LIST OF BOOKS

465

HACKETT: Notes, &c. , New York	1863
DEIGHTON: Notes on Othello , Allahâbâd	1864
VICTOR HUGO: William Shakespeare , Paris	1864
WORDSWORTH: Shakespeare and the Bible	1864
BEISLY: Shakespeare's Garden	1864
HERAUD: Shakespeare. His Inner Life	1865
ARROWSMITH: Shakespeare's Editors and Commentators	1865
CARTWRIGHT: New Readings	1866
TAINÉ: Littérature Anglaise (Deuxième Édition), Paris	1866
BODENSTEDT: Othello, uebersetzt , Leipzig	1867
FORSYTH: Some Notes, &c.	1867
KLEIN: Geschichte des Dramas. Das Italienische , Leipzig	1867
KEIGHTLEY: Shakespeare Expositor	1867
GOULD: The Tragedian	1868
FITZGERALD: Life of Garrick	1868
GILES: Human Life in Shakespeare	1868
HAWKINS: Life of Edmund Kean	1869
MARY PRESTON: Studies in Shakespeare , Philadelphia	1869
ABBOTT: Shakespearian Grammar	1870
DANIEL: Notes and Emendations	1870
LAMB: Works , London	1870
HARTING: Ornithology of Shakespeare	1871
LUDWIG: Shakespeare-Studien , Leipzig	1872
RUSKIN: Munera Pulveris	1872
MASSEY: The Secret Drama, &c.	1872
JOHN HUNTER: Othello, with Notes	1873
REES: Life of Forrest	1874
DOWDEN: Shakspeare. His Mind and Art	1875
LEWES: On Actors and the Art of Acting	1875
WARD: History of English Dramatic Poetry	1875
EARL OF SOUTHESK: Saskatchewan	1875
FRIESEN: Shakspeare-Studien , Wien	1876
FLEAY: Shakespeare Manual	1876
ULRICI: Shakespeare's Dramatic Art, &c. (translated by Miss Schmitz)	1876
OECHELHÄUSER: Othello, bearbeitet , Weimar	1876
SNIDER: System of Shakespeare's Dramas , St Louis	1877
ALGER: Life of Forrest	1877
BULLOCH: Studies on the Text of Shakespeare	1878
EDWIN BOOTH: Prompt-Book of Othello	1878
ELLACOMBE: Plant-Lore of Shakespeare	1878
HERR: Scattered Notes, &c. , Philadelphia	1879
COWDEN-CLARKE: The Shakespeare Key	1879
INGLEBY: Centurie of Prayse	1879
MOBERLY: Romeo and Juliet	1880
SWINBURNE: A Study of Shakespeare	1880
GENSICHEN: Studienblätter , Berlin	1881
INGLEBY: Shakespeare. The Man and the Book , Part ii	1881
ELZE: Hamlet	1882
BULTHAUPT: Dramaturgie der Classiker , Oldenburg	1883

GÉRARD: Othello, avec des Notes. Précédée d'une Étude sur Shakespeare, par

Dr James Darmesteter, Paris	1883
PURNELL: Othello, with Notes	1883
D'HUGUES: Othello, avec des Notes , Paris	1883
WORDSWORTH: Works (ed. Knight)	1883
HEARD: Shakespeare as a Lawyer	1883
MRS KEMBLE: Records of Later Life	1884
HALES: Notes and Essays	1884
ELZE: Notes on Elizabethan Dramatists , Halle	1884
MOREL: Othello, avec des Notes , Paris	1884
HALLIWELL-PHILLIPS: Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare (Fifth Edition) ..	1885
LEO: Shakespeare-Notes	1885
GRANT WHITE: Studies in Shakespeare	1886
CHAPPELL'S Popular Music	n. d.
RUSSELL'S Representative Actors	n. d.

The Academy

American Bibliopolist

The Athenæum

Bibliotheca Sacra

Blackwood's Magazine

Cornhill Magazine

Edinburgh Review

The Galaxy

New Shakspeare Society

Notes and Queries

Philological Society's Transactions

Robinson's Epitome of Literature

Shakespeariana

Temple Bar

INDEX

A = before verbal nouns	IV, i, 195	Begrimed	III, iii, 445
A = one	II, ii, 342	Besort	I, iii, 264
Abhor	IV, ii, 191	Bodenstedt, Remarks ..	440
Absorption of it	I, iii, 220	Bombast	I, i, 17
Absorption of personal pro- noun	II, i, 79	Booth's Reprint, Variations in	I, ii, 74
Absorption of t final	II, ii, 214	Booth's Reprint " "	I, iii, 399
Absorption of the	I, ii, 4	Brace	I, iii, 32
Absorption of you	I, ii, 12	Brown, Rawdon, Source of Plot	372
Acknown	III, iii, 372	Browne, E. Elliot, Source of Plot	375
Action, Date of	357	Bulthaupt, Remarks ..	445
Action, Duration of	359	But = except	I, i, 138
Active sense of adjectives in -able or -ible	I, iii, 356	But = prevention	IV, iii, 38
Actors	396	By = about	I, iii, 24
Actress, the first	397	Campbell, Remarks ..	420
Adams, J. Q., Notes	391	Carve	II, ii, 197
Addition	II, ii, 8	Cast	I, i, 164
Adjectives in -able or -ible used actively	I, iii, 356	Cast	II, ii, 31
Advised = cautious	I, ii, 69	Cast	II, ii, 202
Affects, the young	I, iii, 291	Cast	V, ii, 400
Affin'd	I, i, 42	Certes	I, i, 19
Affin'd	II, ii, 243	Chamberers	III, iii, 309
Aim = guess	I, iii, 10	Chances	I, i, 79
Akes	IV, ii, 79	Charter	I, iii, 273
And-a	II, ii, 106	Cherubin	IV, ii, 73
Anthropophague	I, iii, 167	Chidden	II, i, 14
Apology for Iago	408	Chrysolite	V, ii, 179
Arrivancie	II, i, 40	Cinthio, Giraldi	376
As (omitted)	II, i, 180	Circumstance	I, i, 17
As = that, after such	I, i, 80	Coat (secret armour) ..	V, i, 29
As = that	V, ii, 203	Coleridge on Othello's Colour	389
Assay	I, iii, 26	Coleridge on the Unities ..	409
Auntient	I, i, 35	Collied	II, ii, 231
Ballad of Othello	398	Committed	IV, ii, 83
Beam	I, iii, 357	Companions	IV, ii, 168
Beard	I, iii, 371	Composition, Date of ..	344
Before me	IV, i, 162	Composition	I, iii, 3
		Condition	II, i, 282

Condition	IV, i, 210	Dreadful bell .. .	II, ii, 199
Consequence (omission of plural s)	II, ii, 81	Ducis's Version .. .	447
Construe	IV, i, 118	Edinburgh Review .. .	418
Consuls	I, i, 27	Edinburgh Review .. .	421
Consuls	I, ii, 51	Enchafed	II, i, 19
Contraction in participles	I, i, 56	Engines	IV, ii, 250
Convinc'd	IV, i, 33	Ensteeped	II, i, 82
Costume	404	Enwheele	II, i, 102
Counter-caster	I, i, 33	Erring	I, iii, 385
Countryman (Iago a Venetian)	V, i, 112	Escape = escapade	I, iii, 223
Courtesy	II, i, 118	Essentiall vesture	II, i, 74
Court of Guard	II, i, 251	Eternal = infernal	IV, ii, 154
Craftily qualified	II, ii, 56	Ethical dative	I, i, 53
Creature = trisyllable	III, iii, 482	Exclusion of native officers	I, iii, 61
Crie	II, ii, 398	Exhibition	I, iii, 263
Cries on	V, i, 62	Exhibition	IV, iii, 83
Criticall	II, i, 142	Extravagant	I, i, 149
Cue	I, ii, 101	Exufficate	III, iii, 211
Canning	III, iii, 57	Fadome	I, i, 167
Curled darlings	I, ii, 85	Faire wife	I, i, 22
Damn'd in a faire wife	I, i, 22	Falls, used transitively	IV, i, 273
Daniel, Duration of Action	370	Favour	I, iii, 371
Dearest	I, iii, 102	Fear, active use of	I, iii, 88
De Broglie, Remarks	450	Fife	III, iii, 408
Defeat	I, iii, 371	First Quarto	339
Defunct	I, iii, 291	Florentine	III, i, 44
Delighted	I, iii, 320	Folio printed from a theatre transcript	II, ii, 231
Demerits = merits	I, ii, 25	Folly = wantonness	V, ii, 165
Desdemon	III, i, 58	Fond	II, i, 163
Desdemona, the meaning of	I, iii, 168	For, confused with or	I, ii, 75
Desdemona " "	336	Forehead	III, iii, 331
Desdemona	V, ii, 85	Fortitude	I, iii, 248
Despised	I, i, 177	Forty = indefinite number	III, iii, 505
De Vigny's Othello	450	Free	II, ii, 367
Dilations	III, iii, 144	Free	III, iii, 150
Direct session	I, ii, 105	Friesen, Remarks	443
Discourse of thought	IV, ii, 182	From = away from	I, i, 144
Dispose	I, iii, 421	Fruitfull	II, ii, 372
Dote	II, i, 239	Function	II, ii, 379
Double comparative	I, iii, 127	Garbe	II, i, 339
Double comparatives	I, i, 105	Genischen, Remarks	445
Double negatives	I, iii, 25	Gervinus, Remarks	436
Double of the duke's	I, ii, 16	Gloss	I, iii, 252
Doubt = suspicion	III, iii, 217	Go = come	I, i, 197
Doubt = suspicion	III, iii, 490	God be with you	I, iii, 214
Dowden, Remarks	424

- God buy you III, iii, 433
 Grace IV, iii, 101
 Gratify V, ii, 265
 Graze IV, i, 299
 Green-ey'd III, iii, 194
 Grise I, iii, 227
 Guards of the Pole . . . II, i, 17
 Guizot, Remarks 449
 Gundelier I, i, 138

 Habits I, iii, 128
 Halliwell, Othello's Colour . . . 394
 Handkerchief, description of . . III, iv, 68
 Hands, not hearts III, iv, 56
 Hardness I, iii, 259
 Hazlitt, Remarks 411
 Heaven, a plural IV, ii, 58
 Heraud, Remarks, 422
 Hip, on the II, i, 338
 His = its I, ii, 15
 Honor...Honesty V, ii, 306
 Hope's (not surfeited to death) . II, i, 58
 Horn, Remarks 433
 Hudson, Othello's Colour . . . 394
 Huswiues II, i, 132

I in -ity, dropped III, iii, 295
 Iago, apology for 408
 Iago's age I, iii, 343
 Iago's jealousy I, iii, 414
 Iago, the name 335
 Idle I, iii, 163
 Incontinently I, iii, 336
 Index II, i, 289
 In = during I, ii, 116
 Ingeniuer II, i, 75
 Ingredient II, ii, 335
 In happy time III, i, 33
 In = into V, ii, 358
 Injointed I, iii, 44
 In = on I, iii, 85
 Insertion in Acting Copies . . . I, iii, 161
 In spleen IV, i, 102
 Instruction IV, i, 50
 Intently I, iii, 178
 Interpolated a III, iii, 92
 Interpolated s III, iv, 136
 Interpolation of s I, i, 31
 Interpolation of s IV, i, 54

 Inversion of adjectives and nouns II, i, 57
 Is, with plural subject I, i, 188
 I was = a monosyllable . . . III, iv, 195

 Jameson, Mrs, Remarks 413
 Jealous III, iii, 212
 Jealous III, iv, 179
 Jealousy (Leontes's and Othello's) III, iii, 126
 Johnson, Dr, Criticism 407
 Jove substituted for God . . . II, i, 91
 Justly = truthfully I, iii, 147

 Kean's last appearance 402
 Klein, Source of Plot 373
 Knave I, i, 49

 Lamb, Charles, Remarks 410
 Learn = teach I, iii, 208
 Liberall II, i, 188
 Lookes (for lookst) II, ii, 201
 Lowth, Remarks 408
 Ludwig, Remarks 437
 Lust's Dominion I, iii, 172
 Lust's Dominion II, i, 229

 Macaulay, Remarks 412
 Maginn, Remarks 415
 Maine II, i, 15
 Mandragora III, iii, 384
 Marble III, iii, 523
 Marke, bless the I, i, 35
 Mauritania IV, ii, 259
 Meere II, ii, 5
 Might, Officers of I, i, 200
 Mineral II, i, 330
 Minerals I, ii, 91
 Mistress = trisyllable . . . IV, ii, 104
 Modern I, iii, 129
 Mocke III, iii, 194
 Mocks V, ii, 189
 Moe IV, iii, 62
 Monstrous = trisyllable . . . II, ii, 242
 Moraller II, ii, 327
 Mortal II, i, 84
 Most (the omitted) II, i, 28
 Motion I, ii, 92
 Motion I, iii, 114
 Mummey III, iv, 88

Napkin	III, iii, 335	Pye's remark on Desdemona	III, iii, 28
Negatives, double	I, iii, 125	Pyoners	III, iii, 402
Nephewes	I, i, 124	Qualification	II, i, 307
News	I, iii, 3	Quality	I, iii, 279
Non-suites	I, i, 19	Quarter	II, ii, 204
North	V, ii, 273	Quartos, The	339
Not almost	III, iii, 78	Question	I, iii, 31
Notorious	V, ii, 299	Question = conversation	I, iii, 133
Nuptiall	II, ii, 9	Quests	I, ii, 54
Oake	III, iii, 242	Raven	IV, i, 25
Obsequious	I, i, 50	Reed, Othello's Colour	393
Odd even	I, i, 136	Remorse	III, iii, 426
Oechelhäuser, Remarks	442	Repeals	II, ii, 388
Of = concerning	III, iii, 245	Reprobance	V, ii, 261
Off-capt	I, i, 14	Resolu'd	III, iii, 209
Officers of might	I, i, 200	Revolt = inconstancy	III, iii, 217
Of hers	V, ii, 6	Riches (sing.)	II, i, 98
Omission of plural s	II, ii, 81	Right garbe	II, i, 339
Or confused with for	I, ii, 75	Ripe	II, ii, 410
Othello's Colour	389	Rose, on Sudden Emotion	428
Othello, the name	335	Rymer, General estimate of	IV, i, 10
Other = otherwise	IV, ii, 16
Pagans	I, ii, 121	S interpolated	I, i, 31
Parts (Voltaire)	III, iii, 308	S interpolated	III, iv, 136
Passage	V, i, 47	S interpolated	IV, i, 54
Passion	III, iii, 145	S for st	IV, ii, 207
Pattent	IV, i, 216	Sagitary	I, i, 173
Pepys, Diary	402	Sagitary	I, iii, 136
Perplexed	V, ii, 420	Salvini's omission	IV, i, 57
Pickersgill, Source of Plot	375	Satiety	II, i, 261
Pierced	I, iii, 245	Saucie	I, i, 141
Plot, Source of	372	Save you	IV, i, 237
Ponticke Sea	III, iii, 516	Schlegel, Remarks	431
Portance	I, iii, 162	Scorn, time of	IV, ii, 64
Portents (accent)	V, ii, 54	Second Quarto	341
Practised = plotted	I, ii, 90	Secure	I, iii, 14
Prefixes dropped	I, iii, 217	Seele	III, iii, 242
Pregnant	II, i, 268	Seele	I, iii, 297
Presentiment	IV, iii, 29	Seige	I, ii, 25
Presently	V, ii, 66	Seize upon	V, ii, 443
Preston, Othello's Colour	395	Segregation	II, i, 12
Proball	II, ii, 368	Selfe-Bounty	III, iii, 220
Prophane	I, i, 127	Selfe-charitie	II, ii, 226
Prophane	II, i, 188	Sense	IV, iii, 103
Profanity, Statute against	I, i, 7	Sequestration	I, iii, 375
Proper = very	I, iii, 84	Set down	II, i, 231
Put or	II, i, 171	Shaftesbury, derivation of
Put on	II, ii, 382	Desdemona	I, iii, 168

- She = her IV, ii, 5
 She that II, i, 173
 Should I lose III, iv, 25
 Simrock, Source of Plot .. 372
 Singular verbs with plural antecedents I, iii, 312
 Sir, the II, i, 199
 Sith III, iii, 438
 Skillet I, iii, 300
 Slave IV, ii, 156
 Sleepes III, iii, 477
 Slipper II, i, 274
 Slubber I, iii, 252
 Snider, Remarks 425
 So = such I, iii, 68
 Solicit V, ii, 33
 Soon at night III, iv, 229
 Speculative instrument I, iii, 297
 Spells I, iii, 76
 Splinter II, ii, 352
 Stage directions III, iii, 335
 Stage directions not to be taken literally III, iii, 383
 Stage transcript the source of F. II, ii, 231
 Still = constantly I, iii, 170
 Stope II, ii, 46
 Strange V, ii, 256
 Stuff I, ii, 4
 Subjunctive indicated by position of the verb V, i, 17
 Substitution of s for st II, ii, 201
 Success III, iii, 259
 Superfluous s I, i, 31
 Superfluous s III, iii, 78
 Swore I, iii, 183

 Talk IV, iii, 31
 Tame (Pye's Remark) III, iii, 28
 Tane out III, iii, 344
 Text, Discussion of 341
 Thick-lips I, i, 72
 Third Quarto 341
 Thou art = monosyllable V, ii, 168
 Thou (where used) II, ii, 275
 Three fingers II, i, 197
 Time of scorn IV, ii, 64
 To, omitted before infinitive IV, ii, 15
 To do = ado IV, iii, 37

 Tongued I, i, 27
 Too blame III, iii, 244
 To who I, ii, 64
 Trash...trace II, i, 336
 Traverse I, iii, 399
 Trym'd I, i, 54

 Uds pity IV, iii, 84
 Ulrici, Remarks 433
 Unbonnetted I, ii, 26
 Unbookish IV, i, 118
 Unhoused I, ii, 29
 Unproper IV, i, 81
 Uses IV, iii, 114
 Usurp'd I, iii, 371

 Vanity IV, ii, 193
 Verennessa II, i, 30
 Vertuous III, iv, 131
 Villaine V, ii, 213
 Visage I, iii, 280
 Voltaire's Zaire 447
 Voluble II, i, 270
 Voss, Schiller's version 431

 Walk = withdraw IV, iii, 9
 Wanting missing III, iii, 398
 Warrant = monosyllable IV, i, 233
 Waste IV, ii, 276
 Well desired II, i, 237
 Well said IV, i, 133
 Wench V, ii, 355
 Were...beer (rhyme) II, i, 183
 Wheeling I, i, 149
 Whether = monosyllable I, ii, 102
 Who (uninflected) I, ii, 64
 Will wish V, ii, 246
 Wilson's Rhetorique III, iii, 188
 Wilson, Othello's Colour 391
 With, omission of I, iii, 109
 Wordsworth's Sonnet 410
 Would = liked I, iii, 170
 Wracke II, i, 27
 Wretch III, iii, 104

 Y'are III, iii, 253
 Y'are III, iii, 450
 Yerk'd I, ii, 7
 You (where used) II, ii, 275
 You were (monosyllabic) I, ii, 34

PR 2753 .F5 v.6
Othello /

C.3

Stanford University Libraries

3 6105 038 534 918

OCT 19 1961

DEC 28

JUL 25 '62

SPRING 1981

JUL 19 '64

SPRING 1983

FEB 12 '87

Stanford University Library
Stanford, California

In order that others may use this book, please return it as soon as possible, but not later than the date due.

